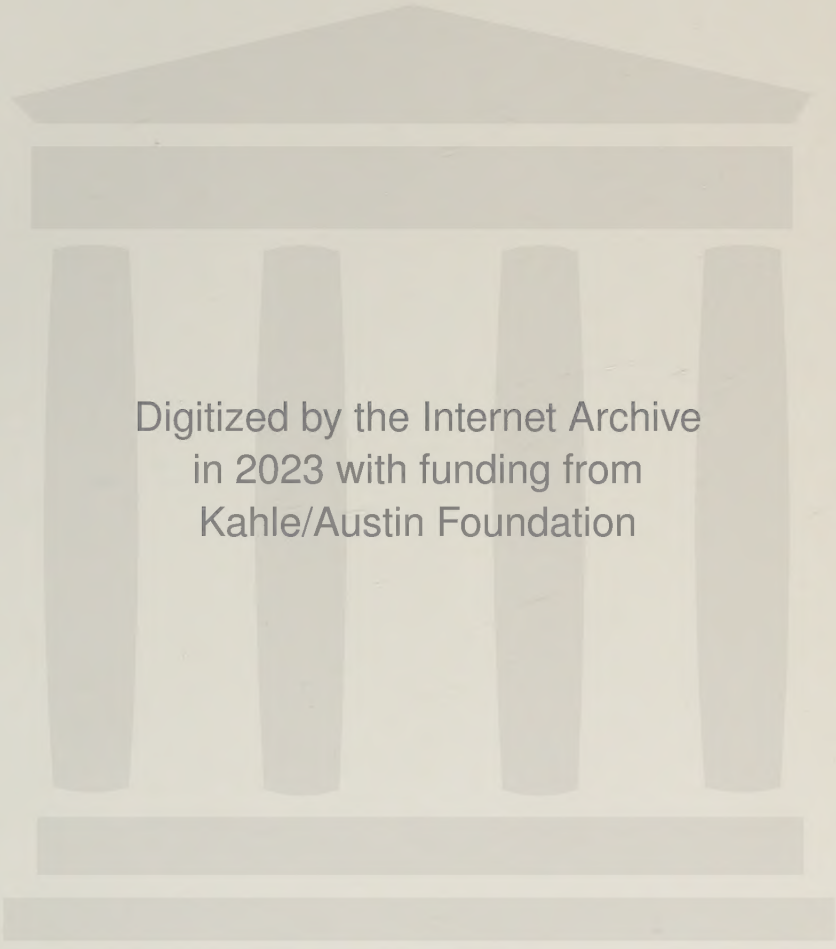
NATIONAL UNIVERSITY LIBRARY

SAN DIEGO

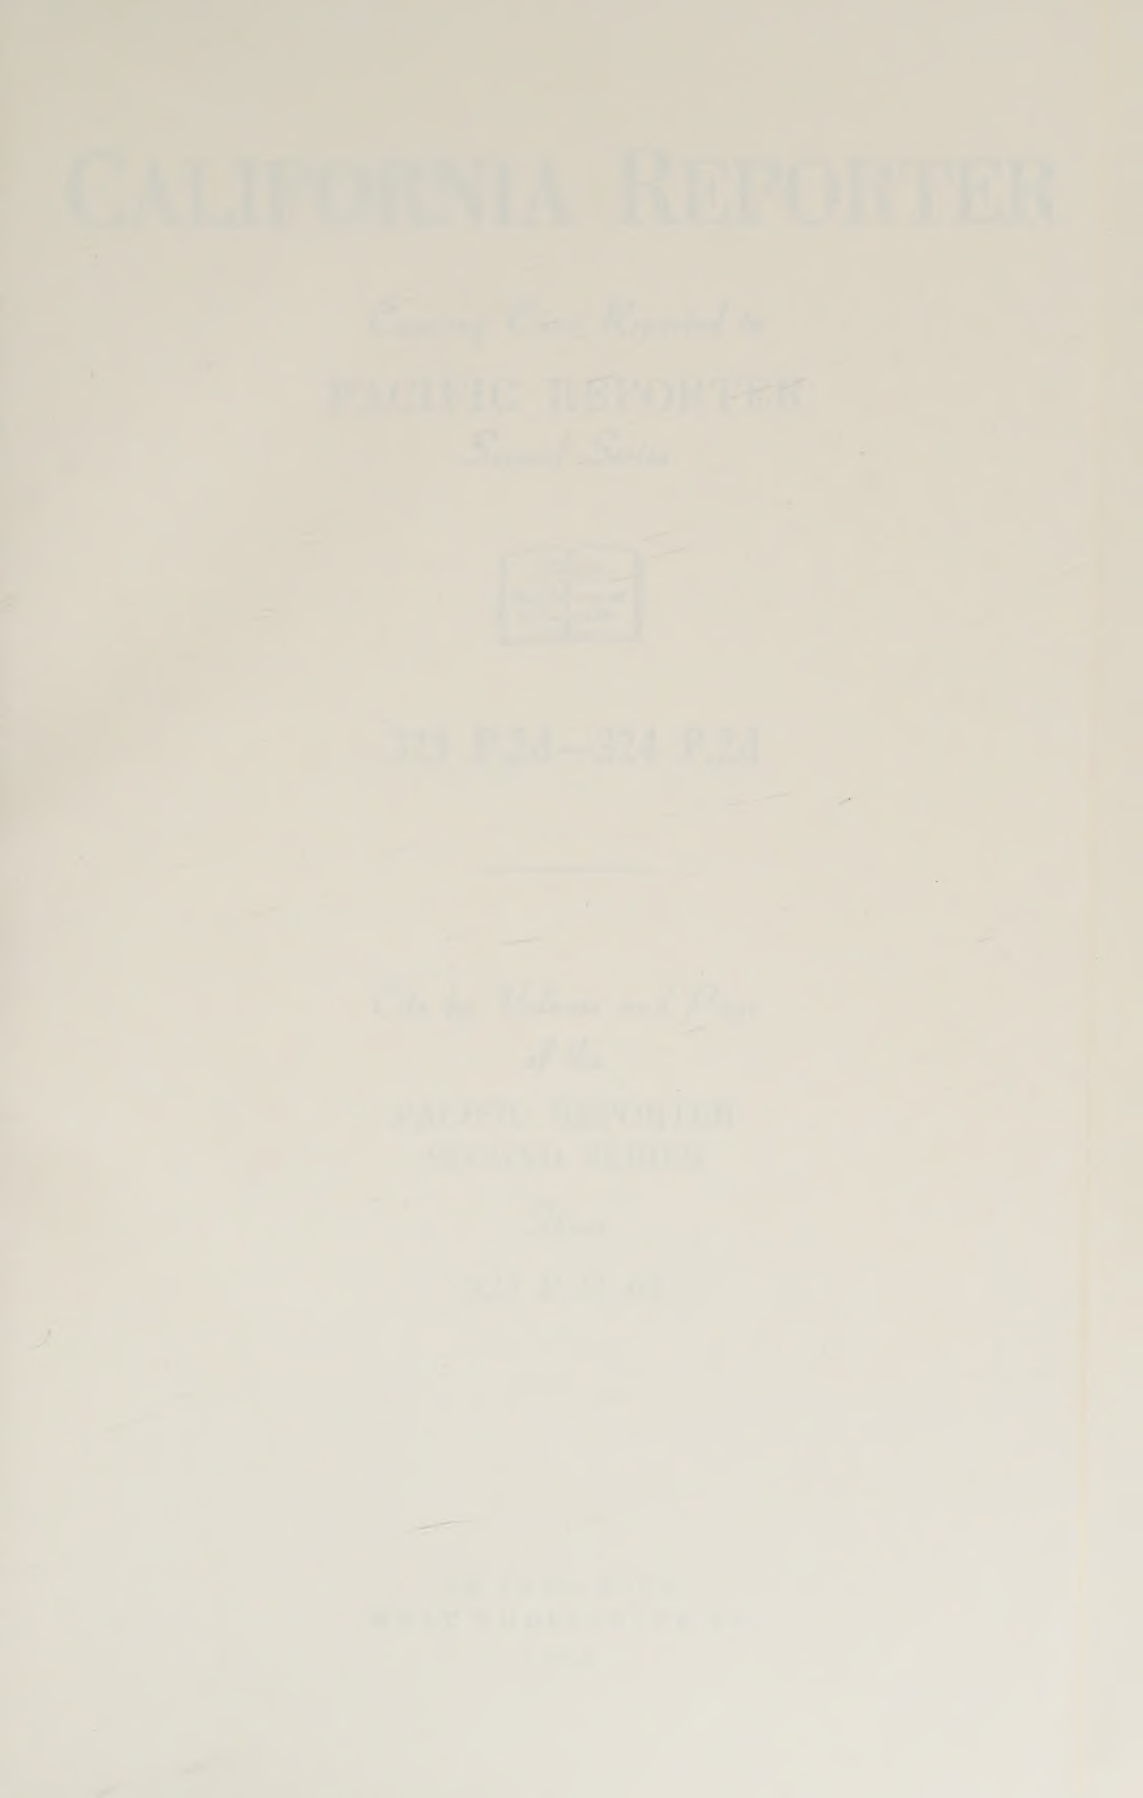
NON-CIRCULATING

CALIFORNIA REPORTER REFERENCES



49 CALIFORNIA REPORTS, 2d SERIES

Cal. Page	P.2d Vol.	P.2d Page
3	314	10
13	313	860
17	314	6
24	313	840
30	314	1
38	314	741
45	315	322
75	315	12
79	315	1
84	315	305
101	315	5
112	315	317
120	315	681
166	315	314
171	315	709
186	316	1
189	316	345
199	316	633
210	317	613
243	317	17
255	316	966
305	316	956
313	316	947
322	317	11
333	316	945
338	316	960
348	316	952
354	317	8
359	317	601
370	317	1
381	317	608
389	317	987
397	318	1
402	317	963
409	317	974
423	318	4
427	317	983
434	317	961
438	317	971
442	317	967
448	318	473
460	319	337
470	319	1
483	319	343
490	319	346
501	319	617
509	319	621
514	319	637
523	319	624
545	319	1033
565	319	1044
577	320	5
595	320	473
625	320	492
629	320	494
639	320	1
647	320	16
652	320	500
668	321	9
674	321	1
686	321	13
690	321	456
695	321	749
701	321	449
706	321	460
714	321	452
720	321	736
729	321	729
740	321	741
749	321	746
754	322	13
764	322	1
784	322	217
787	322	449
805	322	460
815	323	85
826	323	71
849	323	91
855	323	437
864	318	479



155 CALIFORNIA APPELLATE REPORTS, 2d SERIES

Cal.App. Page	P.2d Vol.	P.2d Page
1	317	104
8	317	662
22	317	61
26	317	167
29	317	78
33	317	143
36	317	100
42	317	67
46	317	649
52	317	54
55	317	114
59	317	80
62	317	155
69	317	694
87	317	673
117	317	82
131	317	128
134	317	130
142	317	63
145	317	71
149	317	108
152	317	670
158	317	159
161	317	65
165	317	135
171	317	182
184	317	164
188	317	706
192	318	84
201	318	94
213	317	655
217	317	1010
225	318	110
230	317	634
234	317	993
238	317	1015
242	317	713
251	318	69
255	318	51
259	318	25
273	318	77
277	318	79
280	318	81
284	317	636
288	318	34
293	318	54
309	317	708
315	318	66
319	317	1027
326	317	657
328	318	106
334	317	999
335	317	1021
344	317	1005
347	318	65
350	317	1003
353	318	123
362	318	189
369	317	1000
373	318	102
379	318	44
383	317	998
385	318	91
390	317	1018
396	317	1032
411	318	71
415	318	39
423	318	199
439	318	19
444	318	74
448	318	6
464	317	1007
469	318	113
474	318	172
480	318	134
483	318	37
486	318	136
493	318	116
496	318	532
513	318	181
526	318	498
532	318	128
534	318	153
541	318	22

Cal.App. Page	P.2d Vol.	P.2d Page
544	318	494
551	318	194
554	318	159
561	318	168
568	318	145
573	318	486
585	318	552
596	318	148
601	318	151
604	318	175
613	318	118
618	318	129
623	318	547
627	318	16
631	318	561
639	318	164
644	318	542
649	318	479
660	318	196
665	318	157
669	318	132
672	318	727
679	319	69
697	318	741
705	318	816
711	318	689
715	318	763
721	318	746
727	318	712
740	318	707
744	318	838
748	318	820
755	318	812
762	318	701
772	318	720
777	318	849
781	318	784
789	318	795
807	318	698
812	318	740
814	318	737
817	318	686
823	318	549
829	318	514
833	318	681
842	318	759
848	318	843
853	318	723
861	318	210
866	318	566
870	320	623

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2023 with funding from Kahle/Austin Foundation

https://archive.org/details/californiareport3233vari

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

Covering Cases Reported in

PACIFIC REPORTER
Second Series

323 P.2d—324 P.2d

Cite by Volume and Page of the
PACIFIC REPORTER
SECOND SERIES
Thus:
323 P.2d 65

ST. PAUL, MINN.
WEST PUBLISHING CO.
1958

COPYRIGHT, 1958, BY WEST PUBLISHING CO.
Pacific Reporter, Second Series, Vol. 323, Nos. 2-5;
Vol. 324, Nos. 1-4.

COPYRIGHT, 1958, BY WEST PUBLISHING CO.

Cal.Rep. 323-324 P.2d
2-1968

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
Judges and Officers	V
Table of Cases Reported	XIII

JUDGES AND OFFICERS

SUPREME COURT

Chief Justice

PHIL S. GIBSON San Francisco

Associate Justices

JOHN W. SHENK San Francisco
JESSE W. CARTER San Francisco
ROGER J. TRAYNOR San Francisco
B. REY SCHAUER San Francisco
HOMER R. SPENCE San Francisco
MARSHALL F. McCOMB San Francisco

Clerks

William I. Sullivan	Clerk	San Francisco
Harry M. Gardiser	Chief Deputy Clerk	San Francisco
Raymond J. Bell	Deputy Clerk	San Francisco
Joseph M. Rogers	Deputy Clerk	San Francisco
Robert Formichi	Deputy Clerk	San Francisco
A. F. Bradovich	Deputy Clerk	Sacramento
Henry P. Crabtree	Deputy Clerk	Los Angeles
David Blomgren	Deputy Clerk	Los Angeles

Attorney General

EDMUND G. BROWN San Francisco

DISTRICT COURTS OF APPEALS

FIRST DISTRICT—SAN FRANCISCO

Division 1

PRESIDING JUSTICE

RAYMOND E. PETERS San Francisco

ASSOCIATE JUSTICES

A. F. BRAY San Francisco
FRED B. WOOD San Francisco

Division 2

PRESIDING JUSTICE

HERBERT C. KAUFMAN San Francisco

ASSOCIATE JUSTICES

MAURICE T. DOOLING, Jr. San Francisco
MURRAY DRAPER San Francisco

CLERKS

L. R. ELKINGTON Clerk San Francisco
G. E. BISHEL Deputy Clerk San Francisco
R. J. GLYNN Deputy Clerk San Francisco

SECOND DISTRICT—LOS ANGELES

Division 1

PRESIDING JUSTICE

THOMAS P. WHITE Los Angeles

ASSOCIATE JUSTICES

WALTER J. FOURT Los Angeles
MILDRED L. LILLIE Los Angeles

Division 2

PRESIDING JUSTICE

W. TURNEY FOX Los Angeles

ASSOCIATE JUSTICES

ALLEN W. ASHBURN Los Angeles
ROY L. HERNDON Los Angeles

DISTRICT COURTS OF APPEALS—Continued

Division 3

PRESIDING JUSTICE

CLEMENT L. SHINN Los Angeles

ASSOCIATE JUSTICES

PARKER WOOD Los Angeles
PAUL VALLÉE Los Angeles

CLERKS

JAMES E. BROWN Clerk Los Angeles
EUGENE B. STANLEY Chief Deputy Clerk Los Angeles
JOHN ALLEY Deputy Clerk Los Angeles
CLAY ROBBINS, JR. Deputy Clerk Los Angeles

THIRD DISTRICT—SACRAMENTO

PRESIDING JUSTICE

B. F. VAN DYKE Sacramento

ASSOCIATE JUSTICES

PAUL PEEK Sacramento
ANDREW R. SCHOTTKY Sacramento

CLERKS

L. A. ENDRES Clerk Sacramento
THOMAS J. DILLON Deputy Clerk Sacramento

FOURTH DISTRICT

Fresno—San Bernardino—San Diego

PRESIDING JUSTICE

LLOYD E. GRIFFIN [1] San Diego

ASSOCIATE JUSTICES

LLOYD E. GRIFFIN [1] San Diego
STANLEY MUSSELL San Bernardino

CLERKS

EARL J. VERDECKBERG Clerk San Diego
LLOYD E. HIDDEN Deputy Clerk San Bernardino
ROY M. BOSTWICK Deputy Clerk Fresno
GEORGE J. KOBELIN Deputy Clerk San Diego

[1] Became Presiding Justice, July 24, 1958.

APPELLATE DEPARTMENT, SUPERIOR COURT

ALAMEDA COUNTY

PRESIDING JUDGE

S. VICTOR WAGLER Oakland

JUDGES

RALPH E. HOYT Oakland
THOMAS J. LEDWICH Oakland

CONTRA COSTA COUNTY

PRESIDING JUDGE

HAROLD JACOBY Martinez

JUDGES

HOMER W. PATTERSON Martinez
NORMAN A. GREGG Martinez

FRESNO COUNTY

PRESIDING JUDGE

ARTHUR C. SHEPARD Fresno

JUDGES

MILO POPOVICH Fresno
GEORGE M. DE WOLF Fresno

KERN COUNTY

PRESIDING JUDGE

ROBERT B. LAMBERT Bakersfield

JUDGES

NORMAN F. MAIN Bakersfield
GORDON L. HOWDEN Bakersfield

LOS ANGELES COUNTY

PRESIDING JUDGE

EDWARD T. BISHOP Los Angeles

JUDGES

FRANK G. SWAIN Los Angeles
LEON T. DAVID Los Angeles

CLERK

J. J. MACGREGOR Los Angeles

MARIN COUNTY

PRESIDING JUDGE

JORDAN L. MARTINELLI San Rafael

JUDGES

THOMAS F. KEATING San Rafael
N. CHARLES BRUSATORI San Rafael

APPELLATE DEPARTMENT, SUPERIOR COURT —Continued

MONTEREY COUNTY

Judge

ANTHONY BRAZIL Salinas

ORANGE COUNTY

Presiding Judge

FRANKLIN G. WEST Santa Ana

Judges

ROBERT GARDNER Santa Ana
RAYMOND THOMPSON Santa Ana

RIVERSIDE COUNTY

Presiding Judge

RUSSELL S. WAITE Riverside

Judges

JOHN G. GABBERT Riverside
HILTON H. McCABE Riverside

SACRAMENTO COUNTY

Presiding Judge

JOHN QUINCY BROWN Sacramento

Judges

JAMES H. OAKLEY Sacramento
ALBERT H. MUNDT Sacramento

SAN BERNARDINO COUNTY

Presiding Judge

MARTIN J. COUGHLIN San Bernardino

Judges

ARCHIE D. MITCHELL San Bernardino
CARL B. HILLIARD San Bernardino

SAN DIEGO COUNTY

Presiding Judge

L. N. TURRENTINE San Diego

Judges

ROBERT B. BURCH San Diego
WILLIAM A. GLEN San Diego

APPELLATE DEPARTMENT, SUPERIOR COURT —Continued

SAN FRANCISCO COUNTY

Presiding Judge

PRESTON DEVINE San Francisco

Judges

EDWARD MOLKENBUHR San Francisco
DANIEL R. SHOEMAKER San Francisco

Clerk

Joseph F. Whitman San Francisco

SAN JOAQUIN COUNTY

Presiding Judge

R. M. DUNNE Stockton

Judges

GEORGE F. BUCK Stockton
M. G. WOODWARD Stockton

SAN MATEO COUNTY

Presiding Judge

AYLETT R. COTTON Redwood City

Judges

EDMUND SCOTT Redwood City
LOUIS B. DEMATTEIS Redwood City

SANTA BARBARA COUNTY

Judge

ATWELL WESTWICK Santa Barbara

SANTA CLARA COUNTY

Presiding Judge

EDWIN J. OWENS San Jose

Judges

WILLIAM W. JACKA San Jose
BYRL R. SALSMAN San Jose

SANTA CRUZ COUNTY

Judge

GILBERT B. PERRY Santa Cruz

APPELLATE DEPARTMENT, SUPERIOR COURT
—Continued

SOLANO COUNTY

JUDGE

HARLOW V. GREENWOOD Fairfield

SONOMA COUNTY

PRESIDING JUDGE

HILLIARD COMSTOCK Santa Rosa

JUDGES

CHARLES J. McGOLDRICK Santa Rosa
LINCOLN F. MAHAN Santa Rosa

STANISLAUS COUNTY

PRESIDING JUDGE

H. L. CHAMBERLAIN Modesto

JUDGES

DAVID F. BUSH Modesto
FRANK C. DAMRELL Modesto

VENTURA COUNTY

PRESIDING JUDGE

CHARLES F. BLACKSTOCK Ventura

JUDGES

WILLIAM A. REPPY Ventura
E. PERRY CHURCHILL Ventura

CASES REPORTED

Vols. 323–324 P.2d

	P.2d Vol.	Page
Adleson v. Adleson, App.	324	674
Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co.; Placer County v., Sup.	323	753
Agnew v. City of Los Angeles, App.	323	165
Alarcon v. El Monte School Dist., App.	324	58
Alcoholic Beverage Control Appeals Bd.; Farah v., App.	324	98
Algee v. Eschwig, App.	323	221
Algee's Estate, In re, App.	323	221
Algeri v. Tonini, App.	324	724
Alland & Co.; Coyle v., App.	323	102
Allen v. Paradise Grange No. 490, Inc., App.	323	468
Alma Inv. Co. v. Lee, App.	323	448
Aluisi v. Fresno County, App.	324	920
Alves v. Lopez, App.	324	652
Anderson; Chan v., App.	324	289
Anderson v. Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control, App.	324	24
Anderson Co. v. Mauck, App.	323	454
Anderson Crop Dusters, Inc. v. Matley, App.	324	710
Andrus; People v., App.	324	617
Arden Farms Co.; Trust v., Sup.	324	583
Arechiga v. Housing Authority of City of Los Angeles, App.	324	973
Artem Trust & Inv. Co. v. Ikemoto, App.	323	513
Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry.; Durkee v., App.	324	91
Atherton, Town of, v. Superior Court In and For San Mateo County, App.	324	328
Atkinson Co. v. Highland Park Public Utility Dist., App.	323	173
Attorney General of U. S.; Gottsche v., App.	324	941
Bach; Coffill v., App.	323	873
Bahara; People v., App.	323	453
Baldwin; Lasley v., App.	324	108
Baltazar; People v., App.	323	1062
Bank of America Nat. Trust and Sav. Ass'n; Paley v., App.	324	35
Bank of America, N. T. & S. A.; Simmons v., App.	323	1043
Barber v. Barber, App.	324	746
Barbera; People v., App.	323	815
Barnes v. Dobbins, App.	324	696
Barnett; Jackson v., App.	324	643
Barnett; People v., App.	323	96
Barton; W. C. Dillon & Co. v., App.	323	462
Beardsley; Brenner v., App.	323	841
Berman; Morris v., App.	324	597
Berman; Morris v., App.	324	601
Bernard v. Indemnity Ins. Co. of North America, App.	324	628
Berry v. Chrome Crankshaft Co., App.	324	70
Bertrand; Krause v., App.	323	784
Berve; People v., App.	323	852
Beta Sigma Tau v. Shrine Civic Auditorium, App.	323	496

	Vol.	Page
Blackburn v. Blackburn, two cases, App.	324	971
Blackburn v. Blackburn Auto Parts Co., App.	324	971
Blackburn Auto Parts Co.; Blackburn v., App.	324	971
Blonder; Jones v., App.	323	1015
Blue Ribbon Products Co.; Marsalli's Blue Ribbon Coffee Co. v., App.	323	787
Board of Osteopathic Examiners; Newhouse v., App.	324	687
Bonelli; People v., Sup.	324	1
Boyd v. Fresno County, App.	324	920
Brasher; People v., App.	323	483
Brazell; People v., App.	323	185
Brenner v. Beardsley, App.	323	841
Britton v. Gunderson, App.	324	938
Broes; People v., App.	323	200
Brooks v. Duskin, App.	324	351
Brown v. Fifteenth Dist. Agr. Fair Ass'n, App.	323	131
Browne's Estate, In re, App.	323	827
Browning v. King, App.	324	14
Bruni v. Risdon, App.	323	827
Buckhantz' Estate, In re, App.	324	317
Burns; Hancock v., App.	323	456
Burr v. Crellin, App.	323	830
Burrows v. Jorgensen, two cases, App.	323	150
Calhoun; People v., Sup.	323	427
California Bank v. Schlesinger, Super.	324	119
California Beverage & Supply Co. v. Distillers Distributing Corp., App.	323	517
California Realty Inv. Center v. Ross, App.	323	465
California State Auto. Ass'n; Rollo v., App.	323	531
Califro; Epley v., Sup.	323	91
Califro; Retailers Credit Ass'n v., Sup.	323	91
Calise v. Superior Court In and For Los Angeles County, App.	323	859
Callis; Fowler v., App.	324	728
Campbell v. Clark, App.	324	51
Campbell v. Clark, App.	324	55
Candoli; Hughey v., App.	323	779
Cardan v. Stern, App.	324	736
Carl E. Anderson Co. v. Mauck, App.	323	454
Carrasco; People v., App.	323	129
Carroll; People v., App.	324	713
Casida v. Roberts, App.	324	731
Cavalli v. Macaire, App.	324	336
Cekada; Eistrat v., Sup.	324	881
Chan v. Anderson, App.	324	289
Cheek v. Whiston, App.	323	1028
Chrome Crankshaft Co.; Berry v., App.	324	70
Chrome Crankshaft Co.; Precision Engineering Co. v., App.	324	70
City and County of San Francisco v. Ho Sing, App.	323	1054
City and County of San Francisco; Parker v., App.	323	108
City of Claremont; Johnston v., Sup.	323	71
City of Long Beach; Dynamic Industries Co. v., App.	323	768
City of Los Angeles; Agnew v., App.	323	165
Clancy v. Clancy, App.	323	763
Clancy's Estate, In re, App.	323	763
Clark; Campbell v., App.	324	51
Clark; Campbell v., App.	324	55
Coca Cola Bottling Co. of Sacramento; Hensley v., App.	324	954
Coffill v. Bach, App.	323	873

	Vol.	Page
Coffill; Woolstenhulme v., App.	323	873
Cooper; Lund v., App.	324	62
Cornish; People v., App.	324	627
C. O. Sparks, Inc. v. Pacific Coast Paving Co., App.	324	293
County of San Francisco, City and, v. Ho Sing, App.	323	1054
Cowee v. Marsh, Sup.	324	553
Coyle v. Alland & Co., App.	323	102
Crellin; Burr v., App.	323	830
Crosby v. Martinez, App.	324	26
Crutcher; Enter v., Super.	323	586
Davidson v. Union Bank & Trust Co. of Los Angeles, App.	324	317
Dawson v. Rash, App.	324	959
Day; People v., App.	323	1051
Dayrit v. Dison, App.	323	1011
Deane; Nomellini Const. Co. v., App.	324	654
Del Val's Estate, In re, App.	323	1011
Dempsey & Sanders; Fowler v., App.	324	728
Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control; Anderson v., App.	324	24
Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control; Pastime Cafe, Inc. v., App.	323	551
Department of Employment; Woods Irr. Co. v., Sup.	323	758
Department of Mental Hygiene v. McGilvery, Sup.	323	65
Department of Public Works, People By and Through, v. Lagiss, App.	324	926
Diaz; People v., App.	324	887
Dillon & Co. v. Barton, App.	323	462
Dison; Dayrit v., App.	323	1011
Distillers Distributing Corp.; California Beverage & Supply Co. v., App.	323	517
Dobbins; Barnes v., App.	324	696
Doran v. Milland Development Co., App.	323	792
Drennan v. Star Paving Co., App.	323	477
Durkee v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry., App.	324	91
Duskin; Brooks v., App.	324	351
Dyke Water Co.; Fairrington v., Sup.	323	1001
Dyke Water Co. v. Superior Court of Orange County, App.	324	68
Dynamic Industries Co. v. City of Long Beach, App.	323	768
Edwards; People v., App.	323	484
Eistrat v. Cekada, Sup.	324	881
Eistrat v. Humiston, App.	324	957
Elftman v. Merrill, App.	324	977
Elftman's Estate, In re, App.	324	977
El Monte School Dist.; Alarcon v., App.	324	58
Enter v. Crutcher, Super.	323	586
Epley v. Califro, Sup.	323	91
Eschwig; Algee v., App.	323	221
Espree v. Western Pioneer Ins. Co., Super.	324	749
Evola v. Wendt Const. Co., App.	323	158
Fairrington v. Dyke Water Co., Sup.	323	1001
Farah v. Alcoholic Beverage Control Appeals Bd., App.	324	98
Fava v. Pfahnl, App.	323	552
Fentress v. Van Etta Motors, Super.	323	227
Fifteenth Dist. Agr. Fair Ass'n; Brown v., App.	323	131
First Western Bank & Trust Co.; Good Shepherd Foundation v., App.	323	474
Fleck; Heusner v., App.	323	155
Flying Tiger Line, Inc. v. Los Angeles County, App.	323	1065
Fortna v. Martin, App.	323	146
Fowler v. Callis, App.	324	728
Fowler v. Dempsey & Sanders, App.	324	728

	Vol.	Page
Fresno County; Aluisi v., App.	324	920
Fresno County; Boyd v., App.	324	920
Fresno County; Hoelzle v., App.	324	74
Frizzell v. Frizzell, App.	323	188
Gardner v. Simpkins, App.	324	740
Garibaldi; Wetsel v., App.	323	524
General Elec. Credit Corp.; Williams v., App.	323	1046
General Petroleum Co.; Smith v., App.	324	44
Glenn County; Vater v., Sup.	323	85
Goldberg; King v., App.	323	1035
Goodman; People v., App.	323	536
Good Shepherd Foundation v. First Western Bank & Trust Co., App.	323	474
Gottsche v. Attorney General of U. S., App.	324	941
Graham v. Mead, App.	323	1008
Gregers v. Peterson Ice Cream Co., App.	323	572
Groobman v. Kirk, App.	323	867
Gunderson; Britton v., App.	324	928
Guy S. Atkinson Co. v. Highland Park Public Utility Dist., App.	323	173
Hal B. Hayes Const. Co.; Johnson v., App.	324	307
Hancock v. Burns, App.	323	456
Harmon v. Harmon, App.	324	961
Harris v. Whisler, App.	324	47
Harvey v. Whyte, App.	323	162
Hayes; Oakland Bank of Commerce v., App.	323	509
Hecht; O'Reilly v., App.	324	693
Heck's Estate, In re, App.	324	733
Heffernan; Myers v., App.	323	805
Helmick v. Ritchie, App.	323	584
Helmick v. Ritchie Logging Co., App.	323	584
Helmick Co. v. Ritchie, App.	323	584
Hendricks; Logsdon v., App.	323	135
Henry R. Jahn & Son, Inc. v. Superior Court In and For San Mateo County, Sup.	323	437
Hensley v. Coca Cola Bottling Co. of Sacramento, App.	324	954
Hensley v. Sellers, App.	324	954
Heusner v. Fleck, App.	323	155
Highland Park Public Utility Dist.; Guy S. Atkinson Co. v., App.	323	173
Hill v. Wrather, App.	323	567
Hirtz v. Porter, App.	323	172
Hoelzle v. Fresno County, App.	324	74
Hoffman v. Mitchell, App.	323	581
Hoffman; Swingle v., App.	323	581
Honoroff v. State Bar of Cal., Sup.	323	1003
Hood; People v., App.	324	656
Horace v. Weyrauch, App.	324	666
Ho Sing; City and County of San Francisco v., App.	323	1054
Houchin v. Houchin, App.	324	647
Houchin's Estate, In re, App.	324	647
Housing Authority of City of Los Angeles; Arechiga v., App.	324	973
Housing Authority of City of Los Angeles v. Lopez, App.	324	976
Howell v. O'Malley, Sup.	324	578
Howell's Estate, In re, Sup.	324	578
Hughey v. Candoli, two cases, App.	323	779
Humiston; Eistrat v., App.	324	957
Hunter; Radoff v., App.	323	202
Huntsman; Rupley v., App.	324	19

	Vol.	Page
Huntsman; Rupley Bros. Logging Co. v., App.	324	19
Huntsman Bros.; Rupley v., App.	324	19
Ikemoto; Artem Trust & Inv. Co. v., App.	323	513
Ikemoto; Markowitz v., App.	323	513
Indemnity Ins. Co. of North America; Bernard v., App.	324	628
Jackson v. Barnett, App.	324	643
Jackson v. Superior Tire Co., App.	324	643
Jahn & Son, Inc. v. Superior Court In and For San Mateo County, Sup.	323	437
James; Wickoff v., App.	324	661
Jeffery v. Volberg, App.	324	964
Johnson v. Hal B. Hayes Const. Co., App.	324	307
Johnson v. Nicholson, App.	324	307
Johnson; Ware v., App.	324	346
Johnston v. City of Claremont, Sup.	323	71
Jones v. Blonder, App.	323	1015
Jones v. McCollister, App.	324	639
Jones; People v., App.	324	291
Jorgensen; Burrows v., App.	323	150
J & R Produce Co.; Marquez v., App.	324	720
Karp v. Margolis, App.	323	557
Kazange; Parsons v., App.	323	577
Kelley v. Kelley, App.	324	676
Kelly v. Municipal Court of City and County of San Francisco, App.	324	990
Kessler; Lancaster Sec. Inv. Corp. v., App.	324	634
Kettler-Knolls Const. Co.; Phillips v., App.	324	307
King; Browning v., App.	324	14
King v. Goldberg, App.	323	1035
Kirk; Groobman v., App.	323	867
Kostal; People v., App.	323	1020
Krause v. Bertrand, App.	323	784
Kubon v. Kubon, App.	323	504
Laird v. T. W. Mather, Inc., App.	324	301
Lagiss; People By and Through Department of Public Works v., App.	324	926
Lancaster Sec. Inv. Corp. v. Kessler, App.	324	634
Landi v. Superior Court In and For San Mateo County, App.	324	326
Lane; Sharp v., App.	324	733
Lasley v. Baldwin, App.	324	108
Lawson v. Town & Country Shops, Inc., App.	323	843
Ledbetter's Estate, In re, Sup.	324	884
Lee; Alma Inv. Co. v., App.	323	448
Lee's Estate, In re, App.	323	448
Leipziger; Whitney v., App.	324	16
Lindsey; People v., App.	323	850
Lockhart v. Martin, App.	324	340
Loeber; People v., App.	323	136
Logsdon v. Hendricks, App.	323	135
Lopez; Alves v., App.	324	652
Lopez; Housing Authority of City of Los Angeles v., App.	324	976
Lorbeer; Los Angeles County v., App.	323	542
Los Angeles County; Flying Tiger Line, Inc. v., App.	323	1065
Los Angeles County v. Lorbeer, App.	323	542
Lucas; People v., App.	324	933
Lund v. Cooper, App.	324	62
Luton; Wood v., Sup.	324	884
Lyons; People v., Sup.	324	556
McCain v. Sheridan, App.	324	923

	Vol.	Page
Macaire; Cavalli v., App.	324	336
McClellan v. McClellan, App.	323	811
McCollister; Jones v., App.	324	639
McDonell; Northridge Park County Water Dist. v., App.	324	102
McElhatten v. McElhatten, App.	323	500
McGilvery; Department of Mental Hygiene v., Sup.	323	65
Mackey; Scott v., App.	324	703
McLaughlin v. McLaughlin, App.	323	820
Magee; Ruckes v., App.	323	490
Maia v. Security Lumber & Concrete Co., App.	324	657
Makovsky v. Makovsky, App.	323	562
Margolis; Karp v., App.	323	557
Marill v. Weber, App.	324	8
Markowitz v. Ikemoto, App.	323	513
Markwart; Sweet v., App.	323	192
Markwart Industries; Sweet v., App.	323	192
Marquez v. J & R Produce Co., App.	324	720
Marquez v. Ortiz, App.	324	720
Marquez; People v., App.	324	918
Marsalli's Blue Ribbon Coffee Co. v. Blue Ribbon Products Co., App.	323	787
Marsh; Cowee v., Sup.	324	553
Martin; Fortna v., App.	323	146
Martin; Lockhart v., App.	324	340
Martin; Valley Termite Co. v., App.	323	146
Martinez; Crosby v., App.	324	26
Mathews Conveyor Co. West Coast v. Powell, App.	324	6
Matley; Anderson Crop Dusters, Inc. v., App.	324	710
Mauck; Carl E. Anderson Co. v., App.	323	454
Mead; Graham v., App.	323	1008
Merrill; Elftman v., App.	324	977
Meyers' Estate, In re, App.	324	597
Middlecoff v. Middlecoff, App.	324	669
Milland Development Co.; Doran v., App.	323	792
Miranda; Williams v., App.	323	794
Mitchell; Hoffman v., App.	323	581
Mitchell; Phillips v., Sup.	323	385
Morris v. Berman, App.	324	597
Morris v. Berman, App.	324	601
Municipal Court of City and County of San Francisco; Kelly v., App.	324	990
Murphy v. Walsh, App.	323	206
Myers v. Heffernan, App.	323	805
Myers; Ramey v., App.	323	805
Nesbitt's Estate, In re, App.	323	474
Newhouse v. Board of Osteopathic Examiners, App.	324	687
Nicholson; Johnson v., App.	324	307
N. J. K. Corp. v. Pacific Vital Foods Stores, Inc., App.	324	96
Noble; Phillips v., Sup.	323	385
Nomellini Const. Co. v. Deane, App.	324	654
Northridge Park County Water Dist. v. McDonell, App.	324	102
Oakland Bank of Commerce v. Hayes, App.	323	509
Ogg; People v., App.	323	117
O'Kelley-Eccles Co. v. State, App.	324	683
Oken; People v., App.	324	58
O'Malley; Howell v., Sup.	324	578
One 1955 Oldsmobile Hardtop; People v., App.	323	1059
O'Reilly v. Hecht, App.	324	693

	Vol.	Page
Ortiz; Marquez v., App.	324	720
Osslo; People v., Sup.	323	397
Pacific Coast Paving Co.; C. O. Sparks, Inc. v., App.	324	293
Pacific Greyhound Lines; Shaw v., Sup.	323	391
Pacific Vital Foods Stores, Inc.; N. J. K. Corp. v., App.	324	96
Palermo; Stockton Theatres, Inc. v., App.	323	1039
Paley v. Bank of America Nat. Trust and Sav. Ass'n, App.	324	35
Palm Oil Co.; Routh v., App.	324	936
Paradise Grange No. 490, Inc.; Allen v., App.	323	468
Parker v. City and County of San Francisco, App.	323	108
Parsons v. Kazange, App.	323	577
Pasadena City Lines, Inc.; Rocray v., App.	323	772
Pastime Cafe, Inc. v. Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control, App.	323	551
Paul C. Helmick Co. v. Ritchie, App.	323	584
People v. Andrus, App.	324	617
People v. Bahara, App.	323	453
People v. Baltazar, App.	323	1062
People v. Barbera, App.	323	815
People v. Barnett, App.	323	96
People v. Berve, App.	323	852
People v. Bonelli, Sup.	324	1
People v. Brasher, App.	323	483
People v. Brazell, App.	323	185
People v. Broes, App.	323	200
People v. Calhoun, Sup.	323	427
People v. Carrasco, App.	323	129
People v. Carroll, App.	324	713
People v. Cornish, App.	324	627
People v. Day, App.	323	1051
People v. Diaz, App.	324	887
People v. Edwards, App.	323	484
People v. Goodman, App.	323	536
People v. Hood, App.	324	656
People v. Jones, App.	324	291
People v. Kostal, App.	323	1020
People v. Lindsey, App.	323	850
People v. Loeber, App.	323	136
People v. Lucas, App.	324	933
People v. Lyons, Sup.	324	556
People v. Marquez, App.	324	918
People v. Ogg, App.	323	117
People v. Oken, App.	324	58
People v. One 1955 Oldsmobile Hardtop, App.	323	1059
People v. Osslo, Sup.	323	397
People v. Piascik, App.	323	1032
People v. Power, Super.	324	113
People v. Schiers, App.	324	981
People v. Sheeley, App.	324	65
People v. Silberstein, Super.	323	591
People v. Small, App.	324	110
People v. Smith, Sup.	323	435
People v. Snyder, Sup.	324	1
People v. Tahtinen, Sup.	323	442
People v. Taylor, App.	324	715
People v. Webb, App.	323	141
People v. White, App.	324	296

	Vol.	Page
People v. Williams, App.	323	824
People v. Wills, App.	323	470
People v. Witt, App.	324	79
People v. Woo Mee Foo, App.	323	1071
People By and Through Department of Public Works v. Lagiss, App.	324	926
Peterson Ice Cream Co.; Gregers v., App.	323	572
Pfadenhauer's Estate, In re, App.	324	693
Pfahnl; Fava v., App.	323	552
Phillips v. Kettler-Knolls Const. Co., App.	324	307
Phillips v. Mitchell, Sup.	323	385
Phillips v. Noble, Sup.	323	385
Philips v. Sun-Best Fruit Distributors, App.	324	948
Piascik; People v., App.	323	1032
Placer County v. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co., Sup.	323	753
Plumer's Estate, In re, App.	324	346
Porter; Hirtz v., App.	323	172
Powell; Mathews Conveyor Co. West Coast v., App.	324	6
Power; People v., Super.	324	113
Precision Engineering Co. v. Chrome Crankshaft Co., App.	324	70
Radoff v. Hunter, App.	323	202
Ramey v. Myers, App.	323	805
Ramirez; Rayner v., App.	324	83
Rash; Dawson v., App.	324	959
Rasmussen; Ziegelmaier v., Super.	324	116
Rayner v. Ramirez, App.	324	83
Reed; Sheveland v., App.	324	633
Retailers Credit Ass'n v. Califro, Sup.	323	91
Rice; Williams v., App.	323	126
Richfield Oil Corp. v. Security-First Nat. Bank of Los Angeles, App.	323	834
Risdon; Bruni v., App.	323	827
Ritchie; Helmick v., App.	323	584
Ritchie; Paul C. Helmick Co. v., App.	323	584
Ritchie Logging Co.; Helmick v., App.	323	584
Roberts; Casida v., App.	324	751
Rocray v. Pasadena City Lines, Inc., App.	323	772
Rogers; Security-First Nat. Bank of Los Angeles v., App.	324	908
Rohde's Estate, In re, App.	323	490
Rollo v. California State Auto. Ass'n, App.	323	531
Ronkendorf's Estate, In re, App.	324	941
Ross; California Realty Inv. Center v., App.	323	465
Ross; Weber v., App.	323	465
Routh v. Palm Oil Co., App.	324	936
Ruckes v. Magee, App.	323	490
Rupley v. Huntsman, App.	324	19
Rupley v. Huntsman Bros., App.	324	19
Rupley Bros. Logging Co. v. Huntsman, App.	324	19
San Francisco, City and County of, v. Ho Sing, App.	323	1054
Scannavino; Wilson v., App.	324	350
Scannavino Trucking Co.; Wilson v., App.	324	350
Scarano v. Schnoor, App.	323	178
Schiers; People v., App.	324	981
Schlesinger; California Bank v., Super.	324	119
Schnoor; Scarano v., App.	323	178
Scott v. Mackey, App.	324	703
Security-First Nat. Bank of Los Angeles; Richfield Oil Corp. v., App.	323	834
Security-First Nat. Bank of Los Angeles v. Rogers, App.	324	908

	Vol.	Page
Security Jewelry & Loan Co.; Silver v., App.	323	479
Security Lumber & Concrete Co.; Maia v., App.	324	657
Sellers; Hensley v., App.	324	954
Shachunazarian v. Widmer, App.	323	865
Sharp v. Lane, App.	324	733
Shaw v. Pacific Greyhound Lines, Sup.	323	391
Sheeley; People v., App.	324	65
Sheridan; McCain v., App.	324	923
Sheveland v. Reed, App.	324	633
Shrine Civic Auditorium; Beta Sigma Tau v., App.	323	496
Silberstein; People v., Super.	323	591
Silver v. Security Jewelry & Loan Co., App.	323	479
Simmons v. Bank of America, N. T. & S. A., App.	323	1043
Simpkins; Gardner v., App.	324	740
Small; People v., App.	324	110
Smith v. General Petroleum Co., App.	324	44
Smith; People v., Sup.	323	435
Snyder; People v., Sup.	324	1
Southern California Waiters Alliance, Local 17; Van Hook v., App.	323	212
Sparks, Inc. v. Pacific Coast Paving Co., App.	324	293
Stafford, Application of, App.	324	967
Star Paving Co.; Drennan v., App.	323	477
State; O'Kelley-Eccles Co. v., App.	324	683
State Bar of Cal.; Honoroff v., Sup.	323	1003
Stephens v. Toomey, App.	323	471
Stern; Cardan v., App.	324	736
Stockton Theatres, Inc. v. Palermo, App.	323	1039
Summers Gyroscope Co.; Thomas v., App.	324	893
Sun-Best Fruit Distributors; Philips v., App.	324	948
Superior Court In and For Los Angeles County; Calise v., App.	323	859
Superior Court In and For Marin County; Tupper v., App.	324	356
Superior Court In and For San Mateo County; Henry R. Jahn & Son, Inc. v., Sup.	323	437
Superior Court In and For San Mateo County; Landi v., App.	324	326
Superior Court In and For San Mateo County; Town of Atherton v., App.	324	328
Superior Court of Orange County; Dyke Water Co. v., App.	324	68
Superior Tire Co.; Jackson v., App.	324	643
Sweet v. Markwart, App.	323	192
Sweet v. Markwart Industries, App.	323	192
Swingle v. Hoffman, App.	323	581
Tahtinen; People v., Sup.	323	442
Taylor; People v., App.	324	715
Tew v. Tew, App.	324	625
Thomas v. Summers Gyroscope Co., App.	324	893
Tonini; Algeri v., App.	324	724
Toomey; Stephens v., App.	323	471
Town of Atherton v. Superior Court In and For San Mateo County, App.	324	328
Town & Country Shops, Inc.; Lawson v., App.	323	843
Trust v. Arden Farms Co., Sup.	324	583
Tupper v. Superior Court In and For Marin County, App.	324	356
T. W. Mather, Inc.; Laird v., App.	324	301
Union Bank & Trust Co. of Los Angeles; Davidson v., App.	324	317
Valley Termite Co. v. Martin, App.	323	146
Van Etta Motors; Fentress v., Super.	323	227
Van Hook v. Southern California Waiters Alliance, Local 17, App.	323	212
Vater v. Glenn County, Sup.	323	85

	Vol.	Page
Volberg; Jeffery v., App.	324	964
Walker, In re, App.	324	32
Walker v. Walker, App.	323	451
Walsh; Murphy v., App.	323	206
Ware v. Johnson, App.	324	346
W. C. Dillon & Co. v. Barton, App.	323	462
Webb; People v., App.	323	141
Weber; Marill v., App.	324	8
Weber v. Ross, App.	323	465
Weinfeld v. Weinfeld, App.	324	342
Wendt Const. Co.; Evola v., App.	323	158
Western Pioneer Ins. Co.; Espree v., Super.	324	749
Wetsel v. Garibaldi, App.	323	524
Weyrauch; Horace v., App.	324	666
Whisler; Harris v., App.	324	47
Whiston; Cheek v., App.	323	1028
White; People v., App.	324	296
Whitney v. Leipziger, App.	324	16
Whyte; Harvey v., App.	323	162
Wickoff v. James, App.	324	661
Widmer; Shachunazarian v., App.	323	865
Williams v. General Elec. Credit Corp., App.	323	1046
Williams v. Miranda, App.	323	794
Williams; People v., App.	323	824
Williams v. Rice, App.	323	126
Wills; People v., App.	323	470
Wilson v. Scannavino, App.	324	350
Wilson v. Scannavino Trucking Co., App.	324	350
Wilson v. Wilson, App.	323	1017
Witt; People v., App.	324	79
Wood v. Luton, Sup.	324	884
Woods Irr. Co. v. Department of Employment, Sup.	323	758
Woolstenhulme v. Cofill, two cases, App.	323	873
Woo Mee Foo; People v., App.	323	1071
Wrather; Hill v., App.	323	567
Ziegelmaier v. Rasmussen, Super.	324	116

†

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

323 PACIFIC REPORTER
SECOND SERIES

DEPARTMENT OF MENTAL HYGIENE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Laurence McGILVERY, Executor of the Estate of Annie Christabel Girard, Deceased, Defendant and Appellant.*

L. A. 24830.

Supreme Court of California,
In Bank.

March 25, 1958.

Rehearing Granted April 24, 1958.

Claim by Department of Mental Health against executor of mother's estate for support and maintenance of daughter at state mental institution. From an award of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Burnett Wolfson, J., in favor of the department, the executor appealed. The Supreme Court, Shenk, J., held that where Director of Mental Health did not cancel amounts due from mother, following an investigation and determination of her inability to pay for care of her daughter, failure to enforce obligation of mother to pay for care of her daughter, did not constitute such administrative action as would result in modifying, remitting or cancelling obligation and Department of Mental Health was entitled to recover from mother's estate portions of obligation which were not barred by statute of limitations.

Judgment affirmed.

Schauer, J., dissented.

Opinion, 316 P.2d 46, vacated.

1. Statutes ⇐208

Section making certain relatives of mentally ill person liable for care, support and maintenance of such person in state institution, must be considered with other sections in pari materia. West's Ann. Welfare & Inst.Code, §§ 6650, 6651, 6652, 6653.

2. Mental Health ⇐74

While unconditional liability is imposed upon certain relatives of person who has been committed to state institution for mentally ill, amounts due from such relatives may be reduced, remitted, or cancelled by administrative action. West's Ann.Welfare & Inst.Code, §§ 6650, 6652, 6653.

3. Mental Health ⇐75

Fact that mother of person, who had been committed to mental institution, was unable to pay amounts which she was obligated to pay for such person's care, did not of itself constitute a reduction, remission or cancellation of the obligation. West's Ann.Welfare & Inst.Code, §§ 6650, 6652, 6653.

4. Executors and Administrators ⇐202(1)
Mental Health ⇐75

Where Director of Mental Health did not cancel amounts due from mother, following investigation and determination of her inability to pay for care of her daughter at state mental institution, failure to enforce obligations of mother to pay for care of her daughter, did not constitute such administrative action as would result in modifying, remitting or cancelling obligation, and Department of Mental Health was entitled to recover from mother's estate portions of obligation which were not barred by statute of limitations. West's Ann.Welfare & Inst.Code, §§ 6650, 6651, 6652, 6653; West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. § 345.

5. Estoppel ⇐70(2)
Mental Health ⇐75

Failure of Department of Mental Health to make a prior demand on mother for cost of care and maintenance of her daughter, who had been committed to state mental institution, did not waive its right to recover for care of daughter, nor was department estopped from demanding payment from mother's executor. West's Ann.Welfare & Inst.Code, §§ 6650, 6651, 6652, 6653.

6. Mental Health ⇐82

There can be no laches in delaying bringing of action against relative for care of person committed to a mental institution if action is brought within period of limitation, unless there are some facts or circumstances attending delay which have operated to injury of defendant. West's Ann.Welfare & Inst.Code, §§ 6650, 6651, 6652, 6653.

* Opinion vacated 329 P.2d 689.

Carter, Young, Zetterberg & Henrie and Richard T. Young, Pomona, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., and Ariel C. Hilton, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SHENK, Justice.

This is an appeal by the defendant Laurence McGilvery as executor of the estate of Annie Christabel Girard, deceased, from a judgment awarding to the plaintiff, the Department of Mental Hygiene of the State of California, the sum of $4,737 on a claim filed against the estate of the decedent.

In 1935 Joan McGilvery, daughter of the decedent was adjudged mentally ill and from that time has been confined in state hospitals and maintained and provided for by state agencies whose interests the Department of Mental Hygiene now represents.

When first confined Joan was married to Neil McGilvery, and their son Laurence, the defendant executor, was three years of age. In 1936 the husband disappeared and his whereabouts remain unknown. Joan's mother took Laurence into her home and provided for his support and education. In 1955 she died. Her will was admitted to probate and Laurence, then an adult, was named as executor. Other than a $1,000 trust fund for the benefit of Joan, the estate was left to Laurence.

It appears that at the time of Joan's commitment, Mrs. Girard was a single woman, 63 years of age. She owned a home in Oakland from which she had an annual income of approximately $200. She supplemented that income with her earnings as a nurse, found to be about $20 a month. The only evidence of her earnings between the time of Joan's commitment and Mrs. Girard's death relates to the last four years of her life. During those years she had an income of approximately $100 a month, $50 a month from an investment fund derived, apparently, from the sale of her home, and $50 a month from federal old age benefits. At her death her estate was appraised at $14,504.69. It increased to $18,984.69 during administration.

The claim presented by the Department of Mental Hygiene is for Joan's support and maintenance for the four year period immediately preceding Mrs. Girard's death. The executor rejected the claim and this action was commenced by the department to enforce its payment. There is no dispute as to the amount of the claim. The only question is the liability of the estate for its payment.

The department's claim is based upon legislation found in the Welfare and Institutions Code which provides for the care and maintenance of mentally ill persons. Section 6650 provides in its pertinent parts: "The husband, wife, father, mother, or children of a mentally ill person * * * shall cause him to be properly and suitably cared for and maintained * * *. The husband, wife, father, mother, or children of a mentally ill person * * and the administrators of their estates * * * shall be liable for his care, support, and maintenance in a state institution of which he is an inmate. * * *" Section 6651 provides in part: "The monthly rate for the care, support, and maintenance of all mentally ill * * * persons * * * at the state hospitals for the mentally ill where there is liability to pay for such care, support, and maintenance, shall be reviewed once each fiscal year and fixed at the state-wide average per capita cost of maintaining patients in all state hospitals for the preceding fiscal year, as determined by the Director of Mental Hygiene, and shall be payable in advance. * * * The Director of Mental Hygiene may reduce, cancel or remit the amount to be paid by the estate or the relatives, as the case may be, liable for the care, support, and maintenance of any mentally ill * * * person * * * who is a patient of a state hospital for the mentally ill, on satisfactory proof that the estate or relatives, as the case may be, are unable to pay the cost of such care, support, and maintenance. * * *" In section 6652, the Department of Mental Hygiene is given the authority to take such action as may be necessary to effect the collection of the charges mentioned in section 6650.

In section 6653 it is provided that "The department shall, following the admission of a patient into a State hospital for the insane * * * make an investigation to determine whether the patient has any relative or relatives responsible under the provisions of Section 6650 for the payment of the costs of * * * maintenance, and shall ascertain the financial condition of such relative or relatives to determine whether in each case such relative or relatives are in fact financially able to pay such charges. * * *"

Following Joan's commitment an investigation was conducted regarding Mrs. Girard's financial circumstances. No charge or other exaction was attempted to be collected from her under section 6650 of the Welfare and Institutions Code, either at that time or during her lifetime.

[1] It is claimed by the defendant that section 6650 does not impose on the persons named therein an absolute and unconditional liability for the support and maintenance of a mentally ill relative, but that liability is imposed only if the investigation mentioned in section 6653 reveals that those persons "are in fact financially able to pay such charges." It is obvious that the language of section 6650 cannot be considered alone, but that it must be considered with other sections in pari materia. County of Los Angeles v. Frisbie, 19 Cal.2d 634, 639, 122 P.2d 526. Section 6650 was enacted in 1937. It was based on the former Political Code section 2176. That section contained the provisions, now set forth in all material respects in sections 6652 and 6653, as well as 6650, including the provision that the department shall make an investigation to determine the financial ability of named relatives to pay the charges for the support and maintenance of the mentally ill. Under the circumstances sections 6650 and 6653 "shall be construed as restatements and continuations * * * and not as new enactments" (Welf. & Inst.Code, § 2), and are to be considered together. Accordingly we must look to the construction given section 2176 of the Political Code prior to 1937.

Section 2176 when first enacted in 1903 (Stats.1903, p. 505) clearly made ability to pay a condition of liability. It provided that "* * * the husband, wife, father, mother, or children of an insane person, if of sufficient ability * * * shall be liable for the care, support and maintenance of any insane person in a state hospital * * *." In 1909 that section was modified and the words "if of sufficient ability" were deleted. Stats.1909, p. 71. In 1921 the section was again modified by the addition of a second paragraph requiring an investigation into the financial circumstances of the responsible parties to determine whether they were "in fact financially able to pay such charges" provided for in the first paragraph. Stats.1921, p. 1335. In 1931 a further amendment did not alter the provisions of the same section in any respect material to the present inquiry. Stats. 1931, p. 322. It was in 1937 that the section was divided. The first paragraph, providing for charges as against responsible relatives, became section 6650 of the Welfare and Institutions Code. The second paragraph, providing for an investigation into the financial circumstances of responsible relatives, became section 6653 of the same code.

It is significant that the Legislature had first expressly specified the relatives who were responsible as those "of sufficient ability" to pay and thereafter deleted that requirement. The defendant contends that regardless of the deletion, the Lunacy Commission, then performing the functions of the Department of Mental Hygiene, continued to use ability to pay as a criterion in making charges after 1909. It appears in several of the Commission's biennial reports to the Legislature that ability to pay was considered as a factor in determining whether the Commission enforced its monthly charges. (See Reports of the State Commission in Lunacy, Attorneys' Reports: Vol. 4, Appendix to Journals of Senate and Assembly of California, 41st Session (1915), p. 24; Vol. 6, Appendix to Journals of Senate and Assembly of California, 42nd Session (1917), p. 32; Vol. 1, Appendix to Journals of Senate and Assembly of California, 44th Session (1921), p. 19.) But there is nothing to indicate in either the statutes or in the administrative practices that ability to pay was a factor in determining liability for the charges after 1909. Likewise in 1921, when the provision for the investigation of the financial circumstances of responsible relatives was added there was no indication that the purpose of the added provision was to determine liability of relatives already made unequivocally liable. The language of the first paragraph of section 2176 and the change of the law in 1909 too clearly provided for the imposition of an initial liability to permit any other construction. The investigation provided for in the 1921 legislation must be deemed to serve some purpose and that purpose is apparent from companion sections first enacted in 1903. Section 2180 of the Political Code then enacted provided for the amount of monthly support to be paid by relatives of the mentally ill, and further provided that "the medical superintendent of a state hospital for the insane shall, on the order of the commission, reduce or remit the amount to be paid by the estate or the relatives, as the case may be, liable for the care, support, maintenance and clothing of any insane person committed thereto and confined therein, on satisfactory proof that said estate or said relatives, as the case may be, are unable to pay the said sum * * *." Stats.1903, p. 506. The foregoing has been carried through and appears today in its material aspects in section 6651 of the Welfare and Institutions Code above set out. The legislation of 1921, in providing for an investigation of financial circumstances of responsible relatives, was intended to furnish state agencies with knowledge sufficient to enable them to reduce or remit the amounts for which the relatives were liable if the circumstances justified it.

[2–4] It therefore appears that while an unconditional liability is imposed, the amounts due thereunder may be reduced, remitted, or cancelled by administrative action. It may be assumed in the present case that Mrs. Girard, during her lifetime, was unable to pay the amounts for which she was obligated. However, mere inability to pay cannot of itself constitute a reduction, remission or cancellation of the obligation. As stated, proper consideration of the statutory provisions clearly indicates that the Legislature intended liability to attach regardless of ability to pay. It is true that the Director of Mental Hygiene (or his predecessor, the Director of Institutions) might have cancelled or remitted the amounts due, following an investigation and determination of inabilty to pay on the part of the deceased, in accordance with section 6651 of the Welfare and Institutions Code. But there is no evidence that such action was taken following the initial investigation. On the other hand it does appear that during the four years for which recovery is sought the Department of Mental Hygiene, through its director, made determinations as to the monthly rate for the care, treatment, support and maintenance of mentally ill patients and that the claim of the department filed in the present case was in accord with those rates. Mere failure to enforce the obligation cannot be deemed to constitute such administrative action as would result in modifying, remitting or cancelling the obligation, constructively or otherwise. The only effect of such failure, insofar as the obligation to pay is concerned, is to make unenforceable those portions of the obligation which, in accordance with the applicable statute of limitations (Code Civ.Proc. § 345), were outstanding for more than four years.

The plaintiff relies on a decision of the Appellate Department of the Superior Court. Department of Mental Hygiene v. Shane, 142 Cal.App.2d Supp. 881, 299 P.2d 747. In that case a father did not have the ability to pay for the support of his son, an inmate in a state hospital. Nevertheless his estate was held liable in an action against the executor, although no attempt had been made to collect the amounts due from the father during his lifetime. The present case cannot be distinguished from that case. Decisional law in other states is based on legislative enactments not the same as those here involved and for that reason are not controlling.

It is contended by the defendant that our statutory provisions provide "only for prospective collection, in advance, by order duly made and modifiable." This argument necessarily assumes that the obligation to pay was extinguished or rendered uncollectible upon the death of the decedent. Neither assumption may properly be made. If the statute be construed to provide for collection only in advance the obligation would be destroyed upon the death of the decedent. This would lead to the curious assumption that the obligation expressly imposed by section 6650 on the administrators of the estates of responsible relatives must be satisfied by collection prior to their death. The argument further assumes that an order must be made before the obligation is collectible. But the obligation to pay was unconditionally created by statute upon Joan's commitment, and no administrative order was required to perfect it. It continued in the absence of effective administrative action to modify, remit or cancel it. Thus it cannot be said that after Mrs. Girard's death the state purported for the first time to create an obligation to pay for Joan's maintenance. Nor can it properly be contended that the amounts due from an estate for past obligations within the period of limitations are uncollectible from the later acquired assets of the estate. In Re Estate of Phipps, 112 Cal.App. 2d 732, 247 P.2d 409, 412, 33 A.L.R.2d 1251, the Department of Mental Hygiene brought an action under section 6655 of the Welfare and Institutions Code against the estate of an incompetent for care and maintenance furnished prior to his acquisition of the estate. It was contended that there was a legislative intent to limit liability to those obligations which arose after the acquisition of assets by the estate. The court held that "Section 6658, which provides that the department may bring an action to enforce payment for a patient's care against any person, guardian or relative, does not limit such action to a situation in which the judgment is collectible." While the provisions of the law applicable to the present case are not quite the same as those there involved they are found in the same article of the Welfare and Institutions Code and require a consistent construction.

[5, 6] Likewise there is no merit in the contention that the department has waived its right by its failure to make a prior demand for payment, or that it is now estopped from demanding payment. In Re Estate of Fassetta, 14 Cal.App.2d 239, 57 P. 2d 1336, 1337, it was claimed that "the director [of the Department of Institutions] is estopped to present said demand on account of leading the guardian to understand that no demand of the kind would be made, but that the same was waived." There, as here, the defendant relied upon the state's silence over the years; but there was no proof that the state gained any advantage by its conduct, or that the defendant changed his position or suffered any disadvantage in reliance upon the claimed waiver, and the court affirmed a judgment for the Department of Institutions. Nor, is the action barred by laches. "[T]here can be no laches in delaying the bringing of an action if it is brought within the period of limitation * * *, unless there are some facts or circumstances attending the delay which have operated to the injury of the defendant." Meigs v. Pinkham, 159 Cal. 104, 112 P. 883, 886; see also Burns v. Ross, 190 Cal. 269, 278, 212 P. 17; Handyspot Co. of Northern California v. Buegeleisen, 128 Cal.App.2d 191, 195–196, 274 P.2d 938; 18 Cal.Jur.2d 208. In the present case there is no substantial evidence of injury to the defendant occasioned by the delay in bringing the action.

From time immemorial it has been the natural primary obligation of the parent to bear the financial burden of caring for an afflicted child. In this humanitarian age the state has assumed that obligation in the absence of the parent's ability to do so. This fact has not, however, entirely abolished the parental obligation. It has done so only to the extent provided by statute. There is no apparent reason why the state should not provide that the parent's financial responsibility created during her lifetime should continue as an obligation of her estate. The fact that, because of circumstances, the obligation created during her lifetime was not then collected did not extinguish it as a valid claim against her estate in an amount within the statute of limitations.

The judgment is affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and CARTER, TRAYNOR, SPENCE and McCOMB, JJ., concur.

SCHAUER, Justice (dissenting).

I cannot agree that the liability set forth in section 6650 of the Welfare and Institutions Code is unconditional regardless of ability to pay. The Welfare and Institutions Code, with its comprehensive provisions for the liability of responsible relatives to the appropriate public agency for the support of the needy, is the measure of such liability; its sections, read together, constitute a complete system which occupies the field of such liability. (See County of San Bernardino v. Simmons (1956), 46 Cal.2d 394, 399, 296 P.2d 329; County of Contra Costa v. Lasky (1954), 43 Cal.2d 506, 509, 275 P.2d 452.) When the pertinent portions of the code are read together it appears that the liability of the responsible relatives stated in section 6650 is subject to the condition, stated in section 6653, that investigation disclose that "such relative or relatives are in fact financially able to pay such charges."

There was, in effect, a determination by the department during Mrs. Girard's lifetime that she need not pay any amount for the care and maintenance of Joan, as evidenced by the failure to make any charge for such care and maintenance after investigation of Mrs. Girard's financial circumstances. This determination was, in effect, a remission of the conditional liability which would have attached only in the event of a determination that Mrs. Girard was "financially able to pay such charges."

Section 6651 of the code provides that "The Director of Mental Hygiene may reduce, cancel or remit the amount to be paid by the estate or the relatives, as the case may be, liable for the care * * * of any mentally ill or insane person * * * who is a patient of a state hospital for the mentally ill, on satisfactory proof that the estate or relatives, as the case may be, are unable to pay the cost of such care." The power to "reduce, cancel or remit" appears correlative to the power to impose, and where liability is not imposed during the lifetime of the responsible relative it does not appear consonant with legislative intent to seek to impose such liability after the responsible relative's death.

I would not analogize In re Estate of Phipps (1952), 112 Cal.App.2d 732, 247 P.2d 409, 33 A.L.R.2d 1251 (majority opinion, 323 P.2d at page 69). The question there was the liability of the estate of an incompetent for care furnished the incompetent at a state hospital prior to the acquisition of any estate by the incompetent. It may fairly be said that the liability of the estate of the incompetent under section 6655 of the Welfare and Institutions Code, once the incompetent has died, is "unconditional" as opposed to the liability of the estate of a responsible relative under sections 6650, 6651, and 6653. In the Phipps case it is said (at page 735 of 112 Cal. App.2d, at page 411 of 247 P.2d) that "The liability of both [the estate of the incompetent and the responsible relatives] is there, although there may be no collectibility due to absence of estate or funds."

This statement appears too broad insofar as it indicates that the estate of a responsible relative would be liable even though during the lifetime of the relative there was no determination of ability to pay.

From what has been said it is apparent that I disagree with Department of Mental Hygiene v. Shane (1956), 142 Cal.App.2d Supp. 881, 299 P.2d 747 (majority opinion, 323 P.2d at page 69). There, there was no evidence that the department ever made demand upon the decedent, during his lifetime, for the support of his insane son. After his death the department filed a claim in his estate. The court said (at page 883 [1] of 142 Cal.App.2d Supp., at page 749 of 299 P.2d), "We don't see any connection between the fact that the decedent did not have the ability to pay for his son, the inmate, while he was living and the fact that his estate would be liable." However, it appears that there is a connection between the fact that the department was not shown to have made claim to payments and established the ability of the decedent to make such payments during the period for which support was sought rather than waiting to make claim therefor after the asserted liability had accrued and the responsible relative had died.

As stated in the majority opinion (323 P.2d at page 67), section 2176 of the Political Code when enacted (Stats.1903, p. 505) "clearly made ability to pay a condition of liability." It provided, in material part, that "The husband, wife, father, mother, or children of an insane person, if of sufficient ability, * * * shall be liable for the care, support and maintenance of any insane person in a state hospital for the insane * * *" (Italics added.) When the Legislature deleted the phrase "if of sufficient ability" in 1909 (Stats.1909, p. 71) it added to the Political Code a form of commitment which expressly provided for a statement of financial ability (Pol.Code, § 2170, Stats.1909, p. 70). And in 1921, as the majority opinion points out, the Legislature added to section 2176 of the Political Code the provision that "The commission shall * * * make an investigation to determine whether the patient has any relative or relatives as mentioned in this section, and who are herein made responsible for payment for the care * * * of such patient, * * * and shall ascertain the financial condition of such relative or relatives, to determine whether in each case such relative or relatives are in fact financially able to pay such charges." (Stats.1921, p. 1335.) It thus appears that the Legislature has always had in mind financial ability as a condition of the liability of responsible relatives.

For the reasons above stated, I would reverse the judgment.

49 Cal.2d 826

Philip F. JOHNSTON and Merle F. Johnston, Plaintiffs and Appellants,

v.

CITY OF CLAREMONT (a Municipal Corporation) et al., Defendants and Appellants.

L. A. 24247.

Supreme Court of California.
In Bank.

March 26, 1958.

Rehearing Denied April 23, 1958.

Declaratory relief action brought by property owners seeking to have ordinance changing their property from residental uses to commercial uses held valid. From a judgment of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Donald R. Wright, J. pro tem., holding the ordinance valid, both the property owners and city appealed. The Supreme Court, McComb, J., held that city council, in adopting rezoning ordinance which amended general zoning ordinance of city of sixth class by changing plaintiffs' property from single family residence to commercial acted in a legislative capacity, and rezoning ordinance was subject to referendum.

Judgment reversed and property owners' application for leave to produce additional evidence denied.

Carter, Shenk, and Schauer, JJ., dissented.

Opinion, 312 P.2d 300, vacated.

1. Municipal Corporations ⇐108.8

City Council, in adopting rezoning ordinance which amended general zoning ordinance of city of sixth class by changing plaintiffs' property from single family residence to commercial acted in a legislative capacity, and rezoning ordinance was subject to referendum. West's Ann.Const. art. 4, § 1; West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 65804.

2. Municipal Corporations ⇐108.8

Power of referendum may be invoked only with respect to matters which are strictly legislative in character. West's Ann.Const. art. 4, § 1.

3. Municipal Corporations ⇐621.39

The board of supervisors, in granting a permit under a zoning ordinance, acts in an administrative capacity.

4. Municipal Corporations ⇐601(15)

A zoning ordinance constitutes exercise of a governmental and legislative function and is subject to change by legislative power. West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 65804.

5. Municipal Corporations ⇐601(15)

Zoning of use districts or changes of uses and restrictions within a district can be accomplished only through an amendment of the zoning ordinance, and amendment must be made in same mode as its original enactment. West's Ann.Gov. Code, § 65804.

6. Municipal Corporations ⇐108.8

Zoning ordinance adopted by legislative body of general law city without complying with requirements of zoning act is subject to referendum. West's Ann. Const. art. 4, § 1; West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 65804.

7. Municipal Corporations ⇐108.8

Whenever legislative body of city acts in its legislative capacity, action it takes is subject to constitutional right of referendum unless such action falls into one of exceptions provided for in Constitution. West's Ann.Const. art. 4, § 1; West's Ann.Gov. Code, § 65804.

8. Municipal Corporations ⇐601(15)

Where wording of zoning ordinances must be changed in order to accomplish desired revision, act is legislative and not administrative and change must be initiated and adopted in same manner as original zoning ordinance, but where regulation is changed pursuant to a provision of an existing ordinance permitting an administrative variance upon finding of certain facts, the act is administrative. West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 65804.

9. Municipal Corporations ⇐625, 626

Where highway conditions in front of plaintiffs' property which abutted on boulevard made plaintiffs' property more reasonably usable and suitable for commercial purposes than for residential and agricultural purposes and substantially all of property in county contiguous to and for some distance east and west along boulevard had been zoned for business, but area south of plaintiffs' property was zoned for single family residences and to east it was zoned for single family residences, city ordinance zoning plaintiffs' boulevard property for residential and agricultural use was not unreasonable oppressive, arbitrary and discriminatory.

10. Municipal Corporations ⇐63(2)

Although courts will inquire as to whether a zoning ordinance is arbitrary or unreasonable, decision of zoning authorities as to matters of opinion and policy will not be set aside or disregarded by court unless regulations have no reasonable relation to public welfare or unless physical facts show that there has been an unreasonable, oppressive, or unwarranted interference with property rights in exercise of police power.

11. Municipal Corporations ⇐63(1, 2)

Wisdom of prohibitions and restrictions is a matter for legislative determination, and even though a court may not agree with that determination it will not substitute its judgment for that of zoning authorities if there is any reasonable justification for their action.

12. Municipal Corporations ⇐601(17)

Findings and conclusions of trial court as to reasonableness of a zoning ordinance are not binding on an appellate court if record shows that question is debatable and that there may be a difference of opinion on the subject.

13. Municipal Corporations ⇐625

Fact that some hardship is experienced through exercise of police power or that it may be more profitable to make other use of property is not controlling in determining whether zoning regulations are arbitrary or unreasonable.

14. Municipal Corporations ⇐601(15)

Amendment of city ordinance changing plaintiffs' property from agricultural and residential use to commercial use without a hearing before city council of general law city was invalid. St.1951 p. 3897, § 14; St.1953 p. 2929, § 4.

15. Easements ⇐26(1)

Where property owners delivered to city a grant deed conveying a twenty-foot easement over portion of their property for widening of a highway and deed provided for automatic defeasance of grant if ordinance rezoning plaintiffs' property for commercial uses should be repealed, suspended, or otherwise not take effect according to its terms, city did not have a valid and subsisting easement upon defeat of zoning ordinance on referendum.

Harry R. Roberts, Pomona, for plaintiffs and appellants.

William G. Bergman, Jr., Claremont, City Atty., Burke, Williams & Sorensen, Harry C. Williams and Royal M. Sorensen, Los Angeles, for defendants and appellants.

Harold W. Kennedy, County Counsel, Edward H. Gaylord, Deputy County Counsel, Roger Arnebergh, City Atty., and Bourke Jones, Asst. City Atty., Los Angeles, as amici curiae for defendants and appellants.

McCOMB, Justice.

Plaintiffs and defendants appeal from a judgment in a declaratory relief action which held that an ordinance of the city of Claremont rezoning plaintiffs' property as commercial property was valid.

Plaintiffs' property is located on the southwest corner of Foothill Boulevard and Mountain Avenue in Claremont, extending 959 feet in a westerly direction along the south side of Foothill and 569 feet in a southerly direction along the west side of Mountain. Most of it is planted in citrus trees, but on the northeast corner there are a reservoir, water well, and pumping plant, which have been used for many years for commercial purposes.

The northern and western borders of plaintiffs' property constitute the boundaries between Claremont and land which is unincorporated territory of Los Angeles County.

Foothill Boulevard is a widely travelled highway. The unincorporated area on both sides of the highway for a distance of several miles has been zoned C–1 by the county, a zoning which permits commercial establishments such as retail stores, gasoline stations, and restaurants. A great deal of such land is being devoted to commercial uses. The property on the south side of Foothill immediately west of plaintiffs' property is being used for a trailer sales business.

Next to plaintiffs' property on the south, there is a substantial area which has been zoned R–1 (single family residence) by the city of Claremont. The eastern side of Mountain is zoned residential for several blocks north and south of Foothill. East of Mountain on Foothill there is no commercial zoning for over a block and no commercial use for about two blocks.

According to the latest estimate available at the time of trial, Claremont had a population of about 9,000. A downtown area of approximately six square blocks is zoned for C–2 (commercial) uses. In addition, a four-block strip on Foothill, principally on the southern side, has been zoned commercial since 1953. There is evidence that only a few lots are vacant in either of these commercial zones, but single family residences are located on more than two square blocks of the downtown area.

Although one real estate appraiser who had investigated the area testified that in his opinion a profit of $38,600 could be realized from subdividing plaintiffs' property for residential purposes under a plan providing for lots which would back onto Foothill, another one testified that in his opinion such a subdivision would result in a loss of $7,800.

A zoning consultant for the city of Claremont and other cities was of the opinion that the city was essentially residential in character and that there should be no more commercial use permitted on the south side of Foothill. There was also testimony to the effect that the city has zoned 50% more land for commercial purposes than the size of the population would indicate is currently needed, and, in the opinion of a zoning expert, an excess commercial zoning of 25% to 30% is a reasonable amount for future expansion. Other testimony, however, was to the effect that there should be twice as much commercial zoning as is necessary at present.

Chronology

i. In 1951 defendant city of Claremont, a sixth class city, adopted a general zoning plan, ordinance No. 441, under the general law. Plaintiffs' property was zoned for agricultural and residential use.

By the terms of the general zoning ordinance as originally adopted, a public hearing was required to be held by the planning commission on any request for redistricting, but none was expressly prescribed by the ordinance to be held thereafter by the city council.

ii. On May 3, 1954, plaintiffs filed a request with the city council for a change in the zoning of their property from a residential zone to a commercial zone. A public hearing was held by the planning commission, and thereafter the commission referred plaintiffs' request, without recommendation, to the city council.

iii. On June 1, 1954, without further public notice, the city council adopted ordinance No. 503, purporting by its terms to rezone a portion of plaintiffs' property from a residential to a commercial zone. A week later and without notice to plaintiffs, the city council purported to adopt an emergency measure, ordinance No. 504, reciting that the general zoning ordinance did not conform to the Government Code of the State of California and providing that ordinance No. 503 be repealed. Ordinance No. 503 was never published as required by law.

iv. On July 29, 1954, the city council, by ordinance No. 507, amended the general zoning ordinance No. 441 to require a public hearing by both the planning commission and the city council on applications for rezoning.

v. On September 21, 1954, after the effective date of ordinance No. 507, plaintiffs filed a second request for the rezoning of their boulevard frontage to a depth of 300 feet. This application was referred to the planning commission, which held a public hearing on October 19, 1954, but the commission failed to act upon the application within the 40-day period prescribed by ordinance No. 441, as amended by ordinance No. 507, resulting in an approval by operation of law of plaintiffs' application.

vi. On December 6, 1954, the city council held a public hearing upon plaintiffs' application.

vii. On December 14, 1954, defendant city adopted ordinance No. 513, the effect of which was to rezone plaintiffs' boulevard frontage property from an R-1 zone (single family residence) to a C-2 zone (commercial).

viii. Concurrently with the adoption of ordinance No. 513 rezoning plaintiffs' boulevard frontage, plaintiffs delivered to the city a grant deed conveying a 20-foot easement over the most easterly portion of their boulevard frontage for the widening of Mountain Avenue, which deed provided for the automatic defeasance of the grant should ordinance No. 513 be repealed or suspended or otherwise not take effect according to its terms. The city council accepted this grant deed according to the terms thereof.

ix. About January 3, 1955, there were filed with the city clerk referendum petitions signed by 829 registered voters of the city, entitled "Referendum Petition Against Ordinance No. 513 Redistricting Certain Property in the City of Claremont Located at the Southwest Corner of Mountain Avenue and Foothill Boulevard From an R-1 Zone (single family residence) to a C-2 Zone (heavy commercial)."

x. Pursuant to said referendum petition, a special election was held May 3, 1955, to submit to the electors the question of whether ordinance No. 513 should be approved.

xi. On May 10, 1955, after a canvass of the returns it was determined that a majority[1] of the voters had voted against the adoption of ordinance No. 513.

xii. On August 5, 1955, plaintiffs instituted the present declaratory relief action seeking to have it held that ordinance No. 513 was valid.

xiii. After trial, the court found:

(a) That ordinance No. 513 complied in all respects with the requirements of the general zoning law of defendant city and with state law; that it was not subject to referendum under the laws of the State of California; and that as a necessary corollary plaintiffs' deed to the city was a valid and subsisting grant of an easement;

(b) That the highway conditions in front of plaintiffs' property rendered its boulevard frontage more reasonably usable and suitable for commercial purposes than for residential or agricultural purposes; that substantially all the property in the county contiguous to and for some distance east and west along Foothill Boulevard was and had been zoned for business; and that next to plaintiffs' property there were a reservoir, water well, and pumping plant which for many years had been used for commercial purposes;

(c) That ordinance No. 503 was invalid because it was not adopted in conformity with the requirements of state law then in effect; and

(d) That the general zoning law, ordinance No. 441, as amended by ordinance No. 513, was not discriminatory as to plaintiffs.

Defendants' Appeal

[1] Question: Is a rezoning ordinance that amends a general zoning ordinance of a city of the sixth class (general law city) subject to referendum?

Yes. The following principles are here applicable:

1. Our Constitution reserves the referendum power to the electorate, including the voters of cities without charters, with certain exceptions not applicable to the present case. (Cal.Const., art. IV, § 1.[2])

1. Of the ballots cast in person, the election was found to be a tie, with 1153 votes for the ordinance and the same number against, but when the 44 absentee ballots were counted, ordinance No. 513 was defeated by a margin of 24 votes.

2. Section 1 of article IV of the Constitution provides, in part: "The second power reserved to the people shall be known as the referendum. No act passed by the Legislature shall go into effect until 90 days after the final adjournment of the session of the Legislature which passed such act, except acts calling elections, acts providing for tax levies or appropriations for the usual current expenses of the State, and urgency measures necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health or safety, passed by a two-thirds vote of all the members elected to each house.

"* * * provided, however, that no measure creating or abolishing any office or changing the salary, term or duties of any officer, or granting any franchise or special privilege, or creating any vested right or interest, shall be construed to be an urgency measure. * * *

"The initiative and referendum powers of the people are hereby further reserved to the electors of each county, city and county, city and town of the State to

[2] 2. The power of referendum may be invoked only with respect to matters which are strictly legislative in character. (Simpson v. Hite, 36 Cal.2d 125, 129[1], 222 P.2d 225; Dwyer v. City Council, 200 Cal. 505, 511[3], 253 P. 932; Chase v. Kalber, 28 Cal.App. 561, 568 et seq., 153 P. 397.)

[3] 3. A board of supervisors in granting a permit under a zoning ordinance acts in an administrative capacity. (Johnston v. Board of Supervisors, 31 Cal.2d 66, 74 [6], 187 P.2d 686; Essick v. City of Los Angeles, 34 Cal.2d 614, 623[3], 213 P.2d 492.)

[4] 4. A zoning ordinance constitutes the exercise of a governmental and legislative function and is subject to change by the legislative power. (Gov.Code, § 65804; 8 McQuillin, Municipal Corporations (3d ed. rev. 1957), Zoning, § 25.65, p. 145 [3]; cf. Dwyer v. City Council, supra, 200 Cal. at page 515, 253 P. at page 936; Wilkins v. City of San Bernardino, 29 Cal.2d 332, 341 [5], 175 P.2d 542; Lockard v. City of Los Angeles, 33 Cal.2d 453, 460[2], 202 P.2d 38, 7 A.L.R.2d 990.)

[5] 5. The amendment of a legislative act is itself a legislative act. The power to legislate includes by necessary implication the power to amend existing legislation. Rezoning of use districts or changes of uses and restrictions within a district can be accomplished only through an amendment of a zoning ordinance, and the amendment must be made in the same mode as its original enactment. (Gov.Code, § 65804; 8 McQuillin, Municipal Corporations (3d ed. rev. 1957), Zoning, § 25.245, p. 594 [4]; Blotter v. Farrell, 42 Cal.2d 804, 811[6], 270 P.2d 481.)

We must therefore determine this question: Did the city council act in an administrative capacity or in a legislative capacity in adopting ordinance No. 513?

In view of the foregoing rules, it is evident that the amendment of legislation is necessarily legislative in character and that where, as here, the council amends a zoning ordinance so as to exclude from a particular zone property previously included in such zone, its act in amending is a legislative act and not an administrative act.

It is to be noted that this is an entirely different situation from one in which a zoning ordinance confers upon the council or an official the power to grant an easement or variance in a particular case. (See Johnston v. Board of Supervisors, supra; Essick v. City of Los Angeles, supra.)

Likewise, section 65804 of the Government Code [5] provides that the changing of

be exercised under such procedure as may be provided by law. * * * Nothing contained in this section shall be construed as affecting or limiting the present or future powers of cities or cities and counties having charters adopted under the provisions of Section 8 of Article XI of this Constitution. * * * This section is self-executing, but legislation may be enacted to facilitate its operation, but in no way limiting or restricting either the provisions of this section or the powers herein reserved."

3. In 8 McQuillin, Municipal Corporations (3d ed. rev. 1957), Zoning, § 25.65, p. 145, it is said: "* * * a zoning ordinance constitutes an exercise of a governmental and legislative function and, hence, is subject to change by the legislative power."

4. In 8 McQuillin, Municipal Corporations (3d ed. rev. 1957), Zoning, § 25.245, p. 594, it is said: "Generally, rezoning of use districts or changes of uses and restrictions within a district can be accomplished only through an amendment of the zoning ordinance, and the amendment must be made in the same mode as its original enactment. Amendments are subject to limitations set by the general law or charter, and the amendment of such ordinances must be enacted as prescribed. Generally, the amendment can be effected only by an ordinance enacted by the municipal legislative body, and not by a mere resolution or order."

5. Section 65804 of the Government Code reads: "Except as otherwise provided in this article, an amendment to a zoning ordinance which amendment changes property from one zone to another must be accomplished by an ordinance amending the original ordinance.

This conclusion is in accord with the views expressed by this court in several previous decisions. In Dwyer v. City Council, 200 Cal. 505, 515, 253 P. 932, 936, we said: "A zoning ordinance as amended becomes in effect a different ordinance. Even if it be granted that a reclassification of an area as small as that involved in the instant case cannot be said to effect a new scheme, the same rule must necessarily be followed as would be applied if a larger area had been reclassified, and it may be observed that a piecemeal rezoning of small areas may result in a plan differing in vital particulars from that originally contemplated."

In Wilkins v. City of San Bernardino, 29 Cal.2d 332, 341 [5], 175 P.2d 542, 549, it was held that whether an area of general use within a zone of limited use should be expanded was "clearly within the discretion of the legislative body of the city."

In Lockard v. City of Los Angeles, 33 Cal.2d 453, 460 [2], 202 P.2d 38, 42, 7 A.L.R.2d 990, Mr. Chief Justice Gibson, speaking for this court, said: "In enacting zoning ordinances, the municipality performs a legislative function, and every intendment is in favor of the validity of such ordinances." (Italics added.)

It has been held that referendum is not available in street improvement cases. (Chase v. Kalber, 28 Cal.App. 561, 573 et seq., 153 P. 397; Starbuck v. City of Fullerton, 34 Cal.App. 683, 684 et seq., 168 P. 583; St. John v. King, 130 Cal.App. 356, 366 et seq., 20 P.2d 123.) However, it should be noted that the Legislature has prescribed procedural steps to be taken after the adoption of an ordinance providing for street improvements, which steps would be circumvented if the proceedings were subjected to either the initiative or the referendum. (Chase v. Kalber, supra, 28 Cal.App. at page 573 et seq., 153 P. at page 401.) But no such objection exists with respect to subjecting a zoning ordinance to the referendum, since the procedural steps prescribed by the Legislature in such a case must be taken before the adoption of the ordinance. On the other hand, the objection would apply where a zoning ordinance was adopted by a general law city by means of an initiative measure without compliance with the general law relating to zoning. It has been held that an ordinance adopted under such circumstances was void for that reason. (Hurst v. City of Burlingame, 207 Cal. 134, 140 [5], 277 P. 308.)

[6] It was pointed out in the Hurst case, supra, 207 Cal. at page 140 [4] et seq., 277 P. at page 311, that the electors of a city or county can adopt under the initiative law only such ordinances as the legislative body thereof would have had the power to enact. (See also Blotter v. Farrell, 42 Cal.2d 804, 810 [5], 270 P.2d 481.) Clearly, the legislative body of a general law city could not validly adopt a zoning ordinance without complying with the zoning act. Where such body has adopted a zoning ordinance, complying with the requirements of the act, there is no reason not to subject the ordinance to referendum. This principle was recognized in the Hurst case, supra.

There the proponents of the initiative measure relied upon Dwyer v. City Council, supra, and in answer to their contention this court said, 207 Cal. at page 142, 277 P. at page 312: "The question of the operation of the initiative law to such local legislation was not involved in the Dwyer Case and therefore no necessity arose to distinguish between the effectiveness of the initiative and the referendum in zoning cases. If the point were involved, it would undoubtedly be conceded that, had the board of trustees of the city of Burlingame adopt- any property from one zone to another or imposes any regulation listed in Section 65800 not theretofore imposed or removes or modifies any such regulation theretofore imposed shall be initiated and adopted in the same manner as required for the initiation and adoption of the original zoning ordinance."

ed a zoning ordinance, as provided by the statute, its final action would be subject to the referendum provisions of the constitution and laws of the state, for the obvious reason that there is embodied in the enactment of a zoning ordinance such elements of legislative action as to subject the ordinance when adopted to the reserved legislative power of the electors of the city, when properly invoked, to approve or reject it." (Italics added.)

[7] Whenever the council acts in its legislative capacity, the action it takes is subject to the constitutional right of referendum unless such action falls into one of the exceptions provided for in the Constitution.

The right of referendum with respect to zoning ordinances is essential for the protection of the rights of the electors of each city. A zoning ordinance can and does have a more direct and lasting effect upon property values and property owners within a city than almost any other type of ordinance. What is done with respect to one piece of property of necessity has an effect, good or bad, upon adjacent or nearby property.

[8] Under the provisions of section 65804 of the Government Code, supra, no distinction is made between the council's act in adopting zoning ordinances and making amendments thereto. The section provides that an amendment to a zoning ordinance that changes any property from one zone to another shall be initiated and adopted in the same manner as an original zoning ordinance.

In light of this section and the above authorities, where the wording of ordinances must be changed in order to accomplish the desired revision, the act is legislative and not administrative. On the other hand, where a regulation is changed pursuant to a provision of an existing ordinance permitting an administrative variance upon the finding of certain facts, the act is administrative. (Wheeler v. Gregg, 90 Cal. App.2d 348, 363 [7], 203 P.2d 37.)

Therefore, since defendant city, in adopting ordinance No. 513, was amending the general zoning ordinance to change certain property from one zone to another, it was acting pursuant to its inherent power to amend its legislative act and thus was acting in a legislative capacity. As it was acting in a legislative capacity in adopting the ordinance, the ordinance was subject to referendum.

Plaintiffs' Appeal

[9] Questions: First. Was the zoning of plaintiffs' boulevard property for residential and agricultural use in the general zoning ordinance No. 441 unreasonable, oppressive, arbitrary and discriminatory, in the light of the trial court's finding (b), supra?

[10] No. It is settled that, although the courts will, of course, inquire as to whether a zoning ordinance is arbitrary or unreasonable, the decision of the zoning authorities as to matters of opinion and policy will not be set aside or disregarded by the courts unless the regulations have no reasonable relation to the public welfare or unless the physical facts show that there has been an unreasonable, oppressive, or unwarranted interference with property rights in the exercise of the police power.

[11] The wisdom of the prohibitions and restrictions is a matter for legislative determination, and even though a court may not agree with that determination, it will not substitute its judgment for that of the zoning authorities if there is any reasonable justification for their action. (Lockard v. City of Los Angeles, 33 Cal.2d 453, 461, 202 P.2d 38, 7 A.L.R.2d 990; see also Wilkins v. City of San Bernardino, 29 Cal.2d 332, 337 et seq., 175 P.2d 542.)

[12] As hereinabove stated, the trial court found that the highway conditions in front of plaintiffs' property rendered its boulevard frontage more reasonably usable and suitable for commercial purposes than for residential or agricultural purposes and that substantially all the property contiguous to and for some distance east and west along Foothill Boulevard was zoned for business. However, the findings and conclusions of the trial court as to the reasonableness of a zoning ordinance are not binding on an appellate court if the record shows that the question is debatable and that there may be a difference of opinion on the subject. (Lockard v. City of Los Angeles, supra, 33 Cal.2d at page 462 [6], 202 P.2d at page 43.) Giving due consideration to the basic physical facts appearing in the record, such as the character of plaintiffs' property, the nature of the surrounding territory, the use to which each has been put, and recent trends of development, we have concluded that the question of the reasonableness of the ordinance was debatable and that there was a reasonable basis for the action of the zoning authorities.

[13] Even assuming, however, as would be justified from the record, that plaintiffs' property would be more valuable if it were commercially zoned, such factor would not be determinative. As was said in Lockard v. City of Los Angeles, supra, 33 Cal.2d at pages 466 et seq., 202 P.2d at page 46: "Exercises of the police power * * * are apt to have an adverse effect on property interests, and the fact that some hardship is experienced or that it may be more profitable to make other use of the property is not controlling in determining whether the regulations are arbitrary or unreasonable." Furthermore, in view of our conclusion that there was a reasonable basis for the action taken, the rule is applicable as stated in the Lockard case, supra, 33 Cal.2d at page 462, 202 P.2d at page 43, where it is said that in cases of this kind "the function of this court is to determine whether the record shows a reasonable basis for the action of the zoning authorities, and, if the reasonableness of the ordinance is fairly debatable, the legislative determination will not be disturbed."

Second. Was ordinance No. 503 validly enacted?

[14] No. Ordinance No. 441 was adopted April 17, 1951. It set forth a procedure, for redistricting, which procedure was followed in adopting ordinance No. 503. This procedure was in conflict with the state law in effect at the time ordinance No. 503 was adopted.

In 1951 (Stats.1951, ch. 1690, p. 3897) the following was enacted by the Legislature: "Any ordinance or amendment thereto passed pursuant to the Zoning Law of 1917 or the Conservation and Planning Act or its predecessor, is hereby confirmed, validated and declared legally effective." This validating act is part of section 14 of chapter 1690, which amended the Zoning Law of 1917.

In 1953 (Stats.1953, ch. 1355, p. 2929) there was enacted by the Legislature the following: "Any ordinances passed pursuant to the Planning Act, the Conservation and Planning Act, such Article 4 [Article 4, Chapter 10, Part 2, Division 3, Title 4 of the Government Code], or its predecessor, prior to the effective date of this act, are continued in force until repealed pursuant to law." This validating act is section 4 of chapter 1355, which chapter enacted the now effective provisions relating to the adoption of zoning ordinances by general law cities. Such provisions were also in effect at the time of the adoption of ordinance No. 503.

Subsequent to the adoption of ordinance No. 503, there has been no act validating any zoning ordinance.

Plaintiffs contend that by virtue of the validating acts of 1951 and 1953, all provisions of ordinance No. 441, regardless of whether they were contrary to the provisions of the Zoning Law of 1917, the 1947 Planning and Conservation Act, or the 1953 act relating to zoning, were declared valid and effective insofar as the city of Claremont was concerned and superseded the general law on that subject, and that since ordinance No. 503 was adopted under a procedure authorized by ordinance No. 441 it was validly enacted.

The purpose of a validating act is not to validate an ordinance the provisions of which are in conflict with the general law of the state covering the same subject matter. The purpose of a validating act is to declare, in effect, that although such an ordinance was not adopted in accordance with the procedure outlined by a general law of the state, the Legislature, as to that particular ordinance, declares that there has been substantial compliance with said provisions and, therefore, such ordinance shall be deemed to have been validly adopted the same as though there had been exact compliance.

Validating acts operate retroactively only and confer no validity upon acts subsequent thereto. (50 Am.Jur.(1944), Statutes, § 481, p. 504; People ex rel. Wangelin v. Pitcairn, 371 Ill. 616, 21 N.E.2d 753, 755.)

If plaintiffs' position were adopted, it would give to a validating act a prospective operation. Under such a theory, ordinance No. 441, insofar as the procedural requirements are concerned, could remain effective forever even though the Legislature specifically has delared that the statewide policy is that a local legislative body should hold a public hearing before adopting substantive changes in a zoning ordinance. To give such force to a validating act is not reasonable, as it would be interpreting a validating act to say that any subsequent state law enacted on the subject should have no effect upon any city which prior to the adoption of the validating act had enacted an ordinance contrary to such later enacted state legislation, as long as such ordinance remained in effect. Under such an interpretation, there would be implied in the act of 1953, which is the current act relating to zoning, a provision that this act should apply to all general law cities of the State of California except those cities previously having enacted ordinances contrary to the provisions of this act.

To read into the 1953 act the exception that all cities previously having enacted an ordinance contrary to the provisions of the act would be exempt from certain provisions thereof as long as such ordinance remained in effect would prevent it from having a uniform application, and thus the act would be unconstitutional. (Cal.Const., art. I, § 11; State ex rel. Keefe v. McInerney, 63 Wyo. 280, 182 P. 2d 28, 37; Mordecai v. Board of Supervisors, 183 Cal. 434, 192 P. 40.) To read such an exception into the 1951 act would have the same effect.

Since the Legislature has determined that as a matter of public policy there must be a hearing before the local legislative body on any ordinance changing the permitted use of property within the city, such policy must apply equally to all cities within the same class. There is no reason either in law or otherwise for defendant city of Claremont to be treated differently in this respect from any other general law city within the state. Therefore, no zoning ordinance adopted by the city of Claremont after the effective date of the current act relating to zoning is valid unless a hearing thereon before the local legislative body was held, as required by that act. Admittedly, no such hearing was held with respect to ordinance No. 503. Consequently, the ordinance was not validly enacted.

As indicated above, the city council, by ordinance No. 504, purportedly repealed ordinance No. 503 a week after its adoption. Plaintiffs contend that the procedure prescribed by the Government Code was not followed in the enactment of ordinance No. 504 and that it was therefore invalid. However, in view of our conclusion that ordinance No. 503 was not validly adopted, it is unnecessary to discuss whether or not ordinance No. 504, purportedly repealing it, ever became effective.

[15] Third: Did defendant city have a valid and subsisting easement over the most easterly portion of plaintiffs' boulevard frontage by virtue of the grant deed which plaintiffs had executed in favor of the city?

No. The grant deed by its terms provided for the automatic defeasance of the grant should ordinance No. 513 be repealed or suspended or otherwise not take effect according to its terms. Therefore, since ordinance No. 513 was subject to referendum and a majority of the voters determined that it should not become effective, the deed which plaintiffs gave to defendant city granting an easement over their property was invalid by its terms.

Application by Plaintiffs for Leave to Produce Additional Evidence

Plaintiffs have filed an application for leave to produce certain additional evidence and have requested this court to make certain additional findings. However, in view of the conclusions reached herein, it is unnecessary to take additional evidence or make additional findings.

The judgment is reversed, and plaintiffs' application for leave to produce additional evidence and for this court to make additional findings is denied.

GIBSON, C. J., and TRAYNOR and SPENCE, JJ., concur.

CARTER, Justice.

I dissent.

Assuming ordinance No. 513 which placed a portion of plaintiffs' property in a commercial zone (it had formerly been in residence and agricultural zone) was properly subject to a referendum, I believe that plaintiffs' constitutional rights have been invaded by application to them of the basic ordinance No. 441 which zoned their property for residence and agriculture. Plaintiffs' property lies along Foothill Boulevard, a highway which is not in the corporate limits of Claremont. The trial court found: "[T]hat approximately 12,800 vehicles per weekday traverse at high speeds said Foothill Boulevard, also known as U. S. Highway 66, in front of plaintiffs' said Boulevard Frontage, resulting in an almost continuous traffic roar therefrom which can be heard for more that 300 feet from said highway; that at all hours of the day and night an almost continuous stream of automobiles, trucks and passenger buses pass in front of plaintiffs' said Boulevard Frontage in both an easterly and westerly direction and the speed, weight and volume of such traffic make the ground vibrate for a distance of at least forty feet from said Foothill Boulevard; that the volume of said traffic passing plaintiffs' said Boulevard Frontage materially and substantially increases on week-ends and on holidays * * * said highway is not posted as a restricted speed zone by any signs whatsoever; that eastbound traffic upon said Foothill Boulevard travels in such an unrestricted speed zone for more than five miles immediately to the west of plaintiffs' said Boulevard Frontage; that said Foothill Boulevard east of the intersection thereof with Mountain Avenue is in a restricted speed zone and is posted by speed limit signs of thirty-five (35) miles per hour; that the said traffic conditions upon said Foothill Boulevard render plaintiffs' said Boulevard Frontage more reasonably suitable and usable for commercial uses and purposes, as authorized and permitted in a C-2 Zone by the terms of said Zoning Ordinance No. 441, as amended, than for any other use or purpose. * * *

"That it is true: that plaintiffs' said property is now, and has been for many years, planted to citrus trees; that said vehicular traffic travelling upon said Foothill Boulevard emits a large volume of fumes, odors and gases; that said fumes, odors and gases emitted from said traffic upon Foothill Boulevard have progressively increased over the years; that as a direct and proximate consequence of said fumes, odors, and gases emitted from said traffic, the citrus trees along the northerly boundary of plaintiffs' said Boulevard Frontage for a depth of approximately 100 feet have been killed, or the productivity of said trees has been adversely affected thereby and as a consequence thereof plaintiffs' Boulevard Frontage is not reasonably suitable or usable for such agricultural purposes; that said traffic conditions render plaintiffs' said Boulevard Frontage more reasonably suitable and usable for C-2 commercial uses and purposes, as such uses and purposes are authorized and permitted in a C-2 Zone by the Zoning Ordinance No. 441, as amended, than for any other use or purpose.

"That it is true: that the property west of Mountain Avenue on the northerly side of Foothill Boulevard and across from plaintiffs' said Boulevard Frontage, to a depth * * * (300) feet from the northerly side of Foothill Boulevard, is in the unincorporated territory of the County of Los Angeles and the same is in a C-1 Zone under the terms of said Los Angeles County Basic Zoning Ordinance No. 1494; that said County C-1 Zoned property on the north side of Foothill Boulevard is presently planted to lemon trees and was formerly a part of a large citrus grove extending northerly thereof; that said northerly balance or remainder of said former citrus grove is presently being subdivided for single family residences and such balance is presently owned by different owners than the persons owning said County C-1 zoned property; that said County C-1 zoned property across from plaintiffs' said Boulevard Frontage is more reasonably suitable for commercial purposes than any other use or purpose and the same is being presently held by the owners thereof for sale for commercial uses and purposes * * * that there is no real or substantial difference between said property on the north side of Foothill Boulevard west of Mountain Avenue and plaintiffs' said Boulevard Frontage and by reason thereof plaintiffs' said Boulevard Frontage is more reasonably suitable and usable for C-2 commercial uses and purposes, as such uses and purposes are authorized and permitted in a C-2 Zone by the terms of Zoning Ordinance No. 441, as amended, than for any other use or purpose. * * *

"[T]hat the property, to a depth of * * * (300) feet, situated in the unincorporated area of the County of Los Angeles and lying on both the northerly and southerly sides of Foothill Boulevard for a distance of several miles immediately westerly from plaintiffs' said Boulevard Frontage, is zoned for C-1 uses, as such uses are defined and permitted by the terms of said Los Angeles County Basic Zoning Ordinance No. 1494, as amended, and a substantial portion of such C-1 property is actually used for said C-1 uses; that the property immediately west of and adjoining plaintiffs' said Boulevard Frontage has been for several years, and now is, used for the sale of new and used automobile trailers, all of which have been, and now are, exhibited for sale by outdoor display on said property under and pursuant to a special permit or exception granted to the owners thereof by the Regional Planning Commission of the County of Los Angeles * * * that in addition to said trailer sales business there are other commercial and business uses presently being made and carried on upon the property lying on the south side of said Foothill Boulevard between plaintiffs' said Boulevard Frontage and San Antonio Avenue on the West, all of which business uses are in the unincorporated territory of the County of Los Angeles and in the same block as plaintiffs' said Boulevard Frontage, to wit, a gasoline filling station, a restaurant and a liquor store and that by reason of such uses and business being presently made and carried on, said property on the south side of Foothill Boulevard between plaintiffs' said Boulevard Frontage and said San Antonio Avenue has a predominantly commercial character and aspect; that there is no real or substantial difference between said property in said unincorporated territory of the County of Los Angeles and plaintiffs' said Boulevard Frontage and the said zoning of such other property, and the uses to which the same is put, as aforesaid, render plaintiffs' said Boulevard Frontage more reasonably suitable and usable for commercial uses and purposes as authorized and permitted in a C-2 Zone by the terms of said Zoning Ordinance No. 441, as amended, of defendant City, than for any other use or purpose.

"That it is true: that at all times since about the year 1895 the northeast corner of plaintiffs' said Boulevard Frontage at the intersection of Foothill Boulevard and Mountain Avenue, consisting of a parcel of land of approximately 160 feet by 160 feet, both of said measurements being taken from the intersection of Foothill Boulevard and Mountain Avenue, has been, and now is, known as the 'Reservoir Site'; that since about the year 1895 said 'Reservoir Site' has been used for a commercial purpose, to wit: for a reservoir for the storage and distribution of water for a number of users; * * * that in addition to said reservoir there has been since about the year 1930, and there now is, a water well and pumping plant upon said 'Reservoir Site' for the commercial production of water; * * * that said The North Palomares Irrigation Company has been at all times since 1930, and now is, engaged in the business of producing and distributing water originating from said well and pumping plant to numerous customers and users; that said well and pumping plant emit noises in the pumping of water from said well, which noises can be heard a distance of approximately 160 feet away; that the aforesaid reservoir upon said 'Reservoir Site' provide an adequate and reasonable screen to any commercial activities which might be carried on upon plaintiffs' said Boulevard Frontage; that the aforesaid uses made of and said activities carried on upon said 'Reservoir Site' render plaintiffs' said Boulevard Frontage more reasonably suitable and usable for commercial uses as authorized and permitted in a C-2 Zone by the terms of said Zoning Ordinance No. 441, as amended, of defendant City, than for any other use or purpose.

"That it is true: that plaintiffs own all of the real property immediately adjoining and lying southerly of plaintiffs' said Boulevard Frontage for its entire length and distance; that the use of plaintiffs' said Boulevard Frontage for commercial uses would not reasonably tend to damage or otherwise materially adversely affect any property or the value thereof owned by any third person.

"That it is true: that the said Downtown Business District of defendant City, presently zoned for C-2 purposes by the terms of Zoning Ordinance No. 441, as amended, includes an area of approximately one and one-half blocks, bounded on the north by 4th Street and on the south by 3rd Street and on the west by Alexander Avenue and on the east by the alley one-half block east of Yale Avenue, in which one and one-half blocks substantially all of the property is developed and improved with residences excepting a service station on the northeast corner of 3rd and Yale Avenue; that the remaining portion of said Downtown Business District is substantially completely occupied by stores and business buildings on lots of a frontage of approximately 50 feet or less, all of which are owned by numerous owners thereof with only three small vacant lots therein; that the property surrounding and immediately adjoining said Downtown Business District is substantially all built upon with residences and other buildings; that plaintiffs do not own the premises upon which plaintiffs conduct their said automobile dealership business and plaintiffs lease the same from two different landlords. * * *"

Summarizing, plaintiffs' property is not usable for either residential or agricultural purposes; it is surrounded by commercially used property; there is no room for expansion of commercial projects in the commercial zone in Claremont under Ordinance No. 441, hence the business now there is granted a monopoly on the business activities in the community. Such constitutes a taking of property without due process of law and is unconstitutional. Plaintiffs are left with property which is worthless because they cannot use it for commercial purposes by reason of the zoning ordinance and it is unusable for any other purpose. The only value of property lies in the present or prospective uses that may be made of it. The facts being as they are here, there is no conceivable basis for the exercise of the police power to accomplish a zoning objective. The police power in the zoning field may not be so exercised as to render a person's property valueless. Indeed, no reason is even suggested how plaintiffs' property could be limited to agriculture and residence uses here except to create a monopoly for that part of Claremont which is jointly zoned for commercial purposes. Not only do we have the finding of the trial court but the city council, after a hearing, came to the same conclusion in adopting ordinance No. 513. Certainly there was no reasonable basis for having plaintiffs' property zoned for residential and agricultural uses, when the planning authorities of Los Angeles County zoned all of the property around plaintiffs' as commercial. Thus such cases as Lockard v. City of Los Angeles, 33 Cal.2d 453, 202 P.2d 38, 7 A.L.R.2d 990, are not in point. In fact they support the conclusion I have reached as it is there said: "* * * that zoning ordinances, when reasonable in object and not arbitrary in operation, constitute a justifiable exercise of police power." Lockard v. City of Los Angeles, supra, 33 Cal.2d 453, 460, 202 P.2d 38, 42. Under the reasoning in the Lockard case the class in which plaintiffs' property was zoned was arbitrary and capricious and its reasonableness is not "fairly debatable." The only time it was considered in the sense that a hearing was held was when ordinance No. 513 was passed which zoned plaintiffs' property as commercial. There was no hearing during the referendum election and the close vote on the matter showed that the question was more than "fairly debatable." The appellate court must, as Lockard says, "look beyond" the results of that election and determine the reasonableness of the zoning, giving consideration to the "character of the property," the "nature of the surrounding territory," the "use" to which it has been put and the "recent trends of development." All those factors point to only one conclusion here: The property has no use or value for residence or agriculture; the evidence shows this without dispute and the court so found. It is aptly said in Pacific Palisades Ass'n v. City of Huntington Beach, 196 Cal. 211, 216, 237 P. 538, 539, 40 A.L.R. 782: "A municipality is not permitted, under the guise of regulating business and segregating it to a particular district, to grant a monopoly to business establishments and enterprises already situated in unrestricted districts. In re White, 195 Cal. 516, 234 P. 396." In Wilkins v. City of San Bernardino, 29 Cal.2d 332, 340, 175 P.2d 542, 548, it is said that zoning ordinances are invalid "Where the restrictions create a monopoly," "Where the use of adjacent property renders the land entirely unsuited to or unusable for the only purpose permitted by the ordinance," (emphasis added) and "Where a small parcel is restricted and given less rights than the surrounding property, as where a lot in the center of a business or commercial district is limited to use for residential purposes, thereby creating an 'island' in the middle of a larger area devoted to other uses." While Lockard and Wilkins upheld the validity of the zoning there, they did not involve a case such as we have here, where the use of the adjacent property renders the land unsuited for the limited uses imposed by the zoning. A case closely in point is Skalko v. City of Sunnyvale, 14 Cal.2d 213, 93 P.2d 93. There plaintiff's property was, as here, zoned residential, but it was near a large cannery which emitted noise and on a highway carrying heavy traffic and "As described by the appellant his property consists of 5 acres upon which he had prune trees at one time. These trees were removed because of the insects which came over to them from the piled boxes of the cannery across the street, and there is now nothing on it but a barn and a house worth about $1,000." 14 Cal.2d at page 215, 93 P.2d at page 94. Similarly, here we have the noise and the lessened value of the property for agricultural uses. Holding the ordinance invalid the court said (14 Cal.2d at page 216, 93 P.2d at page 94): "Considering all the facts shown by the record, it clearly appears beyond question that the land owned by the appellant is entirely unsuited for residential purposes. The adjoining cannery with the continuous noise which must necessarily result from twenty-four hour operation, creates a situation similar to that which is found in the industrial part of a great city. Certainly no one wants to live next door to a large factory, and the question whether any consideration of public health, peace, safety or general welfare justifies the continued restriction upon the appellant's property which prohibits its use for commercial purposes is not fairly debatable. In its application to the land owned by the appellant, the ordinance is void." (Emphasis added.) The identical facts appear in the case at bar.

I would therefore affirm the judgment on the ground that ordinance No. 441 is unconstitutional as applied to plaintiffs' property. This conclusion renders it unnecessary to determine whether ordinance No. 513 rezoning plaintiffs' property to commercial uses was subject to referendum or otherwise valid and effective.

SHENK and SCHAUER, JJ., concur.

Rehearing denied; SHENK, CARTER and SCHAUER, JJ., dissenting.

49 Cal.2d 815

Grace Marie VATER, Appellant,

v.

COUNTY OF GLENN et al., Defendants, Glenn-Colusa Irrigation District (a Corporation), Respondent.

Sac. 6826.

Supreme Court of California, In Bank.

March 21, 1958.

Rehearing Denied April 16, 1958.

Action for wrongful death of plaintiff's husband and son when their automobile went off irrigation district's bridge into the district's canal. The Superior Court, Glenn County, W. T. Belieu and Curtiss E. Wetter, JJ., sustained the district's demurrers to the second amended complaint and entered judgment in favor of district. The plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court, Gibson, C. J., held that under the circumstances the doctrine of governmental immunity was applicable.

Affirmed.

Carter, J., dissented.

Opinion, 309 P.2d 844, vacated.

1. States ⇐112

Waters and Water Courses ⇐228¾

Generally, in absence of statutory or constitutional provision to the contrary, the state and its agencies, including irrigation districts, are immune from liability for tort in discharge of governmental duties and activities.

2. Waters and Water Courses ⇐228¾

Provision in Water Code that when an officer is held liable for acts done in his official capacity the irrigation district shall pay the judgment without obligation for repayment by officer discloses a legislative intent not to abrogate the role of governmental immunity for irrigation districts except with respect to the payment of such judgments. West's Ann.Water Code, § 22731.

3. Waters and Water Courses ⇐228¾

Where no judgment had been obtained or sought against any officer of irrigation district for wrongful death of plaintiff's husband and son when their automobile went off district's bridge into the district's canal, liability of district for the death could not be based on provision in Water Code that when an officer is held liable for acts done in his official capacity the irrigation district shall pay the judgment without obligation for repayment by the officer. West's Ann.Water Code, § 22731.

4. States ⇐112

The abrogation or restriction of doctrine that state and its agencies are immune from liability for tort in discharge of governmental duties and activities is primarily a legislative matter, and where the legislature has clearly expressed its intention to maintain immunity, that intention is controlling.

5. Municipal Corporations ⇐742(4)

In considering whether the facts alleged are sufficient to constitute a nuisance within exception to the immunity doctrine where a governmental unit is maintaining a nuisance, the plaintiff must show that a legislative body has declared the condition complained of to be a nuisance.

6. Automobiles ⇐301(1)

In action against irrigation district for wrongful death of plaintiff's husband and son when their automobile went off district's bridge into the district's canal, plaintiff could not allege facts to support a cause of action on any theory that district was maintaining a nuisance. West's Ann. Civ.Code, § 3479.

7. Pleading ⇐225(2)

Where there was no reasonable possibility that defect in complaint could be cured by amendment, there was no abuse of discretion in failing to grant further leave to amend after sustaining demurrer.

8. Appeal and Error ⇐102

Order sustaining demurrer to second amended complaint was not appealable.

P. M. Barceloux, Burton J. Goldstein and Goldstein, Barceloux & Goldstein, San Francisco, for appellant.

Duard F. Geis, Carroll F. Byrd, Geis & Byrd and Carroll F. Byrd, Jr., Willows, for respondent.

GIBSON, Chief Justice.

Plaintiff brought this action against Glenn County and the Glenn-Colusa Irrigation District for damages for the wrongful death of her husband and son. General and special demurrers by the district to the second amended complaint were sustained without leave to amend, and judgment was entered in its favor.[1] Plaintiff moved to set aside the judgment upon the grounds of mistake, inadvertence, surprise and excusable neglect. She filed a supporting affidavit of her attorney to the effect that on the hearing of the demurrer he had neglected to argue an available theory of liability. The motion was denied without prejudice to its renewal within ten days, accompanied by a proposed amended complaint. Pursuant to this permission plaintiff renewed the motion and presented a proposed third amended complaint. This motion was also denied.

The principal question is whether plaintiff has alleged facts which constitute a cause of action.

The allegations of the second amended complaint may be summarized as follows: In 1910 certain persons, some of whom were agents of the district, constructed a private roadway over their land in extension of County Roard R so as to make the private roadway appear to be part of the county road. About the same time the district or its predecessor in interest constructed a wooden bridge to connect two portions of the private roadway which were separated by the district's main canal. There was a 45-degree turn where the roadway met the bridge, but the turn was not indicated by any signs or warning devices, and there were no adequate barricades, railings or lights. The levees of the canal were above the roadway, and, because of the construction and height of the levees and the bridge, travelers could not observe the abrupt change of direction or see the bridge until they were upon it. As a result, travelers were likely to drive off the bridge into the canal, and the roadway and bridge thus constituted a dangerous and defective condition and an "absolute nuisance per se." The district permitted this condition to exist on its premises without taking any steps to protect the public or provide a reasonable warning. In 1917 the bridge was taken over by the county to be maintained by it as a county bridge. Although the county and its supervisors knew of the dangerous condition, they failed to remedy it or warn the public. Plaintiff's husband was led by the appearance of the private roadway to believe that it was a public highway. As a proximate result of the dangerous condition of the roadway and the bridge, he drove his car off the bridge into the canal, and he and his son were killed.

The proposed third amended complaint repeated in substance the allegations of the second amended complaint and further stated that there is a dispute between the several parties as to whether the county or the district or both are responsible for the maintenance of the bridge and that plaintiff does not know whether either or both are responsible. It was also alleged that plaintiff does not know whether the district constructed the bridge or acquired it, that the dangerous condition has existed for 40 years and that the district had notice of it.

1. The county of Glenn apparently filed an answer to plaintiff's second amended complaint.

[1] The general rule is that, in the absence of a statutory or constitutional provision to the contrary, the state and its agencies are immune from liability for tort in the discharge of governmental duties and activities. Pianka v. State, 46 Cal.2d 208, 210, 293 P.2d 458; Talley v. Northern San Diego County Hosp. Dist., 41 Cal.2d 33, 36, 257 P.2d 22; Stang v. City of Mill Valley, 38 Cal.2d 486, 488, 240 P.2d 980. This rule has been applied to irrigation districts. Nissen v. Cordua Irr. Dist., 204 Cal. 542, 545, 269 P. 171; Jackson & Perkins Co. of California v. Byron-Bethany Irr. Dist., 136 Cal.App. 375, 380 et seq., 29 P.2d 217, 30 P.2d 516; Whiteman v. Anderson-Cottonwood Irr. Dist., 60 Cal. App. 234, 241–242, 212 P. 706; see Talley v. Northern San Diego County Hosp. Dist., 41 Cal.2d 33, 40, 257 P.2d 22.

Plaintiff does not claim that the district was acting in a proprietary capacity with respect to the bridge and roadway, and the only provisions upon which she relies as constituting a waiver of the district's immunity are sections 22725–22732 of the Water Code, which constitute the article entitled "Public Liability" in the division of the code relating to irrigation districts. Wat.Code, div. 11, pt. 5, ch. 4, art. 4. These sections are of no avail to plaintiff.

Section 22731 reads: "Nothing in the preceding portion of this article shall be construed as creating any liability except as provided in Section 22730 unless it would have existed regardless of this article." [2] Section 22730 provides that, when an officer is held liable for acts done in his official capacity, the district shall pay the judgment without obligation for repayment by the officer. In Powers Farms v. Consolidated Irr. Dist., 19 Cal.2d 123, 119 P.2d 717, we considered the substantially identical provisions of the irrigation district liability law (Stats.1935, p. 2250), which was repealed when the Water Code was enacted, and said: "Section 3 [now section 22730] imposes a limited liability on the district by obligating it to pay certain judgments against its officers. This, according to section 4 [now section 22731], is the only new liability created by the act." 19 Cal.2d at page 127, 119 P.2d at page 720. The Powers Farms case was an action for damage to land caused by the seepage of water from a canal of an irrigation district, and it was brought under the provision of article I, section 14, of the California Constitution which prohibits damage to property for public use without just compensation. We held that this provision gave the plaintiff a cause of action against the district, but that the part of section 2 [3] of the irrigation district liability law which requires the filing of a claim in actions based upon the dangerous or defective condition of property

2. Section 22732, the only section in the article which follows section 22731, permits the district to carry liability insurance but does not create any liability. It is not alleged that the district carried insurance covering the liability claimed here, in which case it has sometimes been held that the injured person could maintain an action. Taylor v. Knox County Board of Education, 292 Ky. 767, 167 S.W.2d 700, 145 A.L.R. 1333; Rogers v. Butler, 170 Tenn. 125, 92 S.W.2d 414.

3. Now contained in section 22727 of the code which provides: "Whenever it is claimed that any person or property has been injured or damaged as a result of any dangerous or defective condition of any property under the control of any district or its officers or employees or the negligence of any officer or employee of a district, a verified claim for damages shall be presented in writing and filed with the officers or employees involved and also with the secretary within 90 days after the accident or injury has occurred. If an officer or employee cannot be found to be served, the officer's or employee's copy may be served on the secretary, but in any event a verified claim must be served on the secretary."

of the district was applicable to the action, and that plaintiff's failure to file a claim prevented his recovery. It is clear that we did not consider section 2 of the act as imposing liability upon the district for defective conditions because we expressly stated that the basis of liability was the constitutional provision (19 Cal.2d at page 126, 119 P.2d at page 720) and that the act imposed no liability on the district other than the one to pay certain judgments against its officers (19 Cal.2d at page 127, 119 P.2d at page 720, quoted above).

[2, 3] There is no doubt that section 4 of the act and section 22731 of the code show a legislative intent not to abrogate the rule of governmental immunity for irrigation districts except with respect to the payment of such judgments. In the present case no judgment has been obtained or sought against any officer of the district, and, therefore, liability cannot be based upon the provisions of the Water Code.

[4] Most of the authorities who have recently written on the subject strongly advocate abolition or modification of the principle of governmental immunity, which lets the loss caused by tortious conduct of the government rest on the injured individual instead of distributing it among all the members of the community, the beneficiaries of the governmental activity. (See, e. g., 2 Harper and James, The Law of Torts (1956), 1612; Prosser on Torts (2d ed. 1955), 775; Borchard, State and Municipal Liability in Tort—Proposed Statutory Reform, 20 A.B.A.J. 747 et seq.; Kuchel, Should California Accept Tort Liability? 25 Cal.State Bar J. 146, 151.) However, the abrogation or restriction of this doctrine is primarily a legislative matter (see Talley v. Northern San Diego County Hosp. Dist., 41 Cal.2d 33, 41, 257 P.2d 22; Waterman v. Los Angeles County General Hospital, 123 Cal.App.2d 143, 144, 266 P.2d 221), and, where, as here, the Legislature has clearly expressed its intention to maintain immunity, that intention is controlling.

[5] Several cases have recognized an exception to the immunity doctrine where a governmental unit is maintaining a nuisance. Phillips v. City of Pasadena, 27 Cal.2d 104, 106–107, 162 P.2d 625; Hassell v. City and County of San Francisco, 11 Cal.2d 168, 170, 78 P.2d 1021; Adams v. City of Modesto, 131 Cal. 501, 502–503, 63 P. 1083; Peterson v. City of Santa Rosa, 119 Cal. 387, 51 P. 557; Lind v. City of San Luis Obispo, 109 Cal. 340, 343, 42 P. 437; Bloom v. City and County of San Francisco, 64 Cal. 503, 3 P. 129. In considering whether the facts alleged are sufficient to constitute a nuisance, we must keep in mind that, in order to state a cause of action based upon this theory, the plaintiff must show that a legislative body has declared the condition complained of to be a nuisance. Palmquist v. Mercer, 43 Cal. 2d 92, 101, 272 P.2d 26; Ward v. Oakley Co., 125 Cal.App.2d 840, 850–851, 271 P.2d 536; Brooks v. City of Monterey, 106 Cal. App. 649, 654, 290 P. 540; cf. People v. Lim, 18 Cal.2d 872, 879 et seq., 118 P.2d 472; People v. Johnson, 129 Cal.App.2d 1, 8–9, 277 P.2d 45.

[6] Plaintiff contends that this case comes within section 3479 of the Civil Code, which provides in part: "Anything which is injurious to health * * * or unlawfully obstructs the free passage or use, in the customary manner, of * * * any public * * * street, or highway, is a nuisance." The situation described by the complaint was not injurious to health within the meaning of this section. There is no specific allegation that the accident took place on a public highway, and, even if we were to assume that this deficiency is cured by the allegations that the bridge was a county bridge and that plaintiff's husband believed the road to be a public highway, the claimed defective condition did not unlawfully obstruct the free use of the road in the customary manner. Our attention has been called to no other statute which would support a conclusion that the facts alleged constitute a nuisance.

[7] Plaintiff claims that the trial court failed to recognize the nuisance exception to the immunity doctrine and that she should be given another opportunity to amend her complaint. She has made no contention, however, that her allegations which describe the condition of the bridge and roadway are untrue or incomplete, and it does not appear that there is any reasonable possibility that the defect can be cured by amendment. Under the circumstances, there was no abuse of discretion in failing to grant further leave to amend. Cf. Lemoge Electric v. County of San Mateo, 46 Cal.2d 659, 664, 297 P.2d 638.

[8] The order sustaining the demurrer to the second amended complaint is not appealable, and the attempted appeal therefrom is dismissed. The judgment and the order denying the motion to vacate the judgment are affirmed.

SHENK, TRAYNOR, SCHAUER, SPENCE and McCOMB, JJ., concur.

CARTER, Justice (dissenting).

I dissent.

Once again this court is faced with the question of the scope of governmental immunity and again the majority has seen fit to broaden the scope when an analysis of applicable statutes shows such action to be clearly unwarranted.

The majority in this case determines that the irrigation district (hereinafter the district) is immune from suit under the doctrine of governmental immunity on the grounds that there is no statutory basis for liability, and that the condition complained of was not a nuisance within the meaning of Civil Code section 3479. The majority's interpretation of section 3479, although perhaps unduly restrictive, is not without authority. However, the conclusion that there is no basis for the district's statutory liability is incorrect and the result of misinterpreting the Public Liability article of the Water Code (§§ 22725–22732) and in particular section 22727 and the case construing it. See, Powers Farms v. Consolidated Irr. Dist., 19 Cal.2d 123, 119 P.2d 717.

Section 22727 of the Water Code provides that "Whenever it is claimed that any person or property has been injured or damaged as a result of any dangerous or defective condition of any property under the control of any district or its officers or employees or the negligence of any officer or employee of a district, a verified claim for damages shall be presented in writing and filed with the officers or employees involved and also with the secretary of the district within 90 days after the accident or injury has occurred. If an officer or employee cannot be found to be served, the officer's or employee's copy may be served on the secretary, but in any event a verified claim must be served on the secretary." (Emphasis added.) The progenitor of this section is found in Deering General Laws (Stats.1935, p. 2250) and was entitled the Irrigation District Liability Law. With the exception of the words "and/or" which were inserted as follows: "Whenever * * * as a result of any * * * condition of any property under the control of any district or its officers or employees and/or the negligence of any officer * * *" the two sections are identical. To be more precise the Public Liability article has merely incorporated the sections of the Irrigation District Liability Law and given these sections different designations: sections 1 and 2 of the Liability Law became sections 22726 and 22727 of the Water Code; section 2 was further transposed into sections 22728 and 22729, and sections 3 and 4 became sections 22730 and 22731.

The Irrigation District Liability Law was construed in Powers Farms v. Consolidated Irr. Dist., 19 Cal.2d 123, 119 P.2d 717. In that case plaintiff brought an action against an irrigation district for injuries sustained as a result of seepage from irrigation canals. The action was based upon article I, section 14, of the California Constitution requiring compensation to be paid for property damaged or taken for a public use. This court recognized the principle that failure to meet the ninety day filing procedural prerequisite of section 2 of the Liability Law (now Water Code § 22727) was fatal to a cause of action under the statute. The question before the court was whether plaintiff, who admittedly had not complied with the filing requirements, could maintain an action based upon the constitutional provision. This court held that he could not. The court reasoned that the act evinced a legislative intent to embrace all actions (see, Powers Farms v. Consolidated Irr. Dist., supra, 19 Cal.2d 129, 119 P.2d 721), including the one before it, and that failure to comply with the filing prerequisites defeated a cause of action against a district regardless of its basis.

In reaching its conclusion the court analyzed the sections of the Irrigation Liability Law at length, and nowhere was there any indication to forsake the principle that this law enabled injured parties to sue the district apart from its officers or employees. To the contrary the court took pains to point out that section 2 permitted claims for damages against a district on grounds of "(1) a dangerous or defective condition of property of the district and negligence of an officer or employee; or (2) a dangerous or defective condition of property of the district, that is, a general liability without reference to negligence, or (3) the negligence of an officer or employee." (Emphasis added.) Powers Farms v. Consolidated Irr. Dist., supra, 19 Cal.2d 128, 119 P.2d 721. This statement is susceptible only of the interpretation that an irrigation district's governmental immunity is removed by this statute and that such districts are liable independently of their employees or officers.

Therefore, it would seem to follow that since section 2 of the Irrigation Liability Law and section 22727 of the Water Code are the same, and under the former a district is liable apart from its employees for a dangerous and defective condition, the district still remains liable separately under section 22727.

However, we are now told that this is not so, but that by some peculiar alchemy the transposition of the Irrigation District Liability Law into the Water Code altered the nature of these sections to such an extent that this court is now required to regard sections 22730 and 22731 of the Water Code as controlling. Thus, the district's liability would be limited to negligent acts of its officers in their official capacity. Furthermore, we are told that in the Powers case "It is clear that we did not consider section 2 of the act [now Water Code, § 22727] as imposing liability upon the district for defective conditions because we expressly stated that the basis of liability was the constitutional provision [citation] and that the act imposed no liability on the district other than the one to pay certain judgments against its officers [citation]."

As an original proposition the majority's construction of sections 22730 and 22731 might have been plausible, but it is now forestalled by the Powers case. Moreover, if this court now seeks to interpret the Powers case as not affecting the district's liability other than as described in sections 22730 and 22731, it will be necessary to modify the contrary language therein since a reading of that case makes it obvious such was not the interpretation when it was written.

To substantiate this latter statement one need only read this court's restatement of plaintiff's contention in the Powers case, which appears as follows: "The respondent * * * contends that the law [Irrigation District Liability Law] concerns actions sounding in tort; that it has no reference to the general liability of the district, and should be construed as applying only to suits against directors, officers, agents, and employees, based on negligence, and to the secondary liability of the district, created by section 3 [now Water Code, § 22730], to pay certain judgments against officers." Emphasis added; 19 Cal.2d 123, 127–128, 119 P.2d 717, 721. This contention was rejected notwithstanding sections identical to sections 22730 and 22731 of the Water Code. This court stated that the statute could only be construed in the manner contended by ignoring the reference in the title to the liability of the irrigation district and the phraseology of section 2 (now Water Code, § 22727). There can be no question from this language that this court, at the time of the Powers case, viewed the district as liable apart from its officers.

The Powers case, then, established that the district's liability was twofold: (1) a general independent liability under section 2 of the liability law (now Water Code, § 22727) and (2) liability for the negligent act of its employees in their official capacity. The necessary implication of the decision being that sections 3 and 4 of the liability law (now Water Code, §§ 22730 and 22731) were only describing the conditions under which a district would be liable for the acts of its employees and were not limiting the district's independent liability. Thus, without sections 3 and 4 a district would not be liable for the acts of its employees when discharging govenmental duties and activities since a statutory provision is necessary to remove the protection of governmental immunity (see, Nissen v. Cordua Irr. Dist., 204 Cal. 542, 545, 269 P. 171; Jackson & Perkins Co. of California v. Byron-Bethany Irrigation Dist., 136 Cal.App. 375, 380, 29 P.2d 217, 30 P.2d 516). Under sections 3 and 4 a district's liability for its employees follows only when a judgment is rendered against an employee who, acting in his official capacity, negligently injures another, and providing proper notice is given to the district (Water Code, §§ 22727, 22730, 22731). However, if this is the extent of the district's liability it is obvious there is a large gap between the persons who may recover against a district and those who are injured. The closing of this gap was achieved in the Powers case where this court construed the applicable sections as rendering the district liable under specified conditions apart from its employees. The court did not blur their intent but made it manifest that sections 3 and 4 were not to be regarded as trespassing on an injured person's right to proceed directly against the district apart from its employees. Powers Farms v. Consolidated Irr. Dist., supra, 19 Cal.2d 128, 119 P.2d 721.

Therefore, section 22727 affirmatively answers the majority's question of whether there is a statute declaring the district liable independently of its employees. Any doubt that this is its purpose or meaning is answered in Powers Farms v. Consolidated Irr. Dist., supra. If there is some question concerning the legislative intent as to this section, the members of the court may draw comfort from the fact that the Legislature has apparently acquiesced to the Powers case and its implications since they were well aware of it but made no changes when codifying the Water Code.

Where plaintiff's complaint alleges compliance with the procedural prerequisites, as here, and sets forth proper grounds for a claim against the district, that is, a dangerous and defective condition is being maintained which caused an injury, this is all that is necessary to state a cause of action (see, Knight v. City of Los Angeles, 26 Cal.2d 764, 766, 160 P.2d 779; Insolo v. Imperial Irr. Dist., 147 Cal.App.2d 172, 175, 305 P.2d 176).

For the foregoing reasons the trial court erroneously sustained defendant's general demurrer, and the judgment of dismissal which followed should be reversed.

Rehearing denied; CARTER, J., dissenting.

49 Cal.2d 849

Garlan EPLEY, an individual doing business under the fictitious firm name and style of Retailers Credit Association, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Amelia CALIFRO, as Administratrix of the Estate of Thomas T. Califro, Deceased, Lena Califro and Andy Mareck, Defendants, Lena Califro, Defendant and Appellant.

Sac. 6671.

Supreme Court of California,
In Bank.
March 26, 1958.

Proceeding to dismiss action on ground that no answer had been filed to complaint and no judgment entered therein by plaintiff within three years after service of summons. The Superior Court, Yuba County, Warren Steel, J., entered order vacating previous order of dismissal and defendant appealed. The Supreme Court, Shenk, J., held that where complaint was filed and summons served on defendants who were represented of record by attorneys but answer subsequently filed was signed by one of the defendants, an attorney, for himself and other defendants without a substitution of attorneys, answer on behalf of other defendants was ineffectual, and when court entered order dismissing action because no answer had been filed and no judgment taken within three years after service of summons, disclosure that person filing answer was an attorney and purported to act for other defendants did not justify vacation of order of dismissal.

Reversed.

Opinion, 307 P.2d 641, vacated.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐82(3)
Judgment ⇐217

Where court entered order dismissing action because of failure to file answer and to have judgment entered within three years after service of summons, such order constituted a final judgment and special order vacating prior order of dismissal was appealable. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 581d, 963, subd. 2.

2. Evidence ⇐82

When answer was filed by one of the defendants, an attorney at law, on behalf of himself and other attorneys, it would be assumed that contents of verification stating that individual was one of the defendants and that he appeared for himself and other defendants were judicially known to the court at the time.

3. Attorney and Client ⇐69

Where summons in civil action was returned and firm of attorneys appeared for the defendants in order to file a demurrer and demand for bill of particulars, and subsequently one of the defendants, an attorney, purported to file an answer to complaint on behalf of himself and other defendants without any substitution of attorneys of record, court could only conclude that no authority appeared for party to represent his codefendants, and as to them no answer was regularly filed.

4. Attorney and Client ⇐62

Attorney of record has exclusive right to appear in court for his client, and neither the party himself nor another attorney should be recognized by the court in the conduct or disposition of the case. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 284, subds. 1, 2, 285, 581a.

5. Attorney and Client ⇐75(1)

Until written notice of substitution of a new attorney is given to the adverse party, attorney of record must be recognized as the exclusive representative. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 284, subds. 1, 2, 285, 581a.

6. Attorney and Client ⇐75(1)

Where summons in civil action was served and defendants were represented of record by firm of attorneys, but answer was subsequently filed by one of the defendants, an attorney, for himself and purportedly for other codefendants, but without a substitution of attorneys of record, answer on behalf of codefendants was ineffectual, and when court entered order dismissing action because no answer had been filed and no judgment had been taken within three years after service of summons, subsequent discovery that person filing answer was attorney at law who purported to act for rest of his codefendants did not justify vacation of order of dismissal. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. §§ 284, subds. 1, 2, 285, 581a.

Barbagelata, Zief & Carmazzi and Henry J. Broderick, San Francisco, for appellant.

Francis M. Arnoldy, and Heenan & Arnoldy, Marysville, for respondent.

SHENK, Justice.

This is an appeal by the defendant Lena Califro from an order entered August 26, 1955, granting plaintiff's motion to vacate an order entered July 21, 1955. The order of July 21 was made pursuant to the provisions of Code of Civil Procedure section 581a[1]. It dismissed the action as to Lena and her codefendant Mareck. The order appealed from was based on the asserted ground that the prior order was inadvertently made. The defendant Mareck did not appeal.

The issues presented on appeal are whether the order of August 26 is an appealable order and whether the trial court erred in vacating its prior order of dismissal.

The record consists of the clerk's transcript. It shows that on March 22, 1951, a complaint was filed for $2,300 due on an open book account naming as defendants Thomas T. Califro, Andy Mareck and several fictitious Does. Summons was issued and served. On May 1, 1951, a demurrer was filed on behalf of Thomas Califro, Lena Califro (sued as Jane Doe) and Andy Mareck by and through the law firm of Rich, Carlin and Fuidge. On May 4 the demurrer was withdrawn and the defendants were given 15 days to answer. In October a notice of taking a deposition by the plaintiff was served on these attorneys. No further pleadings were filed by the defendants' attorneys in the action. On December 14, 1951, a document was filed entitled "Answer and Cross-Complaint." The answer denied the allegations of the complaint and the cross-complaint prayed for damages in the sum of $100,000 on behalf of the cross-complainant, Thomas T. Califro. This document was signed "Thomas T. Califro in Pro Per." The verification stated that Thomas T. Califro "is one of the defendants in the above entitled cause; that the attorneys of record for the defendants having withdrawn and resigned as such, he now appears herein in his proper person for himself and for the defendants and cross-complainant * * *." It was signed "Thomas T. Califro." The document was served on counsel of record who have represented the plaintiff from the commencement of the action and on this appeal. On September 26, 1952, counsel for plaintiff filed an answer to the cross-complaint. The affidavit of service shows that it was served by mail on September 30, 1952, on the law firm of Hewitt and McBride. Notice of motion to set the case for trial was served on these attorneys. The cause came on for trial on July 21, 1955. The minute order of that date shows that attorney J. W. O'Neil appeared as counsel for Amelia Califro, Administratrix of the Estate of Thomas T. Califro, deceased, and that the court ordered the action dismissed as to defendants Mareck and Lena Califro "according to Section 581a of the Code of Civil Procedure." The trial proceeded as to the remaining defendants and the case was submitted. Insofar as the record shows no judgment has been entered.

While the case was under submission and on August 2, 1955, one of the plaintiff's attorneys of record filed a notice of motion to vacate the order of submission and to set aside the order dismissing the action as to the defendants Lena Califro and Andy Mareck. The pertinent portions of the supporting affidavit state: "Subsequent to the submission of said cause, your affiant further re-examined the Answer and Cross-Complaint filed by Thomas T. Califro in the above entitled action and discovered in the verification thereof that Thomas T. Califro appeared in propria persona for himself and as attorney for defendants in said action. That Thomas T. Califro was an attorney at law, duly admitted and licensed to practice as such in all the Courts of California, appears in affiant's affidavit on file in said action, and therefore, said Thomas T. Califro was entitled to appear not only for himself, but on behalf of said defendants." Notice of this motion was served only on the attorney for the administratrix of the deceased defendant Thomas T. Califro. On August 26 the court made an "Order Setting Aside Order of Dismissal" which stated that the order of July 21 dismissing the action as to two defendants had been "inadvertently made" by the Court. The order recites that notice of the motion to vacate had not been given to the defendants Lena Califro or Andy Mareck or their attorney; that the attorney for the administratrix had advised the court that he was not and never had been the attorney for either of those defendants, and that he had appeared solely on behalf of the administratrix. The clerk's register of that date states: "Aug. 26. Motion to vacate submission, denied, by stipulation. Court ordered motion to vacate Order of Dismissal granted. Case to be re-opened as to defendants Lena Califro and Andy Mareck only." On November 2, 1955, a "Substitution of Counsel" was filed by defendant Lena Califro substituting her present counsel for the law firm of Rich, Carlin and Fuidge. This paper was signed by her former and present counsel of record and by herself.

1. Section 581a provides in its pertinent part: "All actions, heretofore or hereafter commenced, must be dismissed by the court * * * on its own motion * * * if summons has been served, and no answer has been filed, if plaintiff fails, or has failed, to have judgment entered within three years after service of summons, except where the parties have filed a stipulation in writing that the time may be extended."

[1] The plaintiff urges that the order of August 26 is not an appealable order. His argument is based upon the fact that some of the allegations of the cross-complaint refer to damages suffered by the "defendants" and that the court took no action and made no decision regarding the cross-complaint. Section 581d of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that the dismissal of an action by the court shall be entered upon the minutes and upon the clerk's register, and that when entered upon the minutes it shall constitute a judgment and be effective for all purposes. The order of dismissal was entered upon the minutes of the court and upon the clerk's register of actions and, therefore, constituted a final judgment. The order of August 26 vacating the order of dismissal was a special order made after final judgment and appealable under the provisions of section 963, subdivision 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure. Nicholson v. Henderson, 25 Cal.2d 375, 153 P.2d 945, and Krug v. Meehan, 106 Cal.App.2d 554, 235 P.2d 410, relied upon by the plaintiff, are not in point because, for the reasons hereinafter stated, the cross-complaint was not regularly filed.

The appellant urges that the order of August 26 was in excess of the court's jurisdiction and was void. In making the order of July 21 the court impliedly found and concluded from the undisputed facts that the complaint was filed on March 22, 1951; that summons was issued and served forthwith; that on May 1, 1951, the firm of Rich, Carlin and Fuidge filed a demurrer and a demand for a bill of particulars; that this appearance constituted them as attorneys of record for the defendants; that there was no substitution of those attorneys in the manner provided by law; that more than three years had elapsed from the date of service of summons; that plaintiff failed to have judgment entered; that no stipulation for extension of time was on file; that no answer was filed by the attorneys of record for the defendants, and that no authority appeared for Thomas T. Califro to file an answer and cross-complaint on behalf of his co-defendants. The judgment of dismissal could only be made after an examination of the facts and the application of the legal principles involved. It appears beyond question that this order correctly reflected a judicial determination and that the minute order correctly sets forth the decision of the court on that date.

[2, 3] The order of dismissal was set aside without notice on the ground that it was inadvertently made. It is stated by counsel for the plaintiff, and not denied, that at the hearing on July 21 the attention of the court was not called to the fact that Thomas T. Califro was an attorney at law or to the contents of the verification to the answer and cross-complaint. It must be assumed that the contents of the verification were judicially known to the court at that time. Hollenbach v. Schnabel, 101 Cal. 312, 316, 35 P. 872; 18 Cal. Jur.2d 471. While a Reporter's Transcript has not been furnished on this appeal, the parties concede that the facts as to the purported substitution of attorneys were before the court and that Thomas filed the answer and cross-complaint on behalf of himself and his co-defendants. His authority to do so was in direct issue. On the record the court could only have concluded that no authority appeared for Thomas to represent his co-defendants and therefore that as to them no answer or cross-complaint was regularly filed.

[4, 5] The verification contained nothing which would avoid the mandatory provisions of section 581a. The only attorneys of record for the appellant were Rich, Carlin and Fuidge. No substitution or change of attorneys was made in the manner provided by sections 284 and 285 of the Code of Civil Procedure.[2] The attorney of record has the exclusive right to appear in court for his client and neither the party himself nor another attorney should be recognized by the court in the conduct or disposition of the case. People v. Merkouris, 46 Cal.2d 540, 554, 555, 297 P.2d 999; Wells Fargo & Co. v. City, etc., of S. F., 25 Cal.2d 37, 42, 152 P.2d 625. Under section 285 written notice of the substitution of a new attorney must be given to the adverse party. Until then the attorney of record must be recognized as his exclusive representative.

[6] That Thomas T. Califro was an attorney at law gave him no legal right to represent his codefendants for the reason that they were still represented of record by other attorneys. The court's unawareness of Thomas' status as an attorney was not material to its determination that no answer had been filed and that dismissal was mandatory. It could not serve as the basis for an order setting aside the dismissal on the ground of inadvertence or clerical error. The order of August 26th constituted a new decision after reconsideration of the facts and the applicable legal principles. As stated in Bastajian v. Brown, 19 Cal.2d 209, 214, 120 P.2d 9, 11, citing Stevens v. Superior Court, 7 Cal.2d 110, 112, 59 P.2d 988, "While a court has power to set aside judgments and orders inadvertently made which are not actually the result of the exercise of judgment, it has no power, having once made its decision after regular submission, to set aside or amend judicial error except under appropriate statutory procedure." In view of the factual situation appearing in the record, the trial court had no discretion but to dismiss the action against the appealing defendant.

The portion of the order of August 26, 1955, which purported to vacate the dismissal of the action as to the appellant Lena Califro is reversed.

GIBSON, C. J., and CARTER, TRAYNOR, SCHAUER, SPENCE and McCOMB, JJ., concur.

2. "§ 284. [Change of attorney.] The attorney in an action * * * may be changed at any time before or after judgment * * * as follows:

"1. Upon the consent of both client and attorney, filed with the clerk, or entered upon the minutes;

"2. Upon the order of the court, upon the application of either client or attorney, after notice from one to the other * * *."

"§ 285. Notice of change. When an attorney is changed, as provided in the last section, written notice of the change and of the substitution of a new attorney, or of the appearance of the party in person, must be given to the adverse party. Until then he must recognize the former attorney."

159 Cal.App.2d 22

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Ray Veck BARNETT and Gordon F. Lymn, Defendants,

Ray Veck Barnett, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 6054.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

March 31, 1958.

Defendant was convicted of first degree robbery. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Richard C. Fildew, J., entered judgment, and the defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that where defendant, at no time during the trial, made any objection to introduction of any evidence, on ground that his arrest was illegal and in contravention of his constitutional rights, any such objection was deemed waived.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇐1175

Substantial rights of defendant, who was convicted of robbery in the first degree, were not prejudicially affected by fact that verdict recited that jury found that he was armed at the time of his "arrest" while trial court's minutes recorded that he was found to be armed at the time of the "offense."

2. Criminal Law ⇐1159(2)

Reviewing court is not authorized to determine weight of evidence, but can determine only whether, on face of evidence, it can be held that sufficient facts could not have been found by jury to warrant inference of guilt.

3. Criminal Law ⇐1159(2)

When evidence in criminal case is inherently improbable and therefore unworthy of belief, it presents a question of law, and when it is found to be of such a character, reviewing court may reverse conviction.

4. Criminal Law ⇐1159(2)

Before reviewing court, on ground of inherent improbability of testimony, which has been believed by duly constituted arbiter of the facts, may reject the testimony, there must exist a physical impossibility that testimony is true, or its falsity must be apparent without resorting to inferences or deductions.

5. Criminal Law ⇐1159(2)

Claim that testimony is inherently improbable and unworthy of belief involves a claim that something has been done that would ordinarily have been impossible to have been done under circumstances described or involves conduct that no sane person would likely be guilty of.

6. Robbery ⇐24(1)

Evidence sustained conviction of first degree robbery.

7. Criminal Law ⇐741(1), 742(1)

Jurors are the sole and exclusive judges of the credibility of witnesses and value and effect of evidence addressed to them except in those circumstances where it is declared by the law that it shall be conclusive proof of fact to which it relates. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1847, 2061.

8. Criminal Law ⇐1159(4)

Arguments of defendant that there were variances and inconsistencies in testimony of prosecuting witness in robbery prosecution in his identification of defendant as perpetrator of the crime, though available in argument to jury in first instance and to trial court on motion for new trial, were unavailing on appeal by defendant, unless District Court of Appeal could say, as a matter of law, that there was no substantial evidence to support the verdict.

9. Criminal Law ⇐741(2)

It is the function of the jury to pass on the strength or weakness of identification and uncertainty, if any, of witnesses in giving their testimony.

10. Criminal Law ⇐742(1)

In robbery prosecution, verity of testimony of defendant's witnesses that defendant was in bed at their house during time of robbery, though not impeached, was primarily for jury.

11. Criminal Law ⇐1159(2)

Argument of defendant that his alleged admissions should have been viewed with caution in robbery prosecution because no stenographic record or tape recording was made of them, went rather to the weight than to the admissibility of such evidence, and presented a question of fact for determination by the jury, rather than by District Court of Appeal on appeal.

12. Criminal Law ⇐698(1)

Where, at no time during trial of robbery prosecution, was any objection made by defendant to introduction of any evidence, on ground that his arrest was illegal and in contravention of his constitutional rights, such objection was therefore deemed waived.

13. Criminal Law ⇐1036(1)

Objection to introduction of evidence, on ground that arrest of defendant was illegal and in contravention of his constitutional rights, must be made at the trial, in order to afford prosecution opportunity to present fully the facts and circumstances surrounding the arrest, so that trial court can rule as to whether reasonable or probable cause existed for arrest and subsequent search or seizure.

14. Criminal Law ⇐395
Searches and Seizures ⇐3(1)

Where police officer saw .22 caliber pistol on top of rear seat of automobile, pistol was not taken by officer as result of a "search," since a "search" implies a prying into hidden places for that which is concealed, and that object of search has been hidden or intentionally put out of the way, and therefore pistol was admissible in robbery prosecution.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Search".

15. Criminal Law ⇐395

Where defendant, voluntarily, and without being coerced, advised police officer that .32 caliber revolver was secreted under front seat of automobile, and thereupon officer searched automobile and found the revolver, the revolver was admissible in robbery prosecution.

Harrison M. Dunham, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Herschel T. Elkins, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

[1] In an information filed by the District Attorney of Los Angeles County, the above named defendants were charged with the crime of Robbery in that they forcibly took from one Louis Bosola $75 on or about April 22, 1957. It was further alleged that at the time of the commission of the offense, the defendants were armed with a deadly weapon, to wit, a .22 caliber automatic pistol. Defendants pleaded not guilty, were tried before a jury and found guilty of robbery of the first degree. While the verdict as to defendant Barnett recites that the jury found he was armed at the time of his arrest, the court's minutes record that he was found to be armed at the time of the offense. However, none of defendant Barnett's substantial rights were prejudicially affected by such variance (People v. Beltran, 94 Cal.App.2d 197, 208, 210 P.2d 238). Defendant Barnett was sentenced to state prison. From the judgment of conviction, he prosecutes this appeal.

The following will serve as a fair summary of the factual background surrounding this prosecution.

Louis F. Bosola testified that he was the owner of a liquor store located at 1933 Ventura Boulevard, Tarzana, in Los Angeles County. That at about 12:50 o'clock on the morning of April 22, 1957 (the day following Easter Sunday) the defendant Barnett came into the store and ordered a package of Salem cigarettes. He gave Mr. Bosola a dollar bill and as Mr. Bosola gave him his change, the defendant pointed a gun at him and told him to give him all the money he had. Mr. Bosola asked the defendant if he wanted the silver and the latter said he only wanted the bills. After Mr. Bosola gave him the money, which amounted to $70 or $80, the defendant Barnett ordered him into the back room and made him lie on the floor. The defendant's gun was "on" Mr. Bosola during the entire proceedings. Defendant Barnett told Mr. Bosola, "Get down on the floor and stay there and don't try anything or I will be back."

Mr. Bosola gave the defendant the money because he was scared and because the appellant had a gun pointed at him.

At a later date Louis Bosola recognized the defendant Barnett in a police line-up. At the time of trial Mr. Bosola was positive that the appellant was the man who robbed him. Among other things, Mr. Bosola recognized the defendant's harelip, his dark brown hair, his height of 5 feet 9 inches and his weight of about 150 pounds. The witness stated that defendant's mustache had been a little thinner and a little darker than it was at the time of trial. On cross-examination the witness testified that the mustache of the intruder, "was a hairline type of moustache, straight across". That "it wasn't this walrus type that Mr. Barnett is wearing at the moment". The witness identified an automatic pistol, .22 caliber introduced in evidence at the trial as one that resembled or "looks like" the one defendant Barnett pointed at the witness on the occasion here in question.

About 9:30 o'clock on the evening of May 2, 1957, Frank J. Furgiuele, a police officer of the City of Beverly Hills, was operating a police patrol car when he observed a 1956 green Cadillac automobile pull up behind a motorcycle that he had observed had been parked at this location for several hours. That the motorcycle had a New Jersey license plate, and since it was parked in a residential district he had been keeping it under observation. That he stopped his patrol car directly across the street from the motorcycle and the Cadillac and observed the driver of the Cadillac, defendant Lymn, get out of the car and go to the motorcycle. That he approached defendant Lymn and was told that the registration to the motorcycle was in the Cadillac, and the witness walked back with both defendants to the car. The witness put his flashlight in the window of the car and noticed a gun on the rear seat. He immediately placed the two defendants under arrest. The witness stated that defendant Barnett volunteered that they had another gun under the front seat, and after additional police units arrived, they searched the Cadillac and found a .32 caliber gun in the car, together with a "jumper wire", a bandana, a wig, and some loose money in the glove compartment.

He testified that Barnett and Lymn were taken to the Beverly Hills Police Station, and while there, officers found that defendant Lymn was wearing a very narrow false "Hitler-type" mustache, straight across the upper lip. On cross-examination, the witness testified that the so-called "jumper wire" had only a clip on one end. When the contrivance was introduced into evidence it proved to be a battery-starting cable with clips on both ends.

On May 3rd, at about 10:30 or 11:00 a. m., Officer Cork of the Beverly Hills Police Department and Sergeant Valentine of the Beverly Hills Police had a conversation with the defendant Barnett. The latter's statements were free and voluntary. Sergeant Valentine told the defendant "I think you fellows have pulled a lot of jobs together, and it is our job to find out how many they are and where they are, and we want you to tell us about it."

Defendant Barnett said, "That is the funny part about it. There isn't a lot of jobs. There is only one." He further said that "The best he could remember, it was some time about the last week in April." He said that he and defendant Lymn were driving around in the valley near Ventura and Sepulveda at which time they spotted a liquor store. He said Lymn was driving and that they stopped in front or near the liquor store, that he took the gun, went in the liquor store, held the gun on the proprietor, and took $50 or $60. He then split the money with Lymn.

That same afternoon, defendant Barnett was interviewed by agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. His statements were free and voluntary. He said that the only thing he was "mixed up in" was the robbery in the valley.

On May 4th, at about 2:00 to 3:00 o'clock in the afternoon, Officer Webb of the Los Angeles Police Department, attached to the Detective Bureau, was present at a conversation with defendant Barnett, whose statements were free and voluntary.

The latter stated that approximately two weeks before on a Monday at around 1:00 o'clock in the morning he and defendant Lymn had driven west on Ventura Boulevard a little ways past Balboa; they parked the car in front of a liquor store on the north side of the street; Lymn stayed in the car while Barnett went inside the store; upon entering the store, he asked the man behind the counter for a package of Salem cigarettes; the man gave him the cigarettes and he gave the man a dollar; when the man gave him the change for the purchase, the defendant Barnett pulled the gun from his waistband and told the man he wanted all his money; when he started to give him the loose change, the defendant told him he only wanted the bills; after he obtained the bills he told the man to go to the back of the liquor store and he made him lie on the floor; he then walked out of the store and drove east on Ventura Boulevard.

On cross-examination the witness admitted that no stenographic record or tape recording was made of the conversation. Sergeant Murphy of the Detective Division, Los Angeles Police Department, was also present at the conversation just narrated and also testified that defendant Barnett told him that he had committed only one robbery. "The robbery that I told the Beverly Hills officers about."

The defendant Barnett also said he believed the robbery occurred on the 27th or 28th of April. Sergeant Murphy asked him if it would be the 22nd or 23rd and he stated it could have been. He told Sergeant Murphy that he and Lymn were riding around looking for a liquor store to hold up or some place to hold up and that they spotted a liquor store on Ventura Boulevard. He stated that when they pulled up in front of the store, defendant Lymn was driving his Cadillac and that he took a gun which he described as a .22 automatic, went into the liquor store, asked the clerk for a package of Salem cigarettes, offered to pay for the cigarettes with a dollar bill, and when the clerk rang up the purchase on the register and started handing him the change he took the gun from his waistband, pointed it at the clerk and asked him to give him all his money; the clerk asked if he wanted change and the defendant Barnett stated, "No, just the bills"; after the clerk had handed him the bills, he told him to turn around and start towards the back and he ordered him to lie down on the floor and remain there for a few moments. He said that he and Lymn counted the money and found that it was $69 or $70. None of defendant Barnett's statements were reduced to writing. Testimony as to similar incriminatory statements made by defendant Barnett was given by Officer Leonard M. Webb and Sergeant J. L. Austin of the Los Angeles Police Department.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Bowers, called as witnesses for defendant Barnett, testified that on Easter Sunday, April 21, 1957, the latter came to their home, assisted Mr. Bowers in cleaning out the garage, had dinner with them, and about 9:30 p.m. complained of dizziness. Defendant Barnett was put to bed in their bedroom, and Mrs. Bowers changed a cold cloth applied to Barnett's head, four or five times during the evening, until both Mr. and Mrs. Bowers retired at approximately 1:30 a. m. on the morning of April 22nd. (The robbery occurred about 12:50 a. m. on this morning.) Both witnesses further testified that defendant Barnett did not leave their home during the night or morning and was in bed when Mr. and Mrs. Bowers left for work around 6 o'clock in the morning. They were aided in their recollection of the occasion because it was Easter Sunday.

Two character witnesses who were well acquainted with defendant Barnett and with others who knew him, testified that his reputation in the community in which he resided, for "truth, honesty and good moral character" was very good.

As a witness in his own behalf, defendant Barnett testified that on the night of the alleged robbery he was at the home of the Bowers from approximately 6:30 p. m. on Easter Sunday, April 21, 1957 until the following morning, April 22, 1957 after the Bowers had gone to work. That he did not leave the Bowers' home at any time during the night of the alleged robbery.

He testified that on the night of his arrest, May 2, 1957, he had stopped by co-defendant Lymn's house to exchange his .32 automatic for defendant Lymn's .22 automatic, as he was going on a motorcycle trip to the Colorado River to do some "plinking" (shooting at cans and bottles with a gun). That Lymn had asked him to ride to Beverly Hills with him to see if he could get Lymn's motorcycle started, as it had broken down that day. Defendant Barnett is a motorcycle mechanic. That both guns were in plain view on the back seat of Lymn's Cadillac and both guns were unloaded. That he had the clip to Lymn's automatic which he was borrowing, in the pocket of his shirt.

Defendant Barnett testified that at the Beverly Hills police station a third person had implicated both Lymn and himself in the Bosola liquor store robbery, but Barnett denied any knowledge of the same. He further denied that he had ever confessed to any robbery to any officer.

[2–5] As his first ground for reversal of the judgment, appellant earnestly urges that the evidence was insufficient as a matter of law to sustain his conviction. He recognizes the rule enunciated in the case of People v. Newland, 15 Cal.2d 678, 681, 104 P.2d 778, that the court on appeal is not authorized to determine the weight of the evidence, but can determine only whether upon the face of the evidence it can be held that sufficient facts could not have been found by the jury to warrant the inference of guilt. However, appellant relies upon the rule that when evidence is inherently improbable and therefore, unworthy of belief, it presents a question of law and when found to be of such a character, an appellate tribunal, in a criminal case, may reverse a conviction. But, before an appellate court, on the ground of its inherent improbability, may reject the testimony given by witnesses, and which has been believed by the duly constituted arbiter of the facts, there must exist a physical impossibility that they are true, or their falsity must be apparent without resorting to inferences or deductions. People v. Stangler, 18 Cal.2d 688, 691, 692, 117 P.2d 321; People v. Gardner, 147 Cal.App.2d 530, 536, 305 P.2d 614; People v. Huston, 21 Cal.2d 690, 693, 134 P.2d 758. Or, as was said in People v. Carr, 113 Cal.App.2d 783, 786, 248 P.2d 977, 979: "* * * The claim that testimony is inherently improbable and unworthy of belief involves a claim that something has been done that would ordinarily have been impossible to have been done under the circumstances described; or it involves conduct that no sane person would likely be guilty of." See also People v. Loehr, 35 Cal.App.2d 1, 5, 94 P.2d 390; People v. Brown, 100 Cal. App.2d 207, 209, 223 P.2d 60; People v. Thomas, 103 Cal.App.2d 669, 672, 229 P.2d 836; People v. Wilder, 151 Cal.App.2d 698, 702, 703, 312 P.2d 425.

[6, 7] Viewed in the light of the foregoing rules, we cannot say that in the instant case the jury was required to disregard the testimony of the victim of the robbery and that of the police officers, and to accept as true, the testimony of appellant and his alibi witnesses. Obviously, appellate justices are in no position to evaluate the credibility of a witness and the intrinsic value of evidence addressed to the triers of facts. For that reason the law has ordained that the jury are the sole and exclusive judges of the credibility of witnesses and the value and effect of the evidence addressed to them (Code Civ.Proc. sec. 1847), except in those instances where it is declared by the law that it shall be conclusive proof of the fact to which it relates (Code Civ.Proc. sec. 2061). People v. Haydon, 18 Cal.App. 543, 554, 123 P. 1102, 1114.

[8, 9] Appellant directs our attention to claimed variances and inconsistencies in the testimony of Mr. Bosola in his identification of appellant as the perpetrator of the crime. While these contentions afforded an opportunity for argument to the jury in the first instance and to the trial court on motion for a new trial, they are unavailing on appeal unless we can say, as a matter of law, that there was no substantial evidence to support the verdict. It is the function of the jury to pass upon the strength or weakness of the identification and the uncertainty of the witnesses, if any, in giving their testimony (People v. Shaheen, 120 Cal.App. 2d 629, 636, 261 P.2d 752; People v. Quijada, 124 Cal.App.2d 422, 424, 268 P.2d 745; People v. Johnson, 21 Cal.App.2d 673, 674, 70 P.2d 198). Furthermore, the identification testimony of the victim was supported by admissions or confessions made by appellant to various police officers concerning his participation in the crime.

[10] Appellant insists that the testimony of Mr. and Mrs. Bowers that he was in bed at their house during the time of the robbery was not impeached. But, as heretofore pointed out, the verity of this testimony was a question primarily for the jury (People v. Sotelo, 102 Cal.App. 688, 690, 283 P. 388; Huth v. Katz, 30 Cal.2d 605, 609, 184 P.2d 521; Code Civ.Proc. sec. 1847). By their verdict, the jury indicated their unwillingness to believe the testimony of appellant's alibi witnesses, and under the pronouncements set forth in People v. Newland, supra, 15 Cal.2d at page 681, 104 P.2d at page 779, we are without authorization to reweigh it.

[11] Appellant further argues that his claimed admissions should have been viewed with caution because no stenographic record or tape recording was made of them. This claim goes rather to the weight than to the admissibility of such testimony, and under familiar rules, presented a question of fact for determination by the jury.

[12–14] Appellant's final contention that his arrest was illegal and in contravention of his constitutional rights is unavailing for two reasons. First, at no time during the trial was any objection made to the introduction of any evidence on the ground now asserted, and any such objection is therefore deemed waived (People v. Close, 154 Cal.App.2d 545, 316 P.2d 1019; People v. Kitchens, 46 Cal.2d 260, 262, 294 P.2d 17). Such an objection must be made at the trial in order to afford the prosecution opportunity to present fully the facts and circumstances surrounding the arrest, so that the court could rule as to whether reasonable or probable cause existed for the arrest and subsequent search or seizure. Secondly, we entertain no doubt from a perusal of the record, that the trial court could reasonably have allowed into evidence the two weapons found in the automobile, even though timely objection had been interposed. It would unduly prolong this opinion to again narrate the testimony concerning the apprehension of appellant. Suffice it to say that the circumstances related by the officer without doubt authorized him to question appellant and his co-defendant, and when the officer saw the .22 caliber pistol on the top of the rear seat of the automobile, investigative action was warranted and within the scope thereof the officer was entitled to take the weapon. This weapon was not taken as the result of a search, for "* * * A search implies a prying into hidden places for that which is concealed and that the object searched for has been hidden or intentionally put out of the way * * *." People v. West, 144 Cal.App.2d 214, 219–220, 300 P.2d 729, 733. (See also, People v. Ambrose, 155 Cal.App. 2d 513, 318 P.2d 181.)

[15] As to the second weapon, appellant voluntarily advised the officer that it was secreted under the front seat of the vehicle (a violation of Penal Code, section 12025). Thereupon, the officer searched the vehicle and found the .32 caliber revolver. Appellant's incriminatory statement to the officer was not coerced. He was not obligated to make a statement and could have remained silent. Appellant having told the officer that he was, in effect, committing a crime, his contention now that the officer's subsequent actions were unwarranted lacks substance.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is affirmed.

FOURT and LILLIE, JJ., concur.

158 Cal.App.2d 664

William P. COYLE, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

ALLAND & COMPANY, Inc., George J. Cabrol, Albert J. Aubert, and J. B. Doyle, individually, and dba Rancho Lombard Motel, Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 17739.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

March 26, 1958.

Rehearing Denied April 25, 1958.

Hearing Denied May 21, 1958.

Workmen's action to recover for personal injuries sustained in fall at motel under construction, against general contractor and owner. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, William F. Traverso, J., entered judgment for employee and owner appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Brazil, J. pro tem., held that where liability of owner was based upon violation of city building ordinance, and ordinance, subsequent to injury but before trial, was amended by deleting portion imposing liability on owner, owner's liability could not be based on ordinance violation.

Judgment against one defendant affirmed and as against another defendant reversed.

1. Municipal Corporations ⇐592(1)

Existence of statute dealing with necessity of protective flooring during building construction did not prohibit city from enacting similar building ordinance and imposing liability on owner of premises and contractors for injuries resulting from violations of ordinance. West's Ann.Labor Code, § 7101.

2. Appeal and Error ⇐989, 996

Where a verdict is attacked as being unsupported, power of appellate court begins and ends with a determination as to whether there is any substantial evidence, contradicted or uncontradicted, which will support conclusion of jury, and when two or more inferences can be reasonably deduced from the facts the reviewing court is without power to substitute its deductions for those of the trial court.

3. Negligence ⇐134(9)

In action by employee of subcontractor for personal injuries received in fall occurring when temporary flooring in building under construction gave way, there was sufficient evidence to support finding of negligence on part of contractor in failing to securely nail temporary flooring in violation of San Francisco building ordinance.

4. Negligence ⇐44

Where contractor was constructing building of more than one story in height and provided subflooring to enable workmen to walk around, even without reference to city building ordinance respecting temporary flooring, contractor was under a duty of ordinary care to see that employee of subcontractor had a reasonably safe place to work.

5. Negligence ⇐6, 134(11)

While the standard of care to which one must conform is usually that of ordinarily prudent or reasonable person under like circumstances, proper conduct of such a reasonable person under particular situations may be prescribed by statute, and an act or failure to act below statutory standard is negligence per se so that where evidence establishes defendant's violation of statute proximately causing injury, and no excuse or justification for violation is shown, responsibility may be fixed on violator without proof of failure to use due care.

6. Negligence ⇐121(1)

While presumption of negligence arising from violation of applicable statute is not conclusive and may be rebutted by showing excuse or justification, proof of violation raises presumption of negligence and puts upon offender burden of proving that violation was excused or justified by causes or things beyond control of violator and in absence of such proof of excuse or justification presumption of negligence is conclusive.

7. Master and Servant ⇐5

"Independent contractor" is one who renders services in course of an independent employment or occupation, following employer's desires only as to results of work, and not as to the means whereby it is to be accomplished.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Independent Contractor"

8. Statutes ⇐273

In cases of clear statutory remedy where no rights are vested, right falls when statutory remedy ceases to exist upon repeal of statute without a saving clause, unless the right has been converted into a final judgment prior to repeal of the statute.

9. Negligence ⇐31

Where employee brought action for personal injuries received during work on building under construction against contractor and owner of the premises, and liability of owner was based upon San Francisco building ordinance which at the time of accident imposed liability for injuries caused by violation of ordinance upon owner of premises, but before trial of action ordinance was amended so as to delete portion imposing liability upon owner, owner's liability, if any, could not arise on basis of ordinance as it existed at time of accident.

10. Evidence ⇐32

In general, an appellate court does not take judicial notice of city ordinances.

Hadsell, Murman & Bishop, San Francisco, for appellant Alland & Co.

Edward A. Friend, San Francisco, for other appellants.

W. A. Lahanier, John F. Gallen, San Francisco, for respondent.

BRAZIL, Justice pro tem.

The plaintiff recovered a judgment in a personal injury jury case against the general contractor and against the owners of the premises upon which a motel was being constructed. The appeal by Alland & Company, Inc., the contractor, is from the judgment, and the appeal of Cabrol, et al., the owners, is from the judgment and from the denial of their motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

The owners in preparing to build a three story motel, on March 1, 1954, applied to the Department of Public Works for a building permit, which permit was issued to them by the Department on June 4, 1954. In the signed application, the owners agree that if a permit is issued for the construction "all the provisions of the permit and all the laws and ordinances thereto will be complied with." The first contractor hired by the owners having withdrawn from the job, they hired appellant Alland & Company, Inc. as general contractors to build the motel. One or the other of the owners visited the construction job almost every day, following the work rather closely during the first three months because of its slow progress and to see that the plans and specifications were being followed.

The motel consisted of thirty-two units in a three story structure, and, at the time of the accident here involved, it was about thirty-five to forty per cent completed. There were two balconies, designated during the trial as "A" and "B," and each had temporary flooring at this stage of the work, that in "B" being of planks and that in "A" being of plywood. The uncontradicted evidence shows that plywood is a suitable material to use as temporary flooring or decking. The plywood decking, with which we are concerned, was laid some two to four weeks before the accident. It was laid on balcony cross beams of adequate size and strength and was placed on four foot centers. The plywood was new, in panels or sheets, 5/8ths of an inch thick, four feet wide and eight feet long. The cross beams were four feet apart, so placed that the ends of each panel rested on one and 5/16th inches of cross beam; they were nailed to the beams but the nails were not driven completely down in order to facilitate removal.

The respondent was, and for a great many years had been, a journeyman plumber; he was an employee of Crowley & Company, the plumbing subcontractor. He went on the job for the first time on the morning of November 1, 1954, the day of the accident. On that morning he was first taken by his foreman to the second floor to have his work pointed out during which time he and the foreman walked on both balconies. He was warned about balcony "B" but not about "A," and he was shown by the foreman where the plumbers had been working the preceding Friday on "B" and told to be careful. After finding out what he was to do, the foreman told him to get his tools and caulking materials and go to work. He took the only possible route to get to his work, which was through balcony "A" and over the temporary plywood decking of the second floor. As he stepped out onto "A," the floor gave way and he fell to the ground below, sustaining injuries. The evidence shows that he had walked on this same flooring, with his foreman, twice before on that morning without incident. The flooring, he said, appeared solid as he walked on it. There was no testimony on exactly what portions of the panels he had walked on, that is, whether over the center of the panel or near one of the cross beams on which the panels rested.

Although nobody else saw the actual fall, and respondent does not recall seeing the plywood sheet coming down with him, there is ample circumstantial evidence to establish that what happened was: as he stepped on a plywood panel, it gave way under his weight, and both plumber and plywood fell through the resulting hole between the cross beams. The carpenter foreman, an employee of Alland & Company, testified he had ordered two carpenters to start removing the plywood that day preparatory to the installation of permanent decking on the balcony. There was no direct testimony that the work of removal had been started. Right after the accident, a panel, which the jury could have inferred was the same one that had fallen, was put down over the opening caused by the respondent's fall. It was nailed down by one of the Alland & Company carpenters, where it remained in use for a week or two more. Examination of the plywood, before it was put back, showed there were no nails in it, nor was it shattered or broken in any way.

Over objection of appellant owners, the court admitted in evidence Section 4109 of the Building Code of San Francisco as it existed at the time of the accident which was nearly two years before trial. The section, as admitted, reads:

> "Temporary floors. Any building more than two stories high in course of construction shall have the joists, beams, and girders of every floor below the floor or level where work is to be done covered with flooring laid close together or with other suitable materials in order to protect workmen from falling and also to protect them from falling materials and tools. Temporary flooring shall not be removed unless and until it is replaced by the permanent flooring. It shall be the joint responsibility and the duty of the owner and the contractor to see that the provisions of this section are carried out."

The appellant owners then offered in evidence an ordinance enacted in April 1956, which repealed that portion of Section 4109 which made it the duty and responsibility of the owners to see that the provisions of the section were carried out. At time of trial, the ordinance as it then existed placed that duty and responsibility on the contractor alone. Respondent's objection to the introduction of the later ordinance was sustained. There was no saving clause in his later ordinance preserving the rights of any one who may have theretofore been injured. The trial court instructed the jury that a violation of the ordinance as it existed at the time of the accident was negligence as a matter of law, and that the owners could not delegate the performance of their duty to an independent contractor.

The evidence establishes that the building was more than two stories high, that the two appellants were not engaged in a joint venture, that Alland & Company was an independent contractor and that Cabrol and his partners were the owners. Even though the owners may have frequently visited the premises to watch the work progress, the control of the construction procedure was with Alland & Company.

[1] Although appellant contractor did not at the trial object to the introduction in evidence of the original building code section, it now joins the appellant owners in maintaining that the ordinance is unconstitutional because it is in conflict with state law. They claim that the state has fully occupied the field by Labor Code, Section 7101 and 8 California Administrative Code Section 1571. The Labor Code section deals directly with protective flooring during building construction and is worded substantially like the building code section, except that it makes no attempt to fix the duty or responsibility. The administrative code section, which deals with protection of openings during construction, is in more detail than either code provision, but it too omits fixing responsibility for performance.

In support of their position, appellants cite James v. Myers, 68 Cal.App.2d 23, 156 P.2d 69 and People v. Villarino, 134 Cal. App.2d Supp. 893, 286 P.2d 86. In the Myers case the question related to the motor vehicle laws of the state. Section 458 of the Vehicle Code shows a clear legislative intent to occupy the field, wherein it provides, "no local authority shall enact or enforce any ordinance on the matters covered by this division unless expressly authorized herein." In the Villarino case, the ordinance involved was of a penal, prohibitory nature and was in the exact language of the state law but provided for a different penalty. In our case the city could not by ordinance have placed responsibility on the owner if the state law had expressly relieved him of it. Labor Code, Section 7101 is contained in Division 5 entitled "Safety in Employment," part 3 "Safety in Buildings." The legislative intent about occupying the field appears to be nearly the opposite of that expressed in Vehicle Code, Section 458. Section 6317 of the Labor Code provides "Powers and jurisdiction of local governing bodies. Nothing in this part shall deprive the governing body of any county, city, or public corporation, board, or department, of any power or jurisdiction over or relative to any place of employment." That the field of legislation involved in this case is not fully occupied by the state is exemplified by the fact that building codes are usually adopted by the cities of California, and in most cases they are long, detailed and aimed at covering about every conceivable detail of building or construction that there is. The ordinance is not unconstitutional as being in conflict with state law.

The appellants next contend that the evidence is insufficient to support a verdict in favor of respondent for there is no showing of want of ordinary care, no negligence whatever, and furthermore respondent was in a better position than they to ascertain the presence of an obvious danger.

[2] "[W]hen a verdict is attacked as being unsupported, the power of the appellate court begins and ends with a determination as to whether there is any substantial evidence, contradicted or uncontradicted, which will support the conclusion reached by the jury. When two or more inferences can be reasonably deduced from the facts, the reviewing court is without power to substitute its deductions for those of the trial court." Crawford v. Southern Pacific Co., 3 Cal.2d 427, 429, 45 P.2d 183, 184.

[3] The respondent walked on the plywood on the day he was hurt, and other workmen had safely used it for more than two weeks before the accident. It cannot be said that the danger of a sheet of plywood suddenly giving away was an obvious danger to the respondent. He had just come on the job that morning, a few minutes before he fell. He had been warned to be careful about balcony "B" but nothing had been said to him about "A." At the very least, the evidence, if believed by the jury, was sufficient to support a finding that, as to him, the danger was not obvious.

[4] While the evidence shows without contradiction that the plywood used was suitable material for temporary decking, there was no testimony to the effect that the manner in which the panels were laid on the cross beams was a suitable method of placement. Without breaking or shattering, the sheet of plywood came loose from its bearings in one piece. It would not be unreasonable for the jury to infer that the panel was not nailed down as it should have been. Even without reference to the building code section received in evidence, appellant Alland & Company as general contractors in charge of the entire job were under a duty of ordinary care to see to it that respondent had a reasonably safe place to work.

Appellants cite Dingman v. A. F. Mattock Co., 15 Cal.2d 622, 104 P.2d 26, wherein judgment for plaintiff employee who was hurt in a fall on the job was reversed upon the ground that the evidence was insufficient to hold the contractor negligent. Basically, the facts of that case and this one are very much alike in that they involved a building under construction, a building contractor, an employee of a subcontractor being hurt when he walked on a scantling placed across an open stairwell, and he fell when the scantling broke in the middle under his weight. However, from the opinion, it does not appear that there was evidence, as there is here, from which the trier of fact could draw reasonable inferences of notice and negligence. Furthermore, the Dingman case does not involve the violation of an ordinance.

[5, 6] The case law involving a finding of negligence from a statutory violation as set out in Satterlee v. Orange Glenn School Dist., 29 Cal.2d 581, 177 P.2d 279 is as follows: "That case holds that the standard of care to which one must conform is usually that of the ordinarily prudent or reasonable person under like circumstances, but that the proper conduct of such a reasonable person under particular situations may be prescribed by statute; that an act or failure to act below a statutory standard is negligence per se or negligence as a matter of law; that where the evidence establishes a defendant's violation of a statute (proximately causing plaintiff's injury) and where no excuse or justification for violation is shown, responsibility may be fixed on the violator without proof of failure to use due care; that while the presumption of negligence arising from violation of an applicable statute is not conclusive and may be rebutted by showing excuse or justification, proof of the violation raises the presumption of negligence and puts upon the offender the burden of proving that the violation was excused or justified by causes or things beyond the control of the violator; that in the absence of such proof of excuse or justification the presumption of negligence is conclusive." Gruss v. Coast Transport, Inc., 154 Cal.App.2d 85, 315 P.2d 339, 341.

The appellant owners have two separate grounds of appeal: (1) the trial court was in error in sustaining the objection to the introduction of the second ordinance which repealed the owner's duty and responsibility provisions of the first one and (2) Building Code Section 4109, as to them is unconstitutional because it is unreasonable in requiring them to do something in a situation over which they had no control and of which they had no knowledge.

[7] There can be no doubt that Alland & Company was an independent contractor hired by appellant owners to construct a motel. "An independent contractor is one who renders service in the course of an independent employment or occupation, following his employer's desires only as to the results of the work, and not as to the means whereby it is to be accomplished [citations]. The general supervisory right to control the work so as to insure its satisfactory completion in accordance with the terms of the contract does not make the hirer of the independent contractor liable for the latter's negligent acts in performing the details of the work [citations]." McDonald v. Shell Oil Co., 44 Cal.2d 785, 788, 285 P.2d 902, 903. The appellant owners did not select, nor did they have the privilege of selecting, the plywood material, nor the manner in which it was to be laid. They did not exercise active control over the men employed or the operation of the equipment used by Alland & Company.

In the first place, the action against the owners was one of tort, not contract. The fact that the owners in getting the building permit agreed to comply with all laws and ordinances applicable thereto adds nothing to what the law already requires. Compliance with the law is not based upon agreement of a citizen to comply.

[8, 9] The rights and duties of the appellant owners and of the respondent were materially affected by the ordinance as introduced in evidence, read to the jury and used as a basis for an instruction that a violation thereof was negligence as a matter of law. If it was error to receive the ordinance in evidence as it existed at the date of the accident, and to refuse to admit it as it existed at time of trial, the judgment must necessarily be reversed, even though respondent might have nevertheless recovered under some conceivable exception to the general rule that an owner is not liable for the negligent conduct of the independent contractor.

> "The rule in such cases [purely statutory remedy] is clear that where no rights are vested the right falls and the statutory remedy ceases to exist upon the repeal of the statute without a saving clause unless the right has been converted into a final judgment prior to a repeal of the statute. Although the cause of action upon which the judgment herein is based, accrued prior to the date of the alleged repeal, the judgment was entered subsequent to that date. The repeal of the statute without a saving clause would therefore wipe out the cause of action and render the judgment of no legal validity [citations]." Penziner v. West American Insurance Co., 10 Cal.2d 160, 170, 74 P.2d 252, 257.

This case was apparently tried on the theory that the liability, if any, of the owners was dependent upon the provisions of the ordinance, and not on any exception to the common law rule of non-liability. The court instructed the jury "that the duty of compliance with an ordinance designed for the protection of members of the public rightfully on the premises cannot be delegated by the owners of the premises to someone else, and that such owner remains liable in the absence of contributory negligence, for injury suffered by a person rightfully on the premises which proximately results from the violation, if any, of such ordinance"; and that, if the jury found the building to be more than two stories high, "the ordinance * * * previously read to you places a duty upon the defendants owners" and they "are not relieved of this duty by the fact that they employed an independent contractor to build the motel. The duty imposed by this ordinance is what the law calls a nondelegable duty and, where the owners entrust the performance of this duty to a contractor, they are responsible if the contractor fails to perform the duty and such failure proximately caused the accident."

There were no instructions offered by the plaintiff and none given by the court with reference to inherently dangerous activities, possible contractual liability because the owners signed the application for the building permit, or any other conceivable exception to the rule that an owner is not responsible for the acts and conduct of the independent contractor. There can be but little doubt that the jury based its verdict against the owners on the ordinance introduced and the instructions relating thereto.

Finnegan v. Royal Realty Co., 35 Cal.2d 409, 218 P.2d 17 and Snyder v. Southern Cal. Edison Co., 44 Cal.2d 793, 285 P.2d 912, in each of which owners were held liable for injuries to an invitee, despite the presence of an independent contractor, do not involve a repealed ordinance or statute. There are other distinguishing features which do not now require further consideration. It is significant that respondent in this brief on appeal in commenting on the Finnegan case makes this observation, "At common law the owner would have no liability to such invitee, but a city ordinance required certain safety devices in the building, and it was held that the owner's duty to comply with such ordinance made him liable for injuries." It was error not to allow appellant owners to show that Ordinance 4109, insofar as their duties and responsibilities were concerned, had been repealed. The ordinance as it existed at time of trial should have been received in evidence. Consequently, it was error to instruct the jury in the manner hereinbefore indicated with reference to appellant owners.

What has been said regarding the effect of the repeal of the ordinance obviates the necessity of discussing appellant owners' second contention that the ordinance as read to the jury was unconstitutional as to them.

[10] The ordinance which was denied admission in evidence is not before this court, although it appears in the record as an exhibit for identification. In general, an appellate court does not take judicial notice of city ordinances. Stamper v. City of Los Angeles, 80 Cal.App.2d 242, 245, 181 P.2d 687. We have not considered whether there is or can be any exception in this case to the general rule of non-liability of an owner for acts of negligence of an independent contractor. The case was apparently tried insofar as appellant owners were concerned on liability predicated upon the provisions of the ordinance.

In affirming the order denying the motion for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict, no inference is to be drawn therefrom as to the presence or absence of any exception.

Order denying motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict is affirmed.

Judgment for respondent against appellant Alland & Company, Inc. is affirmed.

Judgment for respondent against appellants George J. Cabrol, Albert J. Aubert and J. B. Doyle, individually and doing business as Rancho Lombard Motel is reversed.

DOOLING, Acting P. J., and DRAPER, J., concur.

Hearing denied; CARTER and TRAYNOR, JJ., dissenting.

158 Cal.App.2d 597

Dorothy Kathleen PARKER, an Incompetent person, by the guardian of her person and estate, Robert Parker, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al., Defendants,

City and County of San Francisco, Respondent.

Civ. 17406.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

March 24, 1958.

As Corrected April 14, 1958.

Hearing Denied May 21, 1958.

Action for injuries sustained when passenger alighting from defendants' bus parked outside marked bus zone partially occupied by truck was struck by automobile without brakes attempting to pass to right of bus. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Daniel R. Shoemaker, J., granted judgment in favor of defendants notwithstanding verdict for plaintiff. Plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held that evidence raised questions for jury as to whether bus driver was negligent in parking bus 10½ feet from curb and whether such negligence was proximate cause of accident.

Judgment notwithstanding verdict reversed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐934(1), 1024(4)

On appeal from judgment notwithstanding verdict, evidence and all reasonable inferences therefrom must be viewed most strongly in favor of verdict, and all conflicts, if any, must be resolved in favor of verdict so that if there is any substantial evidence to support verdict, the judgment must be reversed.

2. Carriers ⇐280(1), 303(6)

Carrier's duty to exercise highest degree of care for safety of bus passengers ends when the passenger is discharged into a relatively safe space; the carrier has a duty not to discharge the passenger into a dangerous area and this is so even though the passenger alights safely. West's Ann. Civ.Code, § 2100.

3. Negligence ⇐136(14)

Generally, the issue of negligence is a question for jury.

4. Carriers ⇐320(28, 30)

In action for injuries sustained when passenger alighting from defendants' bus parked outside marked bus zone partially occupied by truck was struck by automobile without brakes attempting to pass to right of bus, evidence raised questions for jury as to whether bus driver was negligent in parking bus, without looking to rear, some 10½ feet from curb instead of as close to curb as practicable as required by statute and ordinances, and whether such negligence was proximate cause of accident in that driver could have reasonably anticipated danger to alighting passenger and could have reasonably foreseen that if a motorist lost control he might drive to right rather than to left of bus. West's Ann.Civ. Code, § 2100; West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 586(a)(9).

5. Negligence ⇐136(25)

Proximate cause is normally a question of fact; it can only be a question of law where reasonable minds cannot differ.

6. Negligence ⇐56(1.7, 1.12)

"Proximate cause" is that cause which, in natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by an efficient intervening cause, produced the injury or damage complained of and without which such injury or damage would not have occurred.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Proximate Cause".

7. Negligence ⇐59

Proximate cause involves an element of foreseeability; "foreseeability" does not mean foreseeability of the actual consequences; it simply means foreseeability in the terms of causation.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Foreseeability".

8. Negligence ⇐59

If conduct of person sought to be charged is a substantial factor in bringing about harm, the fact that he neither foresaw nor should have foreseen the extent or nature of the harm, or the manner in which it occurred, does not prevent him from being held liable.

9. Negligence ⇐61(1)

Two acts of negligence may concur in bringing about a harmful result, and the fact that neither party could reasonably anticipate the occurrence of the other's act will not shield him from liability so long as his own negligence was one of the causes of the injury, and the proportionate degrees of the negligence of the two actors is immaterial.

10. Negligence ⇐61(2)

Where negligence of person sought to be charged continues and exists up to time of injury the concurrent negligent act of another is not a "superseding cause" but becomes a "concurrent proximate cause".

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Concurrent Proximate Cause" and "Superseding Cause".

11. Negligence ⇐136(25)

Foreseeability is a question of fact and only becomes a question of law if reasonable men cannot disagree.

Paul Friedman, San Francisco, for appellant.

Dion R. Holm, City Atty., C. Wesley Davis, Deputy City Atty., City & County of San Francisco, San Francisco, for respondent.

BRAY, Justice.

A jury rendered a verdict in favor of plaintiff and against defendant City and County of San Francisco for $80,000.[1] The trial court granted judgment notwithstanding the verdict in favor of defendant. Plaintiff appeals.

The sole question presented is whether there was any evidence of negligence of defendant proximately contributing to the accident.

Evidence.

Plaintiff was a passenger in defendant's motor bus driven by a driver of 6 years' experience. The bus stopped at the Fillmore Street intersection of Sacramento Street on which latter street the bus was proceeding. The marked bus zone was located across Fillmore Street to which zone the bus proceeded. This zone was 55 feet in length and 6 feet wide. Occupying the front end of the zone was a United Parcel truck which was 20 feet long and 7½ feet wide. Concluding that he could not get the bus into the remaining portion of the zone (the bus was 35 feet long and 8 feet wide and according to the driver required 12 to 14 feet clearance in front in order to swing out if flush with the curb—if not, it would need 10 feet) the driver parked the bus parallel with the curb with its front approximately opposite the rear end of the truck. The bus was 10½ feet from the curb at its right and its rear was even with the near line of the crosswalk crossing Sacramento Street. Its left side was about 9 inches from the center of the street. The driver testified that if the bus had pulled into the zone flush with the curb and still left room to move out around the truck into Sacramento Street the bus would have been 6 feet into the crosswalk. Later by use of the diagram it appeared that if so parked, leaving 10 feet to clear the truck, the bus practically would have blocked the crosswalk. If the bus were brought in at an angle so as to leave the right side of the bus closer to the curb than parking parallel as it did, the back of the bus would not have protruded as far into the crosswalk as if parked in the zone parallel to the curb. The driver testified that in conjunction with the rules hereafter mentioned the bus should be brought as close to the curb as possible where there was an obstruction in the bus zone; it was a matter of personal judgment for the driver to select the position.

Sacramento Street going into the intersection is an 8 per cent down grade and is 38½ feet wide. Edward Mackay[2] drove a borrowed 1940 Ford Coupe down Sacramento Street in second gear. At some point about 40 to 50 feet from the intersection he discovered that both his foot brakes and his emergency brake did not respond. As he approached the intersection he knew that the bus was on the other side but was not sure whether it had stopped or was still moving. He saw some one in the crosswalk behind it. (This, of course, was not the plaintiff, who left the front right of the bus to walk to the curb.) Mackay, desiring to stop his automobile without hitting anybody, noticed the truck with a steel grate for a bumper. For that reason he decided to pull to the right of the bus and stop his car against the truck's bumper. He did not go to the left of the bus because he could not see around it although he did not see any oncoming traffic. He was going 10 to 15 miles an hour before the intersection but did not know his speed in the intersection or beyond it. He claimed that as he entered the intersection he was blowing his horn and yelling that he had no brakes. He became aware of the people whom he struck when he turned his car right to miss the bus. One witness testified that just as he stepped out of the rear door of the bus some one shouted "Look out" and the man who had proceeded him out of the door stopped him. The man driving the car yelled that his brakes were not working. The witness stepped back and the car just missed him and the other man. The car proceeded and hit plaintiff who had just alighted from the front of the bus. It also struck a man who had left the curb and had just arrived at the front door of the bus, pinning them between the car and the truck and severely injuring plaintiff.

1. This amount is subject to a credit of $40,000 paid plaintiff by defendants United Parcel Service and its driver.

2. He and the owners of the car he was driving were originally defendants in the case. A nonsuit was granted in favor of the owners and plaintiff dismissed without prejudice as to Mackay. United Parcel and its driver were also defendants. Plaintiff for the sum of $40,000 entered into a covenant with them not to execute.

The bus driver did not see the accident happen. He looked in his rear mirror before crossing the intersection and did not see any traffic behind him. He does not remember whether he again looked into that mirror, but imagined he did so again as it comes automatically. There is another bus stop on Sacramento Street at the end of the block. The bus driver testified that as he approached the intersection he saw that there were persons standing in the zone itself waiting for the bus. The bus driver stated that he knew that in stopping where he did he was disobeying the "rules of the City and County of San Francisco relative to where you should stop that bus." One witness testified that as the bus approached he stepped out into the bus zone and awaited it and that one or more persons also stepped into the zone. He waited by the front door until five or six persons alighted, and then the car came right by him. He heard no yelling or noise.

Was There Evidence of Negligence?

[1] It is well settled that on appeal from a judgment notwithstanding the verdict, the evidence and all reasonable inferences therefrom must be viewed most strongly in favor of the verdict, and all conflicts, if any, resolved in favor of the verdict so that if there is any substantial evidence to support the verdict, the judgment must be reversed. Mitchell v. Southern Cal. Gas Co., 122 Cal.App.2d 692, 695, 265 P.2d 118; Rodabaugh v. Tekus, 39 Cal.2d 290, 291, 246 P.2d 663.

The following city laws and regulations were read in evidence:

Section 208, Public Utilities Code: "* * It shall be unlawful for a bus operator to receive or discharge passengers upon a public street at other than a legally established bus zone, provided however, that he may receive or discharge passengers from a bus parked as close to the right-hand curb as practicable and at a point at least two city blocks distant from the nearest legally established bus zone."

Section 209, Public Utilities Code: "Buses must be stopped in marked bus zones. Whenever the driver or operator stops a bus at a bus zone, he shall bring said bus within the confines of said zone as marked out on the curb and/or street, unless such a zone is actually obstructed and the bus cannot be stopped therein."

General Bulletin No. 911, Municipal Railway: "Subject: Coaches stopping at curb. Unless regulated otherwise or when parked vehicles occupy zone, motor and trolley coaches must stop of [sic] curb for the purpose of taking on and discharging passengers, in accordance with rule requirements.

"Strict compliance with this important operative requirement will eliminate the cause for this type of complaint which is being received at this office and will contribute greatly to—

"(1) Safety by keeping roadway clear, thus permitting traffic to flow unobstructed.

"(2) Comfort and convenience of patrons."

Section 3, Rule 45 of the Official Rule Book of the Municipal Railway: "Coaches must never be backed until operator has stepped from coach and inspected the area in rear, warning any children, pedestrians or traffic of his intentions. When it is necessary to pack [sic] a considerable distance he should seek the assistance of a railway employee to flag all traffic."

[2] While a carrier of passengers for hire is held to the exercise of the highest degree of care for the safety of passengers in their transportation and is liable for any injury sustained for failure to exercise such care (see Civil Code, § 2100; Bonneau v. North Shore R. R. Co., 152 Cal. 406, 409, 93 P. 106; Osgood v. Los Angeles etc. Co., 137 Cal. 280, 70 P. 169), that high degree of care ends when the passenger safely alights from the bus. See MacLean v. City & County of San Francisco, 127 Cal.App.2d 263, 272, 273 P.2d 698, and Brandelius v. City & County of San Francisco, 47 Cal.2d 729, 735, 306 P.2d 432. This means that the duty ends when the passenger is discharged into a relatively safe space, not merely that he alights safely from the bus if he is discharged into a dangerous area. As we said in MacLean v. City & County of San Francisco, supra, 127 Cal.App.2d at page 272, 273 P. 2d at page 704: "The mere fact of stopping away from the curb but as near thereto as practicable under the circumstances" (emphasis added) is not negligence and buses "should not discharge their passengers out in the street where there is danger of their being hit by passing vehicles [citations], nor near known dangers from the condition of the street * * *." See also Brandelius v. City and County of San Francisco, supra, 47 Cal.2d 729, 735, 306 P.2d 432, holding that the rule that the relation of passenger and carrier terminates when a street car passenger alights upon a public street and clears the car from which he alights, is subject to certain qualifications depending upon the circumstances of the case. The court quoted from Dayton v. Yellow Cab Co., 85 Cal.App.2d 740, 745, 193 P.2d 959 (47 Cal.2d at page 735, 306 P.2d at page 436): "'until the passenger reaches a place outside the sphere of any activity of the carrier which might reasonably constitute a mobile or animated hazard to the passenger, the rule of utmost care and diligence set forth in Civil Code, section 2100, still applies.'" It also quoted from Boa v. San Francisco-Oakland T. Rys., 182 Cal. 93, 100–101, 187 P. 2 (47 P.2d at page 735, 306 P.2d at page 436): "'responsibility continues until the passenger has had a reasonable opportunity of getting away from the car without injury.'" While the Dayton, Boa and Brandelius cases and the cases referred to in the Brandelius case dealt with injuries received by passengers alighting from a common carrier inflicted by an agency of the common carrier, we can see no reason why the exception to the general rule applied in those cases should not apply where, as here, the passengers are discharged into an area of immediate danger. See "Proximate Cause in California" by William L. Prosser, 38 Cal.Law Review, pp. 369, 401: "The fact that the intervening cause is the negligent act of a third person will not necessarily relieve the defendant, since his own fault may lie in exposing the plaintiff to the risk that such negligence will intervene. * * * [A] partially blocked roadway with obstructed vision or inadequate room to pass means that some negligently driven automobile may hit a man or another car. * * * The issue here is not one of causation, which is beyond all dispute; but of whether the defendant was under any duty to protect the plaintiff against the intervening cause."

[3, 4] Generally, the issue of negligence is a question for the jury. Here the jury well could have found that while, in view of the truck's presence in the bus zone and the fact that parking there would cause the bus to greatly obstruct the crosswalk, it was not practicable to park the bus wholly in the zone, nevertheless it reasonably could have been parked much closer than 10½ feet from the curb, and that the bus in the words of the MacLean case was not stopped as near to the curb "as practicable." (No reason appears why it could not have been parked at least adjacent to the outer line of the bus zone.) The bus driver conceded that in parking as he did he had violated the ordinance requirements that the bus be parked as close to the curb "as practicable." Thus there was support for the jury's finding that defendant was negligent. Moreover, the evidence would support a finding that the bus driver neither at the time he was approaching his parking place, at the time of stopping, nor at the time of opening the doors to let the passengers out, looked to the rear or to the left side to see if the bus zone was then a safe place into which to discharge his passengers and that therefore the driver was negligent.

The most serious question is as to whether that negligence constituted a proximate cause of the accident, or whether the sole proximate cause thereof was Mackay's negligence, that is, broke the chain of causation. In Ferroggiaro v. Bowline, 153 Cal.App.2d 759, 315 P.2d 446, we set forth the well settled general principles governing the determination of whether an intervening cause is the sole proximate cause of an accident (153 Cal.App.2d at page 763, 315 P.2d at page 448): "A defendant may be negligent for failing to guard against an intervening cause which in ordinary human experience is reasonably to be anticipated or which the defendant has reason to anticipate. In other words, the risk created by the original act of negligence may include the intervention of the foreseeable negligence of others. Prosser on Torts, 2d ed., p. 268 et seq. The fact that the intervening act of a third person is a negligent one will not make it a superseding cause of harm to another for an injury which the original actor helped to bring about, if the original actor at the time of his negligent conduct should have realized that a third person might so act. Warner v. Santa Catalina Island Co., 44 Cal.2d 310, 282 P.2d 12. That is, the defendant will be held liable for the damages resulting from an intervening cause that he could foresee, or for those which are the normal results of the risk he has created. Of course, if 'the intervening act constituting the immediate cause of the injury was one which it was not incumbent upon the defendant to have anticipated as reasonably likely to happen, then, since the chain of causation is broken, he owes no duty to the plaintiff to anticipate such further acts, and the original negligence cannot be said to be the proximate cause of the final injury.' Hale v. Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co., 42 Cal.App. 55, 58, 183 P. 280, 281. But, if the original actor's conduct is a substantial factor in bringing about harm to another, the fact that he neither foresaw nor should have foreseen the extent of the harm or the manner in which it occurred does not prevent him from being liable. Gibson v. Garcia, 96 Cal.App. 2d 681, 216 P.2d 119." We quoted from Osborne v. City of Whittier, 103 Cal.App. 2d 609, 230 P.2d 132: "'We hold, therefore, that liability is not, as a matter of law, dependent upon proximity of the damaged property to the dangerous condition, but is dependent upon the dangerous condition being a proximate cause of the damage, and that the question is one of fact'" and from Jones v. City of South San Francisco, 96 Cal.App.2d 427, 435, 216 P.2d 25: "'It is a rare case where the court may hold, as a matter of law, that the intervening act breaks the chain of causation because whether it was reasonably foreseeable is a question of fact and not of law. The second act will break the chain of causation only where, under no rational interpretation of the evidence, could the later act of negligence have been reasonably foreseen.'"

The question presented is whether or not when defendant parked its bus 10½ feet from the curb, under the facts of this case, and the driver, without first looking to the rear, permitted his passengers to alight, the second act of negligence was reasonably foreseeable and both actors may be held liable. In determining this question we must bear in mind "'* * * the law does not say that if the particular injury arising from the negligence cannot be anticipated, a recovery cannot be had. That some damage, some injury, would probably arise from the existing negligence, and that it could reasonably have been expected, is all that the law requires to justify a recovery.'" Ferroggiaro case, 153 Cal.App.2d at page 765, 315 P.2d at page 449.

Thus, the question here is a relatively simple one, although its answer may be more difficult, particularly as to affirm the trial court's action requires that we decide the question as a matter of law rather than of fact. The question is, should the driver in stopping his bus 10½ feet from the curb, some 4½ feet outside the bus zone, without looking to the rear of the bus, and requiring his passengers on alighting from the bus to cross that area of the street, reasonably have anticipated danger to his passengers so alighting.

It is very doubtful if there was any evidence to show that had the bus driver looked to the rear at the time he opened the bus doors he would have seen Mackay's car in a position which reasonably would have warned him that it would go into the bus zone. For the purposes of the discussion hereafter on the question of foreseeability, we will assume that the bus driver's failure so to look alone was not a proximate cause of the accident.

This, then, brings us to the final question as to whether it can be said that it was reasonably foreseeable that any car would be driven into the obstructed bus zone, already occupied by persons waiting to get on the bus. This was a marked bus zone reserved for buses alone and in which stopping, standing or parking any other vehicle is prohibited "except when necessary to avoid conflict with other traffic or in compliance with the directions of a peace officer or traffic control signal device * * *." (Vehicle Code, § 586(i).) [3]

[5, 6] Because of the violation of the statute and rules of the company constituting negligence on the part of defendant, the plaintiff, a passenger, to whom the highest degree of care was owed, was allowed to get off 10½ feet from the curb, a place of danger. The passenger would not have been in that place of danger but for the negligence of defendant. Such negligence continued until the passenger reached a place of safety. Thus the negligence continued up until the very moment Mackay's automobile drove into the bus loading zone and hit the plaintiff. Was, then, the negligent act of Mackay a superseding cause for the reason that such action on his part was not reasonably "foreseeable"? We are here dealing, of course, with a question of causation. Proximate cause is normally a question of fact. It can only be a question of law where reasonable minds cannot differ. Whenever reasonable minds can disagree on the issue it is one of fact and not of law. Proximate cause, in the legal sense, is that cause "which, in natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by an efficient intervening cause, produced the injury or damage complained of and without which such injury or damage would not have occurred." (35 Cal.Jur.2d p. 551, § 54, and many cases cited.)

[7, 8] It is true that the conception of proximate cause involves an element of foreseeability. But what does this mean? It does not mean that the precise or intended consequence should have been foreseen. Foreseeability does not mean foreseeability of the actual consequences. It simply means foreseeability in the terms of causation. If the conduct of the person sought to be charged is a substantial factor in bringing about the harm, the fact that he neither foresaw nor should have foreseen the extent or nature of the harm, or the manner in which it occurred, does not prevent him from being held liable. (See many cases collected and commented on in 35 Cal.Jur.2d p. 552, § 55.)

3. This section was amended in 1957 and subdivision (i) is now subdivision (a) (9).

[9] It is obvious that two acts of negligence may concur in bringing about a harmful result. The fact that neither party could reasonably anticipate the occurrence of the other's act will not shield him from liability so long as his own negligence was one of the causes of the injury. The proportionate degrees of the negligence of the two actors is immaterial. (See many cases commented on and collected in 35 Cal.Jur. 2d p. 555, § 57.)

[10] It is elementary that where the negligence of the person sought to be charged continues and exists up to the time of injury the concurrent negligent act of another is not a superseding cause, but becomes a concurrent proximate cause. As is stated in 35 Cal.Jur.2d at p. 561, § 62, supported by innumerable cases: "The fact that neither of the negligent parties could have reasonably anticipated the concurrent negligence will not shield him from liability so long as his own negligence was a proximate cause of the injury or damage complained of. And it is irrelevant in this respect whose negligence was first in time, who was more or who less negligent, or whether one was ordinarily and the other wantonly negligent."

[11] As before stated, ordinarily, foreseeability is a question of fact—it only becomes a question of law if reasonable men could not disagree. (See cases collected 35 Cal.Jur.2d p. 579, § 73.)

Of course, one could not reasonably foresee that Mackay would lose control of his automobile and choose to run to the right of the bus rather than into the back of it or to its left. But certainly it was foreseeable that, if one parked the bus 10½ feet from the curb on a street so narrow that traffic proceeding in the same direction was barred, some one might if he lost control of his car drive to the right rather than to the left of the bus. The bus driver here involved testified that in parking the bus 10½ feet from the curb he knew that he was disobeying the ordinance and rule. It is an obvious fact that if a bus is so parked that automobiles cannot pass it on the right that passengers alighting will not be hit by automobiles which, for any reason, try to pass it on the right. It is certainly a reasonable inference that one of the purposes of the drafters of the statute and rule requiring buses to park so that approaching automobiles could not pass them on the right was to protect alighting passengers from this very peril. The lawmakers of the city and the company saw that such a peril was possible. Such a danger to them was "foreseeable," and to protect against it they passed the ordinance and adopted the rule.

In Ferroggiaro v. Bowline, supra, 153 Cal.App.2d 759, 315 P.2d 446, one of the defendants sought to be charged with liability drove his car, negligently, into a telephone pole. This broke the power lines operating traffic lights at an intersection some distance away. Two cars approached the intersection at right angles. The drivers so negligently operated their cars that an accident occurred. Their negligent conduct did not, as a matter of law, break the chain of causation. It was argued in that case that it was not legally "foreseeable" that the negligence of the driver who hit the pole would be followed by the negligence of the two drivers whose cars collided. It was held that "foreseeability" and "proximate cause" were fact questions. The court cited many cases in support of the proposition that "where the first actor negligently maintains an obstruction in the public streets and the plaintiff is required to go around the obstruction and is injured by the negligence of a second and subsequent actor, the second act of negligence is reasonably foreseeable * * *." 153 Cal.App.2d at page 764, 315 P.2d at page 449. In the instant case the plaintiff got off where the bus driver stopped, believing, and having a right to believe, that she was in a place of safety. She was not. She was in a place of peril because of the bus driver's negligence in obstructing the street. Because of the obstruction Mackay had three choices—go to the right or left of the bus, or hit the bus. He chose to go to the right. Had the bus been lawfully parked Mackay could not have done so. This was a peril the ordinance and rule were passed to protect against.

This court in the Ferroggiaro case referred to several leading cases, all holding that foreseeability is a question of fact. At pages 764, 765, 766 of 153 Cal.App.2d, at page 449 of 315 P.2d, this court said:

"In Jackson v. Utica Light & Power Co., 64 Cal.App.2d 885, 149 P.2d 748, an employee of a construction company met his death by electrocution when his power shovel came in contact with a farmer's telephone wire which was strung upon the same poles as were defendant's high voltage power lines. A distant pole had broken as a result of a rotten condition and, as a result, the power lines had fallen on the telephone wires. The court affirmed judgment for the plaintiff, holding that the power company's negligence in failing to repair the situation or to inspect the poles after notice that construction work was to begin on a new highway running under the wires was a proximate cause of the death of the decedent.

"The case of Walmsley v. Rural Telephone Ass'n of Delphos, 102 Kan. 139, 169 P. 197, is an interesting one. In that case defendant negligently permitted its telephone wire to sag across a public highway. Plaintiff, riding on a wagon with a grain bin loaded on it, was shot when the grain bin caught on the wire, causing the wagon to upset and throwing plaintiff to the ground. The bin struck the rifle which the plaintiff was carrying, discharging the gun and wounding him. The court affirmed judgment for the plaintiff, stating (102 Kan. at page 199, 169 P. at page 199): 'Damage of some sort was natural and probable, almost inevitable. That somebody would be shot through defendant's negligence would not have been anticipated. But the law does not say that if the particular injury arising from the negligence cannot be anticipated, a recovery cannot be had. That some damage, some injury, would probably arise from the existing negligence, and that it could reasonably have been expected, is all that the law requires to justify a recovery.' The same thought was expressed in Carroll v. Central Counties Gas Co., 74 Cal. App. 303, 307, 240 P. 53, 54, where it was stated: 'If the negligent act or omission is one which the company ought, in the exercise of ordinary care, to have anticipated was likely to result in injury to others, then it is liable for any injury proximately resulting therefrom, although it might not have foreseen the particular injury which did happen.' See also Lim Ben v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co., 101 Cal.App. 174, 281 P. 634. * * *

"In Gibson v. Garcia, 96 Cal.App.2d 681, 216 P.2d 119, an automobile hit a pole maintained by the street railway company and the pole broke and hit the plaintiff. Plaintiff sued the street railway company alleging that the pole was weak, that the condition was known to defendant, and that its negligence was a proximate cause of the accident. Defendant's demurrer was sustained without leave to amend. This was reversed, the court holding that proximate cause was a question of fact and not of law.

"Carroll v. Central Counties Gas Co., 74 Cal.App. 303, 240 P. 53, illustrates the inclination of the courts to hold that the question of foreseeability is generally one of fact and not of law. There the automobile in which plaintiff was riding swerved to avoid an oncoming vehicle. Plaintiff's automobile fell from a bridge and broke a gas line operated by defendant. This permitted gas to escape which became ignited and burned the plaintiff. The trial court sustained a demurrer without leave to amend. This was reversed, the court holding that it could not be said, as a matter of law, that the defendant gas company could not reasonably have foreseen the likelihood of danger from the pipe to persons lawfully using the highway. At page 308 of 74 Cal.App., at page 55 of 240 P. it was stated: '"Whether negligence can be inferred from the evidence is for the determination of the court, but whether it ought to be inferred is a question for the jury." [Citing a case.] This rule applies where the facts are undisputed, as well as where the evidence is conflicting, if conflicting inferences can reasonably be drawn therefrom.'"

All of these case are much closer on the issue of foreseeability than the instant one, yet in all of them foreseeability was held to be a question of fact.

There are other cases directly in point. In Richardson v. Ham, 44 Cal.2d 772, 285 P.2d 269, the defendant left heavy road-building equipment on the mesa, unlocked. Three drunks started it, drove it around for a while, and jumped out after heading it toward a canyon. It traveled for about a mile, unattended, doing major damage. The court held this was a reasonably foreseeable risk that the owners of the bulldozer should have guarded against. In the instant case the bus driver violated a statute and rule passed for the very purpose of protecting passengers from the very danger that developed.

Another interesting case is Fennessey v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co., 20 Cal.2d 141, 124 P.2d 51, 54. There a public utility truck parked illegally between a safety zone and the adjacent curb while servicing the street lights. A jitney bus swerved onto the streetcar tracks and hit the plaintiff. It was held that the question of proximate cause was one for the jury, citing many cases, and quoting from Lacy v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 220 Cal. 97, 98, 29 P.2d 781, 782, as follows: "'The authorities in this state hold that where the original negligence continues and exists up to the time of the injury, the concurrent negligent act of a third person causing the injury will not be regarded as an independent act of negligence, but the two concurring acts of negligence will be held to be the proximate cause of the injury.'"

The judgment notwithstanding the verdict is reversed.

PETERS, P. J., and FRED B. WOOD, J., concur.

Hearing denied; SHENK, J., dissenting

159 Cal.App.2d 38

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Francis Marion OGG, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 5972.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

March 31, 1958.

Hearing Denied May 27, 1958.

Defendant was convicted of murder in the second degree and from a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Herbert V. Walker, J., the defendant appeals. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, P. J., held that the evidence sustained conviction and that failure to give an instruction on excusable homicide was not error.

Judgment affirmed.

Opinion, 320 P.2d 572, vacated.

1. Criminal Law ⇐535(2)
Homicide ⇐228(1, 2)

In a murder charge, the "corpus delicti" consists of the death of the alleged victim and existence of some criminal agency as the cause, either or both of which may be proved circumstantially or inferentially, but the corpus delicti must be proved by evidence independent of the extrajudicial declarations and statements of the defendant.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Corpus Delicti".

2. Homicide ⇐228(4)

To prove a prima facie case of corpus delicti, all that was required was to show a reasonable probability that a criminal act of another had been the direct cause of death.

3. Criminal Law ⇐412(1)

In prosecution for wife murder, where the facts establish a reasonable probability that the wife met her death by means of a criminal agency, a prima facie showing of corpus delicti was made, and defendant's extrajudicial statements were admissible.

4. Criminal Law ⇐1160

Before verdict of a jury which has been approved by the trial court can be set aside on ground of insufficiency of evidence, it must clearly appear that upon no hypothesis whatever is sufficient substantial evidence to support the conclusion reached in the court below.

5. Criminal Law ⇐1144(13), 1159(2)

The appellate court must assume in support of judgment of conviction, the existence of every fact which the jury could reasonably deduce from the evidence, and if circumstances reasonably justify the verdict, opinion of the reviewing court that such circumstances might also be reconciled with innocence of the defendant will not warrant a reversal.

6. Homicide ⇐248

Evidence sustained conviction of murder in the second degree on the ground that defendant was criminally responsible for his wife's death, though defendant claimed that the injuries to wife were caused by a fall.

7. Criminal Law ⇐1159(6)

Rule that the circumstances must be consistent with guilt and inconsistent with any hypothesis of innocence is a rule of instruction for the jury, and is not a rule for the guidance of the court on review. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 195.

8. Homicide ⇐12, 13

"Malice" may be express or implied, it is "express" when there is manifested a deliberate intention unlawfully to take away the life of a fellow creature and is "implied", when no considerable provocation appears, or when the circumstances attending the killing show an abandoned and malignant heart. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 188.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Express Malice", "Implied Malice" and "Malice".

9. Homicide ⇐13, 35

Implied malice necessary to support a conviction of second degree murder requires no specific intent to kill, and a distinguishing characteristic between murder and manslaughter is malice rather than the presence or absence of an intent to kill. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 188.

10. Homicide ⇐254

Evidence authorizing an inference that defendant inflicted a severe beating upon his wife, during which she received nine-inch skull fracture and that death resulted therefrom, established murder in the second degree and not manslaughter. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 188.

11. Homicide ⇐174(1)

In murder prosecution, in determining whether acts of defendant disclosed an abandoned and malignant heart, thereby establishing implied malice, the jury could consider the defendant's conduct following the fatal injury, defendant's failure to seek assistance of his friends or to obtain medical aid even though he knew his wife was seriously injured. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 188.

12. Criminal Law ⇐748

It is exclusively the province of a jury to determine the degree of crime when there is any evidence in the case which will support the determination.

13. Homicide ⇐297

In murder prosecution, evidence did not warrant the giving of an instruction on excusable homicide. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 195.

14. Criminal Law ⇐824(4)

Where defendant did not request an instruction on excusable homicide, and the court fully and fairly instructed on first and second degree murder and manslaughter as well as on presumption of innocence, reasonable doubt, burden of proof and principle for testing the sufficiency of circumstantial evidence, it was not error for the court not to give such an instruction sua sponte. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 195.

15. Criminal Law ⇐1159(2)

An appellate court cannot reweigh the evidence and draw inferences contrary to those drawn by the jury.

Morris Lavine, Wm. J. Clark, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Dan Kaufmann, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

FOX, Presiding Justice.

Defendant was convicted of murdering his wife on Christmas day, 1956. The jury fixed the offense as murder in the second degree. The jury found the charge that defendant had suffered a prior felony conviction for forgery to be true. Defendant's motion for a new trial was denied and he was sentenced to the state prison. He has appealed from the judgment of conviction.

In seeking a reversal defendant contends (1) that the corpus delicti was not sufficiently established to warrant the introduction of his extrajudicial statements; (2) that the evidence is insufficient to support the conviction of second degree murder; and (3) that the court erred in failing to give an instruction on excusable homicide as defined in section 195 of the Penal Code. In view of defendant's first and second contentions, it is necessary to set forth the evidence in considerable detail.

Defendant's wife died as the result of a fractured skull with intracranial hemorrhage and cerebral lacerations. She was found dead in her home in West Covina by her daughter on December 27, 1956, at approximately 9:00 p. m. Her body way lying on a bed in a spare bedroom, covered by a comforter. There was blood on the davenport in the living room, on a pillow, and on a towel on the davenport. Her Lincoln car was missing from the garage; the mechanism of a lady's wrist watch was on a coffee table, and on her left arm was the band and empty case. A note was found in the handwriting of defendant on the kitchen drainboard; it was written on the back of Christmas wrapping paper and read: "I can't wake Betty up and I'm frightened. I swear I didn't hit her or hurt her. Francis."

The deceased was 46 years old, 5 feet 4 inches in height, and weighed 101 pounds. An autopsy was performed on the body by Dr. Newbarr of the coroner's office. He found multiple superficial abrasions on the left forehead, above and lateral to the right eye and on the left side of the face. There was a reddish purple discoloration with swelling of the soft tissues around the right eye, and a very small abrasion over the bridge of the nose. Also, there were abrasions in the skin over both elbows, the right forearm, and on the anterior surfaces of both legs. The entire right side of the underscalp was discolored, as well as the left frontal area. There was hemorrhage in the right temporal muscle, and the left temporal muscle revealed damage. Two subdural hematoma were found, one extending over the left side of the head and measuring one inch in its thickest portion, the other on the right side being thin and localized. There was widespread damage extending throughout the left side of the brain, and small localized contusions in the right side and in the left rear portion. There was hemorrhage toward the base of the brain. There was a fracture nine inches in length commencing one and a half inches above the right ear; it descended into the base of the skull toward the front of the head, crossing the midline into the left side.

Dr. Newbarr found the discoloration to the right eye difficult to evaluate. It was his opinion that this condition could have been the result of the application of some external force, or the result of the fracture because of its nearness to the right anterior fossa at the base of the skull. The fracture could have been the result of a blow to the head with a hard, blunt object, or the result of the head projected against a hard object. In the doctor's opinion there was no connection between the external injuries on the left side of the head and those on the right. Also, it was his opinion that the fracture was caused by one injury and that there was no connection between the fracture and the injuries to the left side of the forehead. If the fracture was caused by a fall it must have been a dead weight fall, full length on a hard surface. The doctor did not feel that the fracture could have resulted if the deceased had merely collapsed, folded up and fallen. Considerable force was necessary to cause the fracture.

Deceased's daughter came to her home on Christmas day. At that time, with the exception of an abrasion below her right knee, the deceased had no other marks on her body. The deceased complained that defendant had not come home until 12:00 o'clock on the night before, and that when he came home on Christmas eve he had been drinking and had hit her and knocked her down. She told her daughter that she had sustained the abrasion that night. The daughter further testified that they all visited friends of her mother and defendant; that she stayed there until 1:00 o'clock in the afternoon and then left, taking her younger brother with her. This was the last time she saw her mother alive.

Some time between 4:00 and 4:45 on Christmas day defendant and decedent drove to the home of Clyde Faust in West Covina. Defendant went in but decedent drove off. In the meantime Faust, defendant and one Orville Cook had some drinks in the breakfast room. Defendant told them that he and his wife had been at Bill Bird's for several hours and had had a good time. A few minutes later the deceased walked in. She appeared to have been drinking quite a little. She called defendant a vulgar name and berated him. Cook persuaded her to sit down, and mixed a drink for her. Defendant's attempt to placate her resulted in her quieting down for a few minutes; however, she again began to berate him; among other things she said: "I'm going to tell your probation officer on you. You've been writing some of my checks again." At this point, Cook left to replenish the liquor supply; upon his return he mixed another round of drinks; before they were consumed the deceased threw a glass ash tray at defendant, which broke when he dodged it. Faust thereupon told defendant and his wife that they couldn't fight in his home. Defendant complained to his wife that she was ruining him with his friends, and suggested that she go home. She countered, "Why don't you go home with me?" He replied, "I am going to stay here with my friends." She then said, "Well, I wasn't asked to go home." Thereupon Faust asked her to leave. Cook testified that at this point defendant picked the decedent up in his arms and carried her out. Faust's version of this incident was that defendant put his hands on decedent's shoulders, turned her around and started her toward the living room door, where they disappeared from his view.

The living room adjoins the kitchen; it was 30 feet from the kitchen to the front door; the living room was carpeted, except the entry hall, which contained a cement floor referred to as a slump stone. After defendant and his wife left, Faust and Cook heard a scuffing noise, a dragging of feet, like rubbing one's feet on a rug. Then they heard the front door close. Cook went to latch the front door at Faust's request and discovered fresh blood spots on the slump stone of the entrance hall. Two of these spots were about the size of a baseball; there were one or two other smaller spots; all of these were within two or three feet of the door.

Defendant returned to the Faust home approximately an hour later, around 6:45 p. m. He came into the kitchen where Cook was and said, "I'm afraid I killed her this time, Cookie." Cook said, "Francis, you're kidding." Defendant replied, "Well, if she wakes up—if she comes up with a couple of black eyes tomorrow, just remember she fell and hurt herself." Faust testified that he showed defendant the blood in the entry hall, and defendant said, "I didn't hit her, Mama took an awful fall."

Defendant and Cook then left in the latter's car and drove to defendant's home, the defendant stating he wanted to see "if Mommie got to bed all right." Defendant invited Cook to see a new sport jacket which the deceased gave him for Christmas. They went into the bedroom and Cook observed the deceased lying in the bed on her side with a comforter covering her to her neck. She appeared to have dried blood on her right nostril, but he did not observe any other mark. She looked natural but there was no movement; he was some 10 or 12 feet from her. After the exhibition of the sport coat, defendant patted the deceased on the cheek, saying, "I love you, baby," and the men left. They had not been there more than five minutes. They proceeded to a friend's house for a drink and then to a bowling alley. While enroute defendant said to Cook: "I'm afraid I hurt her this time," and Cook replied, "Francis, you better quit that * *." At the bowling alley Cook noticed blood on the front of defendant's trousers. Defendant told him "that came from Mama's nose." Defendant and Cook returned to the Faust home a little after 10:00 o'clock. At that time Faust gave defendant his wife's shoes which had fallen off her feet. Cook and defendant left there between 10:30 and 11:00. Defendant's home was only a few blocks from the Faust home.

At 7:30 a. m. on December 26th defendant cashed a check for $50 at a West Covina gas station. The check was payable to cash and purported to be signed by Edna C. Rosedale, Rosedale being the deceased's previous married name. The check, however, was in defendant's handwriting. The defendant was driving a Lincoln automobile. He told the attendant that his mother or mother-in-law was either sick or had passed away.

Harold J. Tucker testified that he was at the home of a neighbor of defendant and decedent by the name of Hamm in the early part of November, 1956, about 8:00 o'clock in the evening, when decedent ran through the house saying "he's after me." Later he heard a "hitting" sound in the back yard, looked out the window, and saw the deceased on the ground and the defendant holding her arm. That about an hour later the deceased knocked on the front door, and when Tucker let her in she ran to the bathroom and locked herself in. In a few minutes the defendant appeared and told Tucker to let his wife come out. When he let defendant in, defendant threatened him and told his wife to come out, but she refused. She did not leave there until defendant had gone and the absent neighbor who lived in the house had returned. On the second occasion when she entered the house she had a scratch and a couple of bruises on her face.

Defendant was arrested in Las Vegas on December 29, 1956. He gave a recorded statement to a representative of the Los Angeles County Sheriff in which he stated that he was 37 years old and had been married to the deceased for approximately eight months; that they lived in West Covina; that one of decedent's three children by a former marriage, a boy seven years of age, was living with them. Defendant told of the visit on Christmas morning of the deceased's daughter, and their later visit that morning to the Bird home, where they had stayed until around 5:00 o'clock. The daughter had previously left with the boy. Enroute to their home, defendant and his wife stopped at the Faust home, which defendant entered while his wife drove away. However, she returned to the Faust home in a few minutes. She kept arguing and finally threw an ash tray at defendant, which angered Faust. Because of this, defendant suggested that they had better go home. He said the living room was dark, and when they went out the deceased, who was staggering drunk, tripped on the carpet; he thought she hit the wall; then he heard her hit the concrete patio. He said she was unconscious after the fall and was bleeding from the nose. He got her home and put her to bed and then went back to the Faust home to get Cook because he thought she was hurt "real bad." He brought Cook back to his house and asked him to look at her. Cook went into the bedroom and commented to defendant, "She'll be all right." According to defendant, she was then sleeping. He further stated: "I put a towel under her head because her nose was bleeding; I couldn't seem to stop it, so Cookie and I went bowling." After bowling, defendant stated that he came home about 2:00 a. m. and found she was bleeding pretty badly. He then stated that he gave her a cold shower thinking this would wake her up, but it did not; so after that he put her back in bed. He claimed that she was breathing all right and even snoring. Defendant went to bed on the Chesterfield and woke up about 4:00 a. m. After he awoke he got up and glanced in the bedroom at her but did not hear anything. He thought she had a concussion; he was "scared"; at first he said he did not know whether she was dead but later he admitted that he had a pretty good idea that she was. He also admitted leaving the note, previously referred to, on the kitchen sink.

He left the house around 6:30 or 7:00 o'clock that morning. He not only took the deceased's Lincoln car but also her diamond ring from her jewel case. He admitted in this statement writing a check for $50 and signing her name to it. He cashed it at the service station, where he told the attendant that he was going to see his mother, and then drove to Las Vegas where he registered under the name of Michael Doland; he did this because he did not want anyone to know where he was for awhile. He gambled, playing poker and roulette. He got $200 additional money by pledging his wife's diamond ring. He also stated he forged another check in her name. Defendant admitted in this statement that he had beaten his wife twice before, and that on one occasion she went to inquire about a divorce, moved out of the house, and lived with her sister for a week over the Thanksgiving period, but that they became reconciled after that. He further admitted that on one other occasion he had slapped her, but denied that he had ever hit her with his fist.

As a witness in his own behalf, defendant denied using any force on the deceased on the occasion in question. He testified, among other things, that she fell in the entrance hall; that he heard her hit the floor, and when he came up to her she was lying diagonally across the entrance. He knew she was unconscious when he went to lift her; when about a foot from the floor she slipped out of his hands and fell on her face. Defendant admitted that he saw blood after his wife slipped out of his hands; that he felt she was seriously hurt, and that he did not tell either Faust or Cook about it, or ask either of them to 'phone the police or call an ambulance. He admitted that he wrote a check for $50 from his wife's checkbook; that he took her ring from a jewel box on the dresser; that just before he left the house he wrote the note found on the kitchen drainboard; that he then took off for Las Vegas in his wife's Lincoln car, arriving there around 2:00 o'clock in the afternoon; that he registered under a false name; that he lost all his money gambling, and pawned his wife's ring the following day.

He further testified that they had been married about eight months, during which time his wife had complained against him to the police about three times; that she left their home for a week in November and went to live at her sister's house. At that time he promised that he would never hit her again if she came back. He admitted the incident of his wife's locking herself in the bathroom at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Hamm. He also admitted that he had suffered a prior felony conviction.

Defendant testified that he had been a boxer and had engaged in some 60 bouts, fighting at various weights from 160 to 172 pounds.

Was the Corpus Delicti Sufficiently Established to Warrant the Introduction of Extrajudicial Statements of Defendant?

[1, 2] "In a murder charge the corpus delicti consists of two elements: the death of the alleged victim and the existence of some criminal agency as the cause, either or both of which may be proved circumstantially or inferentially. [Citation.] * * * However, the corpus delicti must be proved by evidence independent of the extrajudicial declarations and statements of the defendant * * *. But as prerequisite to the reception of such statements in evidence, the corpus delicti need not be established by proof as clear and convincing as is necessary to establish the fact of guilt; rather it is sufficient that only a prima facie showing be made that the alleged victim met death by a criminal agency. [Citations.]" People v. Amaya, 40 Cal.2d 70, 75–76, 251 P.2d 324, 327. "To prove a prima facie case of corpus delicti, all that was required was to show a reasonable probability that a criminal act of another had been the direct cause of the death * * *." People v. Ives, 17 Cal.2d 459, 464, 110 P.2d 408, 411; People v. King, 132 Cal.App.2d 642, 647, 282 P.2d 923; People v. Black, 103 Cal.App.2d 69, 75, 229 P.2d 61.

[3] The nature, location and extent of the injury that caused death; the fact that considerable force was necessary to cause such an injury and that it would not have been caused by an ordinary fall; the presence of abrasions, bruises and other injuries on various parts of decedent's body which were disconnected with the injury causing death; the failure of defendant to inform his friends or seek aid at the time of his wife's asserted fall at the Faust home, even though he knew she was seriously injured and unconscious, and the defendant's flight: these facts establish a reasonable probability that decedent met her death by means of a criminal agency. Thus, a prima facie showing of the corpus delicti was made, and defendant's extrajudicial statements were properly received in evidence.[1]

The Sufficiency of the Evidence.

[4, 5] Before the verdict of a jury which has been approved by the trial court can be set aside on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence it must be made clearly to appear that upon no hypothesis whatever is there sufficient substantial evidence to support the conclusion reached in the court below. We must assume in support of the judgment the existence of every fact which the jury could reasonably deduce from the evidence. If the circumstances reasonably justify the verdict, the opinion of the reviewing court that those circumstances might also be reconciled with the innocence of the defendant will not warrant a reversal. People v. Newland, 15 Cal.2d 678, 681, 104 P.2d 778. People v. Frankfort, 114 Cal.App.2d 680, 689, 251 P.2d 401.

[6] Applying these principles, it is clear that there is ample evidence to sustain the verdict and judgment. In addition to the evidence mentioned above touching upon the question of the corpus delicti, the jury had before it the fact of defendant's use of a false name following his flight to Las Vegas, his incriminating statements to Cook and the representative of the sheriff's office in Las Vegas, the decedent's threat to turn him over to his probation officer for writing checks on her account, and his past conduct in striking her. Other circumstances need not be enumerated for these adequately support the verdict that defendant was criminally responsible for his wife's death.

People v. Burns, 109 Cal.App.2d 524, 241 P.2d 308, 242 P.2d 9, is, in many of its aspects, similar to the case at bar. There, as here, the defendant claimed the death of his female companion was the result of falls. There was no eye-witness. Her physical condition, however, indicated that she had received a beating. Although the conviction was reversed on other grounds, the court determined that there was sufficient evidence to sustain a verdict of second degree murder. In rejecting defendant's explanation as to the cause of death, the court stated (109 Cal.App.2d at page 534, 241 P.2d at page 314): "Assuming that the evidence is also susceptible of the inference that her death might have been due to falls, that does not justify us in reversing the verdict. '* * * the mere fact that the evidence is susceptible of two inferences, one of innocence and one of guilt would not warrant a reversal of conviction. * * The appellate court is bound by the findings of the jury where it rejects the hypothesis of innocence if there is substantial evidence to support the finding of guilt as the more reasonable of the two hypotheses. Under this rule, the conviction of the defendant herein is amply supported by the evidence.' People v. Crawford, 41 Cal.App. 2d 198, 205, 106 P.2d 219, 223."

1. No objection was made at the trial to the admission in evidence of the tape recording of defendant's statements to the officer in Las Vegas.

[7] In this connection defendant argues in effect that the evidence in this case is as consistent with the theory that the deceased's injuries were caused by a fall as it is with the theory that she was the victim of foul play. But the rule that the circumstances must be consistent with guilt and inconsistent with any hypothesis of innocence is a rule of instruction for the jury,[2] and is not the rule for the guidance of the court on review. People v. Cullen, 37 Cal.2d 614, 625, 234 P.2d 1; People v. Newland, supra, 15 Cal.2d at page 682, 104 P.2d at page 780; People v. Perkins, 8 Cal.2d 502, 511, 66 P.2d 631.

Defendant contends that the People's entire case falls because the evidence fails to show any injury to his hand. He asserts: "It would have been impossible to have used any force without some injury or some effect to his hand." In this connection it must be borne in mind that defendant had been a professional prize fighter. In light of this background of training and experience and his wife's frail build, it is a reasonable inference that he could hit her in the head with his closed fist and cause the fatal injury without receiving any injury to his hand. Moreover, the fatal injury may well have been the result of the defendant's deliberate act in causing her to fall and strike her head against a hard surface, which would not necessarily have caused any injury to his hand.

Defendant emphasizes the testimony indicating he displayed tenderness toward his wife when Cook accompanied him to his home prior to their going bowling. In view of defendant's knowledge that his wife was unconscious and severely injured, his failure to seek assistance or medical aid for her, and his leaving her alone in that condition, the jury may well have been convinced that he was "putting on an act."

The Degree of the Crime.

Defendant argues that the verdict of second degree murder cannot be sustained because the evidence fails to establish malice, which is an essential element of that crime; he asserts that the most culpable offense of which he can be convicted is manslaughter. We cannot agree with this conclusion.

[8] Malice may be express or implied. "It is express when there is manifested a deliberate intention unlawfully to take away the life of a fellow creature. It is implied, when no considerable provocation appears, or when the circumstances attending the killing show an abandoned and malignant heart." Pen.Code, sec. 188.

[9] There is no substantial basis in the evidence for a finding of express malice. Defendant's conviction of second degree murder must therefore rest upon a finding of implied malice. "The implied malice as described in section 188 of the Penal Code requires no specific intent to kill, and the distinguishing characteristic between murder and manslaughter is malice rather than the presence or absence of an intent to kill." People v. Mears, 142 Cal. App.2d 198, 204, 298 P.2d 40, 43. "If the jury found that there was no considerable provocation and that the defendant acted with 'an abandoned and malignant heart' the 'malice' would be 'implied' and the murder would be of the second degree." People v. Bender, 27 Cal.2d 164, 178, 163 P.2d 8, 16.

It is clear from the evidence that there was no showing of "considerable provocation" sufficient to reduce the offense to voluntary manslaughter. In fact, defendant insists that he did not voluntarily kill his wife.

2. The jury was so instructed.

[10] We must thus examine the evidence attending the killing to ascertain whether the jury was justified in impliedly finding that defendant acted with an "abandoned and malignant heart." The medical evidence discloses that the deceased had sustained numerous injuries on various parts of her body, many of which were unrelated to the fatal skull fracture. From this the jury reasonably could draw the inference that defendant inflicted a severe beating upon his wife, during the course of which she received a nine inch skull fracture. The conclusion that defendant had beaten his wife severely finds support in his own admission that he thought he "killed her this time." That death resulting under such circumstances constitutes murder in the second degree is held in People v. Burns, supra, 109 Cal.App.2d page 534, 241 P.2d page 314. See, also, People v. Tubby, 34 Cal.2d 72, 207 P.2d 51; People v. Cayer, 102 Cal.App.2d 643, 228 P.2d 70.

[11] In determining whether defendant's acts disclosed an abandoned and malignant heart, thus establishing implied malice, the jury was entitled also to consider defendant's conduct following the fatal injury. People v. Johnson, 203 Cal. 153, 164, 263 P. 524; People v. Riggins, 159 Cal. 113, 120, 112 P. 862; People v. Shears, 133 Cal. 154, 158, 65 P. 295; People v. Garnett, 9 Cal.App. 194, 202, 98 P. 247. Defendant's failure to seek the assistance of his friends or to obtain medical aid even though he knew that his wife was seriously injured indicates a heartless attitude and callous indifference toward her. Defendant went bowling that evening, leaving his wife alone; he simply let her die. His flight to Las Vegas the next morning when he was unsure of his wife's condition further reflects his depravity.

The jury could reasonably conclude from all these circumstances that defendant acted with an "abandoned and malignant heart." This establishes implied malice and sustains the verdict of second degree murder. See People v. Burns, supra; People v. Martina, 140 Cal.App.2d 17, 294 P.2d 1015.

[12] Defendant's argument that the evidence does not support the degree of the crime overlooks the well established principle that "it is exclusively the province of a jury to determine the degree of crime when there is any evidence in the case which will support the determination." People v. Isby, 30 Cal.2d 879, 891, 186 P.2d 405, 412; People v. Cook, 15 Cal.2d 507, 515, 102 P.2d 752; People v. Mahatch, 148 Cal. 200, 203, 82 P. 779.

Defendant relies principally upon People v. Munn, 65 Cal. 211, 3 P. 650, in which a conviction of second degree murder for a death resulting from a fist fight was reversed. But the court in the Munn case said (65 Cal. at page 213, 3 P. at page 651): "If the means employed be not dangerous to life, or, in other words, if the blows causing death are inflicted with the fist, and there are no aggravating circumstances, the law will not raise the implication of malice aforethought, which must exist to make the crime murder. The distinguishing characteristic respecting the two crimes of murder and manslaughter is malice. Without the presence of this element of malice the crime does not reach the higher degree of murder, but amounts simply to manslaughter." (Italics added.) We have already pointed out the aggravating circumstances in the instant case which showed an abandoned and malignant heart on the part of defendant, thus giving rise to the implication of malice.

Defendant also relies upon People v. McManis, 122 Cal.App.2d 891, 266 P.2d 134; People v. Lee, 44 Cal.App.2d 84, 111 P.2d 908; People v. Miller, 114 Cal.App. 293, 299 P. 742; People v. Chutuk, 18 Cal.App. 768, 124 P. 566, and People v. Stokes, 11 Cal.App. 759, 106 P. 251. None of these cases is helpful. In each of them a conviction for manslaughter was affirmed, and the question of malice was not involved. The McManis decision points out (as did the Munn case) that death resulting from an assault and battery without aggravating circumstances is manslaughter. The presence of such aggravating circumstances, if sufficient to raise the implication of malice, makes the killing murder. In the Miller case the court distinguishes manslaughter from murder, stating that the presence of malice makes the crime murder. The other cases merely review the evidence and instructions, and find support for the manslaughter convictions.

The Failure to Give an Instruction on Excusable Homicide.

[13] Defendant contends that the trial court erred in failing to give an instruction defining excusable homicide as set forth in Penal Code section 195.[3] There are two answers to this contention. The first is that the evidence did not warrant the giving of an instruction on that subject. Defendant did not rely on that theory. His claim throughout was that decedent's death was due to an accidental fall; that he was in nowise responsible for the fatal injury. The evidence was insufficient to support a verdict on the theory of excusable homicide.

[14] The second answer is that defendant did not request such an instruction. The court fully and fairly instructed the jury on first and second degree murder and manslaughter as well as on the presumption of innocence, reasonable doubt, burden of proof and the principle for testing the sufficiency of circumstantial evidence. If defendant desired an instruction on excusable homicide he should have requested it. In the premises it was not error for the court not to give such an instruction sua sponte. People v. Klor, 32 Cal.2d 658, 662, 197 P.2d 705; People v. Andary, 120 Cal.App.2d 675, 683, 261 P.2d 791; People v. Williams, 153 Cal.App.2d 5, 314 P.2d 161.

[15] The principal issues in this case are factual. The jury and the court (in denying defendant's motion for a new trial) have determined the facts and the inferences to be drawn therefrom adversely to him. The basic difficulty with defendant's arguments is that he would have this court reweigh the evidence and draw inferences contrary to those drawn by the jury. Under firmly established principles we are not at liberty to do this. People v. Gould, 111 Cal.App.2d 1, 8, 243 P.2d 809.

The judgment is affirmed.

ASHBURN and HERNDON, JJ., concur.

3. Penal Code section 195 reads as follows:

"Homicide is excusable in the following cases:

"1. When committed by accident and misfortune, in lawfully correcting a child or servant, or in doing any other lawful act by lawful means, with usual and ordinary caution, and without any unlawful intent.

"2. When committed by accident and misfortune, in the heat of passion, upon any sudden and sufficient provocation, or upon a sudden combat, when no undue advantage is taken, nor any dangerous weapon used, and when the killing is not done in cruel or unusual manner."

159 Cal.App.2d 13

Lyle G. WILLIAMS, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

James B. RICE, John P. Rice, Biddy James McGeorge, formerly known as Mrs. John James and Biddy James, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 9282.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

March 28, 1958.

Action by purchaser of property, who assigned all of his rights, title and interest in property to one of the defendants with consent of vendor, for declaration of rights in property for possession of property and for reformation of contract. From adverse judgment of the Superior Court, Plumas County, Ben V. Curler, J., the plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Schottky, J., held that evidence sustained finding that plaintiff had no more interest in the property.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Vendor and Purchaser ⇐214(1)

In action by purchaser of property, who assigned all of his rights, title and interest in property to one of defendants with consent of vendor, for declaration of rights in property, for possession of property and for reformation of contract, evidence sustained finding that plaintiff had no more interest in the property.

2. Equity ⇐6

Equity can grant relief for a unilateral mistake.

3. Contracts ⇐93(1), 265

Equitable relief by way of rescission may be given if mistake relates to a material feature of the contract, if it is of such grave consequence that enforcement of contract as made will be unconscionable, if it occurred notwithstanding exercise of ordinary diligence by party making mistake, and if other party can be put in statu quo.

4. Vendor and Purchaser ⇐214(1)

Where purchaser of property paid $2,235 therefor and lived on property for five years during which time he reduced principal amount under original contract less than $800 and was delinquent in his payments at time of assignment, he was not, upon assignment of all his interest in property, including improvements, entitled to recover any money he had expended in improving property while he occupied it.

5. Trial ⇐382

In action tried to the court, it is for court to resolve conflicts in the evidence.

Whitwell & Carpenter, Portola, for appellant.

Wells & Baldwin, Sacramento, for respondents.

SCHOTTKY, Justice.

Lyle G. Williams, plaintiff above named, has appealed from a judgment declaring that he has no interest in certain real property.

[1] In 1946 J. C. Janes and Juanita C. Janes entered into a contract to sell certain real property to Lyle G. Williams and his wife, Gladys I. Williams, for the sum of $2,235. The agreement provided that the Williamses would pay the amount due on the property, after a small down payment, at the rate of $20 per month. Later another parcel of land was added to the agreement and the payments were increased to $25 per month. The contract provided that no assignment would be valid without the written consent of the sellers. J. C. Janes died and Juanita Janes succeeded to his interest. Lyle Williams has succeeded to the interest of his wife.

In January, 1951, Williams entered into a contract of sale of the property for the sum of $4,000 with one Biddy James (now Biddy James McGeorge) and her husband. Shortly thereafter, on April 23, 1951, Mr. and Mrs. James signed an instrument purporting to assign all their interest in the Williams-James contract to James B. Rice. Williams consented to this assignment but the trial court found that James B. Rice did not.

On May 3, 1951, Williams executed an assignment stating that he assigned and transferred to James B. Rice "that certain Agreement for the Sale of Real Property, and all my right, title, and interest in said real property, which said contract of sale is between the undersigned and Gladys Williams, buyers, and J. C. Janes and Juanita C. Janes, sellers, dated January 15, 1946." This assignment was assented to by Juanita C. Janes, and James B. Rice executed an acceptance of it in which he stated: "I, * * * do hereby accept said Assignment and do further agree to abide by all of the agreements and obligations of the original contract, and do hereby further agree to pay to said Juanita C. Janes the balance of $1,438.27, due under said Agreement, upon the terms and conditions in said original Agreement contained."

Williams did not receive any money or property for this assignment. He had occupied the property for about five years during which time he had made substantial improvements on a house which was on the property. There was testimony that he had been delinquent in his payments at various times and was delinquent at the time of the assignment to James B. Rice. James B. Rice subsequently paid Mrs. Janes the balance due on the Williams-Janes contract and received a deed to the property. Mr. Rice later deeded the property to his son, John Rice.

Williams brought this suit to have the court declare his rights in the property in respect to the defendants James Rice, John Rice, and Biddy James, now known as Biddy James McGeorge. Williams asked that his title to the property be quieted. In a second cause of action he alleged that Rice was in default in the Williams-James contract of which Rice was allegedly the assignee; that the contract had been declared forfeited; that James Rice denied liability; and that the Rices had possession. Williams asked the court to restore him to possession. In a third cause of action Williams sought reformation of the Williams-James contract.

The trial court found that James Rice did not consent to the assignment from Biddy James and therefore was not liable to Williams on the instrument; that all of Williams' rights had been assigned to Rice and, therefore, Williams had no interest in the property. Williams was denied any relief. (Apparently a default was entered against Biddy James and she is not involved in this appeal.)

Williams contends that he assigned his interest in the Janes contract to James Rice under the belief that the James-Rice assignment was a valid instrument and that Rice was liable under it and since he acted under a mistake of fact he should have been granted equitable relief. He also contends that in any event the court should have compensated him for the improvements he made on the property.

[2, 3] While it is true that equity can grant relief for a unilateral mistake, we do not believe that the record in the instant case compels a conclusion that appellant is entitled to such relief. "Equitable relief by way of rescission may be given if the mistake relates to a material feature of the contract, if it is of such grave consequence that enforcement of the contract as made will be unconscionable, if it occurred notwithstanding the exercise of ordinary diligence by the party making the mistake, and if the other party can be put in statu quo." (3 Pomeroy, Equity Jurisprudence, 5th Ed., p. 388.)

While appellant may have believed that James Rice was liable under the James-Rice assignment, Rice could only be liable under that assignment if he accepted it and agreed to be bound by it and the court found upon sufficient evidence that Rice did not consent to it or agree to be bound by it. Thereafter, appellant assigned to James Rice all of appellant's interest in the property and in the original contract between himself and J. C. Janes and Juanita C. Janes, and in accepting said assignment James Rice agreed only to abide by the terms of the original contract but did not agree to complete any payments under the contract between appellant Williams and Mr. and Mrs. James.

If appellant assigned his interest in the Janes contract and in the real property in controversy to Rice under the belief that Rice would complete the payments under the Williams-James contract, it is somewhat strange that nothing to this effect was included either in the assignment from appellant to James Rice or in the acceptance of the assignment by Rice, although both documents were drawn by attorney Bertram D. Janes who testified that he was not aware of any such understanding. We are convinced that there is ample evidence in the record to support the conclusion of the trial court, stated in its memorandum opinion as follows:

"* * * When the original contract with Mrs. Juanita C. Janes was by the plaintiff assigned to James B. Rice and the consent to the same was agreed to by Mrs. Janes and James B. Rice accepted the assignment and agreed to be bound by the agreement—the plaintiff in this suit had no more interest in the property. * * * In view of the Court's belief that James B. Rice did not accept or agree to be bound by the assignment from Biddy James McGeorge the Court can not grant the declaratory relief prayed for by plaintiff, nor can it grant plaintiff any other relief by reason of his action."

[4] We are unable to agree with appellant that in any event the court should have compensated him for the improvements he made upon the property. There was no showing of any unfair dealing on the part of James Rice. While appellant had made substantial improvements on the property it is also true that he had occupied it for five years during which time he had reduced the principal amount under the original Janes contract less than $800 and was delinquent in his payments at the time of his assignment to James Rice. When he made the assignment to James Rice appellant conveyed all of his interest in the property, including the improvements, and was not entitled to recover any money he had expended in improving the property while he occupied it.

[5] Appellant's arguments are predicated principally upon his construction of the evidence, and appellant disregards the evidence which supports the findings of the trial court. It is for the trial court to resolve the conflicts in the evidence, and we are satisfied that the evidence and the law fully support the judgment.

The judgment is affirmed.

VAN DYKE, P. J., and PEEK, J., concur.

159 Cal.App.2d 63

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Jesus Nieto CARRASCO and Lorenzo Barrios, Defendants.

Jesus Nieto Carrasco, Appellant.

Cr. 6088.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

March 31, 1958.

Defendant was convicted of unlawful possession of marijuana. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, John G. Barnes, J., rendered judgment, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that evidence sustained conviction and that fact that two other men were also in defendant's house when he was arrested would not necessarily tend to exculpate him in absence of evidence that other men were addicts or had previously been convicted of a narcotics offense.

Affirmed.

1. Poisons ⇐4

In prosecution for unlawful possession of narcotics, the people must prove that forbidden substance was under dominion and control of accused, that accused was aware of its presence, and that he knew the substance was a narcotic. West's Ann. Health & Safety Code, § 11500.

2. Poisons ⇐9

Evidence sustained conviction for unlawful possession of marijuana. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11500.

3. Poisons ⇐4

Fact that two other men were also in defendant's house when defendant was arrested for unlawful possession of marijuana would not necessarily tend to exculpate defendant, in absence of evidence that other men were addicts or had previously been convicted of a narcotics offense. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11500.

Harold J. Ackerman, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Jack E. Goertzen, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

Jesus Nieto Carrasco and Lorenzo Barrios were accused by information of the unlawful possession of marijuana, in violation of Health and Safety Code section 11500. In a court trial, Barrios was found not guilty and Carrasco was found guilty as charged in the information. Defendant made a motion for new trial, which was denied. Probation was likewise denied, and Carrasco was sentenced to state prison. He appeals from the judgment and the order denying him a new trial. The sole contention is that the evidence was insufficient to prove the offense of possession.

Florentino Limon, a Los Angeles police officer assigned to the "gang" detail of the Homicide Division, was the only witness for the People. The following is the substance of his testimony. On the afternoon of June 5, 1957, Officer Limon and a fellow officer went to defendant's home at 2819 Alcazar Street in Los Angeles. The officers knocked on the door and defendant answered. Officer Limon said "We are looking for Wero" (a Mexican nickname corresponding to "Whitey") and defendant said "I am Whitey." Limon asked "Can we talk to you?" and defendant said "Yes, come on in." Upon entering the house, the officers identified themselves and told defendant that he was under arrest for selling narcotics to juveniles. When asked by the officers if he had any narcotics in the house, defendant said "No." Upon being asked "Would you mind if we look?" defendant said "No, go ahead."

The officers went into the kitchen where they found a white cannister and some large brown paper bags. One of the bags was open; inside it were a number of Prince Albert tobacco cans. The officers examined the cans and found that some were empty while others contained a green leafy substance that resembled marijuana. There was also a small amount of the same substance on the bottom of the cannister. When asked if he knew what was in the containers, defendant said "No." Officer Limon said that he thought the substance was a narcotic and asked defendant if he had any more around the house. Defendant again denied having any narcotics and said "Go ahead, you won't find anything."

The officers then went into the living room where they found Carrasco's co-defendant Barrios together with another man named Rios. The officers searched the room and discovered the remains of a marijuana cigarette in an ashtray stand and some brown paper wrapping from another marijuana cigarette in the arm of a couch.

Upon being questioned by the officers, Barrios said that he was staying with Carrasco and had only been in Los Angeles for a week. He disclaimed any knowledge of the marijuana and denied being a user of narcotics. In response to the officers' questions, Carrasco said that he had lived in the house for several years and that he did not use narcotics. He told the officers that an old man who dealt in tobacco had left the containers the previous night and had promised to return for them. Officer Limon asked: "Whitey, if somebody leaves something at your house, don't you try to find out what it is?" and defendant replied: "He told me they were tobacco and I didn't think he was lying."

Defendant, testifying in his own behalf, denied that the containers were his. He stated that an old man named Blackie brought them to the house to be kept overnight. He met Blackie several months previously either in a bar or on the street. He did not know Blackie's address or whether Blackie had a place of business. He knew nothing about the cigarette which the officers found in the arm of the couch. He had some visitors the night before the arrest and did not know how the other cigarette came to be in the ashtray; he did not see anyone smoke the cigarette.

[1] In a prosecution for unlawful possession of narcotics, the People must prove that the forbidden substance was under the dominion and control of the accused, that the accused was aware of its presence, and that he knew the substance was a narcotic. People v. Rodriguez, 151 Cal.App.2d 598, 601, 312 P.2d 272.

[2, 3] There was sufficient evidence to prove defendant guilty of possessing marijuana. Carrasco admitted to the officers that the containers and their contents were under his control, having been left in his care by a man called Blackie. It was a reasonable inference that the cigarettes whose remains were found in the ashtray and the the arm of the living room couch were prepared from the supply of marijuana in the containers. Although defendant denied knowing of the cigarettes, it is not contended that he was absent from the house at any time subsequent to the delivery of the containers, and it was a proper inference that Carrasco smoked the cigarettes or that he permitted someone else to do so. In either case, defendant would have known that they contained marijuana. The fact that Rios and Barrios were also in the house when defendant was arrested would not necessarily tend to exculpate him, for there was no evidence that they were addicts or had previously been convicted of a narcotics offense.

The present case is unlike People v. Antista, 129 Cal.App.2d 47, 276 P.2d 177, which is relied upon by defendant. Antista was convicted of possessing marijuana. There was evidence that he shared an apartment with a Miss Rivers, who was a convicted narcotics addict; Antista allowed his friends to visit the apartment in his absence to watch television; they would enter the apartment with a key he left under a mat outside the door; Antista was away from the premises and did not return until after the arresting officers found marijuana secreted in the apartment; Miss Rivers and another man were in the apartment at the time of the search. We held in that case that the evidence was insufficient to establish that Antista was in possession of marijuana or that he knew the substance was in his apartment. In the instant case, Carrasco admitted possession of the cans and cannister, and the evidence and the reasonable inferences justified a conclusion that he knew them to contain contraband.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

PARKER WOOD and VALLÉE, JJ., concur.

159 Cal.App.2d 93

Bertha V. BROWN, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

The FIFTEENTH DISTRICT AGRICULTURAL FAIR ASSOCIATION, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 5621.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

April 1, 1958.

Hearing Denied May 27, 1958.

Patron brought action against district agricultural fair association for injuries sustained while walking in public freeway at agricultural fair. The Superior Court of Kern County, Warren Stockton, J., entered a judgment in favor of the patron and entered an order denying the motion of the association for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, and the association appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Barnard, P. J., held that in view of the fact that the Agricultural Code provides that such an association may be sued, with no limitation excluding a tort action, and with no provision requiring the filing of a claim against the association, the action could be brought against the association without filing of a claim as a preceding condition.

Judgment and order denying motion for judgment notwithstanding verdict affirmed, and appeals from other orders dismissed.

1. States ⇐191(2)

Action by patron against district agricultural fair association for injuries sustained by patron at agricultural fair was not a suit against the State within meaning of a law governing suits against the State. West's Ann.Agric.Code, § 80 et seq.

2. Agriculture ⇐4(3)

A district agricultural fair association is liable for negligence in connection with its proprietary activities, when permission to sue may be traced to any statute. West's Ann.Agric.Code, § 80 et seq.

3. Agriculture ⇐4(3)

If patron was injured at agricultural fair as a result of proprietary activities engaged in by district agricultural fair association, claim requirements of the Government Code were not applicable in suit against the district, since such requirements apply only to a suit against the State itself. West's Ann.Agric.Code, § 80 et seq.; West's Ann.Gov.Code, §§ 16041, 16044.

4. Agriculture ⇐4(3)

Mere fact that patron at agricultural fair was injured on public passageway between entertainment features of fair in fairgrounds did not require a finding that injury of patron occurred in connection with a "governmental function" so as to make district agricultural fair association liable for injuries. West's Ann. Agric.Code, § 80 et seq.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Governmental Function".

5. Agriculture ⇐4(3)

Sections of the Government Code, which deal with tort actions for injuries caused by dangerous or defective condition of public property, and which are made applicable by their own terms to cities, counties, and school districts, did not authorize suit against district agricultural fair association by patron for injuries sustained at agricultural fair. West's Ann.Gov.Code, §§ 53050, 53051.

6. Agriculture ⇐4(3)

In view of fact that Agriculture Code provides that district agricultural fair association may be sued, without making any limitation excluding a tort action, and without any provision requiring a filing of such a claim, patron could maintain action against association for injuries sustained at agricultural fair. West's Ann.Agric.Code, §§ 80 et seq., 86.

Borton, Petrini, Conron & Brown, Bakersfield, for appellant.

Conron, Heard & James, Bakersfield, for respondent.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

The defendant has appealed from a judgment based on a jury's verdict awarding the plaintiff $4,000 damages for personal injuries, and from an order denying its motion for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict. The appeal is taken upon a clerk's transcript and an agreed statement.

The accident occurred on October 1, 1954, on the grounds of the defendant while it was conducting an agricultural fair. The plaintiff was a patron at the fair, having purchased a ticket for admission. The complaint alleged, among other things, that the plaintiff was in the process of walking in a public freeway maintained by the defendant leading to the horse show arena; that the defendant so negligently maintained this passageway as to allow an open ditch to traverse a portion of said freeway; and that as a result the plaintiff tripped and fell while passing over the same. In the agreed statement the parties agreed that this accident took place on the public grounds of the defendant district during the progress of a fair; that the fair and the public grounds were under the direction, supervision and maintenance of the defendant; that the plaintiff was a business visitor at the fair; that just prior to the accident the plaintiff had purchased a coca cola drink at a private concession; that at the time of the fall she was walking upon the public grounds of the defendant and proceeding directly toward the horse show; and that the horse show grandstand and arena were located about a block and a half from the point where the plaintiff tripped by reason of the presence of a ditch. It is conceded that no notice of a claim was or has been filed with the defendant district or with the State of California.

It is first contended that the defendant district is the State of California within the meaning of the law governing suits against the state; that as such it is immune from suit if it was acting in a governmental capacity; and that if it was operating in a proprietary capacity it cannot be sued without the prior presentation of a claim. It is argued that the defendant district is in fact and reality the State of California, since its directors are appointed by the governor and its operations are largely controlled by the Department of Finance of the state as provided for in section 80 and subsequent sections of the Agricultural Code; that it is a state institution and state agency, citing People ex rel. Post v. San Joaquin Valley Agricultural Ass'n, 151 Cal. 797, 91 P. 740, and Bettencourt v. State of California, 123 Cal.App.2d 60, 266 P.2d 201, 43 A.L.R.2d 545, and as such is immune from suit insofar as its governmental activities are concerned; and that if the injury here in question arose from an activity which was proprietary in nature the prior filing of a claim was required by sections 16041 and 16044 of the Government Code.

[1] The contention that the defendant district is the State of California within the meaning of the law governing suits against the state itself cannot be sustained. While such districts are agencies of the state for certain purposes, they are not such a part of the state itself as to require that a suit against one of them be considered as a suit against the state. No cases are cited, and we have found none which would support that contention. Suits against various districts which act as agencies of the state, and in which the state itself was not made a party, have long been recognized in many decisions in this state.

[2, 3] It is now well settled that such agencies of the state are liable for negligence in connection with their proprietary activities when permission to sue may be traced to any statute. Guidi v. State of California, 41 Cal.2d 623, 262 P.2d 3; Pianka v. State of California, 46 Cal.2d 208, 293 P.2d 458. And if the plaintiff was injured as a result of proprietary activities engaged in by the defendant at the time in question the claim requirements of sections 16041 and 16044 of the Government Code would not be applicable in a suit against such a district, since those provisions apply only to a suit against the state itself.

It is next contended that if the defendant district is not "the state" it is an agency of the state, and the maintenance of its streets is a governmental function and it is therefore immune from suit since there is no enabling act permitting a suit against it. It is argued that there is no enabling act permitting a suit against an agricultural fair association because the general enabling provisions contained in sections 53050 and 53051 of the Government Code apply, by their own terms, only to cities, counties and school districts; that the undisputed evidence here is that plaintiff's injuries were the result of a depression or ditch in the "public freeway" or street on the public grounds of the defendant district during the progress of a fair; that it thus appears that her fall took place as a result of a defective condition upon a public freeway or street maintained by the defendant for all fair visitors; and that under all the authorities the maintenance of public streets is exclusively a governmental and not a proprietary function.

[4] This was not merely a public street in the usual sense of streets and roads, in connection with which counties and cities are charged with the responsibility of maintenance. While it was a public passageway maintained on the grounds of the defendant it may be assumed on the record before us that it was maintained to enable the public to go from one part of the grounds to another in connection with both proprietary and governmental activities carried on by the defendant district. Such a district may, and usually does, carry on both proprietary and governmental activities (Guidi v. State of California, supra). The fact that the place where this injury occurred was referred to in the complaint as a public freeway is not conclusive that this injury occurred in connection with a governmental activity. All of the evidence is not before us, and the agreed statement merely states that the injury took place on the fair grounds during the progress of a fair while the plaintiff was on her way from a concession where drinks were sold, with the intention of visiting the horse show at the location of the grandstand and arena. So far as shown by the record this injury may have occurred in connection with the amusement and entertainment activities of the fair, and under the authorities cited this agency would be subject to suit. In the absence of other evidence, it may be assumed in support of the judgment that this "public freeway" was merely a passageway between the entertainment features of the fair.

[5, 6] Sections 53050 and 53051 of the Government Code do not authorize a suit against a district agricultural fair association since by their own terms they are made applicable only to cities, counties and school districts, and for the same reason the requirement for filing a verified claim with the legislative body of the agency within 90 days, contained in section 53052, is not here applicable. However, section 86 of the Agricultural Code, which is a part of the statutory provision for the organization of the defendant district, provides that such a district may be sued, with no limitation excluding a tort action, and no provision requiring the filing of such a claim is contained in that code. As was said in Harper v. Vallejo Housing Authority, 104 Cal.App.2d 621, 232 P.2d 262, 267: "* * * if the Legislature has not seen fit as to any public agency to require the filing of a claim precedent to action then no such condition is imposed." There is a statute authorizing the bringing of this action and no statute requiring the filing of a claim as a preceding condition. Neither of the points raised by the defendant can be sustained. The defendant expressly disclaims any intention to question the finding of the jury as to the existence of the defective condition, the occurrence of the accident, or that the plaintiff's injuries were a proximate result of the accident.

The defendant attempted to appeal from four other orders which are not appealable, and those appeals should be dismissed. The judgment and the order denying the defendant's motion for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict are affirmed, and the appeals from the other orders are dismissed.

GRIFFIN and MUSSELL, JJ., concur.

158 Cal.App.2d 534

Bun A. LOGSDON, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Earle L. HENDRICKS and Myra L. Hendricks and Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association, a national banking association, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 22908.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

March 19, 1958.

Rehearing Denied April 2, 1958.

Hearing Denied May 14, 1958.

Proceeding to vacate judgment taken eight years before. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Kenneth N. Chantry, J., denied motion and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J., held that question raised by allegation that judgment should be vacated because attorneys who executed answer for two defendants had not been granted power of attorney by defendants to execute answers in their place and answer of defendant bank and another defendant had been executed by assistant secretary of bank without power of attorney being attached thereto, was patently frivolous and allegation was not factually supported by record, but, even if question had possessed merit, it could not be raised for first time after trial upon merits.

Affirmed.

1. Judgment ⇐343

Question raised by allegation that judgment should be vacated because attorneys who executed answer for two defendants had not been granted power of attorney by defendants to execute answers in their place and answer of defendant bank and another defendant had been executed by assistant secretary of bank without power of attorney being attached thereto, was patently frivolous and allegation was not factually supported by record but even if question had possessed merit it could not be raised for first time after trial upon merits. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 416.3, 585.

2. Appeal and Error ⇐863

Where judgment was appealable and grounds upon which vacation was sought existed before entry of judgment, correctness of judgment could not be reviewed upon appeal from an order refusing to vacate it.

Bun A. Logsdon, in pro. per.

Voorhees, Stewart & Voorhees, Los Angeles for respondents Hendricks.

Samuel B. Stewart, San Francisco, Hugo A. Steinmeyer, Winfield Jones, Los Angeles, and George Ritner, Beverly Hills, for respondent Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association.

ASHBURN, Justice.

Another appeal taken in propria persona which does not present any semblance of merit.

Appellant in 1957 sought to vacate a judgment taken in 1949 against him as plaintiff in this action, and to set aside the defendants' answers and to enter their defaults,—all because of alleged defects in the verification of each answer. The motion being denied, he appeals.

On January 7, 1949, plaintiff sued to foreclose a mechanic's lien. The named defendants were Earle L. Hendricks, Myra L. Hendricks and Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association. The Hendricks and the bank answered separately and the Hendricks filed a cross-complaint, their pleadings being filed in January, 1949 and that of the bank in March, 1949. The transcript at bar states that each pleading was verified but does not disclose the form of verification or the name of the person who verified the pleading. The case was tried upon the merits and findings and judgment filed on September 13, 1949, denying plaintiff any relief and awarding defendants Hendricks judgment against him on their cross-complaint in the amount of $3,250 and costs. The judgment became final and was satisfied through execution sale on October 25, 1954.

On July 2, 1957, plaintiff filed his motion "for an order Vacating and Setting Aside the Answers and all proceedings of said defendants entered in the above entitled matter, and permitting the said plaintiff and the Clerk or the Judge of the Court to file Default against all the above named defendants, on the grounds of mistake, inadvertence and neglect." It was supported by his own affidavit alleging that "[t]he Court Records indicate that all defendants failed and refused to comply with above Code," reference being made to Code of Civil Procedure, § 585, "and Section 416.3 of this Code." Affiant also says: "Thereafter or about August or September of 1954 Collusion and Collateral Attack had presented itself. * * * Thereafter this Affaint consulted the Original Files in the Superior Court Records, * * * That in view of the fact that the answers and pleadings of the defendants were never legally signed and executed by the makers nor did they ever grant their power of attorney to execute for them. That the attached authorities herewith indicating that no Court proceeding were [sic] ever legal and that all Court proceedings were without legal power and effect" The motion to vacate, etc., was argued and denied on July 8, 1957, and the appeal is from that order.

[1, 2] In his opening brief appellant says: "That both Respondents Earle L. Hendricks and Myra L. Hendricks made their Answers by way of proxy, without granting their power of attorney to their attorneys to execute in their place and stead. That R. G. Wheeler of the Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association was served with a copy of the Complaint and Summons about Febuary 28th. 1949. About March 5th. 1949 the Answer of R. G. Wheeler and Bank of America was made and executed by A. J. Robillard an assistant secretary for some Bank and without the required power of attorney attached thereto." The point is patently frivolous and not factually supported by the record. If it possessed merit it could not be raised for the first time after trial upon the merits, as is attempted here. McCullough v. Clark, 41 Cal. 298, 302; City and County of San Francisco v. Itsell, 80 Cal. 57, 60, 22 P. 74; Chalmers v. Sheehy, 132 Cal. 459, 461, 64 P. 709; 39 Cal.Jur.2d § 272, p. 395. Moreover, the judgment was appealable and the grounds upon which vacation is sought existed before entry of judgment hence the correctness of the judgment cannot be reviewed upon appeal from an order refusing to vacate it. Uppman v. Eyraud, 151 Cal. App.2d 728, 312 P.2d 57.

Appellant makes numerous arguments which have little, if any bearing upon the issue raised by the motion and the order now under review. He cites a large number of authorities which he obviously does not understand and presents nothing which warrants the time and space devoted to this ruling.

Order affirmed.

FOX, P. J., and HERNDON, J., concur.

158 Cal.App.2d 730

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Paul C. LOEBER, Defendant and Appellant

Cr. 1329.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

March 26, 1958.

Rehearing Denied April 25, 1958.

Hearing Denied May 21, 1958.

Defendant was convicted on three separate counts of complaint charging him with issuing checks without sufficient funds. The Superior Court, San Diego County, John A. Hewicker, J., rendered judgment, and defendant appealed and filed motion to correct alleged errors or omissions in reporter's transcript. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, J., held, inter alia, that ordering that sentences on two of three counts should run consecutively was not abuse of discretion.

Motion to correct reporter's transcript denied and judgment affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇐1128(2, 4)

Facts outside the record and affidavits which were not before trial court cannot be considered on appeal.

2. Criminal Law ⇐1128(2)

Statements in briefs are not part of the record on appeal.

3. Criminal Law ⇐1116

On appeal from conviction on three separate charges of issuing checks without sufficient funds, record did not discharge defendant's burden of proving that plea of guilty to such charges had been entered in reliance upon agreement by deputy district attorney to drop charge of grand theft and two of the charges of issuing checks without sufficient funds in exchange for plea of guilty to one such charge and in belief that he was pleading guilty to charge carrying a lesser penalty. West's Ann.Pen. Code, § 476a.

4. Criminal Law ⇐1114(1)

On appeal from conviction based on plea of guilty to charges of issuing checks without sufficient funds, record did not support contention that defendant had been detained by police for 38 hours and refused legal counsel during such time and that such detention constituted coercion, fraud, duress and deception. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 476a.

5. Criminal Law ⇐1128(2)

Briefs are not the basis of an appeal and a record on appeal is not made by filing brief with narratives about which trial court knew nothing.

6. Criminal Law ⇐1116

On appeal from conviction on three charges of issuing checks without sufficient funds, contention that judgments were pronounced without pleas by defendant who stood mute while public defender entered pleas of guilty, which were illegal and prejudicial to defendant, was without merit, in view of transcript of proceedings certified by official court reporter showing that defendant in person entered plea of guilty to all three charges. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 476a.

7. Criminal Law ⇐641(1)

Record on appeal from conviction on charges of issuing checks without sufficient funds did not support contention that attorney appointed as counsel for defendant was inexperienced in practice of criminal law and did not satisfy constitutional guarantee of assistance of counsel, in view of showing that in both municipal and superior courts, defendant, personally and by his attorney, entered plea of guilty to such charges and absence of any showing that attorney appointed by superior court failed to properly represent defendant. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 476a.

8. Criminal Law ⇐369(1)

In prosecution on three separate charges of issuing checks without sufficient funds, whether defendant had also committed crime of grand theft was immaterial. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 476a.

9. Criminal Law ⇐268

That defendant may have committed a crime other than those charged does not give him the right to designate the charge he would prefer to answer.

10. Criminal Law ⇐273

Before accepting plea of guilty to charges of issuing checks without sufficient funds, trial court was not required to advise defendant of the consequences of a plea of guilty or to ask him whether any promise, reward or immunity had been offered or granted, particularly where defendant was represented by counsel when he entered plea of guilty in municipal court. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 476a.

11. Criminal Law ⇐1166½(12)

On appeal from conviction on charges of issuing checks without sufficient funds, record did not support contention that prejudice of trial court was shown by remark made at time of reducing bail. West's Ann. Pen.Code, § 476a.

12. Criminal Law ⇐982

Where one convicted of a criminal offense believes that report of probation officer is insufficient, vague or indefinite, he is entitled to present witnesses to testify in mitigation of his punishment at time of hearing on application for probation.

13. Criminal Law ⇐982

Granting or withholding probation rests entirely in the sound discretion of trial court.

14. Criminal Law ⇐982

Probation is an act of grace and clemency and applicant for probation is entitled only to have his application considered by court and he is not entitled to probation as a matter of right.

15. Criminal Law ⇐982

On appeal from conviction on three separate charges of issuing checks without sufficient funds, record disclosed no abuse of discretion in denying application for probation, particularly in view of failure to urge objections to probation officer's report at hearing before trial court. West's Ann. Pen.Code, § 476a.

16. Criminal Law ⇐1177

Where defendant did not reply to inquiry as to whether he had any legal cause to show why judgment should not be pronounced, statement in commitment that defendant replied to such inquiry that he had none was not prejudicial error.

17. Criminal Law ⇐101(4)

Order made in municipal court, referring to complaint attached thereto and certifying defendant to superior court for further proceedings following entry of plea of guilty to charges of issuing checks without sufficient funds, was not invalid as being vague and indefinite. West's Ann.Pen. Code, § 476a.

18. Criminal Law ⇐980(1)

Whether sentences imposed upon entry of plea of guilty to three separate counts of complaint charging issuance of checks without sufficient funds should run concurrently or consecutively was discretionary with trial court, and ordering that sentences on two of three counts should run consecutively was not abuse of discretion. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 476a.

19. Criminal Law ⇐1110(1)

Defendant could not have matters which were not properly a part of record on appeal included therein by motion to correct alleged errors or omissions in reporter's transcript and to examine reporter's notes and records.

Paul C. Loeber in pro per.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., and Albert Bianchi, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

MUSSELL, Justice.

In a complaint filed in the Municipal Court in the San Diego Judicial District appellant was charged with three separate counts of issuing checks without sufficient funds in violation of Section 476a of the Penal Code. He appeared in said court in person and through his attorney and entered a plea of guilty of the offense charged in the complaint. He was then certified to the Superior Court of San Diego County for further proceedings and, upon his arraignment in said Superior Court, he again personally and through his then attorney entered a plea of guilty to the three counts in the complaint. Probation was denied and appellant was ordered committed to the state prison, the sentence to run "consecutively with relation to counts Nos. 1 and 3, and concurrently with relation to count No. 2."

[1–3] Appellant states in his notice of appeal that he "appeals from the sentence imposed in and from the judgment of conviction in this action." His first contention is that a deputy district attorney "made a 'deal' to drop a charge of grand theft and two counts of NSF checks in exchange for a plea of guilty from the appellant to one count of NSF checks, and further District Attorney (deputy) lead the appellant to believe that he was pleading guilty to a charge carrying a lesser penalty." In support of this contention appellant attaches to his opening brief a letter written to him on September 11, 1957, by a deputy district attorney, and also refers to conversations allegedly had between appellant, his counsel and the deputy district attorney. The letter does not indicate that a "deal" as described by appellant was made. The appellant was advised therein that the District Attorney's office had dismissed a grand theft charge in consideration of appellant's plea of guilty to the three counts charged in the complaint; that the deputy district attorney had talked with appellant's attorney, who stated to him that the District Attorney's office had never agreed to dismiss any of the check charges against appellant. No motion for a new trial was made by appellant and no affidavits or other evidence was presented to the trial court to sustain his contention. In People v. Croft, 134 Cal.App.2d 800, 804, 286 P.2d 479, it was held that no facts outside the record and no affidavits which were not before the trial court can be considered on appeal, and that statements in briefs are not part of the record on appeal. In People v. Gilbert, 25 Cal.2d 422, 442, 154 P.2d 657, 667, it is said:

> "The state will not, through its courts, pronounce judgment on a plea which has been procured by fraud or duress or by any force which operates to preclude the exercise of free will and judgment by the party. Neither will it permit a scheming criminal to trifle with its processes. He may gamble only at his own risk on the result of a plea of guilty when that plea is entered through the exercise of his judgment unvitiated by fraud, duress, or similar motivating influence. If he claims such overreaching he must bear the burden of proof."

Appellant has failed to bear the burden of proving a "deal" as claimed.

[4, 5] Appellant next claims that he was detained by the police for a period of thirty-eight hours and was refused legal counsel during that time and that this constituted coercion, fraud, duress and deception. This claim is unsupported by the record and, as is said in People v. Henderson, 121 Cal.App.2d 298, 300, 262 P.2d 871, 872, "Merely because a prisoner fills his brief with narratives about which the court below knew nothing, a record on appeal is not thereby made. Briefs are not the basis of an appeal. They discuss the record contained in the reporter's transcript and in the minutes of the clerk." It is also said in 121 Cal.App.2d on page 300, 262 P.2d at page 872:

> "There is nothing a reviewing court can do about talk outside of a court proceeding in the absence of an appropriate record thereof by affidavit or otherwise. If we were obliged on every appeal to try the merits of conversations participated in by litigants outside the presence of the court there would be no end of most appeals. Our only concern is with what was said to the court or in its presence when actually investigating the facts of a controversy or with what is said by an accused person in making his plea of guilty or by his own or opposing counsel and the remarks of the court, if any."

[6] Appellant next argues that "judgments were pronounced without pleas by appellant who stood mute while the public defendant entered pleas of guilty which were illegal and prejudicial to appellant." This contention is without merit. The transcript of the proceedings in the Superior Court on June 6, 1957, contains the following questions and answers:

"The Court: People against Paul C. Loeber.

"Mr. Mills: Ready, your Honor.

"The Clerk: Your true name is Paul C. Loeber?

"The Defendant: Yes.

"The Clerk: You are represented by Mr. Mansfield A. Mills?

"The Defendant: That is correct.

"The Clerk: Mr. Loeber, you have heretofore on May 31, 1957, in Municipal Court Number 3, entered a plea of guilty to three counts of issuing checks without sufficient funds. What is your plea at this time?

"The Defendant: Guilty.

"The Clerk: As to all three counts?

"The Defendant: Yes, sir.

"Mr. Mills: We would like to make an application for probation at this time, your Honor. * * *"

This transcript was certified by the official court reporter as a true and correct transcript of the proceedings held at the time.

[7] The next contention is that the attorney appointed as counsel for appellant was inexperienced in the practice of criminal law and "did not satisfy appellant's constitutional guarantee." This contention is likewise not supported by the record for it appears therefrom that appellant, in both the Municipal and Superior courts, personally and by his attorney entered a plea of guilty to the three counts charged in the complaint. There is no showing that the attorney appointed by the Superior Court failed to properly represent appellant.

[8, 9] Appellant further contends that the only charge which could properly have been made against him was the crime of grand theft and that even if the proper charge was made, it would have included only one count, as he deposited all of the checks on one deposit slip. However, we are not here concerned with the charge of grand theft as the complaint charged appellant with the fraudulent utterance of three different checks for different amounts and at a time when he knew he had insufficient funds to meet them upon presentation. He pleaded guilty to these charges and the fact that he may also have committed another crime did not give him the right to designate the one he would prefer to answer. People v. Harris, 105 Cal.App.2d 701, 704, 233 P.2d 633.

[10] It is further claimed by the appellant that the court erroneously failed to admonish him of the consequences of a plea of guilty and failed to ask him whether any promise, reward or immunity had been offered or granted. The trial court was not required to so "admonish" the appellant or to ask him the question stated. Furthermore, the record also shows that when appellant entered his pleas in the Municipal Court he was represented by counsel, who presumably informed him of the consequences of the plea entered.

[11] Appellant claims that prejudice was shown by the court at the time of reducing appellant's bail in remarking "no doubt the defendant will be sentenced to prison." The record fails to substantiate this charge for it shows the following:

"Mr. Mills: * * * If the Court please, I would like to * * * ask if it would be possible for the Court to grant a reduction of bail. He is unable to make twenty-five hundred. * * *

"The Court: Well, I don't know. He will probably be doing some time anyway.

"Mr. Mills: I realize that * * *

"The Court: I will reduce it to fifteen hundred."

[12–15] Appellant claims that the probation officer improperly rendered two reports to the court; that he was prejudiced by numerous errors and misleading statements found in the report; that the probation officer was prejudiced against appellant and deliberately omitted from his report many letters of recommendation; that the court abused its discretion by not allowing appellant to correct errors in the report; that the court was improperly influenced by "vague statements" found in the probation report and that the court abused its discretion by not granting probation to appellant. These objections to the probation officer's report were not urged at the hearing before the trial court. If appellant believed the report to be insufficient, vague or indefinite, he was entitled to present witnesses to testify in mitigation of his punishment at the time of his hearing on application for probation. People v. Escobar, 122 Cal.App.2d 15, 20, 264 P.2d 571. Furthermore, the granting or withholding of probation is a matter that rests entirely in the sound discretion of the trial court. Probation is not a right given to a defendant in a criminal proceeding who has either pleaded guilty to the commission of an offense or who has been convicted thereof. It is an act of grace and clemency granted to a deserving defendant whereby he may escape the extreme rigors of the penalty imposed by law for the offense of which he stands convicted, and the only right which an applicant for probation possesses is that his petition shall receive consideration by the court. He may not demand clemency as a matter of right. People v. Frank, 94 Cal.App.2d 740, 211 P.2d 350. The record shows that appellant's petition for probation was considered by the trial court and no abuse of discretion appears.

[16] Appellant claims that the "commitment to state prison" was incorrect and illegal in that it incorrectly related that appellant was asked whether "he had any legal cause to show why judgment should not be pronounced against him, to which he replied that he had none." The transcript shows the following: "The Clerk: * * * Have you any legal cause to show why judgment should not be pronounced? The Defendant: (No answer)." Under these circumstances there was no prejudicial error in the wording of the commitment.

[17] Appellant claims that the order made in the Municipal Court was "vague, indefinite and without bounds" and was therefore invalid. The order refers to the complaint attached thereto and there is nothing vague or indefinite in it.

[18] Finally, appellant claims that the trial court abused its discretion in ordering the sentences on two of the counts to run consecutively and that this resulted in a denial of due process of law. This argument likewise has no merit. It is within the trial court's discretion whether the sentences shall be served consecutively or concurrently. People v. Tipton, 124 Cal.App. 2d 213, 217, 268 P.2d 196. No abuse of discretion appears in this connection.

[19] Appellant filed in this court a motion to correct alleged errors or omissions in the reporter's transcript and to examine the reporter's notes and records. This motion was deferred to be considered in connection with the submission of the cause on its merits. It is apparent from a reading of the motion made that appellant seeks to include in the record on appeal many matters which are not properly a part of the record. The motion is denied.

Judgment affirmed.

BARNARD, P. J., and GRIFFIN, J., concur.

Hearing denied; SCHAUER, J., dissenting.

158 Cal.App.2d 537

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Arnold WEBB, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 6049.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

March 19, 1958.

Hearing Denied May 14, 1958.

Defendant was convicted under Section 288 of the Penal Code of lewd or lascivious acts on the body of a child under 14 and under Section 288a of the Penal Code of sexual perversion. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, H. Burton Noble, J., entered a judgment and an order denying a motion for new trial, and the defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, P. J., held that evidence sustained convictions, but since both convictions were based on the same act, defendant could not be punished under both sections, and that judgment of conviction for sexual perversion, the less severely punishable offense, would be reversed.

Judgment and order as to first count affirmed, and judgment and order as to second count reversed.

1. Infants ⇐20

Evidence sustained conviction under section of the Penal Code dealing with lewd or lascivious acts on the body of a child under 14. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 288.

2. Sodomy ⇐6

Evidence sustained conviction for sexual perversion. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 288a.

3. Criminal Law ⇐1159(2)

Though reviewing court will not uphold judgment of conviction or verdict of guilty based on evidence inherently improbable, testimony which merely discloses unusual circumstances does not come within that category.

4. Criminal Law ⇐1159(4)

To warrant rejection by reviewing court of statements given by witness who was believed by trial court in criminal prosecution, there must exist either a physical impossibility that they are true, or their falsity must be apparent without resorting to inferences or deductions.

5. Criminal Law ⇐260(11), 1159(3, 4)

Conflicts and even testimony, which is subject to justifiable suspicion, does not justify reversal of judgment of conviction, since it is exclusive province of trial judge or jury to determine credibility of witnesses and truth or falsity of facts on which determination depends.

6. Criminal Law ⇐200(1)

Where both conviction of lewd or lascivious acts on the body of a child under 14 and conviction for sexual perversion are based on the same act, conviction for one of the offenses bars a concomitant conviction for violation of the other, and defendant cannot be punished for both offenses. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 288, 288a.

7. Infants ⇐13

Act of defendant in placing his arm around shoulder of 11½ year old boy as defendant was taking the boy into bungalow did not constitute lewd or lascivious acts on the body of a child under 14, regardless of any intent which defendant may have had with respect to the boy when they should arrive at the bungalow. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 288.

8. Infants ⇐13

In view of the fact that defendant cannot be convicted of both lewd and lascivious acts on the body of a child under 14 and of sexual perversion, if convictions are based on the same act, act of defendant in placing his hands on 11½ year old boy just prior to forcing act of sexual perversion on boy, for which defendant was convicted, did not constitute lewd or lascivious acts on the body of a child under 14, since such touching was merely preparatory to commission of offense of sexual perversion and was therefore a part of that offense. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 288, 288a.

9. Criminal Law ⇐1181

Where both convictions of defendant for lewd or lascivious acts on the body of a child under 14 and for sexual perversion could not stand, because both were based on the same act, judgment of conviction of the less severely punishable offense, which was the sexual perversion, would be reversed, and judgment of conviction for lewd or lascivious acts on the body of a child under 14 would be affirmed. West's Ann. Pen.Code, §§ 288, 288a.

Walter L. Gordon, Jr., Los Angeles, and James L. Garcia, Jr., Compton, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Elizabeth Miller, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

FOX, Presiding Justice.

Defendant was convicted of violating Penal Code section 288 (count one), and section 288a (count two). He appeals from the judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial.

John, the victim in this case, was approximately 11½ years of age when the incident took place on August 30, 1956. John lived at a boys' home. Adjacent to the home is a public school which is enclosed by a fence. Boys were not allowed on the school grounds during the summer. Defendant was a custodian of the school. John knew the defendant and talked to him "at the fence" practically every day during the summer. Just after lunch on the day in question John and two other boys from the home (Terry and Jim) went over to the school. Defendant's car, which he had washed during the noon hour, was parked near one of the school bungalows. Defendant was there talking to Mr. Stiers, a plumber, who was doing some work at the school. According to the testimony for the prosecution, defendant came over to the gate, stated that he wanted John to do a job for him, and unlocked the gate. Terry was riding a bike at the time. Jim started to enter but defendant said to him, "You wait here," so Jim stayed at the gate.[1] John came in. As he and John entered one of the bungalows defendant had his arm around John's shoulder. They went to a restroom where defendant closed and locked the door. There defendant forced John to commit an act denounced by section 288a of the Penal Code.[2] When defendant opened the door John ran out and went to the gate where Terry and Jim were waiting. John was "spitting all the way home," according to Terry, who had seen defendant and John walk down by the bungalow after defendant let John into the school grounds. John told the boys what had happened and went directly to the superintendent of the boys' home and complained to him.

Defendant denied going into any of the bungalows with John and denied any misconduct with him. The school principal testified that he had not had any complaints that defendant had molested any of the school children, and that defendant's reputation among persons employed at the school was good as to morals and sex habits.

[1, 2] Defendant's first contention is that "The evidence was highly improbable, and therefore insufficient to justify the judgment of conviction." There is no merit in this contention.

[3–5] In People v. Huston, 21 Cal.2d 690, 693, 134 P.2d 758, 759, the court stated: "Although an appellate court will not uphold a judgment or verdict based upon evidence inherently improbable, testimony which merely discloses unusual circumstances does not come within that category. [Citation.] To warrant the rejection of the statements given by a witness who has been believed by a trial court, there must exist either a physical impossibility that they are true, or their falsity must be apparent without resorting to inferences or deductions. [Citations.] Conflicts and even testimony which is subject to justifiable suspicion do not justify the reversal of

1. Defendant's testimony as to this phase of the incident was as follows:
"What took place after you saw the boys?
"Well, it was about a little after 12:00, and I was there drying my car. I had washed it. Mr. Stiers and I was there, and the boys was at the fence. He called, and Mr. Stiers said, 'There is a boy,' which I knew.
I went down there to see what he wanted, and he said he wanted to come in the playground and play with the other two little boys.
So I opened the gate and let him in. One little boy was on the bike, and he was riding around on the outside, and this other little boy who was with him stayed there, too, and John * * * he came in and went down on the sidewalk on the other side of the building, and I went around and came back to Mr. Stiers, and we went down in the basement and started to work."

2. Penal Code section 288a provides, in part: "Any person participating in an act of copulating the mouth of one person with the sexual organ of another is punishable by imprisonment * * *."

a judgment, for it is the exclusive province of the trial judge or jury to determine the credibility of a witness and the truth or falsity of the facts upon which a determination depends. [Citation.]"

Tested by these principles, it is clear that the testimony of the victim in this case is not inherently improbable. The trial judge believed it and there is no legal reason why he should not have done so. He simply exercised his judgment in determining where the truth lay. Such determination is binding on appeal. The story of John thus having been given credence, it follows that the evidence amply sustains the conviction.

Defendant's second contention is that he was improperly convicted of violating both section 288 and section 288a of the Penal Code. He argues that under the rule expressed in People v. Greer, 30 Cal.2d 589, 184 P.2d 512, he should have been convicted only of a violation of one of these sections. In the Greer case the defendant was convicted of violating Penal Code section 261 (1) (statutory rape) and 288 (lewd or lascivious conduct). The Supreme Court held that although section 288 specifically includes acts constituting other crimes mentioned in part one of the Penal Code, a person could not be convicted of both a violation of section 288 and a violation of section 261(1) for the same act. The reasoning of the Greer case applies directly to the case at bar even though this case involves a different section of the Penal Code. The court stated (30 Cal.2d at page 603, 184 P.2d at page 520): "Section 288 now specifically includes acts constituting other crimes and permits a greater penalty for those acts, if they are committed with the specified intent, upon a child under 14 years of age. The intent could normally be inferred from the very nature of the acts now under consideration. Had the Legislature wished to punish defendant once for statutory rape and once for lewd and lascivious conduct, for the same act, it could have done so in plain language. Instead, the crime of statutory rape is included within section 288 by that section's own terms, and the rape forms the basis for the prosecution under section 288. There is no indication on the face of the amended statute that the policy contained in the old statute forbidding double punishment has been changed. The mischief caused by the old language cannot arise under the amendment. Now statutory rape committed upon the body of a child under 14 years of age can be punished as a lewd and lascivious act. It cannot, however, be punished twice, as statutory rape and as lewd and lascivious conduct. Doubts as to the meaning of the amended section are resolved against double punishment for the same act."

[6] Section 654 of the Penal Code provides: "An act or omission which is made punishable in different ways by different provisions of this Code may be punished under either of such provisions, but in no case can it be punished under more than one; an acquittal or conviction and sentence under either bars a prosecution for the same act or omission under any other * * *." When the victim is a child under the age of 14, an act of sexual perversion is expressly made punishable in different ways[3] and by different provisions of the code—namely, sections 288 and 288a. Therefore, a conviction for violation of one of these sections bars a concomitant conviction for violation of the other when both convictions are based upon the same act. See People v. Slobodion, 31 Cal.2d 555, 561–562, 191 P.2d 1. The defendant's act under such circumstances may be punished either as sex perversion or as lewd and lascivious conduct, but not as both. See People v. Greer, supra, 30 Cal.2d at page 603, 184 P.2d at page 520.

[7] The attorney general does not quarrel with the principles set forth above. However, he argues that the two convictions in the instant case are based upon separate acts. It it asserted that while the conviction for violation of section 288a was based upon defendant's act of sexual perversion, his conviction for violation of section 288 was based upon defendant's entirely separate act of placing his arm around the boy's shoulder at the time he was taking the boy into the bungalow. We cannot agree with this contention. The elements comprising the offense defined in section 288 are: (1) a lewd or lascivious act, that is, an act which is lustful, immoral, seductive or degrading; (2) the commission of such act upon the body, or any part thereof, of a child under 14 years of age; and (3) the act must be committed with the intent of arousing or appealing to the lust or sexual desires of the accused or the child. People v. Romersa, 111 Cal.App. 2d 173, 178, 244 P.2d 98; People v. Showers, 90 Cal.App.2d 248, 253, 202 P.2d 814. Regardless of any intent which defendant might have had when he put his arm around the shoulder of the boy on their way to the bungalow, that act does not come within the meaning of "lewd" or "lascivious." Placing one's arm around the shoulder of a boy under the circumstances present in this case cannot be said to be lustful, immoral, seductive or degrading. The act took place in broad daylight before defendant and the boy had withdrawn to the privacy of the bungalow. Such a casual act would not be considered so unnatural as to invite the scrutiny of even the most suspicious mind. It is inconceivable that any court would convict a man of a violation of section 288 upon the mere proof of an act such as this. The cases cited by the attorney general in this connection all involved acts which came clearly within the meaning of "lewd" or "lascivious" as those words are used in section 288.

3. A violation of section 288 carries with it a maximum penalty of life imprisonment whereas the maximum penalty under section 288a is imprisonment for 15 years

[8] Nor may defendant's conviction for violation of section 288 be based upon his placing his hands on the boy just prior to forcing the act of sexual perversion upon him. Such touching was merely preparatory to the commission of the act denounced by section 288a, and was, therefore, a part of that offense. See People v. Greer, supra, 30 Cal.2d at page 604, 184 P.2d at page 521; cf. People v. Slobodian, supra, 31 Cal.2d at page 563, 191 P.2d at page 5.

The attorney general also relies upon People v. Slobodian, supra, in which convictions of violating both section 288 and section 288a were sustained. The facts in that case showed that the defendant committed four separate acts upon the body of the prosecutrix, all within a short period of time. Two of these acts violated section 288a (although also punishable under section 288) and, the other two acts constituted a violation or attempted violation of section 261(1) (although these also were punishable under section 288). Thus, even though all the acts were committed within a relatively short time, Slobodian was properly convicted of violating both section 288 and section 288a since he had committed acts separately denounced in two code sections independent of section 288. The case has no application to the case at bar because here defendant committed but one unlawful act. While this act was punishable under either section 288 or section 288a, it was not punishable under both.

[9] It is thus clear that defendant's two convictions cannot stand. The judgment of conviction of the less severely punishable offense (i. e., violation of section 288a) should be reversed. People v. Brown, 49 Cal.2d 577, 320 P.2d 5.

For the reasons above stated the judgment and order as to count 1 are affirmed and the judgment and order as to count 2 are reversed.

ASHBURN, J., and KINCAID, J. pro tem., concur.

158 Cal.App.2d 634

Vernon R. FORTNA, Individually and doing business as Valley Termite Company, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

E. L. MARTIN, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 9214.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

March 24, 1958.

Action to enjoin former employee from making use of confidential information or trade secrets of employer who engaged in structural pest control work. The Superior Court, Sutter County, E. T. Manwell, J. pro tem., granted injunction and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Schottky, J., held that evidence disclosed that the identity of former employer's customers, which were real estate companies and lending institutions requiring termite clearance for many types of loans, was not confidential, that materials and services performed in termite control were not confidential and that former employer's methods of pricing and bidding were not secret.

Reversed.

1. Injunction ⇐56

Provision in employment contract that employee, for period of five years following termination of employment, would not solicit or cater to any of employer's customers would not support injunction restraining former employee from competing with employer in the structural pest control business, in view of statute invalidating, except to extent provided therein, every contract restraining one from engaging in lawful profession, trade or business. West's Ann.Bus. and Prof.Code, § 16600.

2. Master and Servant ⇐60

Equity will protect the property rights of employers in their trade secrets and otherwise, but public policy and natural justice require that equity should also be solicitous for the right inherent in all people, not fettered by negative covenants upon their part to the contrary, to follow any of the common occupations of life.

3. Master and Servant ⇐60

Every individual possesses, as a form of property, the right to pursue any calling, business or profession he may choose, and has the right to engage in a competitive business for himself and to enter into competition with his former employer, even for the business of those who had formerly been the customers of former employer, provided such competition is fairly and legally conducted.

4. Trade-Marks and Trade-Names and Unfair Competition ⇐77

The courts regard as "unfair competition" and will enjoin the use, by an employee to the prejudice of his former employer, of the confidential information gained by employee during his prior employment as to business secrets of such employer.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Unfair Competition".

5. Injunction ⇐128

In action to enjoin former employee from making use of confidential information or trade secrets of employer who engaged in structural pest control work, evidence disclosed that identity of former employer's customers, which were real estate companies and lending institutions requiring termite clearance with many types of loans, was not confidential, that materials and services performed in termite control work were not confidential and that former employer's methods of pricing and bidding were not secret.

6. Evidence ⇐20(2)

It is common knowledge that financial institutions require a termite clearance before they will make loans on improved property.

7. Evidence ⇐5(2)

It is common knowledge that average purchaser of real property must secure loan in order to complete purchase.

8. Master and Servant ⇐60

A former agent may use, after termination of his employment, methods of doing business and processes which are but skillful variation of general processes known to the particular trade.

Steel & Arostegui, Marysville, for appellant.

Bradford, Cross, Dahl & Hefner, Sacramento, for respondent.

SCHOTTKY, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment enjoining defendant, for a period of five years, from "entering into competition, directly or indirectly, with plaintiff * * * and/or soliciting structural pest control work, all in the exterminating business, Branch 3, Group D termite control work," in a specified area of the Sacramento Valley, and from "making use of confidential information or trade secrets of said plaintiff, * * * and in particular from making any disclosure whatsoever as to said plaintiff's methods of bidding for structural pest control work."

On December 21, 1953, defendant Martin and plaintiff Fortna entered into a contract of employment which contained the following provision:

> "(c) That he [the employee] will not for a period of five years after the end or termination of his employment, irrespective of the time, manner or cause of the said termination, directly or indirectly, either as principal, agent, employee, employer, stockholder, copartner, or in any other individual or representative capacity whatever, solicit, serve, or cater to or engage, assist, be interested in or connected with any other person, firm or corporation soliciting, serving or catering to any of the customers served by him or by any other employee of the company or any of its branches during his employment with the Company."

Martin continued in the employ of Fortna until August 30, 1955. During the last thirty days Martin made plans to engage in business for himself, and immediately after the termination of the employment he established his own business and entered into competition with Fortna.

Fortna then sought an injunction to prevent Martin from competing with him. Fortna alleged in his complaint that Martin had solicited customers, and that while in his (Fortna's) employ Martin became familiar with certain trade secrets and confidential information of the business, particularly the names of customers, the materials used and services performed in termite control work and other information pertaining to the conduct of Fortna's business, and that after Martin terminated the employment he had used the information to solicit business for himself.

The testimony disclosed that Martin had been in the termite control business for about 18 years and that at one time he had his own business in Los Angeles. Prior to the time Martin was employed by Fortna he had no contacts in the Sacramento Valley. Fortna described Martin as his manager. Martin made inspections, reports, issued the reports to the proper persons, negotiated the work and handled it; he became familiar with Fortna's prices, his methods of bidding, and those persons with whom Fortna did business. Fortna was most careful never to allow his employees to learn the amount he received for any job, and the customer only was given a total bid price for any job. Fortna considered this information a trade secret and confidential. Martin testified that there was no difference in the prices charged by Fortna and those charged in Los Angeles.

Termite inspection is examining the substructure of a building and determining if there is damage and what is needed to correct it. To engage in the business one must have a license issued by the state of California. The biggest portion of the business comes from real estate companies and lending institutions, a termite clearance being required with many types of loans. When a clearance is needed either the realtor or the financial institution calls a termite inspection company to make the inspection. Fortna testified that he had many contacts who called only him. He stated that if work was necessary the bank or the real estate company would inform him to do the work without the necessity of a bid. He has a standard price formula that he uses. As stated, the estimates are presented to the customer as a lump sum figure, but anyone who has become familiar with Fortna's pricing method can determine how the estimate is arrived at. Fortna claimed that the identity of those customers who called only him, and his pricing methods are trade secrets and confidential information. He further stated that in some of the institutions there was one officer who controlled the business, and the identity of this officer could not be determined by the average solicitor. As a result of his employment, Martin learned the identity of the person who controlled the business in each institution. After Martin left Fortna's employ he called at the offices of these customers and left his card. He denied soliciting them but he did admit that he told them that if he could be of service to them he would. Since Martin left Fortna's employ certain old customers have not referred any business to Fortna.

Fortna claimed to have had only minor competition in the area served by his firm. There was a man by the name of Bechhold in Chico who worked out of his own home. He did not advertise and he never bid against Fortna on a job. In 1954 a firm by the name of Garankill was established. Fortna testified this was only minor competition.

As grounds for reversal of the judgment appellant contends (1) that the contract is void as a contract in restraint of trade; (2) that the injunction exceeds the contract between the parties; (3) that the findings do not recite any information gained by appellant which constitutes a trade secret; and (4) that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the judgment.

[1] We do not believe that the injunction can be based on the contractual provision hereinbefore set forth. Section 16600 of the Business and Professions Code provides: "Except as provided in this chapter, every contract by which anyone is restrained from engaging in a lawful profession, trade, or business of any kind is to that extent void." None of the exceptions is applicable to the instant case.

[2–4] As stated in Continental Car-Na-Var Corporation v. Moseley, 24 Cal.2d 104, at page 110, 148 P.2d 9, 12:

> "Equity will to the fullest extent protect the property rights of employers in their trade secrets and otherwise, but public policy and natural justice require that equity should also be solicitous for the right inherent in all people, not fettered by negative covenants upon their part to the contrary to follow any of the common occupations of life. Every individual possesses as a form of property, the right to pursue any calling, business or profession he may choose. A former employee has the right to engage in a competitive business for himself and to enter into competition with his former employer, even for the business of those who had formerly been the customers of his former employer, provided such competition is fairly and legally conducted. New Method Laundry Co. v. MacCann, 174 Cal. 26, 33, 161 P. 990, Ann.Cas. 1918C, 1022.
>
> "Under this salutary rule, the question then is whether defendants were guilty of unfair competition in soliciting the customers of plaintiff for business in competition with the latter. It is the law that equity will intervene to restrain an employee from divulging confidential information gained in the course of his employment or using such information to his employer's prejudice. Pasadena Ice Co. v. Reeder, 206 Cal. 697, 702, 275 P. 944, 276 P. 995. The courts regard as unfair competition, and will enjoin, the use by an employee to the prejudice of his former employer of the confidential information gained by the employee during his prior employment as to the business secrets of such employer." See also California Intelligence Bureau v. Cunningham, 83 Cal.App.2d 197, 188 P.2d 303; Morris v. Harris, 127 Cal.App.2d 476, 274 P.2d 22; Mathews Paint Co. v. Seaside Paint Co., 148 Cal.App.2d 168, 171, 306 P.2d 113; American Alloy Steel Corp. v. Ross, 149 Cal.App.2d 215, 308 P.2d 494.

Whether or not equity will enjoin a former employee from using information acquired while in such employ to the disadvantage of the former employer depends on whether or not in a given case the information gained is secret and confidential. If it is, a former employee may not use it, but, if it is not, a former employee may do so. An employee may, after termination of the employment, use anything that is not the property of the employer. But the employee may not use for his own benefit trade and business secrets and confidential information which are the property of the employer. California Intelligence Bureau v. Cunningham, 83 Cal.App.2d 197, 188 P.2d 303; Mathews v. Seaside Paint Co., supra.

[5–7] We do not think that the evidence produced in this case disclosed the use of any information by Martin which can be considered to be a trade secret or confidential. The identity of Fortna's customers cannot be considered confidential. It is common knowledge that financial institutions require a termite clearance before they will make loans on improved property. It is also common knowledge that the average purchaser of real property must secure a loan in order to complete the purchase. Realtors usually inform prospective sellers of the necessity of a termite clearance. It follows that both realtors and financial institutions are often in a position to give termite inspection firms leads to business or to give them business. Certainly any person engaged in the business would consider both banks and real estate companies as potential sources of business and contact them. The names and addresses of such firms are found in the yellow pages of any telephone directory. Their identity cannot be confidential.

Nor do we think that even if there was one man in each firm who controlled the business, such information would be confidential. Any solicitor could ascertain who that person would be. While Fortna describes these men as key contacts of a secret nature, we cannot understand nor does the evidence disclose what the secret nature was.

The materials used and the services performed in termite control work cannot be confidential either. Each person who desires to engage in such a business must obtain a license from the state. Martin had a Group D license authorizing him to engage in the practice relating to the control of wood destroying pests by the use of insecticides or structural repairs and corrections, excluding fumigation with poisonous or lethal gases. It is reasonable to conclude that Martin, having passed the examination necessary to obtain such a license, would be familiar with the materials used and the services performed in such work.

[8] Fortna also claimed that his methods of pricing and bidding were secret. The evidence does not show that Fortna devised any secret or improved method of making estimates or computing costs. At most, the evidence discloses that Fortna utilized a system which considered his costs, but any successful business man must do the same. A former agent may use, after the termination of his employment, "methods of doing business and processes which are but skillful variation of general processes known to the particular trade." (Restatement of Agency, sec. 396, comment, cl. (b).) The mere fact that Fortna did not disclose the information to other employees would not make it secret and confidential.

Injunctive relief should be granted only upon convincing proof of a harmful violation of the plaintiff's right. It should not be given an application that would overemphasize the employer's right to the detriment of the employee by treating as confidential and secret all information that might be useful to the employee. Mathews Paint Co. v. Seaside Paint Co., supra. The evidence produced did not warrant the trial court in granting an injunction.

The judgment is reversed.

VAN DYKE, P. J., and PEEK, J., concur.

158 Cal.App.2d 644

William BURROWS and Hilda Randall, Plaintiffs and Respondents,

v.

Lillian C. JORGENSEN and Hans C. Jorgensen, Defendants and Appellants.

William BURROWS and Hilda Randall, Plaintiffs and Respondents,

v.

Lillian C. JORGENSEN, Hans C. Jorgensen, Patricia Franke, and Joyce C. Camozzi, Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 17596.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

March 25, 1958.

Suit to set aside transfers allegedly made in fraud of creditors. From an order of the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Twain Michelsen, J., appointing a receiver the defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held inter alia, that where transfers of leaseholds were made by debtors day after they were served with order of examination in original action by creditors, and transfers were of almost all of debtors' nonexempt property, and transferees were a daughter and son-in-law, transfers were made to delay, hinder or defeat creditors.

Affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐419(1)

Where order to show cause why a receiver should not be appointed was heard together with motion for appointment of receiver and a minute order granting appointment of receiver was entered in each proceeding and thereafter another judge signed a formal order appointing a receiver, defendants' notices of appeal were valid as to both orders. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rule 2(c).

2. Fraudulent Conveyances ⇐277(1)

A transfer of leases in consideration of transferees' assumption of loans and obligations under leases was not in fraud of creditors where creditors failed to prove disparity between value of property transferred and debt assumed.

3. Fraudulent Conveyances ⇐305

Fact that there was consideration for transfer of property by debtors did not make appointment of receiver void since even where transfer is made upon consideration transfer may be set aside if it was made to delay, hinder or defeat creditors.

4. Fraud ⇐58(1)

A fraud must be proved by clear and convincing evidence because there is a presumption of fair dealing and against fraud.

5. Fraudulent Conveyances ⇐107

Where transfers of leaseholds were made by debtors day after they were served with order of examination in original action by creditors, and transfers were of almost all of debtors' nonexempt property, and transferees were a daughter and son-in-law transfers were made to delay, hinder or defeat creditors. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. § 564, subds. 1, 4, 7.

6. Fraudulent Conveyances ⇐15

A judgment debtor's transfer of almost all of nonexempt property is an indication of fraud.

7. Fraudulent Conveyances ⇐15

That transferees of judgment debtors were a daughter and son-in-law was an indication of fraud.

8. Fraudulent Conveyances ⇐305

Covenants of leases against involuntary assignment were not sufficiently strong to prevent the taking of possession by receiver of leased premises which lessees transferred with intent to delay, hinder and defeat lessees' judgment creditors since receiver acquires no title but only the right to possession as an officer of the court and hence his appointment is not a violation of the type of covenant against assignment. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 564, subds. 1, 4, 7.

9. Fraudulent Conveyances ⇐305

A provision in lease giving landlord option of terminating lease upon appointment of a receiver did not give lease status of exempt property so as to preclude appointment of a receiver where lessees transferred property with intent to hinder, delay or defeat judgment against them since it becomes a matter within discretion of court as to whether it will appoint a receiver and chance a possibility that landlord may not exercise his right to terminate. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 564, subds. 1, 4, 7.

10. Fraudulent Conveyances ⇐305

Where court had power to turn over management and control of leased apartment houses to receiver because they were transferred by lessees with intent to delay and defeat a judgment against them, under doctrine that the greater includes the lesser, court had power to authorize receiver to receive from the lessees all rents which they might receive over the actual minimum running expenses and order them to pay such income to the receiver.

11. Fraudulent Conveyances ⇐305

The appointment of a receiver of monies collected by lessees of apartment houses for benefit of lessees' judgment creditors was not erroneous on ground that lessees, and not their transferees, were occupying the premises, that landlord had not terminated leases because of receivership, and that lessees were in effect compelled to labor in behalf of judgment creditors. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 564, subds. 1, 4, 7.

Sugarman, Bernheim & Gilbert, Irving C. Sugarman, San Francisco, for appellants.

Joseph A. Brown, San Francisco, for respondents.

BRAY, Justice.

Defendants appeal from an order appointing a receiver upon proceedings heard together (1) under a complaint in equity to set aside transfers allegedly in fraud of creditors; (2) under supplementary proceedings in the original case.

Questions Presented.

1. Was the appointment of a receiver of the leased apartment houses improper (a) because the transfer of the leases were for consideration, (b) because of the provision providing for cancellation in the event of the appointment of a receiver?

2. Was the appointment of a receiver to receive future income proper?

Record.

[1] Plaintiffs filed an action for fraud in the sale of a certain leasehold. Defendants defaulted and judgment was entered in favor of plaintiffs for $8,075 damages and $20,000 exemplary damages.[1] Plaintiffs moved for appointment of a receiver to take over the management and control of defendants' property to satisfy the judgment. Theretofore plaintiffs filed an action to set aside transfers in fraud of creditors. An order to show cause why a receiver should not be appointed was heard together with the above mentioned motion for appointment of receiver. On August 14, 1956, a minute order of the Hon. Twain Michelsen, Judge of the Superior Court of San Francisco, granting the appointment of a receiver was entered in each proceeding. On August 24, defendants appealed in each proceeding from said order. However, on August 15, in the action to set aside transfers, Hon. Theresa Meikle, judge of said court, signed a formal order appointing a receiver in said action, which order was entered on August 27.[2] At defendants' request and pursuant to rule 2(c), Rules on Appeal, we deem defendants' notices of appeal valid as to both orders. See Larrus v. First National Bank, 1954, 122 Cal.App. 2d 884, 886, 266 P.2d 143.

1. An action was brought by defendants to set aside this judgment. A judgment of nonsuit was granted therein upon the opening statement of defendants (plaintiffs there). Upon appeal we reversed this nonsuit judgment. See Jorgensen v. Burrows, 157 Cal.App.2d 638, 321 P.2d 465.

In the original case defendants Lillian and Hans Jorgensen appeared before a referee in an examination into their assets. It appeared they consisted of a joint checking account, balance $50, $1,000 in Federal Savings & Loan Co. which had been assigned to their attorneys for services, and a 1950 Plymouth. Prior to May 19, 1956, said defendants were in the business of operating leaseholds (apartment buildings). Judgment was entered in the original action July 27, 1955. On May 19, 1956, the Jorgensens transferred three leaseholds to their daughter and son-in-law Joyce and Gene Camozzi. No money was paid for these transfers. One lease had ten months to run, one had four years, and the third three years left. All three leases contain provisions restricting assignment and for termination in the event of transfer by operation of law. The lease of 925 Geary Street provides for cancellation in the event of the appointment of a receiver. Lillian testified that the transfers were made on advice of the landlords who consented thereto. The furniture at two of the leaseholds is security for a loan of $7,800 from Morris Plan. The furniture at the third leasehold is security for the performance of that lease. The Camozzis assumed the obligations of the leases and of the Morris loan, their names being now on the leases and note with the Jorgensens. There is no agreement that the Jorgensens are to receive any income from the leased properties.

1. Receivership. (a) Consideration.

Defendants contend that all the transfers were for consideration and not in fraud of creditors; hence the appointment of a receiver was improper. They contend that the consideration was the assumption of the Morris Plan loan by the transferees and of the obligations under the leases. Mrs. Camozzi testified that the leases were not worth over the $8,000 loaned by Morris Plan. There was no contrary testimony. However, plaintiffs' attorney made an offer to prove that they were worth $25,000. The court did not rule on the offer as the parties became sidetracked on an unaccepted offer of settlement. Plaintiffs offered no evidence on the subject nor was the court ever asked to rule upon said offer of proof.

[2, 3] In Peterson v. Wilson, 88 Cal. App.2d 617, 626, 199 P.2d 757, 763, 6 A. L.R.2d 258, we quoted from Mix v. Yoakum, 138 Cal.App. 290, 294, 31 P.2d 1071; "'A conveyance, in consideration of the assumption of a mortgage on the property, is based on a valid consideration. There is authority for the proposition that where the property conveyed is of value in excess of the mortgage, an agreement on the part of the grantee to pay the same is not a valuable consideration as against the grantor's creditors. It has been held in this state that the disparity between the value of the property and the encumbrance must be such as to show gross inadequacy of consideration. [Citation.] * * *'" and held that the burden of proving disparity between the value of the property and the debt assumed is on the creditor. In view of plaintiffs' failure to prove such disparity we cannot find that there was not consideration for the transfer. But that fact alone does not make the appointment of the receiver void. Even where a transfer is made upon consideration, nevertheless the transfer may be set aside if it was made with intent to delay, hinder or defeat creditors. Cioli v. Kenourgios, 59 Cal.App. 690, 211 P. 838.

2. Apparently after Judge Michelsen entered the minute order the matter was presented to Judge Meikle for formulation of the formal order.

Peterson v. Wilson, supra, 88 Cal.App.2d 617, 199 P.2d 757, cited by defendants, is not in point. There the court expressly found that the conveyance in question was not made in anticipation of an adverse judgment against the grantor nor to hinder, delay or defraud the creditor.

[4–7] "In such a case, the fact that the transferee gave consideration is immaterial." Heffernan v. Bennett & Armour, 110 Cal.App.2d 564, 584, 585, 243 P.2d 846, 859; Chichester v. Mason, 43 Cal.App.2d 577, 586, 111 P.2d 362; Puccetti v. Girola, 63 Cal.App.2d 240, 252, 146 P.2d 714; see also Civ.Code, § 3439.07. The fraud must be proved by clear and convincing evidence because there is a presumption of fair dealing and against fraud. See Hedden v. Waldeck, 9 Cal.2d 631, 636, 72 P.2d 114. In our case the fact that the transfers were made to delay, hinder or defeat plaintiffs' judgment clearly and convincingly appears. The transfers were made the day after the Jorgensens were served with order of examination in the original action. When Mrs. Jorgensen was asked if this was not so, defendants' counsel interrupted and stated: "That is the reason why she had to do it. There is no question about it." Mrs. Jorgensen practically admitted the same thing. The transfers were of almost all of Jorgensens' nonexempt property (an indication of fraud—see Keeley v. Anderson, 14 Cal.App.2d 467, 471, 58 P.2d 410). The transferees were a daughter and a son-in-law (also an indication of fraud—Menick v. Goldy, 131 Cal.App.2d 542, 547, 280 P.2d 844). Section 564, subdivisions 1, 4 and 7, Code of Civil Procedure, authorize the appointment of a receiver in actions of this kind. See also Heffernan v. Bennett & Armour, supra, 110 Cal.App.2d 564, 588, 243 P.2d 846; Murray v. Murray, 115 Cal. 266, 274–275, 47 P. 37, 37 L.R.A. 626; Sibert v. Shaver, 113 Cal.App.2d 19, 247 P.2d 609.

As the trial court impliedly found that the transfers were made with the intent to delay, hinder and defeat plaintiffs' judgment, the appointment of the receiver was proper unless affected by the other grounds urged.

(b) Cancellation provisions.

[8] The only lease providing for cancellation in the event of appointment of a receiver is that of 925 Geary. It and the other two leases provided that an assignment without the landlord's consent either voluntary or involuntary or by operation of law or otherwise would be void and cause for termination of the lease. Defendants contend that these provisions present a situation analogous to a debtor's exempt property as to a transfer of which it is well settled that a creditor may not complain. See Prudential Ins. Co. of America v. Beck, 39 Cal.App.2d 355, 103 P.2d 241; In re Johnson, D.C., 97 F.Supp. 779; American State Bank v. Butts, 111 Wash. 612, 191 P. 754, 17 A.L.R. 168. However, the leases are not analogous to exempt property because the leases can be reached if the lessor consents to a transfer either by sale or by the court order appointing a receiver. As most leases contain such restrictions on transfer, such a ruling practically would make all leases exempt property. Elson v. Nyhan, 45 Cal.App.2d 1, 113 P.2d 474, is not in point. It dealt with the refusal of the trial court to appoint a receiver to take possession of cab licenses. The case did not hold that a receiver could not be appointed. It held that as the appointment of a receiver rests entirely within the discretion of the trial court, and the transfer of such licenses required the consent of the Police Commission whose policy was to refuse to recognize involuntary transfers, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying a receiver. With the possible exception of the Geary Street lease, the covenants of the leases against involuntary assignment are not sufficiently strong to prevent the taking of possession by the receiver of the leased premises. While the question of the effect of such covenants has not been decided in California, it appears from the following cases in other jurisdictions that the receiver acquires no title but only the right to possession as an officer of the court and hence his appointment is not a violation of the type of covenant against assignment here. See Bell v. American Protective League, 1895, 163 Mass. 558, 40 N.E. 857, 28 L.R.A. 452; Durand & Co. v. Howard & Co., 2 Cir., 1914, 216 F. 585, L.R.A.1915B, 998; Fleming v. Fleming Hotel Co., 1905, 69 N.J.Eq. 715, 61 A. 157; Gazlay v. Williams, 1908, 210 U.S. 41, 28 S.Ct. 687, 52 L.Ed. 950. See H. D. Roosen Co. v. Pacific Radio Pub. Co., 123 Cal.App. 525, 534, 11 P.2d 873, 876: "The receiver does not occupy the status of an assignee. His function is that of a minister of the court in possession of the property, to the end of conserving the rights of everybody having any interest * * *".

[9] Even as to the provision in the Geary Street lease giving the landlord the option of terminating the lease upon appointment of a receiver, we do not consider that it gives the lease the status of exempt property. It becomes a matter within the discretion of the court as to whether it will apoint a receiver and chance the possibility that the landlord may not exercise his right to terminate. At oral argument it was conceded that the landlords have consented to the possession by the receiver.

2. Future Income.

As to the Geary Street property, the order appointing the receiver does not give the receiver the power to take possession of the lease or the property. It expressly provides that the receiver is not to take charge or possession of the apartment house. It provides that the receiver is to receive from Mr. and Mrs. Camozzi all rents which they may receive from the apartment house over the actual minimum running expenses of the house and orders them to pay the same to the receiver. Apparently the order was limited to avoid the possibility of the landlord attempting to terminate the lease because of the receivership clause.

[10] Defendants contend that the order is erroneous in that it is a receivership of defendants' future earnings. Defendants rely upon the rule in other jurisdictions that under proceedings supplementary to execution a court may not appoint a receiver to collect the debtor's future salary or earnings. See In re Trustees of Board of Publications and Sabbath School Work, 1898, 22 Misc. 645, 50 N.Y.S. 171; Kroner v. Reilly 49 App.Div. 41, 63 N.Y.S. 527; Archer v. Whiting, 1889, 88 Ala. 249, 7 So. 53; Hand v. Ortschrieb Bldg. Corp., 136 Misc. 692, 240 N.Y.S. 589. However, we are dealing here, not with the debtor's salary or earnings, but with income from his property which may be being fraudulently held by his grantees, which income is impounded by the order made in the proceedings to set aside the transfers. If the action is successful the apartment houses will be subject to the lien of plaintiffs' judgment in the original action. The court could have appointed the receiver to take charge of the apartment houses, operate them, and withhold the net income, if any, to await the determination of the case. See J. M. Overell Furniture Co. v. Superior Court, 1918, 36 Cal.App. 745, 173 P. 176 (where the receiver was appointed to take possession of an apartment house, manage it, and conserve the profits pending the decision of the court); Pacific Bank v. Robinson, 1881, 57 Cal. 520 (where the order directed the judgment debtor to assign his patent to a receiver who was to sell it and apply the proceeds to the satisfaction of the judgment); Habenicht v. Lissak, 1889, 78 Cal. 351, 20 P. 874, 5 L.R.A. 713 (affirming an order appointing a receiver, directing the judgment debtor to assign seats in the stock exchange, and empowering the receiver to sell such seats to satisfy the judgment); Neider v. Dardi, 1955, 130 Cal. App.2d 646, 279 P.2d 598 (where a receiver was appointed to protect and conserve the assets in an action for an accounting in a joint venture); Heffernan v. Bennett & Armour, supra, 110 Cal.App.2d 564, 243 P. 2d 846 (where a receiver was appointed, in a suit to set aside a fraudulent conveyance, to take possession of the conveyed business and assets to conserve such property). As the court had power to turn the entire management and control of the apartment houses over to the receiver, we can see no reason why the greater does not include the lesser, and why the court would not have the power to impound the profits, if any. We are dealing here with property which the court may find was illegally transferred and should have been available for application to the plaintiffs' judgment. Thus the court could have ordered the property and its income preserved to await the final determination of the court. It is the earnings of the property which may ultimately be determined to be subject to plaintiffs' judgment that the receivership is dealing with and not the earnings of any of the defendants.

The order provided that as to the Geary Street property whoever of the defendants may be in possession must make no repairs without the receiver's consent, must keep good and sufficient books of account open to the receiver's inspection and give him a detailed statement of all moneys collected and expenses paid each week and turn over to him any surplus remaining over the amount expended for the expenses of operating the house, and shall apprise the receiver in the weekly account of any vacancies, of the renting of any apartment, and the amount of rent received therefor.

[11] It was agreed at the oral argument that the Jorgensens were occupying and operating the house and that the Camozzis at no time were in possession or operating the house, and that the landlord had not objected to the receivership nor attempted to terminate any of the leases because thereof. Defendants contend that as the lease requires the lessees to maintain the premises as an apartment house in a business-like manner, the effect of the order is to compel the Jorgensens to labor in behalf of the plaintiffs. To a limited extent this may be true. However, the Jorgensens are living in the premises and whatever surplus there is from the rental of the property will ultimately either belong to them or their grantees outright or subject to a lien in favor of plaintiffs for the amount of any judgment they may ultimately obtain. Inasmuch as the receiver could have been authorized, as we have heretofore shown, to have taken over the entire operation of the house, we see no reason why the fact that the Jorgensens are not required to deliver possession and are permitted to operate the premises themselves, makes the order erroneous.

The order is affirmed.

PETERS, P. J., and FRED B. WOOD, J., concur.

158 Cal.App.2d 578

Cyril H. HEUSNER, Theodore B. Heusner and Bernadina R. Skinner, Plaintiffs and Appellants,

v.

William Emil FLECK, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 9311.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

March 20, 1958.

Action to cancel or reform written contract. From a judgment of the Superior Court, El Dorado County, McGee, J., in favor of grantee, grantors appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Warne, J. pro tem., held that where grantee formerly had easement over land for road purposes and grantor wishing to use part of easement for another purpose agreed to construct new road for part of the way and convey land on which entire roadway was situated to grantor, and deed was without limitation, grantor could not deny that grantee had fee simple title to land.

Affirmed.

1. Estoppel ⇐32(1)

Where grantee formerly had easement over land for private road purposes and grantor wishing to use part of easement for another purpose agreed to construct a new road in so far as was necessary, and conveyed land on which entire roadway was situated without limitation, grantors could not subsequently deny that grantee had fee simple title to land.

2. Deeds ⇐124
Estoppel ⇐15

A grant, bargain, and sale deed operates to pass title in fee unless it contains in itself some limitation, exception or reservation, and it estops grantor thereafter from claiming any right or estate in land so conveyed.

3. Pleading ⇐94

Where all of the allegations of complaint were controverted either by a specific or general denial, defendant was not required to separately and specifically answer each and every allegation.

4. Reformation of Instruments ⇐38

Where action was brought to reform or cancel written contract under which plaintiffs had conveyed private road to defendant and allegation of complaint was to effect that land of plaintiffs and defendant had for long time been served jointly by specific road which at all times had been used jointly by the plaintiffs and the defendant, answers specifically denied allegations and in addition alleging that roadway serving defendant's lands was owned in fee simple by defendant, was sufficient answer to complaint.

H. D. Jerrett, Sacramento, for appellants.

Albert L. Wagner and E. R. Vaughn, Sacramento, for respondent.

WARNE, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the defendant in an action brought to cancel or reform a written contract whereby appellants conveyed a private road to respondent.

It appears that for many years prior to 1951 respondent had an easement in an old road on appellants' property. The road ran from a highway, across appellants' property, and then into and over respondent's adjoining property thereby affording both appellants and respondent access to the highway although appellants, but not respondent, had other means of entrance to their property. In 1950 appellants desired to build a reservoir which would inundate a portion of the road. Appellants also desired to construct and maintain a spillway upon respondent's land in connection with the dam. Appellants discussed the matter with the respondent who orally agreed to quitclaim his easement in the road and grant an easement for the spillway to appellants provided that they build a new road and grant him an easement therein. It was further agreed that appellants would bear the entire cost of the maintenance of the new road for a period of two or three years after its construction. In accordance with such understanding, a written agreement was prepared by respondent's attorney. Appellants refused to sign the written agreement because of the maintenance provision. Respondent then agreed to reduce the period during which appellants were to bear the entire cost of maintenance from two or three years to one but insisted that thereafter appellants should be jointly liable with him for maintenance of the road. When appellants objected to the joint maintenance provision, respondent agreed to a deletion thereof but demanded that he be given a deed to the road. Thereafter, respondent's attorney drafted an agreement which was executed by the parties under date of April 13, 1951, and recorded at the request of respondent's attorney on August 6, 1952.

The executed agreement described the parties' properties, recited that respondent had an easement in the road extending across appellants' property, and declared that appellants intended to construct a dam and spillway which would destroy the road. The agreement further declared that respondent would permit the proposed construction provided that appellants "grant to" respondent "the fee title to" the new road, and that "as a further consideration" to appellants for construction of the new road, respondent would grant to appellants "the right to construct" upon respondent's property "a spillway as an appurtenant to said land." The agreement then provided that the respondent did "by these presents remise, release, and quit claim" to appellants all his "right, title and interest * * * in and to the existing roadway" and that appellants did thereby "grant and convey unto" respondent a specifically described strip of land upon which appellants agreed to construct the new road and to gravel and maintain it during the entire first year following its construction. In accordance with the agreement appellants built the dam and spillway and constructed the new road which was approximately 2,400 feet in length and connected with that portion of the old road which was not replaced, which portion, 405 feet in length, bridged the gap between the new construction and the highway. The parties used the new road, as they had the old road, until the latter part of 1953 when respondent chained and padlocked the gate at the entrance to the highway. Appellants cut the chain and continued to use the road. However, at the request of respondent his attorney protested appellants' action and notified them that they had conveyed the fee to the strip of land upon which the road was located to the respondent and that appellants had no right to use the road or interfere with the gate. Nothing further transpired until 1956 when respondent personally, and in abusive language, ordered one of the appellants off the road, telling him he had no right to use it. Following this occurrence, appellants brought this action seeking to cancel or reform the aforementioned written agreement which was pleaded in haec verba. The complaint alleged as ground for relief that there was no delivery or conveyance with intent to convey a fee title to respondent; that appellants had no knowledge of the recording of the agreement prior to June 4, 1956; that if the agreement were left outstanding there was "reasonable apprehension" that it would "cause serious injury to" appellants; that the agreement was void; and that if respondent were "allowed to retain the fruits of his own fraud, he would be unjustly enriched * * *" No facts in support of these conclusionary allegations were pleaded and no evidence was introduced in support thereof. Appellants did not contradict the facts as above set forth but merely testified that they did not read in detail the agreement which they signed and that they had not intended to include or cover the 405 feet of the old road which was not replaced.

[1, 2] The grant was without a reservation of any kind. Respondent gave up his easement in the old road and appellants agreed to build a new road on the land they conveyed in fee to the defendant. The reference in the deed to the conveyance for roadway purposes was merely descriptive of consideration. As stated in Taylor v. Avila, 175 Cal. 203, at page 206, 165 P. 533, at page 534, concerning appellants' claim to an easement: "The rule that a grant, bargain, and sale deed operates to pass the title in fee, unless it contains in itself some limitation, exception, or reservation, and that it estops the grantor thereafter from claiming any right or estate in the land so conveyed, is too well settled to require citation of authority. We find in the above deed no limitation or qualification whatever upon the fee simple estate granted. The plaintiff, having made such conveyance, is estopped from asserting that it did not convey the entire estate in the land described."

The trial court found that prior to the 13th day of April, 1951, the appellants and respondent were the owners of particular parcels of real property, and that on said day they entered into an agreement in writing by the terms of which the appellants granted to the respondent in fee the real property involved in this action.

[3] Appellants' contention that the findings are contrary to the admissions in the pleadings is without merit. All of the allegations of the complaint are controverted either by a specific or general denial. Respondent was not required, as is contended by appellants, to separately and specifically answer each and every allegation. Section 437 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as amended in 1927, provides in part that the denials may be stated (a) "by reference to specific paragraphs or parts of the complaint"; or (b) "by express admission of certain allegations of the complaint with a general denial of all of the allegations not so admitted"; and (c) "a statement of any new matter constituting a defense * * *." See Edger v. Foster, 48 Cal.App.2d 580, 583, 120 P.2d 134; Reinert v. Proud, 8 Cal.App.2d 169, 170, 47 P.2d 491; 2 Witkin California Procedure (1954) 1512–1513.

[4] Nor is there any merit in appellants' contention that respondent's answer to paragraphs III and IV of the complaint are insufficient. Paragraph III alleges that the lands of the appellants and respondent "have for a long time hitherto been served jointly" by a specifically described road leading from state highway 50, thence over appellants' land to respondent's adjoining land and that "said roadway had at all times been used jointly by plaintiffs and defendant and their respective predecessors in interest, continuously and uninterruptedly, * * * in said location, and in any new location, until on or about the 4th day of June, 1956." Paragraph IV alleges that on the 13th day of April, 1951, appellants signed a "document designated as 'Agreement' purporting to be in part a conveyance between" the respondent and the appellants. The document is then set out in haec verba. The answer specifically denies said allegations and in addition alleges that the roadway serving the lands of respondent is owned by respondent in fee simple. Paragraph IV is also answered.

The judgment is supported by substantial evidence and we find no errors in the record. We conclude that it is not necessary to discuss other matters presented in the briefs.

The judgment is affirmed.

VAN DYKE, P. J., and PEEK, J., concur.

158 Cal.App.2d 658

John EVOLA, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

WENDT CONSTRUCTION COMPANY, a corporation, and United Pacific Insurance Company, a corporation, Defendants, United Pacific Insurance Company, Respondent.

Civ. 18116.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

March 26, 1958.

Civil action by plaintiff seeking judgment from two defendants. From adverse judgment of the Superior Court, County of Contra Costa, Homer W. Patterson, J., plaintiff appealed and defendant moved to dismiss. The District Court of Appeal, Peters, P. J., inter alia, held that where notice of appeal was filed prior to rendition of judgment after the judge had announced his intended ruling, even though notice referred to an appeal from order sustaining demurrer which was a nonappealable order, under rule stating that a notice of appeal filed prior to rendition of judgment but after judge has announced it, may, in discretion of reviewing court, be treated as filed immediately after entry of judgment, appeal would not be dismissed.

Motion to dismiss appeal denied.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐102, 105

An order sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend is a nonappealable order and appeal can only be taken from the judgment of dismissal.

2. Appeal and Error ⊜428(2)

Where notice of appeal was filed before rendition of judgment but after court had announced its intended ruling, even though notice referred to an appeal from a nonappealable order, appeal would not be dismissed under rule providing that a notice of appeal filed prior to rendition of judgment but after intended ruling had been announced by judge, may, in the discretion of the reviewing court, be treated as filed immediately after entry of judgment. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rules 2(a), 2(c).

3. Appeal and Error ⊜807

Where, upon appellant's motion, trial court vacated abandonment of appeal jurisdiction of appeal was revested in appellate court. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rule 19(a).

4. Appeal and Error ⊜439

When a case is pending in the appellate court, the trial court is without jurisdiction to vacate the judgment.

5. Appeal and Error ⊜807

Where appellant filed notice of appeal, and thereafter filed an abandonment of appeal in belief that no judgment had been entered, and upon discovery that a prior judgment had been entered immediately moved to vacate abandonment of first appeal and abandonment was vacated by trial judge, abandonment revested jurisdiction of appeal in trial court which then had jurisdiction to vacate abandonment and revest jurisdiction in appellate court. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rules 2(c), 19(a).

Sol S. Judson, Pittsburg, for appellant.

Weinstock, Anderson, Maloney & Chase, San Francisco, for respondent.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

This is a motion to dismiss the appeal either because the order appealed from is nonappealable, or because the appeal, in any event, has been abandoned.

The plaintiff filed a two count complaint, the first count seeking judgment against Wendt Construction Company and its surety, United Pacific Insurance Company, and the second seeking judgment against Builders' Control Service. After a first amended complaint had been filed, the court on July 12, 1957, sustained, without leave to amend, a demurrer of the United Pacific Insurance Company to the first cause of action. On August 9, 1957, judgment by default was entered in favor of plaintiff and against Wendt Construction Company. On August 12, 1957, the plaintiff appealed "from the Order Sustaining Demurrer Without Leave to Amend plaintiff's First Amended Complaint to First Cause of Action." On September 6, 1957, the court entered its judgment dismissing the complaint against United Pacific Insurance Company. On November 13, 1957, the plaintiff filed an abandonment of his appeal with the county clerk "without prejudice to any future appeal." On the same day, he induced the trial court to enter a second judgment on its order of July 12th sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend. On November 14, 1957, plaintiff purported to appeal from that judgment.

Plaintiff then acquired knowledge of the entry of the first judgment. He now realized that the abandonment of his first appeal had been a mistake. On November 22, 1957, he filed a notice of motion to correct the date of entry of the judgment from September 5, 1957 (should be September 6th) to November 13, 1957, and to vacate the abandonment of the appeal. On December 4, 1957, the trial court denied the motion to correct the date of the judgment but granted the motion to vacate the abandonment of the appeal. After the plaintiff had filed his opening brief on the appeal defendant moved to dismiss the appeal on the grounds stated.

[1] Without reference to what effect, if any, the abandonment of the appeal may have had, the first question presented is whether the appeal of August 12, 1957, can be considered an appeal from the judgment of September 6, 1957. There can be no doubt that the notice of appeal of August 12, 1957, was an attempt to appeal from a nonappealable order. An order sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend is a nonappealable order. Jeffers v. Screen Extras Guild, Inc., 107 Cal.App.2d 253, 237 P.2d 51; Kennedy v. Owen, 85 Cal.App.2d 517, 193 P.2d 141; Futlick v. F. W. Woolworth Co., 149 Cal.App.2d 296, 308 P.2d 405; Lavine v. Jessup, 48 Cal.2d 611, 311 P.2d 8. The appeal can properly be taken only from the judgment of dismissal. Such a judgment was not entered until September 6, 1957. No appeal was taken from that judgment within the 60 days provided by Rule 2(a) of the Rules on Appeal. Prior to 1951 there can be no doubt that under such circumstances the appeal from the order sustaining the demurrer would have to be dismissed. Schmidt v. Townsend, 103 Cal.App.2d 185, 229 P.2d 488. Prior to 1951 relief from the filing of a premature notice of appeal could only be granted under Rule 2(c) as it then read. The rule then provided:

"A notice of appeal filed prior to entry of the judgment, but after its rendition, shall be valid and shall be deemed to have been filed immediately after entry." Of course, when the appeal is taken from the order sustaining a demurrer before judgment has been entered, this rule could not protect the appellant, because the then rule only applied where the notice of appeal was filed "prior to entry of the judgment, but after its rendition." That was the precise holding of Schmidt v. Townsend, 103 Cal.App.2d 185, 229 P.2d 488. But in 1951 a new sentence was added to Rule 2(c). That new sentence reads: "A notice of appeal filed prior to rendition of the judgment, but after the judge has announced his intended ruling, may, in the discretion of the reviewing court for good cause, be treated as filed immediately after entry of the judgment."

[2] The rule, as thus amended, would seem to apply to the situation here presented. The notice of appeal was certainly filed "prior to rendition of the judgment." It is also clear that this was "after the judge has announced his intended ruling" because he had already entered his order sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend. Thus, the instant situation falls directly and literally within the language of the rule.

Respondent urges, however, that the rule as amended was only intended to apply when the premature notice of appeal can be reasonably interpreted to describe the judgment subsequently entered, and cannot be used when the premature notice of appeal describes an order which is itself nonappealable. In the instant case the premature notice of appeal did state that the appeal was from the order sustaining the demurrer and there is no language in the notice that can be interpreted to refer to the judgment subsequently entered.

We do not agree with respondent. There may be many situations where a notice of appeal from a nonappealable order cannot and should not be treated to be a notice of appeal from a judgment subsequently entered. In many situations there might be doubts as to just what the appellant was seeking to have reviewed. But there is no doubt in the instant case. Clearly, the appellant was seeking to have reviewed the propriety of the order sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend. In fact, he so stated in the notice of appeal. He should have waited until a judgment was entered. But by incorrectly stating that he was appealing from the order instead of from the judgment, he should not be precluded from securing a review of what all concerned knew he was seeking to have reviewed. No one was misled. No prejudice to the respondent appears. Respondent is simply trying to take advantage of a mistake made by appellant. While respondent is not to be censured because of making this attempt, this court should not aid respondent unless compelled to do so by controlling principles of law. Even before 1951 this court held that an incorrect designation of the order appealed from and a wrong date would not invalidate a notice of appeal. Holden v. California Emp. Stabilization Comm., 101 Cal.App.2d 427, 225 P.2d 634.

There is case authority to support the position here taken. In Smith v. Smith, 126 Cal.App.2d 194, 272 P.2d 118, the trial court on May 20, 1953, sustained a demurrer. Notice of appeal from that order was filed July 10, 1953. The judgment was not entered until October 15, 1953. The court very briefly disposed of the point here involved with the following comment (126 Cal.App.2d at page 195, 272 P.2d at page 119):

> "Since no appeal lies from an order sustaining demurrer [citing a case], we interpret the notice of appeal as intended to take an appeal from the judgment as that is what the parties have assumed."

It is true that there is contrary authority. In Futlick v. F. W. Woolworth Co., 149 Cal.App.2d 296, 308 P.2d 405, 406, the factual situation was precisely like the situation here presented and also similar to that presented in the Smith case, supra. The appellate court dismissed the appeal, holding that since the order sustaining the demurrer was not appealable "this court must therefore dismiss the appeal." The court made no reference to Rule 2(c), and did not refer to the prior case of Smith v. Smith, supra. It placed its main reliance on the case of Schmidt v. Townsend, 103 Cal.App.2d 185, 229 P.2d 488, quoting from that case at some length. But the Schmidt case was decided under Rule 2(c) as it read prior to the 1951 amendment to that rule. The court was careful to point out that the "January, 1951, amendments to Rule 2(c) are not applicable to this case." (103 Cal.App.2d at page 187, 229 P.2d at page 489.) For these reasons the Futlick case cannot be considered determinative of the present motion.

It is our opinion that Rule 2(c) is here applicable. Exercising the discretion conferred on this court by that rule, we therefore hold that the notice of appeal from the order sustaining the demurrer should be treated as a notice of appeal from the judgment subsequently entered on September 6, 1957.

[3] Respondent next contends that the appeal has been abandoned. It is true that on November 13, 1957, the plaintiff, under Rule 19(a) filed an abandonment of the appeal. That rule provides that at any time before the filing of the record in the reviewing court the appellant may file with the county clerk an abandonment of the appeal. Such filing "shall operate to dismiss the appeal and to restore the jurisdiction of the superior court." Thereafter, on November 22, 1957, appellant moved to vacate the abandonment of the appeal. It is averred by appellant in the accompanying affidavit that the abandonment was filed after a search of the file had failed to disclose the existence of the judgment of September 6, 1957, and in the belief, based upon reasonable grounds fully set forth in the affidavit, that no judgment had been entered. This is substantiated by the fact that appellant convinced the trial court that no such judgment had been entered because the trial court entered a second judgment. Then when it was discovered a prior judgment had been entered appellant immediately moved to vacate the abandonment of his first appeal. The trial court obviously believed that the abandonment had been filed under a reasonable misapprehension and because of excusable neglect because, on December 4, 1957, it entered its minute order granting the motion to vacate. This minute order recites that "the Court having fully considered same and being duly advised in the premises, orders that said motion to vacate abandonment of appeal be and the same is hereby granted." By so vacating the abandonment, jurisdiction of the appeal was revested in the appellate court.

[4, 5] Respondent contends that the notice of appeal filed November 14, 1957, from the judgment of November 13, 1957, operated to deprive the trial court of jurisdiction over the proceeding so that it had no power to vacate the abandonment of the appeal taken from the order of July 12, 1957, citing Kalmus v. Kalmus, 103 Cal. App.2d 405, 230 P.2d 57. But while it is true that when a case is pending in the appellate court the trial court is without jurisdiction to vacate the judgment, that rule is not here applicable. The judgment of November 13, 1957, was a nullity. A judgment had already been entered on September 6, 1957. The notice of appeal from that second judgment was also null and void. In November of 1957 the only thing pending was an appeal from the order of July 12, 1957, which we have interpreted as an appeal from the judgment of September 6, 1957. The abandonment revested jurisdiction of that appeal in the trial court. Thus, the trial court had jurisdiction to vacate the abandonment because it still had jurisdiction of the appeal. As already held, such actions revested the jurisdiction of this court.

The motion to dismiss the appeal is denied.

BRAY and FRED B. WOOD, JJ., concur.

158 Cal.App.2d 685

Edith HARVEY, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

George H. WHYTE, Joe Pepi, Mike Levin, and Allied Building Supply Co., a California Corporation, sued herein as Doe I, Defendants, George H. Whyte, Appellant.

Civ. 22547.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

March 26, 1958.

Action in the nature of a creditor's bill to enforce judgment against personalty belonging to judgment debtor corporation sold at execution sale to enforce judgment against principal stockholder of corporation. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Roger Alton Pfaff, J., rendered judgment for plaintiff, and purchaser at execution sale appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Herndon, J., held, inter alia, that action was not an improper collateral attack on execution sale and was not barred by laches.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Corporations ⇐548(10)

In action in nature of creditor's bill to enforce money judgment against personalty of judgment debtor corporation sold under execution issued on judgment against principal stockholder of corporation, amount recoverable included interest on plaintiff's judgment from date of entry. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 720.

2. Interest ⇐39(3)

All final judgments for recovery of money bear interest from date of entry.

3. Corporations ⇐548(1)

Action in nature of creditor's bill commenced in September of 1954 to enforce judgment against personalty of judgment debtor corporation sold in October 1951 under execution issued on judgment against principal stockholder of corporation was not barred by "laches," though two-year statute of limitations had run against action on levying officer's bond for wrongful execution sale. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 339, 720.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Laches".

4. Equity ⇐72(1)

Delay alone does not constitute "laches," in absence of resultant injury or prejudice.

5. Execution ⇐271, 287

Rule of caveat emptor applies to execution sales, and purchaser at such sale is chargeable with notice that he acquires no better title than judgment debtor had and he cannot recover from levying officer because of any defect in title.

6. Execution ⇐103
Judgment ⇐518

Action in nature of creditor's bill to enforce judgment against personalty of judgment debtor corporation sold under execution issued on judgment against principal stockholder of corporation was not an improper collateral attack upon judgment against stockholder or upon execution to enforce such judgment. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 720.

7. Execution ⇐262

Sale of personalty belonging to corporation under execution issued on judgment against principal stockholder of corporation did not affect corporation's title to such personalty.

8. Corporations ⇐548(1)

That judgment against corporation was not rendered until after personalty belonging to corporation had been sold under execution issued on judgment against principal stockholder of corporation did not preclude maintenance of action in nature of creditor's bill to enforce judgment against corporation against personalty sold at execution sale to enforce judgment against stockholder. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 720.

9. Judgment ⇐847

Payment of adequate consideration for assignment of judgment against corporation for attorneys' fees was not a prerequisite to enforcement of judgment by assignee for collection purposes only by action in nature of creditor's bill to enforce judgment against personalty of judgment debtor corporation sold under execution issued on judgment against principal stockholder of corporation. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 720.

10. Assignments ⇐126

Ordinarily, defense that assignment was made without consideration cannot be raised by debtor in action by assignee.

11. Assignments ⇐132

Issue as to adequacy of consideration for an assignment can properly arise only where there is some substantial question concerning validity of assignment or assignee's ownership.

Roland Maxwell, Paul H. Marston, and Richard W. Olsen, Pasadena, for appellant.

Roy B. Woolsey, Los Angeles, for respondent.

HERNDON, Justice.

Respondent is the assignee of a money judgment rendered on December 20, 1951, against Allied Building Supply Co., a corporation, hereafter called "the corporation." Appellant is the purchaser of certain property at an execution sale held on October 18, 1951, to enforce a judgment rendered against one Lee H. Stroble in an unrelated action entitled "Ennis v. Stroble". The property so purchased by appellant actually was owned by the corporation and not by the judgment debtor Stroble. Both appellant and the marshal who conducted the sale had been so informed prior to the sale.

Respondent brought the instant action in the nature of a creditor's bill resting appellant's liability on the factual premise that appellant held property of the corporation, respondent's judgment debtor, and claimed it adversely. This action invokes section 720 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which so far as here material provides: "If it appears that a person * * * alleged to have property of the judgment debtor, or to be indebted to him, claims an interest in the property adverse to him, or denies the debt, the judgment creditor may maintain an action against such person * * * for the recovery of such interest or debt; * * *"

Stroble was the principal stockholder of the corporation, which became inactive in 1951. Thereafter Stroble carried on a contracting business as an individual at the same address, using the fictitious name "Allied Building Supply Company". As above indicated, the Ennis judgment ran against Stroble individually whereas respondent's judgment ran against the corporation. Immediately before the marshal commenced the execution sale pursuant to a writ issued under the Ennis judgment, Stroble announced to all persons present the fact that none of the property on the premises belonged to him but was the property of the corporation. Nevertheless, the marshal proceeded with the sale and appellant purchased certain items of the personal property for the sum of $626.50. There was testimony at the trial of the instant case that the property was actually worth from $12,000 to $25,000.

Appellant does not question the sufficiency of the evidence to support the finding of the trial court that the property which he purchased under the judgment against Stroble was not owned by Stroble, but was in fact the property of the corporation, respondent's judgment debtor. Neither does appellant question the fact that the value of said property clearly exceeded the amount of the instant judgment.

We find appellant's contentions on this appeal to be unsubstantial and wholly without merit. They are as follows: (1) That the judgment is erroneous in amount; (2) that respondent was guilty of laches; (3) that the instant action involves a collateral attack upon the execution sale at which appellant purchased the property; (4) that respondent could not properly attack the execution sale because her judgment was rendered after the sale; (5) that payment of an adequate consideration for the judgment was essential to respondent's right to recover in equity.

[1, 2] Appellant's assertion that the judgment is excessive in amount is not borne out by the record. The error in appellant's computation arises from his failure to add the amount of interest which accrued upon the original judgment between December 20, 1951, and September 29, 1952. All final judgments for the recovery of money bear interest from the date of entry. Mulligan v. Wilson, 94 Cal.App.2d 286, 292, 210 P.2d 526.

[3] Appellant's plea of laches clearly was not sustainable. The judgment sought to be enforced herein was rendered on December 20, 1951. Execution was levied against appellant upon all property of the corporation in his possession or under his control. Appellant made a negative response to the writ and it was returned nulla bona in May of 1953. This action was commenced in September of 1954. It is not contended that the action is barred by any applicable statute of limitations.

[4] Delay alone does not constitute laches. There must be present the additional element of resultant injury or prejudice. Kirkpatrick v. Tapo Oil Co., 144 Cal.App.2d 404, 412, 301 P.2d 274; Lubin v. Lubin, 144 Cal.App.2d 781, 794, 302 P.2d 49. The only claim of prejudice asserted by appellant is stated in his opening brief as follows: "The Statute of Limitations against a Sheriff or Marshal for a wrongful Execution Sale is two years. Code of Civil Procedure Section 339. Had the present action been filed within the two years, the defendant could have cross-complained or joined the Marshal in this action, seeking to make him liable on his bond."

[5] The fallacy in this argument is self-evident. The purchaser at an execution sale cannot recover from the levying officer because of any defect in title. Dreisbach v. Braden, 40 Cal.App. 407, 181 P. 262. A purchaser at an execution sale is chargeable with notice that he acquires no better title than the judgment debtor has; the rule of caveat emptor applies with all its force to such sales. Noble v. Beach, 21 Cal.2d 91, 94, 130 P.2d 426; Anglo-California Trust Co. v. Oakland Railways, 193 Cal. 451, 468–469, 225 P. 452; Bullard v. McArdle, 98 Cal. 355, 357, 33 P. 193; 19 Cal.Jur.2d 571, Sec. 158. Since appellant could have had no cause of action against the marshal this claim of prejudice is clearly without foundation.

[6, 7] Appellant contends that the instant action constitutes a collateral attack upon the execution sale which cannot be maintained unless the sale is void on its face. Milstein v. Turner, 89 Cal.App.2d 296, 299, 200 P.2d 799, the only authority cited in support of this contention, does not sustain it. The cited case involved a collateral attack upon the judgment and upon the order for the issuance of the writ. Nothing of the kind is involved here. There is no question here concerning the validity either of the judgment in "Ennis v. Stroble" or of the writ issued thereon. The evidence in this case simply showed that the property sold under the writ was owned not by Stroble but by the corporation. Hence, the title of the corporation was unaffected by the sale.

[8] Equally without merit is the contention that respondent's cause of action was defective because the judgment which she sought to enforce was rendered subsequent to the date of the execution sale at which appellant was the purchaser. We have here no problem of determining priorities among several executing creditors as was the situation in R. Walter & Company v. Bickham & Moore, 122 U.S. 320, 7 S.Ct. 1197, 30 L.Ed. 1185, the only authority cited by appellant in support of this contention.

[9–11] Finally, we must reject the meagerly argued contention that respondent's right to enforce the judgment was dependent upon pleading and proof that she paid an adequate consideration for it. The defense that an assignment was made without consideration is not one which ordinarily may be raised by the debtor in an action by the assignee. Caulfield v. Sanders, 17 Cal. 569, 572; Moore v. Waddle, 34 Cal. 145, 148–149; 4 Am.Jur. 296, 297. The issue as to the adequacy of the consideration for an assignment can properly arise only where there is some substantial question concerning its validity or concerning the assignee's ownership. 6 C.J.S. Assignments § 132, p. 1184. In the instant case there can be no question about the validity of the assignment. It is undisputed that respondent was and is an assignee for collection purposes only. The judgment which she here seeks to enforce represents a recovery for attorneys' fees rendered by respondent's assignor, who is her attorney in this action and on this appeal.

The judgment is affirmed.

FOX, P. J., and KINCAID, J. pro tem., concur.

R. W. AGNEW, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

CITY OF LOS ANGELES, a municipal corporation, and Grover Wintz, Chief of the Electrical Division of the Department of Building and Safety of the City of Los Angeles, Defendants and Respondents.*

Civ. 22713.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

March 24, 1958.
Rehearing Denied April 22, 1958.
Hearing Granted May 21, 1958.

Suit by an electrical contractor, challenging the constitutionality of and to obtain an injunction restraining the defendants from enforcing the provisions of the Electrical Code of the City of Los Angeles. Judgment for the defendants in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Frank G. Swain, J., and the contractor appeals. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that the licensing of contractors is not a matter of state wide concern so as to preclude local regulations by chartered city; that the provisions of the Municipal Code are not unconstitutional as impinging upon the general laws; and fact that there could be prosecution and subsequent possible imprisonment for failure to pay the business license tax, did not constitute imprisonment for debt.

Judgment affirmed.

See also, 319 P.2d 400.

1. Municipal Corporations ⇐592(1)

While it was legislative intent to declare that licensing and regulation of contractors by the state should be the only licensing and regulation, such did not limit a local government from protecting property and life through the enforcement of local regulations as to quality and character of the installations. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 7000 et seq., 7110.

2. Licenses ⇐6(2)

A city has power to prescribe the quality of electrical materials and methods to be used for the installation thereof and for the inspection thereof and to collect proper fees therefor.

* Opinion vacated 330 P.2d 385.

3. Municipal Corporations ⇐592(1)

Provisions of the Electrical Code of Los Angeles respecting electrical installations, constituted a valid exercise of power by the city to establish and enforce local regulations as to the quality and character of installations by an electrical contractor who is licensed by state law and are not invalid on the ground that the general law has fully occupied the field. West's Ann. Bus. & Prof.Code, § 7000 et seq.; West's Ann.Const. art. 11, §§ 6, 8, 11.

4. Municipal Corporations ⇐592(1)

While a particular matter may be a state affair and subject to state regulation, it is not immune from local taxation for revenue purposes where the tax does not interfere with the field preempted by the state.

5. Licenses ⇐6(1)
Municipal Corporations ⇐592(1)

Power of Los Angeles to collect a license tax for revenue purposes was conferred upon it by the charter framed for its government, pursuant to the Constitution and such power is a "municipal affair" within the Constitution and cannot be withdrawn or abrogated by general laws enacted by the Legislature. West's Ann. Const. art. 11, §§ 6, 8.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Municipal Affair".

6. Licenses ⇐11(5)
Municipal Corporations ⇐592(1)

The State Contractors Licensing Act was not intended to diminish a city's power to tax for revenue purposes, but was enacted primarily to protect the general public against imposition respecting structural improvements to real property where special skills are required, and its licensing requirements were adopted for the same purpose. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, § 7000 et seq.

7. Municipal Corporations ⇐592(1)

Requirement of Electrical Code of Los Angeles that contractor will furnish the city with his license registration certificate number, is not invalid as impinging upon the provisions of the general laws licensing electrical contractors. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, § 7000 et seq.

8. Constitutional Law ⇐83(3)

Prosecution and subsequent possible imprisonment for failure to pay business license tax imposed by the city of Los Angeles is not violative of the Constitution as constituting an imprisonment for debt. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, § 7000 et seq.; West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 15.

9. Licenses ⇐5½

Municipalities have power to impose business license taxes for revenue purposes and to make a violation thereof a misdemeanor.

R. W. Agnew, in pro. per.

Roger Arnebergh, City Atty., Ralph J. Eubank, Deputy City Atty., Los Angeles, for respondents.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff is an electrical contractor duly licensed by the state pursuant to the provisions of the Business and Professions Code. As was said in Agnew v. City of Los Angeles, 110 Cal.App.2d 612, 616, 243 P.2d 73, 75:

"The Business and Professions Code, div. 3, ch. 9, sometimes called the 'Contractors' License Act,' creates a 'Contractors' State License Board,' referred to as the board, Bus. & Prof.Code, § 7000; defines those coming within the jurisdiction of the board, including electrical contractors, § 7026; prohibits any person from engaging in the business or acting in the capacity of a contractor without first having obtained a state license, and makes it a misdemeanor to do so, §§ 7028, 7030; provides for investigation and examination of applicants for license, § 7072; requires the payment of an application fee, annual renewal fees, and penalties, § 7137; makes elaborate provision for investigation of the acts of contractors, accusations against them, causes for disciplinary action, hearings, review, discipline, prosecution of violations of any law, and renewal or reissuance of suspended or revoked licenses, §§ 155, 7090–7122; and vests broad powers in the board relative to the licensing and regulation of contractors. §§ 7000–7145.

"Wilful or deliberate disregard and violation of the building laws of the state, or of any political subdivision thereof, constitutes a cause for disciplinary action. § 7110. Section 7071.5 provides that before reinstatement after disciplinary action the board may require the applicant to give a surety bond or make a cash deposit conditioned upon his compliance with the provisions of the Act. Every person injured by the unlawful acts or omissions of such contractor may maintain an action on the bond or a claim on the deposit."

This action was instituted by plaintiff, challenging the constitutionality of and to obtain an injunction restraining defendants from enforcing against him the provisions of Sections 93.0201, 93.0204, 93.0205(2), 93.0501, 93.0504 and 93.0505 of the Electrical Code of the City of Los Angeles, and Sections 11.00, 21.03, 21.06, 21.08, 21.09, 21.12(a), 21.12(b), 21.188 and 21.190 of the Municipal Code of defendant city.

Section 93.0201 provides that no person shall install, alter, reconstruct or repair any electric wiring regulated by defendant city's Electric Code without a permit from the Department of Building and Safety (hereinafter referred to as the Department).

Section 93.0204 requires that an application for such permit shall be made to the department on a form furnished by the latter. The required information consists of a description of the proposed electric wiring, plans, and specifications and a suitable diagram, and "such additional information as may be considered necessary by the department for the proper enforcement of the provisions of this Code".

Section 93.0205 enumerates those to whom permits may be issued, including (Section (a)–2) Electrical contractors "registered" with the department.

Section 93.0501 is entitled "Contractor Registration" and provides in Subdivision (a) that "Before any contractor licensed by the State of California shall be issued any permits, he shall be registered with the Department. The applicant shall provide sufficient information to enable the Department to determine if there is compliance with all applicable City and State Laws.

"(b) To register as a contractor, the responsible managing officer or responsible managing employee shall personally appear at an office of the Department and provide the following information:

"1. The business name and address as listed by the Contractors State License Board; and

"2. The names of the owners or officers of a corporation; and

"3. The Contractors State License with the number and classification; and

"4. The signature of the responsible managing officer or the responsible managing employee as listed by the Contractors State License Board; and

"5. License Tax Registration Certificate number.

"(c) The registrant shall notify the Department within 10 days of any change in the facts required by Subsection (b).

"(d) No registration shall authorize any person to do work which is not within the specific classification of the registration.

"(e) Every such registration shall expire on June 30 of each year."

Section 93.0504 defines the regulations to which the foregoing certificate of registration shall be subject:

"1. Certificates of Registration shall not be transferable.

"2. Certificates of Registration shall become void 30 days after the holder who qualified by examination or experience ceases to have effective control over the work performed.

"3. Every Certificate of Registration shall expire on December 31 of each year unless sooner revoked or suspended by the Board. A Certificate of Registration may be renewed within 30 days after expiration without examination upon the payment of the annual registration fee as prescribed in this Code.

"4. The Board may revoke or suspend any Certificate of Registration for failure, refusal, or neglect of the holder to comply with the provisions of this Code or any provision of this Code or any provision of Section 98.00 of the Municipal Code as set forth therein.

"5. No Certificate of Registration shall authorize any person to do work which is not within the specific classification of the Certificate of Registration."

Section 93.0505 has no application to the issue presented on this appeal.

Before proceeding to a discussion of appellant's attack on the provisions of the Municipal Code, we shall give consideration to his contention that the foregoing sections of the Electrical Code of defendant city are in conflict with the general laws relating to state licensed contractors.

Appellant contends that the licensing of contractors throughout the state is a matter of general and statewide concern and is not a municipal affair that concerns only the inhabitants of a chartered city and which is subject to local regulations. That the general law has fully occupied the field; that his license from the state grants him permission to conduct his business at any place within the state and that this permission cannot be circumscribed by local authorities.

Appellant relies heavily upon the cases of Horwith v. City of Fresno, 74 Cal.App. 2d 443, 168 P.2d 767; City and County of San Francisco v. Boss, 83 Cal.App.2d 445, 189 P.2d 32; Collins v. Priest, 95 Cal.App. 2d 179, 212 P.2d 269; Lynch v. City of Los Angeles, 114 Cal.App.2d 115, 249 P.2d 856; Agnew v. City of Los Angeles, 110 Cal.App.2d 612, 243 P.2d 73; and Agnew v. City of Culver City, 147 Cal.App.2d 144, 304 P.2d 788.

It is undeniably true, as urged by appellant, that these cases support his claim that while Article XI, section 11 of our State Constitution authorizes a city to "make and enforce within its limits all such local, police, sanitary and other regulations", the constitutional provision restricts such power to regulations "not in conflict with general laws". And the cited cases sustain appellant in his position that a local ordinance is in conflict with general law if it attempts to impose additional requirements in a field which is fully occupied by the general law.

[1] However, the foregoing cases point out that while it was clearly the intention of the legislature to declare that the licensing and regulation of contractors by the state shall be the only licensing and regulation in the state, nevertheless, as was stated in Horwith v. City of Fresno, supra, 74 Cal.App.2d at page 449, 168 P.2d at page 770, "This does not limit the right of local governmental agencies to protect property and life through the enforcement of local regulations as to the quality and character of the installations. The right to enforce local ordinances is still in the hands of municipalities through the power of inspections and permits".

Conceding that the general laws were intended to be the only licensing and regulation of contractors in the state nevertheless, as declared in Agnew v. City of Los Angeles, supra, 110 Cal.App.2d at page 616, 243 P.2d at page 75, "This does not limit the right of a city or county to protect life and property by the enforcement of local regulations as to the character and quality of electrical installations. (Bus. & Prof.Code, sec. 7110.)".

The question then arises, do the challenged provisions of the Electrical Code of defendant city attempt to provide the means by which an electrical contractor with a state license may be denied the right to contract or work in the City of Los Angeles or do they come within the category of valid enactments by a municipality designed to protect property and life through the medium of local regulations as to the quality and character of electrical installations? We are inclined to the latter view.

[2] Appellant concedes that, "the city has the power to prescribe the quality of electrical materials and the methods to be used for the installation of that material, and of inspection concerning the electrical installation (save in the exceptions announced in Hall v. City of Taft, 47 Cal.2d 177 [302 P.2d 574]), and the right to collect reasonable and proper fees for inspection, and for the purpose of receipting for such inspection fees * * *"

While appellant objects to the fact that the ordinance denominates the requirements of the Electrical Code as "Permits", it is at once manifest that if the "permit" provisions of the ordinance (Sections 93.0201, 93.0204, and 93.0205(2)) relate to the quality and character of electrical installations, then such provisions are valid irrespective of the particular name by which they are designated.

[3] If defendant city is to protect itself against electrical installations inimical to life and property then surely it has a right to know who contemplates such installations. To us it clearly appears that is all Section 93.0501 requires. It provides that the state licensed contractor or his representative shall furnish the department with five simple and purely informational facts within the applicant's knowledge, and which are hereinbefore narrated. Except for the requirement that the contractor shall furnish his "License Tax Registration Certificate number", (a business license tax, the validity of which will hereafter be considered), Section 93.0501 and its related sections here under attack, merely provide a procedure whereby the contractor can reasonably secure a permit and defendant city and its department be assured that the applicant is a person lawfully authorized by the state to do the electrical work in a manner that will not endanger the life and property of residents of the municipality. No fee is required, no bond exacted, no examination of contractor is demanded, no investigation is conducted. To summarize, no regulatory measures previously condemned in the cases relied upon by appellant are present in the provisions of the electrical ordinance here under attack. We therefore conclude that the challenged Electrical Code provisions constitute a valid exercise of the power of defendant city to establish and enforce local regulations as to the quality and character of installations by an electrical contractor who is licensed by state law.

We come now to a consideration of appellant's contention that certain sections of the Municipal Code of defendant city (Article I, chapter 2) entitled "Licenses and Sales Taxes" are unconstitutional because they impinge upon the general laws that have preempted the field of licensing electrical contractors.

The following will serve as an epitome of the general scheme of the taxing legislation here under consideration. A Los Angeles city license tax must be paid in advance annually by every person who is engaged within the city in a great variety of business activities. (Section 21.03.) Contractors and independent contractors are among the businesses specified. (Sections 21.188, 21.190.) In the case of these businesses the tax is measured by annual gross receipts commencing with a license fee in the sum of $12 per calendar year for the first $12,000 or less of gross receipts. Upon the payment of the tax the City Clerk issues a "License Tax Registration Certificate" which remains in force and effect thereafter until suspended or revoked for the licensee's failure to pay such tax as may validly accrue in each subsequent year. (Section 21.08(b).) Such revocation or suspension can be effected only after appropriate notice and hearing. (Section 21.12.)

[4–6] It is now well established that while a particular matter may be a state affair and subject to state regulation it is not immune from local taxation for revenue purposes where the tax does not interfere with the field preempted by the state (In re Galusha, 184 Cal. 697, 699, 195 P. 406; City of San Mateo v. Mullin, 59 Cal. App.2d 652, 654, 139 P.2d 351). The power of the City of Los Angeles to collect a license tax for revenue purposes was conferred upon it by the charter framed for its government, pursuant to the provisions of Section 8 of Article XI of our State Constitution. Such power is a "municipal affair" within the meaning of that phrase as used in Section 6 of Article XI of the Constitution, and therefore, cannot be withdrawn or abrogated by general laws enacted by the legislature (Ex Parte Braun, 141 Cal. 204, 213, 74 P. 780; Ainsworth v. Bryant, 34 Cal.2d 465, 469, 211 P.2d 564). Therefore, it cannot be said that the State Contractors Licensing Act (Bus. & Prof. Code, Sec. 7000 et seq.) was intended to have the effect of diminishing defendant city's power to tax for revenue purposes. The contractors license law was enacted for the basic purpose of protecting the general public against imposition respecting structural improvements to real property in cases where special skill, training and ability are required, and its licensing requirements were adopted for the same purpose (Bowline v. Gries, 97 Cal.App.2d 741, 743, 218 P.2d 806; Franklin v. Nat C. Goldstone Agency, 33 Cal.2d 628, 632, 204 P.2d 37).

Answering the same contention advanced by appellant herein, this court said in Franklin v. Peterson, 87 Cal.App.2d 727, 731, 197 P.2d 788, 790, "Conceding that a license requirement cannot be imposed upon a lawyer, nor his business be regulated by ordinance, the tax provided for in the ordinance here under consideration is levied upon the business of practicing law, rather than upon a person because he is an attorney at law. A license to practice law does not carry with it exemption from taxation." And, at page 732 of 87 Cal.App.2d, at page 790 of 197 P.2d we further stated, "The Los Angeles ordinance does not attempt to regulate the professions, business or occupations which are subject to the tax. It provides only for a license for revenue purposes, and is not a regulatory measure affecting the business or profession so taxed." The ordinance under consideration in the case just cited was the same Section 21.190 of the Los Angeles Municipal Code that is in issue here. And, the case was cited with approval by the Supreme Court in City of Los Angeles v. Rancho Homes, Inc., 40 Cal.2d 764, 771, 256 P.2d 305.

Since defendant city's license tax registration certificate, as stated therein, "* * * signifies that the person named on the face hereof has fulfilled the requirements of section 21.03 L.A.M.C., by registering with the City Clerk for the purpose of paying license taxes for the classification of business for which the certificate is issued * * *", it cannot be said that it purports either to authorize or prohibit anything in connection with the licensee's conduct of a lawful business in a lawful manner, nor does it seek to regulate the activities of a contractor in a field fully occupied by the state.

[7] The requirement of the Electrical Code of defendant city (Section 93.0501, supra) that the contractor shall furnish defendant city with his "License Registration Certificate number" does not therefore, impinge upon the provisions of the general laws licensing electrical contractors.

[8] Appellant next contends that if defendant city is empowered to impose a business license tax, it cannot enforce the provisions thereof by "criminal sanctions", but is restricted to recovering the amounts thereof in a civil action. Section 11.00 of defendant city's Municipal Code provides, among other things, that a violation of its terms may be prosecuted and punished as a misdemeanor.

We are not in accord with appellant's contention that such prosecution and subsequent possible imprisonment for failure to pay the business license tax, is a violation of Section 15, Art. I of our State Constitution in that it constitutes imprisonment for debt.

As was said in In re Nowak, 184 Cal. 701, 708, 195 P. 402, 405, "Ordinance No. 39,600 (New Series) provides that this tax may be recovered in a civil action as a debt. It also provides that the act of doing business without the payment of the tax shall be a crime, and shall be punishable as such. For the commission of this crime petitioner has been imprisoned. This imprisonment does not violate his constitutional right not to be arrested for debt."

And in In re Diehl, 8 Cal.App. 51, 55, 96 P. 98, 100, we find the following pertinent language: "The misdemeanor consists in a refusal to obey the provisions of the ordinance, and the fine authorized to be imposed upon conviction is not intended as a payment of the license tax, but as a punishment for defying the commands of the ordinance."

To us there appears to be no inherent difference between carrying on the business of a state-licensed electrical contractor and carrying on any other business pursuit (In re Johnson, 47 Cal.App. 465, 469, 190 P. 852).

"The levy and collection of taxes by a city having a charter under our Constitution is a municipal affair. The power is broad, being limited only by the charter and the Constitution." City of Glendale v. Trondsen, 48 Cal.2d 93, 98, 308 P.2d 1, 3. (Emphasis added.) It cannot therefore, be said that the State Contractors Licensing Act in any way limits or restricts the constitutional and charter right of defendant city to collect a business license tax for revenue purposes.

The case of Sivertsen v. City of Menlo Park, 17 Cal.2d 197, 109 P.2d 928, involved a state-licensed painting contractor who sought to enjoin a criminal prosecution against him for failure to pay a business license tax. A reading of pages 198 and 199 of 17 Cal.2d, at pages 929 and 930 of 109 P.2d of that case reveals a strikingly similar factual background in that case to the one now engaging our attention. Since the issue before the Supreme Court was the correctness of the trial court's order dismissing the action after a general demurrer was sustained, it is implicit in the decision of the Supreme Court that a proceeding to enjoin the criminal prosecution of a state licensed contractor for failure to pay a municipal business license tax, cannot be maintained on any theory, including the one advanced herein. Otherwise the order sustaining the general demurrer would have been erroneous.

We perceive no invasion upon the general law, which is the only "regulation" authorized for state licensed contractors, by a prosecution for failure to pay a business license tax, as no such invasion would be present in a prosecution of a state licensed contractor for violation of a municipal ordinance prohibiting the blocking of streets with trucks, barriers or other paraphernalia used in the contracting business, without first obtaining a permit from the municipality so to do, or of a state licensed contractor who established and conducted his business in violation of a municipal ordinance, restricting the area to single family residences.

[9] And finally, an unbroken line of decisions in this state has consistently sustained the power of municipalities to impose business license taxes for revenue purposes, and making the violation thereof a misdemeanor. Among such cases, see City of Los Angeles v. Belridge Oil Co., 42 Cal. 2d 823, 271 P.2d 5; City of Los Angeles v. Rancho Homes, Inc., supra; In re Nowak, supra; In re Galusha, supra; Ex parte Braun, supra; City of Los Angeles v. Southern Pacific Railroad Co., 61 Cal. 59; Rexall Drug Co. v. Petersen, 113 Cal. App.2d 528, 248 P.2d 433; Franklin v. Peterson, supra.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is affirmed.

FOURT, J., and DRAPEAU, J. pro tem., concur.

158 Cal.App.2d 801

Loraine D. HIRTZ, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Robert C. PORTER and San Carlos Feed and Fuel Company, a corporation, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 17428.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

March 28, 1958.

Action for injuries sustained by plaintiff when her automobile was struck from rear by defendant's truck. The Superior Court, County of San Mateo, A. R. Cotton, J., rendered judgment in favor of defendant and truck driver, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Draper, J., held that instructions that burden of proof was met as to contributory negligence if it were shown by evidence regardless of who introduced it, and that if plaintiff were guilty of slightest amount of negligence which proximately contributed to accident verdict must be for defendant were erroneous, but not prejudicial in view of other instructions.

Affirmed.

1. Automobiles ⇐246(26, 60)
Trial ⇐296(4)

In action for injuries sustained by plaintiff when her automobile was struck from rear by defendant's truck, instructions that burden of proof was met as to contributory negligence if it were shown by evidence regardless of who introduced it and that if plaintiff were guilty of slightest amount of negligence which proximately contributed to accident verdict must be for defendant were erroneous, but not prejudicial in view of other instructions.

2. Automobiles ⇐246(14)
Trial ⇐296(3)

In action for injuries sustained by plaintiff when her automobile was struck from rear by defendant's truck, instruction that defendant was not required to anticipate that plaintiff might violate the law, if jury found that plaintiff did, erroneously failed to advise that assumption that another would obey law is available only to one who himself is obeying the law but was not prejudicial in view of other instructions.

3. Automobiles ⇐172(7)

A driver is not necessarily guilty of negligence because his vehicle strikes the rear of another vehicle.

Low & Duryea, San Francisco, for appellant.

Ropers & Majeski, Redwood City, for respondents.

DRAPER, Justice.

This is an action for damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff when her automobile was struck from the rear by a cement mixer truck of defendant corporation, driven by defendant Porter. The two vehicles were in the center lane of three northbound lanes on El Camino Real in Redwood City. The accident occurred in the early afternoon of a clear day in August. There was evidence from which the jury could conclude that plaintiff stopped her car rather suddenly some 25 feet short of the crosswalk on James Avenue, first applying her brakes at a time when the signal for El Camino traffic was still green. Jury verdict was in favor of defendants, and plaintiff appeals from judgment thereon.

[1] Plaintiff asserts error in the giving of each of three instructions. Two of the challenged instructions read as follows:

"* * * Ordinarily, the burden rests upon the defendant to prove contributory negligence, the exception being where such contributory negligence appears from the testimony offered on behalf of the plaintiff. In other words, the burden of proof is met as to contributory negligence if it is shown by the evidence in the case regardless of who introduces the evidence."

and

"If you find from the evidence that the plaintiff was guilty of the slightest amount of negligence which proximately contributed to the accident in question and the resulting damage, your verdict must be for the defendant."

Precisely the same instructions are fully considered in Hickenbottom v. Jeppesen, 144 Cal.App.2d 115, 122–123, 300 P.2d 689, and are held to be erroneous, although not prejudicially so. Here the jury was otherwise given full and correct instructions as to the burden of proof of contributory negligence and, as in Hickenbottom, was properly instructed as to the definition of contributory negligence and proximate cause. Plaintiff emphasizes that the instructions are the same as those presented by the same counsel in Hickenbottom. However, the decision on appeal in that case was not rendered until after trial of the case at bar. Thus no inference of calculation or misconduct can be drawn from that disapproval of the instructions here offered.

Plaintiff also assigns as error the giving of the following instruction:

"I instruct you that under the law a person operating a motor vehicle is not bound to anticipate that another person operating a vehicle will violate the law; and in this case I instruct you that the defendant was not required under the law to anticipate that plaintiff might violate the law, if you find that plaintiff did."

[2] This instruction is erroneous in failing to advise that the assumption that another will obey the law is available only to one who himself is obeying the law. Fowler v. Allen, 49 Cal.App.2d 214, 219, 121 P.2d 41. However, the error is not prejudicial where, as here, a proper instruction (BAJI 138.1) was given. Read as a whole, the instructions were not misleading upon this point, and no prejudice appears. Fowler v. Allen, supra; Freeman v. Nickerson, 77 Cal.App.2d 40, 61, 174 P.2d 688; Powers v. Shelton, 74 Cal.App.2d 757, 763, 169 P.2d 482.

[3] Plaintiff's contention that the three errors are prejudicial is based upon her view that the evidence of negligence is very strong, and that of contributory negligence very weak. But a driver is not necessarily guilty of negligence because his vehicle strikes the rear of another. Karageozian v. Bost, 139 Cal.App.2d 874, 877, 294 P.2d 778. In view of the correct and detailed instructions also given upon the subject matter of each of the three erroneous instructions, we are satisfied that the instructions as a whole did not mislead the jury, and that the cumulative effect of the errors was even less than in Hickenbottom v. Jeppesen, supra, 144 Cal.App.2d 115, 300 P.2d 689.

Judgment affirmed.

KAUFMAN, P. J., and DOOLING, J., concur.

158 Cal.App.2d 718

GUY S. ATKINSON CO., a corporation, and J. E. Kettler, doing business as North Chester Heights Development Company, Plaintiffs and Respondents,

v.

HIGHLAND PARK PUBLIC UTILITY DISTRICT, a body corporate, and Ray W. Iness, Kenneth Z. Leimbach, Charles B. Anderson and Sam C. Baker, Directors thereof, Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 5647.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

March 26, 1958.

Action for declaratory relief and for injunction against public utility district, which was a political subdivision of state, brought by plaintiffs, who were engaged in development of subdivision on a tract of land, which was annexed to defendant district, which passed a resolution requiring a connection charge of $175 for each new house in the tract connected for water service. From adverse judgment of the Superior Court, Kern County, Gordon L. Howden, J., the utility district appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, J., held that evidence sustained finding that such charge was confiscatory, unreasonable, unlawful and void but that the trial court did not have power to prescribe how water rates should be fixed.

Judgment affirmed as modified.

1. Declaratory Judgment ⇐345

In action for declaratory relief and for injunction against public utility district, which was political subdivision of state, brought by plaintiffs, who were engaged in development of subdivision on tract of land, which was annexed to defendant district, which passed a resolution requiring a connection charge of $175 for each new house connected for water service in the tract, evidence sustained finding that such charge was confiscatory, unreasonable, unlawful and void. West's Ann. Public Utility Code, § 15501 et seq.

2. Waters and Water Courses ⇐203(12)

In action against public utility district, which was political subdivision of state, for declaratory relief and for injunction brought by plaintiffs, who were engaged in development of housing subdivision on tract of land which was annexed to district, trial court had power to determine whether connection charge of $175 for each new house for water service was unreasonable and unfair, but it did not have power to prescribe how rate should be fixed. West's Ann.Public Utility Code, § 15501 et seq.

Baker, Palmer, Wall & Raymond, Bakersfield, for appellants.

Mack, Bianco, King & Eyherabide, Bakersfield, for respondents.

MUSSELL, Justice.

This is an action for declaratory relief and for an injunction.

Defendant Highland Park Public Utility District is a political subdivision of the State of California organized under the provisions of the Public Utility District Act (Division 7, Public Utilities Code).

Plaintiffs were engaged in a joint venture in the county of Kern, which venture consisted of the development of a housing subdivision on a tract of land in what was known as Highland Manor and which tract was annexed to the defendant district prior to the time this action was filed.

On October 10, 1947, the defendant district passed a resolution providing for the purchase by the district of the complete water system, wells and pumps owned and then being operated by the Highland Manor Water Company, a corporation, in said Highland Manor. The purchase price of this system was $35,000, which sum was to be raised by a bond issue of the district and the funds required to pay off the indebtedness incurred by such bond issue were to be raised from the revenue derived from the operation of the water system in the territory proposed to be annexed, or by taxation of the property within the said territory. This resolution further provided that in the event that extensions of the water system now in the territory proposed to be annexed are necessary to serve the inhabitants thereof, the cost of such extensions shall be borne by the owners or subdividers of the property to which such water system is extended; that the Highland Park Public Utility District will reimburse such owners or subdividers the cost of such extensions to the said water system in the ratio that each connection bears to the total number of connections which may be required to serve the parcel of land within such extended area, such reimbursement being made at the time of such connections; that the rates, rentals and charges for the furnishing of water to the inhabitants of the territory proposed to be annexed shall be the same as the rates, rentals and charges for the furnishing of water within the balance of such district.

On October 15, 1947, the board of directors of the Highland Park Public Utility District passed another resolution approving the annexation of Highland Manor and made it a part of the Highland Park Public Utility District, subject to the conditions set forth in the said resolution of October 10, 1947.

Subsequent to the completion of the annexation proceedings and the acquisition of the water system in Highland Manor by the defendants, the plaintiffs, under supervision of defendants, caused a system of water to be installed in their tract in the annexed territory, expending therefor the sum of $11,987.38, and the mains were connected by defendant district to its water system. Thereafter plaintiffs notified defendant district that they desired reimbursement from it for the cost of extending the water mains into their tract. The defendant district then adopted a resolution requiring a connection charge of $175 for each new house connected for water service in that tract and requiring that said payment be made at the same time application for water service was made.

Plaintiffs commenced the present action to enjoin the defendants from taking such legislative action by fixing a connection charge against the consumers and also for the purpose of collecting from the district the costs of the extensions to the system installed by plaintiffs. The parties stipulated at the trial that the only issue before the court was whether the connection charge which the defendants fixed through its board of directors was a reasonable one and the trial was held on that basis. The court found, inter alia, that plaintiffs connected eleven houses to defendant district's system for which connection the district made no charge; that on March 12 the defendant company shut off all the water to all the houses in said tract except the eleven houses occupied by buyers and refuses to furnish water to the remaining houses in said tract until a connection charge of $175 a house has been paid; that on March 7, 1956, the board of directors of the defendant district adopted a resolution which for the first time established a connection charge for any house in the district in the sum of $175, and that prior thereto there was never any connection charge for the connection of any house in the district to the water system of the defendant established by resolution in excess of the sum of $5; that the proposed connection charge of $175 per unit bears no relation to the actual costs of turning the water into the houses of the plaintiffs; that said charge was designed to recoup the rebate which the defendant district by Ordinance 12 is obliged to make to plaintiffs, and was designed by defendant district, and will in fact apply only to houses of plaintiffs in tract 1826; that said charge of $175 per house, if paid by plaintiff, will exact from him $11,375; that the proposed connection charge amounts to a tax or assessment for the purpose of raising funds for capital acquisition in the form of the distribution system on plaintiff's tract 1826; that what is or is not a reasonable rate for such a connection charge is a matter which in the first instance is delegated to the board of directors of the defendant district to be fixed by said board consistent with the actual cost of said district of the labor and material actually expended and reasonably necessary to cause the water to flow from the water mains theretofore installed in the street into the house to be connected thereto, but excluding from such connection charge all costs of any kind whatsoever to the district for the bringing of the water to the point where it is to flow from the said mains and into the houses connected thereto.

The court concluded, inter alia, "That the connection charge of $175 established by the defendant, Highland Park Public Utility District, by resolution of its Board of Directors adopted March 7, 1956, is confiscatory, unreasonable, unlawful and void, and said defendant district, its officers, servants, agents and employees, should be enjoined and restrained from collecting or attempting to collect the same."

Judgment was entered as follows:

"It Is Hereby Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed that the connection charge of $175.00 established by the defendant Highland Park Public Utility District, by resolution of its Board of Directors adopted March 7, 1956, is confiscatory, unreasonable, unlawful and void, and said defendant district, its officers, servants, agents and employees, should be and are enjoined and restrained from collecting or attempting to collect the same.

"It Is Further Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed that the defendant, Highland Park Public Utility District, and its Board of Directors, should be enjoined and directed, or or before December 1, 1956, to rescind and cancel said resolution of March 7, 1956.

"It Is Further Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed that the defendant, Highland Park Public Utility District and its Board of Directors should be and are hereby enjoined and directed on or before December 1, 1956, to adopt a connection charge consistent with the actual cost to said defendant district of the labor and materials actually expended and reasonably necessary to cause the water to flow from the water mains theretofore installed in the street, into the house to be connected thereto, but excluding from such connection charge all costs of any kind whatsoever to the district for the bringing of the water to the point where it is to flow from the said mains and into the houses connected thereto."

[1] The principal question to be here determined is whether the trial court's determination that the connection charge of $175 is confiscatory, unreasonable, unlawful and void is supported by the record.

In Durant v. City of Beverly Hills, 39 Cal.App.2d 133, 139, 102 P.2d 759, 763, the city council had fixed the rates to be charged for water service and one outside the city sought to secure service at the same rate charged for service within the city. The court said:

> "But, in the absence of any showing of any character that the charges were unreasonable, unfair or fraudulently or arbitrarily established, the trial court had no case for any relief to respondent. In short, the respondent has sought to substitute the court for the city council and have the court fix the charges which he should pay. The universal rule is that in these circumstances, the court is not a rate-fixing body, that the matter of fixing water rates is not judicial, but is legislative in character, and that the limit of its function and jurisdiction is to find, upon a proper showing, that the rates fixed are unreasonable and unfair. (Citations.) If upon such finding it is adjudged that the established rates shall not be collected, the court is not permitted to fix another and different rate, but this function must be left with the proper rate-fixing body."

In Nourse v. Los Angeles, 25 Cal.App. 384, 143 P. 801, the court held that the city of Los Angeles, under its charter had assumed the duty of operating a water system for the purpose of supplying water to its inhabitants; that in the performance of this duty it acts, not in its sovereign capacity, but in the capacity of a private corporation engaged in like business; that like a private corporation, it is the duty of the city to furnish without discrimination to all its inhabitants who apply therefor a supply of water upon such applicants complying with such reasonable rules and regulations as it may lawfully establish for the conduct of the business. In that case appellant Nourse refused to pay a water charge due for water supplied to a former occupant of the premises involved and the city sought to exact payment of this charge by refusing to supply water to Nourse until he had paid the charge. The court there said (25 Cal.App. at page 387, 143 P. at page 802): "Our conclusion is that the regulation in question is unreasonable in that, without statutory authority therefor, it makes one person liable for the debts of another and contravenes the duty assumed by the city to serve all its inhabitants without discrimination. This view is sustained by overwhelming authority. (Citations.)"

Appellants state in their reply brief that the fixing of rates and charges by the board of directors of a public utility district is a legislative function which has been delegated to it by the legislature and will not be interfered with by the courts in the absence of a positive showing that the rates fixed are unreasonable or unfair. They contend that the connection charge of $175 for each connection made was reasonable and fair under the circumstances. However, we are of the opinion that there is substantial evidence to the contrary and that the trial court's finding in this connection is supported by the record.

Mr. Anderson, who was a member of the board of directors of the defendant district, testified that the connection charge of $175 was a method of getting money to pay for the line in front of each place and that it was not a charge for making the connection. The record shows that the plaintiffs claim they are entitled to a refund of $184.42 per house, as provided in their contract with the defendant district and defendants refused to pay this amount unless plaintiffs pay a connection charge of $175 per house.

Mr. Hobson, a certified public accountant, testified that the connection charge was against the consumer and not against the owner of the property "unless the owner happened to be a tenant to the consumer."

Mr. Leimbach, secretary and director of the defendant district, testified that since the inception of the district, the district made a connection charge of $5 where the lines and mains were in; that this was a flat nominal fee which they had had for years. The record supports the inference that the connection fee charge in effect represented an assessment in the form of a tax against a limited number of the properties in the district; that plaintiffs' tract No. 1826 would bear most of this tax and that the purpose of the tax was to get back from this tract the money which the district had agreed to refund to the subdividers under their contract with them.

[2] The trial court had the power to determine whether the connection charge was unreasonable and unfair, but the matter of fixing water rates is legislative in character and the court was limited to a finding that the rate fixed was unfair. Durant v. City of Beverly Hills, supra. It therefore appears that the court exceeded its jurisdiction in providing in the judgment that:

> "It Is Further Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed that the defendant, Highland Park Public Utility District and its Board of Directors should be and are hereby enjoined and directed on or before December 1, 1956, to adopt a connection charge consistent with the actual cost to said defendant district of the labor and materials actually expended and reasonably necessary to cause the water to flow from the water mains theretofore installed in the street, into the house to be connected thereto, but excluding from such connection charge all costs of any kind whatsoever to the district for the bringing of the water to the point where it is to flow from the said mains and into the houses connected thereto."

The judgment is modified by striking out this quoted portion thereof. The motion filed herein by respondents to dismiss the appeal is denied.

Judgment affirmed as modified. Respondent to recover costs.

BARNARD, P. J., and GRIFFIN, J., concur.

158 Cal.App.2d 612

Rosemary SCARANO, by and through Floyd Scarano, her guardian ad litem, and Floyd Scarano, Plaintiffs and Appellants,

v.

Thomas SCHNOOR, Defendant and Respondent.

No. 17263.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

March 24, 1958.

Action against surgeon for alleged negligence in performing operation on eye. The Superior Court, Alameda County, Donald K. Quayle, J., rendered judgment for surgeon and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Dooling, J., held that instruction that if evidence in case left it just as probable that injury was result of one cause as much as another, plaintiff could not recover, was not improper.

Affirmed.

1. Physicians and Surgeons ⇐18(10)

In action against surgeon for alleged negligence in performing operation, instruction that if evidence in case left it just as probable that injury was result of one cause as much as another, plaintiff could not recover, was not improper on basis that it would be understood by jury to mean that if they found injury proximately resulted from both causes, one of which would render surgeon liable, they must nevertheless find for surgeon, in view of other instructions.

2. Appeal and Error ⇐1064(4)

Although use of "competent" in instruction that plaintiff must show by competent evidence that injury was result of cause which would render defendant liable might technically have been error, reversal was not required where jury were given usual instructions on their powers and duties in weighing evidence.

3. Trial ⇐296(3)

In action against surgeon for alleged negligence in performing operation, instruction that in order to recover plaintiff must prove that surgeon had acted in manner that physicians and surgeons of ordinary skill, care, and diligence engaged in same kind of work would not have done, although incorrect, was not basis for reversal in view of immediately preceding instructions.

4. Physicians and Surgeons ⇐14(4)

In determining whether physician negligently performed operation, test is whether surgeon exercised that reasonable degree of learning and skill that is ordinarily possessed by physicians and surgeons in locality.

5. Trial ⇐295(1)

In determining whether a particular instruction is erroneous, instructions must be read as a whole.

6. Trial ⇐296(3)

In action against surgeon for alleged negligence in performing operation, instruction that where there is more than one recognized method of treatment surgeon is not negligent if, in exercising his best judgment, he selects one of approved methods which later turns out to be a wrong selection, was not improper on the basis that it provided surgeon with opportunity to escape liability merely by conforming to some recognized method used by practitioners somewhere, in view of repeated instructions that standard to be applied was standard measured by practice of doctors in good standing in same community.

7. Physicians and Surgeons ⇐18(10)

In action against surgeon for alleged negligence in performing operation, instruction that in determining whether surgeon's learning, skill and conduct fulfill duties imposed on him jury was not permitted to set up its own standard was not improper on ground that use of verb fulfill in present, instead of past, tense set up standard as of time of trial instead of time of operation, in view of fact that entire trial was directed to question of surgeon's conduct in performing operation and his antecedent diagnosis.

8. Evidence ⇐558(11)

Although use of medical books is proper in cross-examination of medical witnesses who have relied upon them, medical books are not admissible on direct examination, and if their use on cross-examination results in medical witness modifying his testimony as to standards in community it is still the witness' testimony, not the medical text, which is to be looked to to determine standard in particular community.

9. Physicians and Surgeons ⇐18(8)

Testimony of lay witnesses cannot be considered upon any question relating to skill and care, or want of it, possessed and exercised by surgeon, but when it is a matter of common knowledge that danger is involved in certain conditions, in failure to maintain certain conditions, or in failure to take certain precautionary measures, expert testimony is not required to establish such fact.

10. Trial ⇐260(8)

In action against surgeon for alleged negligence in performing operation, requested instruction that plaintiff could establish her case by testimony of surgeon if it established negligence was correct statement of law, but refusal thereof was not improper, in view of other instructions. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 2055.

11. Trial ⇐260(1)

Where jury is instructed fully and correctly on a subject, a party cannot complain of failure to instruct in particular language.

12. Physicians and Surgeons ⇐18(7)

In action against surgeon for alleged negligence in performing operation on eye, question put to surgeon as to whether he would perform such surgery on the other eye on the basis of what he knew immediately after the operation and questions of similar tenor were improper.

13. Physicians and Surgeons ⇐15(12)

Circumstances to be considered in deciding whether surgeon negligently performed operation are those which evidence shows might reasonably be supposed to have been known to surgeon and to have influenced his mind and action at the time, and negligence cannot be determined by hindsight nor by what surgeon subsequently learns.

14. Evidence ⇐558(1)

In action against surgeon for alleged negligence in performing operation on eye, cross-examination question put to medical witness for surgeon as to whether in case of vision of 20/50 or 20/60 he would recommend surgery on subluxated lens or a near-sighted condition just because of vision alone and no other reason was objectionable as compound.

Charles P. Scully, Jack H. Werchick, San Francisco, for appellant.

Joseph F. Rankin, Oakland, Peart, Baraty & Hassard, Salvatore Bossio, San Francisco, for respondent.

DOOLING, Justice.

Plaintiff Rosemary Scarano, through her guardian ad litem, appeals from a judgment for defendant Dr. Thomas Schnoor.

In September 1950 appellant was having visual difficulties and was referred to defendant by Dr. Peters, an optometrist. Defendant, an ophthalmologist, diagnosed the difficulty as "a questionably displaced lens with nasal pigments" (lens improperly centered behind the pupil with pigment on the nasal side of the lens).

Appellant's mother testified that defendant recommended surgery on both eyes for a fee of $1,000 and when it was determined that the parents could not afford this amount, he sent appellant to the University of California Hospital. Defendant testified that he informed Mrs. Scarano that surgery might be advisable and that it would be an expensive procedure. He denied quoting any fee and stated that he sent appellant to the University of California Hospital for a thorough check or "work-up."

Defendant testified that he received a verbal report from Dr. Hogan of the University of California Hospital stating that surgery was advisible. A letter from a member of the hospital staff dated November 9, 1950, received by defendant diagnosed appellant's condition as bilateral subluxated lenses of congenital origin (displaced lenses in both eyes). The letter further stated:

"It was our feeling that this patient should be handled conservatively since her eyes are quiet and in fairly good condition * * * In the future, she has about a fifty percent chance of having either iritis or glaucoma. If either of these complications should arise, surgical intervention would be indicated. Meanwhile, watchful waiting might be the best plan."

Defendant next saw appellant in July, 1953. His diagnosis was that appellant had a congenital bilateral displacement condition with cataractous changes (opacity of the lenses). Defendant testified that the latter condition was not present at the first examination in 1950. He did not consult with any other ophthalmologist and recommended surgery as the only method of correcting appellant's vision.

Although appellant's parents testified that defendant had assured them that the operation would not result in any poorer vision he denied this. Surgery was advised at this time because the child was 7½ years of age and since vision develops until approximately 8 years of age, to improve vision the surgery must take place before that time.

Appellant's left eye was operated upon on July 16, 1953. Of the three possible operating procedures defendant chose the intracapsular extraction. This method consists of the removal of the entire lens including the capsule (which contains the lens substance). The lens is held in place by zonular fibers and in removing the lens these fibers must be broken. Where there is a displaced lens in a child the fibers are usually stretched on one side and very strong on the opposite side. Defendant testified that while he expected this condition the zonular fibers proved tougher than he anticipated. He was unable to break these strong fibers by pulling or twisting the lens and had to use a loop. This instrument is placed under the lens to give greater traction.

On August 15, 1953, appellant's vision in her left eye was 20/40 to 20/50 which was an improvement from that prior to surgery. Due to a "hammocking" of the pupil (the iris drawing up and closing the pupil) a visual iridectomy was performed by defendant on October 8, 1953. This operation consists of cutting a hole in the iris to permit vision.

Appellant's vision did not improve and she was taken to Dr. Pischel. Dr. Pischel found marked inflammation in the eye with poor light perception. He also found early signs of phthisis bulbi or shrinkage of the eyeball. These conditions were due to a loss of the vitreous substance of the eye and it was finally decided that the eye would not improve and it was removed and a prosthesis installed.

Appellant's action was based on alleged negligent diagnosis and treatment. She attempted to prove that surgery should not have been performed and that the operative procedure used was wrong, in that the defendant should have expected such procedure would cause a vitreous loss.

Expert witnesses for defendant agreed that for a patient with a dislocated lens plus early cataract formations the optimum time for surgery would be between six and a half and seven years of age. There was testimony that as to the diagnosis and the operative procedure the defendant exercised a "lot better than average care." The intracapsular procedure was stated to be a standard technique in the community and the practice of being assisted by a trained nurse rather than an ophthalmological surgeon was stated to be standard in the community. Defendant had previously performed two or three intracapsular procedures on children. Dr. Pischel testified that he would not do an intracapsular procedure in the case of a child with a displaced lens and all the zonular fibers attached.

Appellant relies on the following grounds for reversal:

1. The trial court gave erroneous instructions.

2. The trial court refused necessary and proper instructions offered by plaintiff.

3. The trial court abused its discretion in restricting the cross-examination and examination of medical witnesses by plaintiff.

The court instructed the jury:

"In order for plaintiff to recover, it is not necessary that she prove that the negligence of the defendant was the sole proximate cause of the injuries received by her, for liability for injuries may be imposed upon a defendant where his negligence is one of several contributing factors, each of which is a proximate cause of the injuries.

"But where there are two or more possible causes of an injury for one of which the defendant is not responsible, the plaintiff, in order to recover, must show by competent evidence that the injury was wholly or partly the result of that cause which would render the defendant liable. If the evidence in the case leaves it just as probable that the injury was the result of one cause as much as the other, the plaintiff cannot recover."

[1] Appellant argues that the last sentence of this instruction would be understood by the jury to mean that if they found that the injury proximately resulted from both causes, one of which would render the defendant liable, they must nevertheless find for the defendant. Reading the instruction as a whole it is not reasonably subject to this construction. The jury was plainly told that the negligence of the defendant need not be the sole proximate cause and that the defendant is liable "where his negligence is one of several contributing factors, each of which is a proximate cause." They were then told that to recover plaintiff must prove "that the injury was wholly or partly the result of that cause which would render the defendant liable." In the face of these clear statements of the law they cannot have understood the last sentence in the sense for which appellant contends. They had previously received the standard instruction that when the evidence "is so equally balanced in weight and quality, effect and value, that the scales of proof hang even, your verdict should be against the party" having the burden of proof. In the light of the whole instruction they can only have understood the last sentence to have reference to a particular application of this general rule on the burden of proof, which was the evident purpose of the court in giving it.

[2] Appellant criticizes the use of the word "competent" to qualify "evidence" in this instruction. While technically this may be error (McNamara v. Emmons, 36 Cal.App.2d 199, 206, 97 P.2d 503), the jury cannot have been misled by it. They were given the usual instructions on their powers and duties in weighing the evidence and we cannot suppose that they disregarded them or would undertake to determine the "competency" of the evidence which the court had permitted to be introduced for their consideration.

Appellant complains of an instruction which told the jury that the action was one predicated on a claim of "want of skill or negligence" and that in order to recover plaintiff must prove that defendant acted in a manner "that physicians and surgeons of ordinary skill, care and diligence, engaged in the same kind of work or specialty" would not have done.

[3, 4] It is correct, as appellant points out, that the true test is not "ordinary care and skill" but "that reasonable degree of learning and skill that is ordinarily possessed by physicians and surgeons in the locality" (Sansom v. Ross-Loos Medical Group, 57 Cal.App.2d 549, 552, 134 P.2d 927, 929), and to determine this standard "we are not permitted to aggregate into a common class the quacks, the young men who have no practice, the old ones who have dropped out of the practice, the good, and the very best, and then strike an average between them. This method would evidently place the standard too low." Sim v. Weeks, 7 Cal.App.2d 28, 42, 45 P. 2d 350, 357.

[5] However the instructions must be read as a whole. The jury had just previously been instructed that defendant must "exercise reasonable and ordinary care in applying that degree of learning and skill ordinarily possessed by doctors of good standing in the same or similar locality"; that it is his duty to possess "that degree of learning and skill ordinarily possessed by physicians and surgeons of good standing, practicing in the same locality"; that if he undertakes service in a special branch of medicine or surgery, "and if at that time and in the same locality * * * there are members of his profession who specialize in * * * that particular branch of the healing profession, it is his duty to possess that degree of learning and skill ordinarily possessed by physicians and surgeons of good standing who engaged in that special practice in the same locality"; that he must possess "that reasonable degree of professional learning and skill generally possessed by physicians and surgeons in the vicinity in which he practices, in like situation" and "exercise reasonable and ordinary care and skill in the application of such knowledge, to accomplish the purpose for which he is employed"; and that "[i]f a physician and surgeon undertakes the treatment of a case which comes within the field of specialists practicing in the same locality" and if he "does not possess the special ability required by the case in question" and there are specialists in the locality possessing such special ability, it is his duty "to inform the patient of his lack of skill and knowledge" and "if the condition requires, to refer the patient to a specialist." The instructions summarized immediately preceded the instruction complained of. Taking the instructions together the jury must have understood the particular instruction to be qualified by those which preceded it and cannot have been misled into applying a lower standard of conduct than the previous instructions had repeatedly specified.

The court gave BAJI instruction 214–A, California Jury Instructions, Civil, 4th Revised Edition, page 780.

"Where there is more than one recognized method of * * * treatment, and no one of them is used exclusively and uniformly by all practitioners of good standing, it is not negligence for a physician and surgeon if, in exercising his best judgment, he selects one of the approved methods, which later turns out to be a wrong selection, or one not favored by certain other practitioners."

[6] Appellant complains that the instruction was nowhere limited to the community in which defendant was practicing and that it "provides the defendant with an opportunity to escape liability merely by conforming to some recognized method used by practitioners somewhere in good standing and approved by someone."

The instruction must be read with the other instructions and the jury was repeatedly instructed that the standard to be applied was the standard measured by the practice of doctors in good standing in the same community and in a case of this nature by specialists practicing in the same community. Under the circumstances the jury must have understood these qualifications to apply to this instruction.

The jury was given BAJI instruction No. 214–B, California Jury Instructions, Civil, 4th Revised Edition, pages 783–784. In the first sentence of this instruction the jury was told:

[7] "In determining whether defendant Thomas Schnoor's learning, skill and conduct fulfill the duties imposed on him by law, as they have been stated to you, you are not permitted to set up arbitrarily a standard of your own." (Emphasis ours.) Appellant complains that the use of the verb "fulfill" in the present instead of the past tense set up a standard as of the time of the trial instead of the time of the operation. We cannot believe that the jury could have so construed it in view of the fact that the entire trial was directed to the question of defendant's conduct in performing the operation and in his antecedent diagnosis.

[8] By this instruction the jury was further told that "the only way you may properly learn that standard is through evidence presented in this trial by physicians and surgeons called as expert witnesses." Appellant contends that the instruction was in error because "it eliminates proof * * * of the standard of care in the community through resort to medical recommendation and medical books." It is obvious that medical books cannot fix the standard of practice for a particular community—the standard of practice in the community may be higher or lower or differ otherwise from the textwriter's recommended practices. The use of medical texts is proper in cross-examination of the medical witnesses who have relied upon them but they are not admissible on direct examination. Gluckstein v. Lipsett, 93 Cal.App.2d 391, 400–404, 209 P.2d 98. If their use on cross-examination results in the medical witness modifying his testimony as to the standards in the community it is still the witness' testimony, not the medical text, which is to be looked to to determine the standard in the particular community.

[9] The court instructed that the testimony of lay witnesses "cannot be considered by you upon any question relating to the skill and care, or want of it, possessed and exercised by the defendant"; but "When it is a matter of common knowledge that danger is involved in certain conditions, or in a failure to maintain certain conditions, or to take certain precautionary measures, expert testimony is not required to establish such a fact, but it may judicially be noticed as a part of that fund of common knowledge shared by us with our fellow citizens generally."

The instruction as so qualified cannot have misled the jury. The first part of the instruction, in identical language, was approved in Friedman v. Dresel, 139 Cal. App.2d 333, 341, 293 P.2d 488, 493, as a correct statement of "the general rule that ordinarily the standard of care of a doctor * * * can be established only by the testimony of experts in the field." However the court then held that this should have been qualified by giving, as was here done, an instruction that where "negligence on the part of a doctor is demonstrated by facts which can be evaluated by resort to common knowledge, expert testimony is not required * * *." The instruction as a whole was proper.

Appellant complains of the giving of an instruction on expert testimony that while opinions of witnesses are not ordinarily permitted to be given, the law recognizes an exception in the case of expert witnesses. "A person who by education, study and experience has become an expert in any art, science or profession * * * may give his opinion as to any such matter in which he is versed and which is material to the case."

[10] In connection with the quoted sentence appellant also complains of the refusal to give an instruction offered by her: "In a malpractice case, a plaintiff can establish her case by the testimony of the defendant physician and surgeon himself, if his testimony established negligence on his part." This proposed instruction correctly states the law. Lashley v. Koerber, 26 Cal.2d 83, 89, 156 P.2d 441. However the jury was instructed generally that in determining whether negligence was proved they should consider all the evidence regardless of who produced it. "A party is entitled to the same benefit from evidence that favors her cause or defense when produced by her adversary as when produced by herself."

The jury must have understood this instruction to include defendant's own testimony. Appellant argues however that the failure to give her proposed instruction coupled with the instructions that opinion evidence could only be given by, and the standard of practice in the community established by, expert witnesses would lead the jury to believe that they could not look to defendant's testimony elicited under cross-examination (Code Civ.Proc. § 2055) for those purposes, since he was not qualified as an expert. An examination of the transcript shows that he was qualified by counsel for appellant as an expert at the beginning of his cross-examination. After establishing that for a number of years defendant had specialized in practice on the eyes, ears, nose and throat and particularly in ophthalmology, including eye-surgery, counsel for appellant asked the following questions of defendant and received the following answers:

"Q. * * * In 1950, from 1950 on through 1953, during the time that you saw Rosemary Scarano and during the time that you had her as a patient, you were familiar with the standard of care of opthalmologists in your community and in similar communities? A. I was.

"Q. And were you familiar with the usual training and learning and education possessed by opthalmologists generally in your community and similar communities? A. Yes.

"Q. Now I am going to ask you some questions, and will you please keep in mind that when I ask you questions about what an eye man or doctor would do * * * or what learning or knowledge he should have, that I am referring to * * * those standards of care in the community in which you say you are familiar. Will you keep that in mind, sir? A. Surely.

"Q. So I won't have to say 'on the basis of the standard of care in the community,' do you understand that? A. Yes."

The jury must have known from this that defendant was being qualified and examined as an expert, and when they were instructed that ordinarily the standard of care in the community must be proved "by physicians and surgeons called as expert witnesses" we cannot suppose that they would ignore the testimony of defendant on that subject in view of the other instruction that a "party is entitled to the same benefit from evidence that favors her cause * * * when produced by her adversary as when produced by herself."

[11] Appellant further complains of the failure to give two requested instructions on the standard of care in malpractice cases but the jury was fully and correctly instructed on that subject and where the jury is so instructed a party cannot complain of the failure to instruct in particular language.

[12, 13] The court properly sustained objections to a question of defendant as to whether he would perform the same surgery on the other eye "on the basis of what you knew immediately after the operation" and questions of similar tenor. The circumstances to be considered in deciding defendant's negligence "are those which the evidence shows may reasonably be supposed to have been known to such person, and to have influenced his mind and actions at the time." Scott v. San Bernardino Valley, etc., Co., 152 Cal. 604, 607, 93 P. 677, 678. Negligence is not to be determined by hindsight nor by what a party subsequently learns. These rulings were therefore correct.

[14] Appellant asked a medical witness for defendant: "Doctor, in a case of vision of 20/50 or 20/60, would you recommend surgery on a subluxated lens or a near-sighted condition just because of the vision alone and no other reason?" An objection was sustained on the ground that the question was compound. It clearly was. Counsel for appellant said that he would reframe the question, but instead went on to another subject.

The case was fairly tried and we find nothing in the record to justify a reversal.

Judgment affirmed.

KAUFMAN, P. J., and DRAPER, J., concur.

159 Cal.App.2d 31

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Douglas Kelly BRAZELL, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 6109.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

March 31, 1958.

Defendant was convicted in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Beach Vasey, J., for violating Penal Code section proscribing bookmaking, and he appealed. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that to constitute a violation of Penal Code section, a volume of gambling or betting is not required, and acceptance of even a single wager in contravention of statute will suffice.

Affirmed.

1. Gaming ⇐98(3)

Convictions, under Penal Code section proscribing bookmaking, were sustained by evidence. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 337a, subds. 1, 6.

2. Criminal Law ⇐741(1), 742(1)

Credibility of witnesses and intrinsic value and effect of evidence are matters primarily for duly constituted arbiter of facts.

3. Gaming ⇐73

To constitute a violation of Penal Code section, a volume of gambling or betting is not required, and acceptance of even a single wager in contravention of statute will suffice. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 337a.

Douglas Kelly Brazell, in pro. per.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Albert Bianchi, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

In an information filed by the District Attorney of Los Angeles County, defendant was accused of violating Section 337a of the Penal Code (Bookmaking) as follows:

Count I. Violation of Subdivision 1 of said section on or about January 12, 1957.

Count II. Violation of Subdivision 6 of the aforesaid section, on or about January 12, 1957.

Count III. Violation of Subdivision 1 of the aforesaid section on or about January 19, 1957.

Count IV. Violation of Subdivision 6 of said section on or about January 19, 1957.

Count V. Violation of Subdivision 1 of said section on or about January 26, 1957.

Count VI. Violation of Subdivision 6 of the aforesaid section on or about January 26, 1957.

Defendant pleaded not guilty to each count of the information; was tried before a jury and found guilty on all counts. Probation was denied and defendant was sentenced to a term of six months in the Los Angeles County Jail, on each count, the sentences to run concurrently with each other. From the judgment of conviction and "the sentencing of defendant" defendant prosecutes this appeal.

The following will serve as a fair epitome of the factual background surrounding this prosecution.

As to Counts I and II, Officer Sargis A. Trotsky testified that during the time here in question he was a Los Angeles city police officer attached to the "vice squad, bookmaking detail", and for some five and a half years had been conducting bookmaking investigations. That he had "become familiar with the signs and symbols and characters and language commonly used and employed by bookmakers in this community"; also "with the manner in which bets are accepted and given"; and with "any papers or periodicals which are sometimes used by bookmakers".

As to these counts, Officer Trotsky further testified that on January 12, 1957, at approximately 12:50 p. m., he entered the Alaska Cafe in San Pedro, Los Angeles County, and seated himself at the bar. A few minutes later defendant entered and stood about ten feet away from the officer. The latter then observed a third person approach defendant and say, "War Vote, five to win", and thereupon such person handed defendant a piece of United States currency, the denomination of which Officer Trotsky could not determine. Defendant took the money and replied, "Okay", then removed a scratch sheet (a daily publication commonly used by bookmakers and horse players) from his back pocket, looked at it for a few seconds, then replaced it in his pocket.

Later, Officer Trotsky himself consulted a scratch sheet and found that a horse called War Vote was scheduled to run in the first race at the Santa Anita Race Track on that date. Without objection, the officer testified that in his opinion the aforesaid conversation between defendant and the unknown third party was "* * * a bet or wager on a race horse by the name of War Vote, and the five dollar win was the amount wagered on that horse, the win being the coming in number one position."

With reference to Counts III and IV, Officer Trotsky testified that, on January 19, 1957, he again visited the Alaska Cafe at about 12:50 p. m. and seated himself at the bar. That several minutes later defendant entered and approached a person who was sitting at the bar. That such person turned around, and facing defendant, said, "One and five, win and place", thereupon handing defendant a piece of currency which Officer Trotsky believed to be a ten dollar bill. That defendant said "Okay", took the money and walked to the rear portion of the bar. Without objection the officer again expressed his opinion that what he had just heard constituted the placing of a bet or wager; the word "one" signifying the first race and the word "five" referring to the horse holding the fifth handicap position (the horse listed as fifth choice on the scratch sheet).

With regard to Counts V and VI, Officer Trotsky testified that, once more, on January 26, 1957, he went to the Alaska Cafe at about 4 p. m. That some time within the next 30 minutes, defendant entered, remained a short time, departed, and then returned again at approximately 4:30 p. m. That defendant thereupon approached a young man seated at the bar to the right of Officer Trotsky and whom the officer had previously heard called by the name Johnny. The person named Johnny said to defendant "How did I do on the third, fourth and sixth?" Defendant then took his scratch sheet from his rear pocket, looked at it for a short time, then said, "Johnny, you have got $63.00 coming". With that defendant replaced the scratch sheet in his pocket, took out some currency and gave the man called Johnny some six or eight bills and some change.

Roughly five minutes later Officer Trotsky noted that the television set in the bar was broadcasting the preparations for the seventh race at Santa Anita Race Track. Immediately after the number 6 horse was shown on the screen in the process of going from the paddock onto the track, the officer observed a young male Mexican walk over to where defendant was standing, hand him two pieces of currency and say to him, "Make it number 6, Doug". Defendant took the money and said, "Okay". In the opinion of Officer Trotsky, the foregoing constituted a wager on the number 6 horse appearing on the television screen.

When arrested by a Los Angeles police officer on January 31, 1957, defendant had a scratch sheet in his right rear pocket.

On cross-examination, Officer Trotsky testified that scratch sheets were sold at news stands in the area in which he was investigating, and to his knowledge, they were not illegal. That the majority of the sales of so-called scratch sheets were made to bettors. The officer also testified that at no time did he attempt to identify or obtain the name or address of the aforementioned unknown persons who had dealings with defendant in the Alaska Cafe.

Sworn as a witness in his own behalf, defendant testified that he was acquainted with the Alaska Cafe and during the period here in question, lunched there during the noon hour about five days per week. He denied each and all of the conversations testified to by Officer Trotsky or that he paid any one the sum of $63 in the cafe. He further testified that since he heard the descriptions of these unnamed persons, at the time of the preliminary examination on February 15, 1957, he searched for these people, and was unable to locate them in the area and as far as he could find out they never existed.

[1] On this appeal, it is the contention of appellant that, as to each of the six counts upon which he was found guilty, the judgment of conviction is not supported by the evidence.

The pertinent portions of Penal Code, section 337a provide in part as follows:

"Every person,

"1. Who engages in pool-selling or bookmaking, with or without writing, at any time or place; or

* * * * * *

"6. Who lays, makes, offers or accepts any bet or bets, or wager or wagers, upon the result, or purported result, of any trial, or purported trial, or contest, or purported contest, of skill, speed or power of endurance of man or beast or between men, beasts, or mechanical apparatus, is punishable by imprisonment * * *."

Appellant first urges that the entire case presented by the prosecution was based on circumstantial evidence and that the circumstances relied upon being reasonably consistent with innocence, the mere fact that such circumstances may also be reconciled with guilt, does not justify a conviction. This contention is dispelled by the language of the Supreme Court in the case of People v. Newland, 15 Cal.2d 678, 681, 104 P.2d 778, 780, as follows:

"'We must assume in favor of the verdict the existence of every fact which the jury could have reasonably deduced from the evidence, and then determine whether such facts are sufficient to support the verdict.' If the circumstances reasonably justify the verdict of the jury, the opinion of the reviewing court that those circumstances might also reasonably be reconciled with the innocence of the defendant will not warrant interference with the determination of the jury. (Citing cases.) In the Perkins case [People v. Perkins, 8 Cal.2d 502, 66 P.2d 631] this court expressly rejected the application of the statement from the Staples case to a situation which involved only circumstantial evidence. As pointed out by the court the rule that the circumstances relied upon by the prosecution must be consistent with guilt and inconsistent with an hypothesis of innocence is a rule of instruction for the jury, and is not the rule for the guidance of the court on review. It said: 'The rule above announced does no more than to instruct the jury that, if a reasonable doubt is created in their minds for any reason, they must acquit the defendant. But, where the jury rejects the hypothesis pointing to innocence by its verdict, and there is evidence to support the implied finding of guilt as the more reasonable of the two hypotheses, this court is bound by the finding of the jury.' Also, in People v. Smith, 35 Cal.App.2d 73, 94 P.2d 633, 634, involving facts similar to those presented in the case at bar, where the trial was without a jury, it was stated that 'it is a matter for the trial judge to be persuaded beyond a reasonable doubt and not this court.'"

In the case just cited, the appellant therein relied upon some of the cases referred to by appellant herein, but the court said, "Anything stated in those cases which is inconsistent with the views herein expressed is disapproved." See also People v. Curtis, 106 Cal.App.2d 321, 235 P.2d 51; People v. Oliverio, 99 Cal.App.2d 743, 745, 222 P.2d 245.

Appellant's further contention that the conversations and conduct of appellant do not admit of the inference that he was engaged in bookmaking activities cannot be sustained. When the factual situation present in the instant case is compared to that existing in the case of People v. Chaney, 147 Cal.App.2d 740, 305 P.2d 955, in which a conviction for bookmaking was affirmed, it is at once apparent that the verdict of the jury in the case at bar cannot be disturbed.

The facts presented to the jury in the case now engaging our attention are above narrated and need not be repeated. Peculiarly applicable to appellant's contention that, unexplained, they constitute no incriminatory evidence, is the language of this court in People v. Overman, 149 Cal.App. 2d 125, 131, 307 P.2d 1000, 1004, as follows: "Almost anyone of adult years, who is even casually acquainted with what goes on in the so-called 'sport of kings' at the various race tracks in Southern California and elsewhere would understand what was meant by what was said in the various telephone conversations. With all of the divers advertisements in the various mediums concerning the horse races at the several race tracs, the repeated radio announcements of the results and televising of the different races at least once each week, and with all of the propaganda about how many millions of dollars are given to charity by the race track owners, and all of the news stories of the frailties of the human beings who engage in embezzling money to 'play the horses', it would be difficult to avoid coming into contact with, and having an understanding of the incidence of the race tracks and what the words meant. As was said in People v. Larum, 111 Cal.App. 2d 732, at page 734, 245 P.2d 323, 324: 'The conversations and the passing of the money would be commonly understood as wagers on horse racing, and in the absence of any explanation by defendant that the transactions had a different meaning or purpose, the court could scarcely have failed to find they were wagers. The evidence was sufficient * * *.'"

[2] True, appellant denied the conversations and the conduct ascribed to him by the police officer, but, as heretofore pointed out, the credibility of witnesses and the intrinsic value and effect of evidence are matters primarily for the duly constituted arbiter of the facts.

[3] Appellant's final contention that before one can be held to "engage" in the business of bookmaking, the taking of more than one bet must be shown, as well as the fact that one is actively occupied or employed in making "a book of bets", is unavailing. An unbroken line of authorities hold that to constitute a violation of Penal Code, section 337a, a volume of gambling or betting is not required and that the acceptance of even a single wager in contravention of the statute will suffice.

The judgment is affirmed, and the attempted appeal from "the sentencing of the defendant" is dismissed.

FOURT and LILLIE, JJ., concur.

158 Cal.App.2d 652

Grace J. FRIZZELL, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Riley L. FRIZZELL, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 17555.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

March 26, 1958.

Proceedings on defendant's motion to modify separate maintenance decree so as to instruct parents as to what college their boy should attend. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Milton D. Sapiro, J., held that it would be to best interests of child to attend a state school rather than a parochial school, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peters, P. J., held that ordinarily parent who has custody has power to determine what school child shall attend, but held that such power is subject to control by trial court where it believes that best interests of child will thus best be served; and held that when trial court thus modifies custody order, its determination cannot be upset in absence of showing an abuse of discretion.

Affirmed.

1. Husband and Wife ⇐299½

Trial court has power to modify separate maintenance decree by limiting discretion that parent awarded child custody otherwise possesses with regard to what college child should attend.

2. Infants ⇐19
Parent and Child ⇐3(3)

Questions of custody, support and education of children are addressed to sound discretion of trial court.

3. Infants ⇐19
Parent and Child ⇐3(3)

Unless a clear case of abuse of discretion is made to appear, appellate court will not substitute its opinion and thereby divest trial court of discretionary power reposed in it with regard to questions of custody, support and education of children.

4. Infants ⇐19
Parent and Child ⇐3(3)

An appellate court is never justified in substituting its discretion for that of trial court on issues of custody, support and education of children, unless there has been a miscarriage of justice.

5. Infants ⇐19
Parent and Child ⇐3(3)

An appellate court cannot interfere with trial court on matters of custody, support and education of children unless ruling of trial court exceeds bounds of reason.

6. Infants ⇐19
Parent and Child ⇐3(3)

An abuse of discretion in ruling on questions of custody, support and education of children cannot be presumed but must be affirmatively established by party complaining of order.

7. Husband and Wife ⇐299(3)

Rule that there must be showing of "changed circumstances" applies only where trial court has refused to modify separate maintenance decree and it is contended that an abuse of discretion occurred and has no application where trial court has modified decree.

8. Parent and Child ⇐2(4)

Finding as to unfitness of one or both parents is not essential to modification of custody decree.

9. Husband and Wife ⇐299½

It was within discretion of trial court to modify separate maintenance decree so as to instruct parents that their child should attend state college rather than parochial school. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 138.

10. Parent and Child ⇐3(3)

Ordinarily parent who has custody has power to determine what school child shall attend, but such power is subject to control by trial court where it believes that best interests of child will thus best be served; and when trial court thus modifies custody order, its determination cannot be upset in absence of showing an abuse of discretion.

Gean W. Cannon, San Francisco, for appellant.

Barrett, Lucey & Harklerod, San Francisco, for respondent.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

In October of 1947 Grace Frizzell, the plaintiff, obtained a decree of separate maintenance from Riley Frizzell, the defendant. The decree, among other things, incorporated by reference a property settlement agreement, gave "the care, custody, control and education" of the couple's two children, Glen and James, to the plaintiff, "with the right of the defendant to visit with said children at reasonable times," and ordered the defendant to pay to the plaintiff $50 a month for the support and maintenance of each of the children. In August of 1951, by court order, the support allowance was increased to $75 per month per child, and the visitation rights of the father expanded. The father has made all payments called for by these orders.

In October of 1947, when the separate maintenance decree was secured, Glen was 8 years old and James was but 3 years old. Glen is now of college age. The parents cannot agree as to what college he should attend. The mother wants Glen to go to Santa Clara where he can continue his parochial education and can live at home, while the father is of the opinion that the boy should go to a state college, because he has not been doing well in his studies at a sectarian school. The boy's scholastic standing in the parochial school he is now attending is 122 out of a class of 153. The boy cannot secure admittance to the University of California because of his low grades, but he is eligible for admission to San Francisco State College or San Jose State College. If he attended the latter, he could continue to live at home with his mother.

The plaintiff and defendant were unable to resolve their differences. Thereupon, in July of 1956, the defendant filed a notice of motion "For Instructions of Court Relative to Education of Child." A hearing was held on the motion at which the plaintiff and defendant testified, and at the close of the hearing the trial court entered its "Order Giving Instructions as to the Further Education of Child." By this order the court "finds that it is to the best interest and welfare of said child that the further education of said child, being his college education, should be obtained at San Francisco State College, San Jose State College, or the University of California, if his admission to the University of California can be arranged." The court entered its order accordingly.

The order also provided that it was made "upon the express condition that the defendant, Riley L. Frizzell, shall continue to pay during the entire period of said college education the monies [sic] ordered by this Court for the care, support and education of said child." Thus, under this order, the father is required to pay for the support and maintenance of the child "during the entire period of said college education," which could well continue after the boy is 21.

From this decree the plaintiff appeals.

The main contention of appellant is that the trial court's order is contrary to the law of this state and not called for by the circumstances of the case. She points out that she has been awarded the "care, custody, control and education" of Glen, and contends that such provision can be changed only by a modification order predicated upon changed circumstances showing unfitness. Admittedly, there is no evidence that the appellant is unfit to have the care and custody of the boy, and, except as to his college education, the decree in no way affects appellant's rights to Glen's care and custody.

[1] The appellant mistakes the nature of these proceedings. Although labeled a petition for "instructions," the petition, in legal effect, is one for the modification of the modified separate maintenance decree in reference to the custody and control of Glen. The motion was to modify that decree so as to instruct the parents as to what college the boy should attend. To this extent it necessarily modified the decree by limiting the discretion that the one having custody would otherwise possess. This the trial court had the power to do.

[2–5] Questions of custody, support and education of children are addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court. Beal v. Beal, 218 Cal. 755, 24 P.2d 768; Berry v. Chaplin, 74 Cal.App.2d 669, 169 P.2d 453; Hale v. Hale, 55 Cal.App.2d 879, 132 P.2d 67. In Sharpe v. Sharpe, 55 Cal.App. 2d 262, 265, 130 P.2d 462, 464, the rule is stated as follows: "Unless a clear case of abuse is made to appear, an appellate court will not substitute its opinion and thereby divest the trial court of the discretionary power reposed in it. [Citation.] The burden is on appellant to establish an abuse of discretion [citing a case], and an appellate court is never justified in substituting its discretion for that of the trial court unless there has been a miscarriage of justice. [Citing a case.]"

[6, 7] An appellate court can interfere with the trial court on such matters only where the ruling of the trial court exceeds the bounds of reason. An abuse of discretion cannot be presumed but must be affirmatively established by the party complaining of the order. Berry v. Chaplin, 74 Cal.App.2d 669, 169 P.2d 453.

[8, 9] The rule that there must be a showing of "changed circumstances" has no application where the trial court has modified a decree. That rule only applies where the trial court has refused to modify a decree and it is contended an abuse of discretion occurred. To show such abuse there must be a showing of changed circumstances. Kelly v. Kelly, 75 Cal.App.2d 408, 171 P.2d 95; Dotsch v. Grimes, 75 Cal.App.2d 418, 171 P.2d 506. Nor is a finding as to the unfitness of one or both parents essential before a trial court may modify a custody decree. This was well illustrated in Beal v. Beal, 218 Cal. 755, 24 P.2d 768. In that case the wife was awarded custody of two sons, aged 13 and 10 respectively. This was later modified, by consent, by placing the elder of the two boys in the joint custody of the parents, and by ordering that the older boy be enrolled in the Menlo School for Boys. Three years later the court again modified the decree by awarding custody of both boys jointly to the parents, and by providing that the older boy should live with the father in Los Angeles for three months to secure needed medical care, by providing the younger son should live with the mother for these three months and attend San Mateo High School, and thereafter both children should attend a boarding school selected by the parents, and if they cannot agree, then the boys shall attend Menlo School for Boys. The mother appealed, contending that such modification could not be sustained in absence of a finding of her unfitness. The court disposed of this issue as follows (218 Cal. at page 758, 24 P.2d at page 769):

"A finding as to the unfitness of one or both parents to have custody of the children was not essential; the application for modification was addressed to the discretion of the court section 138, Civ.Code; In re Guardianship of Shannon, 218 Cal. 490, 23 P.2d 1020. Admittedly the elder son, who, pursuant to the order of September, 1929, had previously attended the Menlo School for Boys, was suffering severely from injuries received in an airplane accident, and, having been removed from the Stanford Hospital to the southern part of the state, was under medical care at the father's home there, and at his expense. This boy was standing on the very threshold of maturity; the younger son was also rapidly approaching that critical age when the counsel and companionship of his father would be invaluable. Admittedly also, there had been a great deal of friction between these parents in the matter of arranging for the father to see the children and the latter had contributed directly to payment of some of their bills in addition to making the monthly allowance to plaintiff, for which he received no accounting. Properly exercising its discretion in this situation, it is apparent that the court was wisely guided by the considerations specified in section 138 of the Civil Code, to wit: '(1) By what appears to be for the best interest of the child in respect to its temporal and its mental and moral welfare; * * * (2) As between parents adversely claiming the custody, neither parent is entitled to it as of right; but other things being equal, if the child is of tender years, it should be given to the mother; if it is of an age to require education and preparation for labor and business, then to the father.'"

[10] Thus, in the instant case, the order made was well within the discretion of the court. See also Holsinger v. Holsinger, 44 Cal.2d 132, 279 P.2d 961. In fact, the court, under section 138 of the Civil Code, referred to in the Beal case and under the cases above cited, could have changed the entire custody of the child to the father. It did less than this, merely providing that the father's choice of schools should prevail over that of the mother.

The appellant urges that the real basis of the court's decision is the belief of the trial judge that a father cannot be compelled to send his child to college and therefore can impose his will on his wife in this respect although not entitled to custody. This contention is based on the case of Boens v. Bennett, 20 Cal.App.2d 477, 67 P. 2d 715, referred to by the parties at the trial. That case did hold that a father who had custody, regardless of financial position, could not be compelled to send his child to college. The Boens case has been severely criticized and practically overruled (see Hale v. Hale, 55 Cal.App.2d 879, 132 P.2d 67; Rawley v. Rawley, 94 Cal.App.2d 562, 210 P.2d 891; note 23 So.Cal.L.Rev. 407), and is contrary to the rule in some other jurisdictions. Esteb v. Esteb, 138 Wash. 174, 244 P. 264, 246 P. 27, 47 A.L.R. 110. Thus, it is questionable whether the case is now the law of this state, even where the father has custody and determines that his child should not have a college education. Whatever the proper rule in this respect may be, the case, even if it is still the law, is not here controlling. In the instant case, both parents want the boy to go to college. The father is willing to support the child during his college period, even if it lasts after the child is 21. The only controversy is over what college the boy shall attend. The record does not show that, in determining this question, the trial court felt compelled to agree with the father because of the Boens case. All that the record discloses is that the trial court believed that a father supporting a child should have a voice in the matter of that child's higher education. The record, far from showing that the trial court believed that the father had the sole right to determine the question, stated that the question of higher education was "purely a discretionary matter" with the court.

There can be no doubt that the order made by the trial court was well within its discretion. While a parent who has custody has the power to determine what school the child shall attend, this right is subject to control by the trial court where it believes the best interests of the child will thus best be served. When the trial court thus modifies the custody order, its determination cannot be upset in the absence of showing an abuse of discretion. There was no such showing here made.

The decree appealed from is affirmed.

BRAY and FRED B. WOOD, JJ., concur.

158 Cal.App.2d 700

Rowland F. SWEET, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Earl H. MARKWART, doing business under the fictitious firm name and style of Markwart Industries; Earl H. Markwart, doing business under the fictitious firm name and style of Markwart Company; Earl H. Markwart, doing business under the fictitious firm name and style of Yuba Tank and Steel Company; Earl H. Markwart, doing business under the fictitious firm name and style of Markwart Industrial Equipment Company; Helen H. Howard, Executrix of the Last Will and Testament of C. W. Howard (Deceased); American Trust Company, a corporation, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 8353.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

March 26, 1958.

Hearing Denied May 21, 1958.

Action by engineer against contractor's assignees for benefit of creditors on common count for money had and received in connection with services performed under alleged agreement between engineer and contractor providing that engineer was to receive percentage of net profits from contracts. The Superior Court, Sacramento County, Malcolm Glenn, J., granted assignees' motions for directed verdict and engineer appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Schottky, J., held that questions whether assignees knew of agreement, whether they told engineer to complete contracts, whether engineer remained on job and supervised completion of contracts, and whether money was paid to assignees on contracts, were for jury.

Reversed.

1. Trial ⇐340(1)

Power of trial court to correct verdict is precisely same as power of court to grant a nonsuit.

2. Assignments for Benefit of Creditors ⇐279

In action by engineer against contractor's assignees for benefit of creditors on common count for money had and received in connection with services performed by engineer under alleged contract between engineer and contractor providing that engineer was to receive percentage of net profits from contract, questions whether assignees knew of agreement, whether they told engineer to go ahead under agreement, whether engineer remained on job and supervised completion of contracts and whether money was paid to assignees on contracts, were for jury.

3. Assignments for Benefit of Creditors ⇐253

If engineer and contractor entered into agreement whereby engineer was to receive percentage of net profits of contracts, and contractor's assignees for benefit of creditors knew of agreement, told engineer to go ahead and supervise completion of contracts, and engineer did so, and money was paid to assignees on contract, it would be inequitable for assignees to get benefit of engineer's services without assuming burden of agreement.

4. Abatement and Revival ⇐58

If engineer and contractor entered into agreement whereby engineer was to receive percentage of net profits of contracts, fact that contractor's assignee for benefit of creditors died prior to trial of engineer's action against him on common count for money had and received in connection with services performed under contract would not prevent engineer from proving his cause of action against assignee's estate.

5. Depositions ⇐100

In action by engineer against contractor's assignees for benefit of creditors on common count for money had and received in connection with services performed under alleged agreement between engineer and contractor providing that engineer was to receive percentage of net profits from contracts, engineer should have been permitted to use deposition of assignee, who died prior to trial of action, against such assignee's estate. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. § 1880, subd. 3.

6. Depositions ⇐100

Deposition of party taken before his death may be used against his estate. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1880, subd. 3.

7. Assignments for Benefit of Creditors ⇐279

In action by engineer against contractor's assignees for benefit of creditors under alleged oral contract, question whether it was understood that if engineer supervised completion of contracts he was to receive percentage of profits from contracts was for jury.

8. Assignments for Benefit of Creditors ⇐253

If contractor's assignees for benefit of creditors agreed to pay engineer a percentage of profits if engineer agreed to supervise completion of contracts, which had been started under agreement between contractor and engineer whereby engineer was to receive same percentage of profits, contract would be between assignees, and engineer, assignees would not be guarantors of agreement between engineer and contractor, and terms of contract would be sufficiently definite to be enforced.

9. Contracts ⇐346(15)

Even if proof showed contract between engineer and bank, which was contractor's assignee for benefit of creditors, and engineer's complaint alleged joint contract entered into between engineer, bank and trustee, it would be an immaterial variance in view of fact that bank offered testimony that no conversation creating such contract ever took place.

10. Appeal and Error ⇐1039(13)

Wherein defendant could not have been misled to its prejudice by variance between plaintiff's pleading and proof, variance becomes immaterial.

11. Assignments for Benefit of Creditors ⇐279

In action by engineer against contractor's assignees for benefit of creditors under alleged oral contract, whereby engineer was to receive percentage of net profits for supervision of completion of contracts, question whether joint contract between engineer and both assignees was entered into was for jury.

12. Limitation of Actions ⇐127(4)

Where engineer's complaint alleged that he entered into oral contract on certain date with bank, but engineer did not prove that contract was entered into on that date because he was unable to establish that bank officials with whom he had conversations were authorized to act for bank, engineer was then allowed to introduce testimony of conversation with vice-president of bank on later date, and complaint was then amended to show contract was entered into at that later date, proof of contract entered into at later date did not substitute new cause of action and statute of limitations did not run.

13. Limitation of Actions ⇐127(2)

Where no attempt to prove a wholly different legal liability or obligation from that orginally stated in complaint is made, an amendment is proper and statute of limitations does not run.

14. Master and Servant ⇐3(2)

Alleged agreement, whereby engineer was to aid in obtaining contract for contractor and was to perform executive, field and engineering services necessary in performance thereof and, on completion of contracts, was to receive 40% of net profits of contracts, was at most a hiring, the term of which was measured by method adopted for payment of salary, and did not necessarily obligate engineer to continue until contracts were completed.

15. Assignments for Benefit of Creditors ⇐253

If engineer, who had entered into agreement with contractor to perform services for which he was to receive percentage of net profits of contracts, agreed with contractor's assignee to supervise completion of contracts, he would be bound thereby and there would be consideration for the agreement with assignee.

16. Assignments for Benefit of Creditors ⇐279

In action by engineer against contractor's assignees for benefit of creditors under alleged oral contract with assignee, question whether engineer agreed to stay and complete job at time of agreement with one assignee's officer was for jury.

17. Witnesses ⇐175(2)

In action by engineer against contractor's assignee for benefit of creditors and estate of deceased assignee for benefit of creditors under alleged oral contract made between engineer and assignees, wherein deposition of deceased assignee denying that any conversation creating agreement took place, was introduced in evidence, exclusion of proof of conversation in connection with claim against estate was improper.

18. Assignments for Benefit of Creditors ⇐278

In action by engineer against contractor's assignees for benefit of creditors on common count for money had and received in connection with work performed under contract between engineer and contractor providing that engineer was to receive percentage of profits upon completion of contracts, evidence established that engineer would have had a cause of action against contractor for breach of contract to share in profits of contracts which had been obtained.

19. Appeal and Error ⇐843(2)

Where verdict had not been received, reviewing court could not pass on question whether verdict should have been received despite fact that one juror died after jury had arrived at its verdict.

20. Appeal and Error ⇐1176(5)

Where a verdict is not received or entered as a verdict of a jury, a reviewing court may not order the entry of judgment based on it.

Earl D. Desmond and E. Vayne Miller, Sacramento, for appellant.

J. A. Montgomery, Jr., and Lloyd A. Phillips, Jr., Sacramento, for respondent Helen H. Howard.

Devlin, Diepenbrock & Wulff, Sacramento, and Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison, San Francisco, for respondent American Trust Co.

SCHOTTKY, Justice.

This is an appeal by Rowland F. Sweet from judgments in favor of respondents in an action to recover the sum of $24,980.05 allegedly due and unpaid.

By his second amended complaint appellant Sweet sued Earl Markwart, C. W. Howard (Helen Howard, Executrix of the Last Will and Testament of C. W. Howard was substituted as the defendant before the trial of the action), and the American Trust Company. The complaint was in five counts, four common counts and a fifth count which alleged that during the years 1946 and 1947 Earl H. Markwart entered into six separate contracts to construct and install certain industrial cleaning equipment and aircraft cleaning equipment at prices aggregating $385,860.71; that before Markwart entered into these contracts he made an agreement with plaintiff whereby plaintiff was to aid in obtaining these contracts and to perform executive, field, and engineering services necessary in the performance thereof; that on completion of the contracts plaintiff was to receive 40 per cent of the net profits of the contracts; that while these contracts were still uncompleted, Markwart by written agreement assigned all his assets, including his interest in the six contracts, to defendants Howard and the American Trust Company; that shortly thereafter Howard and the American Trust Company orally agreed with plaintiff that he was to continue the contract with Markwart and that he would be paid the 40 per cent of the net profits of the contracts as agreed; that plaintiff has fully performed his part of the agreement and that Howard and the American Trust Company have refused to pay plaintiff his share of the profits which were alleged to be $24,980.05. The various defendants entered denials to the complaint and the cause proceeded to trial. At the conclusion of the trial defendants' motions for nonsuits were granted, (1) to Howard and the American Trust Company on the first count of the complaint which was a common count for work and labor performed at the request of the defendants; (2) to Markwart, Howard and the American Trust Company on the second count which was for money due upon a book account; (3) to Markwart on the third count which was a common count for money had and received; and (4) to the American Trust Company and Howard on the fourth count which was a common count for services performed at the defendants' request. Markwart was not named as a defendant in this count or in the fifth count of the complaint. Thereafter, directed verdicts were ordered in favor of Markwart on the first count, the American Trust Company on the third count and Howard on the third and fifth counts. The sole remaining cause of action, the fifth which was on the oral contract, was submitted to the jury against the American Trust Company only. After some deliberation the jury arrived at a verdict against the American Trust Company for $24,980.-05. The verdict was signed by the foreman, but the jury, instead of returning to the courtroom with the verdict, went to dinner where one juror suffered a heart attack and died. The trial court refused to accept the verdict of the jury upon its return, and the jury was discharged. Thereafter, purportedly acting under the provisions of section 630 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the court entered judgments in favor of the various defendants on the counts not nonsuited.

Appellant thereafter appealed from the judgments of nonsuit which were ordered and from the judgment in favor of Markwart on the first cause of action; from the judgment in favor of Howard on the third and fifth causes of action; from the judgments in favor of the American Trust Company on the third and fifth causes of action; and from an order denying appellant's motion to have the court enter and record the written verdict of the jury.

The appeals from the orders granting nonsuits as to Howard and the American Trust Company were ordered dismissed by this court on February 2, 1953. Sweet v. Markwart, 115 Cal.App.2d 735, 252 P.2d 751. On September 27, 1956, this court dismissed the appeal from the order denying the motion to have the trial court enter and record the written verdict of the jury as it was not an appealable order since it was made before judgment. Appellant has abandoned his appeal from the order granting a nonsuit to Markwart. The following questions are presented on this appeal:

1. Whether the trial court erred in directing a verdict in favor of Howard on the third count of the complaint which was a common count for money had and received, and on the fifth count which was on an express contract.

2. Whether the trial court erred in granting a directed verdict in favor of the American Trust Company on the third count.

3. Whether the trial court erred in entering judgment in favor of the American Trust Company on the fifth count.

4. Whether the trial court erred in directing a verdict in favor of Markwart on the first count which was a common count for work and labor performed at the request of the defendant.

[1] It is the law in this state that the power of a trial court to direct a verdict is precisely the same as the power of the court to grant a nonsuit. Merlino v. Southern Pacific Co., 132 Cal.App.2d 58, 281 P.2d 583. "A nonsuit or a directed verdict may be granted 'only when, disregarding conflicting evidence and giving to plaintiff's evidence all the value to which it is legally entitled, herein indulging in every legitimate inference which may be drawn from that evidence, the result is a determination that there is no evidence of sufficient substantiality to support a verdict in favor of the plaintiff if such a verdict were given.' * * * Unless it can be said as a matter of law, that, when so considered, no other reasonable conclusion is legally deducible from the evidence, and that any other holding would be so lacking in evidentiary support that a reviewing court would be impelled to reverse it upon appeal, or the trial court to set it aside as a matter of law, the trial court is not justified in taking the case from the jury." In re Estate of Lances, 216 Cal. 397, 400, 14 P.2d 768.

"Upon appeal from a judgment based on a directed verdict it is the duty of the reviewing court to consider the evidence and the inferences which reasonably may be drawn therefrom, in the light most favorable to the plaintiff. That other evidence may be found in the record which would support equally reasonable inferences to the contrary is of no consequence." Merlino v. Southern Pacific Co., supra, 132 Cal.App. 2d at page 60, 281 P.2d at page 585.

The evidence produced at the trial, viewed in the light most favorable to the appellant, disclosed that in 1945 Markwart, who was in the steel construction business, and Sweet entered into an oral agreement whereby Sweet, who had developed certain aircraft engine cleaning equipment which eliminated 95 per cent of the hand labor in cleaning engine parts, agreed to work for Markwart in a new branch of Markwart's business which was to consist of a division which would engage in the sale and design of the cleaning equipment. Sweet was to receive 40 per cent of the net profits of the division after actual costs of material, labor, taxes and 25 per cent of the cost of labor and materials for overhead were deducted from the amount received on each contract. Sweet was to solicit business, design the equipment, and supervise the manufacture and the installation of the equipment. This agreement continued. In December, 1946, Markwart, who was in financial difficulties and who was assigning all sums due or thereafter to become due him to the American Trust Company, hired C. W. Howard as his general manager. Howard had power to hire and fire the heads of the various departments, but according to Markwart did not discharge anyone until after April 30, 1947. Howard was informed of Sweet's agreement with Markwart. On April 11, 1947, Howard by a letter, terminated the agreement and thereafter Sweet, who had been on a drawing account, received a regular salary check with deductions made for federal and Social Security taxes. Sweet testified that after he received the letter he spoke to Howard and that Howard told him that the letter abrogated the agreement for future jobs but that the contracts already obtained by Sweet (including the six which are the basis of this lawsuit) were not affected by the termination of the agreement.

On April 30, 1947, Markwart executed an agreement with Howard, as trustee, and the American Trust Company whereby Markwart transferred all his assets to Howard as trustee, for the purpose of liquidating the business and paying certain named creditors and satisfying the bank's obligations. The agreement provided that the trustee would use his best efforts to complete all executory contracts and work in progress and endeavor to realize and salvage as much as possible out of the business. Shortly after this agreement was signed, Sweet and Howard went to San Francisco and saw a Mr. Hammond, a vice president of the bank, who was in charge of the liquidation of the loans made to Markwart. A Mr. Davenport, another bank employee, was also present. Sweet discussed the April 30, 1947, agreement with them. He was concerned because the agreement provided that the bank could remove the trustee at any time and Sweet wanted to know to whom he would look if Howard were removed. During this conversation Sweet discussed the profits which were to be made on one of the contracts which Sweet claims he is entitled to share. Sweet showed Hammond how he computed the profits. His agreement with Markwart was discussed generally. Hammond told Sweet that he would be paid his 40 per cent of the net profits of the six contracts but that the agreement would not apply to any future jobs which were secured.

After the complaint was filed Sweet had Howard's deposition taken, and Sweet's deposition was also taken. The trial court ruled that Howard's deposition could not be used against the estate. All conversations between Howard and other parties were limited in use to parties other than the estate.

[2–5] We think that the trial court erred in ordering directed verdicts in favor of the American Trust Company and the Estate of Howard on the third cause of action which was a common count for money had and received. "Although such an action is one at law, it is governed by principles of equity * * . It may be brought ' * * wherever one person has received money which belongs to another, and which in "equity and good conscience," or in other words, in justice and right, should be returned. * * *'" Mains v. City Title Insurance Co., 34 Cal.2d 580, 586, 212 P.2d 873, 876. An assignee for the benefit of creditors may in his discretion and according to what he considers to be in the best interest of the creditors perform or refuse to perform the assignor's part of an executory contract. The assignee must exercise ordinary prudence and good faith in dealing with the assignor's contract obligations, and where he induces the other party to perform or otherwise reaps the benefit of a contract he must assume its obligations. 6 C.J.S. Assignments for Benefit of Creditors § 190. The evidence produced at the trial was sufficient to indicate that both of the assignees knew of the Sweet-Markwart agreement; that they both told Sweet to go ahead; that Sweet remained on the job and supervised completion of the six contracts; that the money was paid to the assignees on the contracts. Under such circumstances it would be inequitable to deprive Sweet of the rewards due him. The fact that Howard died prior to the trial of the action would not prevent Sweet from proving his cause of action against the estate. Howard's deposition was taken and read into evidence by Sweet's attorney though the court would not permit it to be used against the estate. This was error. In Evans v. Gibson, 220 Cal. 476, 31 P.2d 389, plaintiff sued the decedent and took his deposition. Decedent died prior to the trial. At the trial plaintiff introduced the deposition and was allowed to testify against the estate. Judgment was obtained against the executrices of the decedent's estate, who, on appeal, contended that much of the testimony of the plaintiff was inadmissible under the provisions of section 1880, subdivision 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure. On this point the Supreme Court indicated that when the deposition of a party is taken prior to his death it may be used in evidence against the estate and the plaintiff may testify. The court said, 220 Cal. at page 489, 31 P.2d at page 395:

> "Excluding the evidence which may be incompetent, sufficient remains to sustain the judgment against the executrices. The deposition of Gibson taken in the case before trial under section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure, was introduced, and the transcript of his testimony taken in the Leavitt v. Gibson action [136 Cal.App. 62, 28 P. 2d 41] was introduced herein pursuant to stipulation. Said deposition and transcript in themselves provide damaging evidence against Gibson. Furthermore, there is some authority that the adverse party may render himself competent by introducing the deposition of the decedent taken before his death."

[6] We hold that when the deposition of a party is taken before his death the deposition may be used against his estate. From the deposition it is clear that Howard had knowledge of the Sweet-Markwart agreement. From Sweet's testimony it is equally clear that the bank, too, had knowledge of it. Under such circumstances it would be inequitable for the assignees to get the benefit of Sweet's services without assuming the burdens of the Sweet-Markwart agreement. Smith v. Barnard, 148 N.Y. 420, 42 N.E. 1054.

[7, 8] We also think it was error to enter judgment in favor of the American Trust Company on the fifth count which was an oral contract. The letter of April 11, 1947, from Howard to Sweet could be construed as terminating the Sweet-Markwart agreement. If so, Sweet, as of April 30, 1947, was not obligated to continue in the employ of the company. The only cause of action Sweet would have had at that time was a cause of action for breach of contract against Markwart. If we may assume that no contract then existed Sweet could enter into a new contract for his services. After the assignment Sweet was concerned with his future. He, in the company of Howard, went to Hammond's office where he discussed the largest of the six executory contracts for the manufacture and installation of the engine cleaning equipment. Hammond was interested in ascertaining the amount of profit that would accrue if the contract was completed. This was discussed, as was Sweet's agreement with Markwart generally. Sweet testified that Hammond told him to go ahead and he would get his 40 per cent. We think that these facts are sufficient to indicate that a contract was entered into between Sweet and the bank. The law will construe an agreement so as to carry into effect the reasonable intentions of the parties if their intent can be ascertained. Roy v. Salisbury, 21 Cal.2d 176, 130 P.2d 706. From the testimony of Sweet one may infer that Hammond and Sweet discussed the method of cost allocation which Sweet's agreement with Markwart provided; that after Hammond went over the cost analysis of one contract he was satisfied with the arrangement; that it was understood that Sweet would get 40 per cent of the net profits if he remained and supervised the completion of the six contracts. This construction may be given the conversation when we consider that Sweet was apparently the one man in the Markwart organization who could supervise the completion of the six contracts and when we consider that the bank was interested in salvaging as much as possible from the business to apply to the unsatisfied loans. Under such a construction the contract is between the bank and Sweet, and the bank is not a guarantor of the Sweet-Markwart agreement. The terms of the contract are sufficiently definite to be enforced.

[9–11] The bank contends that the complaint must fail because it alleges that a joint contract was entered into between Sweet, Howard, and the bank, and the testimony at most proves a contract between Sweet and the bank. We do not think that the proof only shows a contract between Sweet and the bank, but if it did it would be an immaterial variance between the pleading and the proof. The bank offered testimony that no conversation between Sweet and Hammond ever took place. By offering such testimony the bank could not have been misled to its prejudice. In such a case a variance between the pleading and the proof becomes immaterial. Hayes v. Richfield Oil Corp., 38 Cal.2d 375, 240 P.2d 580; Rubin v. Platt Music Co., 92 Cal.App. 203, 268 P. 396. We are of the opinion, however, that the evidence produced was sufficient to prove a joint contract. Howard, Hammond and Sweet were all present at this conversation. Sweet had prepared a cost analysis of one job to show the profit that would be obtained if one job were completed. Hammond did most of the talking although the discussion was with the others. There was also evidence that the bank kept a close check on Howard and that he could not disburse funds without the bank's approval. Under such circumstances we think that one may infer that the purpose of the conference was to clear up Sweet's status and when Hammond told Sweet that he would get his 40 per cent he was speaking for Howard also.

[12, 13] The bank contends that the contract as proved was barred by the statute of limitations. The complaint alleged that an oral contract was entered into on or about May 7, 1947. Sweet attempted to prove conversations with other bank officials but he could not do so because he was unable to establish that these other officials were authorized to act for the bank at the time of the purported conversations. Sweet was then allowed to introduce testimony of the conversation with Hammond on or about May 15, 1947. The complaint was then amended to show that the contract was entered into on or about May 15, 1947. It is the bank's contention that proof of the contract of May 15, 1947, was proof of a contract different from that pleaded and therefore it was barred by the statute of limitations. We do not agree. The amendment did not substitute an entirely new cause of action. There was no attempt to prove a wholly different legal liability or obligation from that originally stated. In such a case an amendment is proper and the statute would not run. Klopstock v. Superior Court, 17 Cal.2d 13, 108 P.2d 906, 135 A.L.R. 318.

[14, 15] The bank also contends that if there was a contract there was no consideration for it. The bank contends that since Sweet was under a salary arrangement with Howard and since Sweet's duties were to supervise the completion of the contracts there was no consideration for the new agreement. We do not think that the Howard-Sweet arrangment necessarily must be construed as obligating Sweet to continue until the contracts were completed. It was at most a hiring the term of which was measured by the method adopted for payment of the salary. If Sweet agreed with the bank to stay he would be bound and there would be consideration for the agreement. The bank also contends that Sweet did not agree to stay and complete the job at the time of the agreement with Hammond. We think that it may be inferred that even if that matter was not expressly discussed this was the whole tenor of the conversation between the parties. The bank also contends that if any contract was entered into it was merely a contract of guarantee because Sweet was obligated under the Sweet-Markwart agreement. This argument overlooks the fact that there was evidence that the agreement had been terminated by Howard.

[16, 17] We are also of the opinion that it was error to exclude proof of the conversation between Hammond, Howard and Sweet in the action against the estate. In his deposition Howard denied that any such conversation took place. This deposition was introduced in evidence. In Coble v. McClintock, 10 Ind.App. 562, 38 N.E. 74, at page 75, the court said: "We think, when it is made to appear that the decedent has testified in a manner known to the law, and that his testimony is available to his estate, the reason for closing the mouth of the living party has ceased to exist, and when the reason ceases the rule should cease also." See also Annotation, 158 A.L.R. 306. Under such circumstances there is no advantage to the adverse party by permitting him to testify against the estate as to matters denied by the decedent because the denial of the decedent is available to the estate. We think that the evidence produced against the bank should have been permitted against the estate and if introduced would have proved the oral contract against the Estate of Howard.

[18] Markwart has not filed a brief in this matter. It is clear that Sweet would have a cause of action against Markwart for breach of contract to share in the profits of certain contracts which had been obtained.

[19, 20] Appellant has asked this court to order the verdict of the jury entered if this court reverses the case. We cannot pass on the question whether the verdict should have been received despite the fact that one juror died after the jury had arrived at its verdict. If the verdict had been received, this court could pass on the question presented, and, if this court were to decide that the verdict had been properly rendered, it could, on reversing the judgments, order that judgment based on the verdict of the jury be entered. However, where a verdict is not received or entered as the verdict of the jury, an appellate court may not order the entry of judgment based on it. Crowe v. Sacks, 44 Cal.2d 590, 599, 283 P.2d 689.

The judgments are reversed.

PEEK, J., and WARNE, J. pro tem., concur.

159 Cal.App.2d 1

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Frank BROES, Sr., Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 6014, 6015.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

March 28, 1958.

Hearing Denied May 21, 1958.

Proceedings on orders revoking probation which had been extended to defendant following his conviction of two separate felonies. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Clement D. Nye, J., revoked probation and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that where probation report to effect that defendant had maintained an uncooperative, hostile and aggressive attitude toward probation officer was on file three weeks before court acted on recommendation of parole officer to revoke defendant's probation and defendant was present at hearing and represented by counsel, trial court did not abuse discretion in revoking probation on theory that defendant had not seen and had not been advised as to contents of report until some time after orders of revocation.

Judgments affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇐982

Where, on June 10, 1954 proceedings charging defendant with violation of Dangerous Weapons' Control Law were suspended and defendant was put on probation for three years, minute order which was made on June 4, 1957 and which revoked defendant's probation was effective and was made within probationary period and mere fact that a subsequent order on June 11, 1957 also revoked probation did not have effect of revoking order of June 4, the later order merely being an unnecessary duplication of the earlier one. West's Ann. Pen. Code, § 12000 et seq.

2. Criminal Law ⇐982

Where probation report to effect that defendant had maintained an uncooperative, hostile and aggressive attitude toward probation officer was on file three weeks before court acted on recommendation of parole officer to revoke defendant's probation and defendant was present at hearing and represented by counsel, trial court did not abuse discretion in revoking probation on theory that defendant had not seen and had not been advised as to contents of the report until some time after orders of revocation.

William M. Sarnoff, Los Angles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., William E. James, Deputy Atty. Gen., Albert Bianchi, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

Frank Broes, Sr. has noticed appeals from two judgments rendered following an order revoking probation in each case, which had been extended to him following his conviction of separate offenses of felonies. May 14, 1954 in case No. 163799, Broes pleaded guilty to a charge of violation of the Dangerous Weapons' Control Law, Deering's General Laws Act 1970, section 1, West's Ann.Penal Law, § 12000 et seq. On June 10, 1954 proceedings were suspended and Broes was put on probation for three years and fined the sum of $200. March 21, 1955, in case No. 166468, appellant was found guilty of two offenses of grand theft. People v. Broes, 138 Cal.App. 2d 843, 292 P.2d 556. Proceedings were suspended and he was granted probation for five years on condition that he make restitution and pay a fine of $1,000. Among the terms of probation he was directed to report to the probation officer as directed; his business activities were to be under the supervision of the probation officer and he was to report to the officer his activities, income and expenses. The conviction under each count was to run concurrently as to the probation period.

May 14, 1957, the probation officer filed a report in each case recommending that probation be revoked and sentence pronounced. A hearing was set for May 16, 1957. On June 4, 1957, in case No. 163799, the court made a minute order "Violation of probation filed. Probation revoked. Bench warrant issued." An order was made June 11th "Bench warrant is recalled. Defendant is released on his own recognizance." June 13th another order was made "Probation is revoked and defendant is sentenced as indicated." On the same day in case No. 166468 an order was made "Probation is revoked and defendant is sentenced as indicated.". The sentence under case No. 163799 was ordered to run concurrently with the sentence in case No. 166468.

[1] It is contended by the appellant that his probationary period expired June 10, 1957 in case No. 163799, that the order made on June 4th was in some manner nullified by the orders of June 11th and 13th and that the later order was void as having been made after expiration of the probationary period. And it is contended that probation not having been revoked prior to June 10th, the court was without authority to impose sentence. Upon this point appellant cites People v. O'Donnell, 37 Cal. App. 192, 194, 174 P. 102. We have no reason to question the effectiveness of the order of June 4th. The order of June 11th recalling the bench warrant and releasing defendant on his own recognizance and the further minute order ordering probation revoked as of June 13th did not have the effect of revoking the former order. The later order was an unnecessary duplication of the earlier one.

[2] The order revoking probation in case No. 166468 was made within the five years probationary period. It is contended with respect to this order and the order in No. 163799 that they constituted an abuse of discretion. It appears from the minutes in each case that defendant was present on June 13th and that he was represented by counsel. The grounds upon which the claim of abuse of discretion are asserted are obscure. It is contended that the report of the probation officer contained many misstatements of fact which could have been refuted by appellant had he had an opportunity to do so. He says he had not seen nor been advised as to the contents of the report and had no knowledge of its contents until some time after the orders of revocation.

Upon appellant's application, we ordered the probation report transmitted to this court as a part of the record on appeal. It is conceded by appellant that if the statements in the report were true the facts constituted sufficient reason for revocation of probation. It was stated in the report that appellant last reported to the probation officer January 14, 1957 and that he maintained toward the probation department an uncooperative, hostile and aggressive attitude. There was nothing in the record to indicate that appellant and his counsel did not know that the reports were on file in ample time to have controverted any alleged misstatements therein. They were on file for three weeks before the court acted upon either of them. Although an order was made for filing as part of the record on appeal an affidavit of defendant in which a copy of the probation report in No. 166468 was identified and to which it was attached, the court has not accepted as evidence or considered the averments of the affidavit tending to contradict the statements in the report. No cause has been shown for disturbing the judgments appealed from.

The judgments are affirmed.

PARKER WOOD and VALLÉE, JJ., concur.

158 Cal.App.2d 770

Charles RADOFF, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

John HUNTER et al., Defendants, John Hunter and Richard F. Yee, Appellants.

Civ. 22336.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

March 27, 1958.

Rehearing Denied April 15, 1958.

Hearing Denied May 21, 1958.

Action for personal injuries sustained when bitten by a dog of the defendant. Judgment for the plaintiff in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Bayard Rhone, J., and the defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Parker Wood, J., held that the evidence sustained finding that defendants should have anticipated an attack by the dog under the circumstances.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Animals ⇐74(3)

In action for injuries sustained when bitten by a dog, vicious propensities and dangerous character of a dog and knowledge thereof by his owner may be inferred from evidence that the dog was kept tied as a watchdog and from his size and breed.

2. Animals ⇐74(5)

In action for injuries sustained by plaintiff when bitten by a dog of defendant, where the dog, a German shepherd, was kept by defendants as a watchdog and chained with a 15-foot chain evidence sustained finding that defendants should have anticipated an attack by the dog, or defendants should have anticipated that persons might trespass within the 15-foot radius, where at time of attack the dog was concealed from view, and no warning was given of his presence.

Goebel & Donovan and Herbert J. Beck, Los Angeles, for appellants.

Joseph W. Fairfield and Ethelyn F. Black, Los Angeles, for respondent.

PARKER WOOD, Justice.

Action for damages for personal injuries resulting from being attacked and bitten by a dog. In a nonjury trial judgment was for plaintiff. Defendants appeal from the judgment.

Appellants contend that the evidence was insufficient to support the findings; and that the findings do not support the judgment.

On July 9, 1955, when plaintiff was injured, the defendant Mr. Yee was the owner of a pet store on Santa Monica Boulevard in Los Angeles. On and prior to that day, the defendant Mr. Hunter assisted Mr. Yee in operating the store. The defendants owned the dog herein referred to. Mr. Hunter stayed at the store every day, including nighttime, because there had been attempted robberies at the nearby store of Sears, Roebuck and Company and someone had broken a window at the back of the pet store. Prior to July 9 a German shepherd dog, which had been trained as a watchdog, had been given to the pet store in order that the dog might be disposed of. The defendants kept the dog as a watchdog and they kept him outside at the rear (north end) of the store. The dog was chained, with a 15-foot chain, to a window bar on a store next to the rear of the pet store. At the rear of the pet store, and near its rear door, there were packing cases, trash cans, and an old counter which was about three feet high. A large packing crate, which was also there, was used as a shelter for the dog. The rear door of the store was used by customers. There was a parking area back of the store, which area was paved with asphalt. The dog weighed between 80 and 100 pounds, and was about 5½ feet tall when standing on his hind legs.

An automobile service department of Sears, Roebuck and Company is about 10 feet west of the side of the pet store. The 10-foot space is paved with asphalt and is used by Sears as a storage yard. There is a parking area at the rear (north end) of the service department, which area is paved with asphalt. The paved parking areas, and the paved 10-foot space between the pet store and the service department, are level. At the boundary line between the parking area of the pet store and the 10-foot space, there is a curb which is about 6 inches high and 6 inches wide.

On said July 9, about 10 a. m., plaintiff Mr. Radoff drove his automobile to the automobile service department of Sears for the purpose of having the automobile battery charged. Someone at that department told him to park his automobile at the rear (north end) of the department for that particular service. Plaintiff parked his automobile at the place indicated which was a parking space about 10 feet from the parking area back of the pet store. The service man, after suggesting that plaintiff needed a new cable for the battery, removed the used cable and dropped it. Plaintiff took the cable to a trash can which was at the rear of the pet store and about 40 to 50 feet from the automobile. In going to the trash can he stepped over the curb onto the parking area back of the pet store. He dropped the cable in the can and started back to the automobile. He testified that after he had gone about three steps something snapped his leg, and he fell on his face and wrist; as he rolled farther away, he looked back and saw that it was a dog that had grabbed his leg; at that time the dog was growling, baring his teeth, and trying to get to the plaintiff. Plaintiff did not hear any noise or see anything before the dog bit him. He was bitten in the back of the upper part of his leg. There was no sign on the pet store premises indicating that a dog was at the rear of the store. Neither of the defendants knew that plaintiff was on the pet store premises until after the plaintiff had been injured.

Mr. Hunter testified, at the trial, that after the incident here involved, he learned that an old man (not plaintiff) had been teasing the dog. Mr. Hunter testified, at the time his deposition was taken, that prior to the incident here involved, an old man in the neighborhood teased the dog.

[1, 2] The court found that plaintiff entered defendants' premises without the knowledge, consent or invitation of defendants, express or implied, and insofar as the defendants were concerned, plaintiff was a trespasser; that the defendants should have anticipated an attack by the dog; that with such knowledge defendants failed to exercise reasonable care to warn those who entered defendants' parking lot of the condition and risk involved.

Appellants argue that the finding that they should have anticipated an attack by the dog is not supported by the evidence. There was evidence that defendants knew that the German shepherd or police dog had been trained as a watchdog; they kept him as a watchdog and kept him chained, with a 15-foot chain, outside the store and near the rear door; the dog weighed between 80 and 100 pounds, and was about 5½ feet tall when standing on his hind legs; customers used the rear door of the pet store. Also, there was evidence that defendant Hunter knew, before plaintiff was injured, that the dog had been teased by an old man and that when "an older person came around" the dog, the dog acted as if the person were the old man who had teased him. In Frederickson v. Kepner, 82 Cal.App.2d 905, at pages 908, 909, 187 P.2d 800, at page 802, it was said: "The (a) vicious propensities and dangerous character of a dog and (b) knowledge thereof by his owner may be inferred from evidence that the dog was kept (1) tied (2) as a watchdog and also (3) from his size and breed. [Citations.] Applying the foregoing rules to the facts in the instant case it is apparent that the jury could have inferred from the foregoing evidence that, since defendant kept a German police dog of 75 pounds weight tied on his premises as a watchdog, and permitted the dog to be unfettered only in the evenings and when accompanied by someone, (a) the dog had a dangerous nature, and (b) defendant had knowledge of the dangerous character of the animal. Hence, since there was direct evidence that the dog caused injury to plaintiff, defendant would be liable to plaintiff for the damage resulting and it was error for the trial court to grant the motion for a nonsuit." The evidence was sufficient to support the finding that defendants should have anticipated an attack by the dog.

Appellants argue further that since plaintiff was a trespasser, the only duty they owed to him was to refrain from wilful or wanton injury. In Fernandez v. Consolidated Fisheries, Inc., 98 Cal. App.2d 91, at pages 96, 97, 219 P.2d 73, at page 77, it was said: "[W]hile there are many cases holding that a land owner is only required to refrain from inflicting wanton or wilful injuries on a trespasser or licensee [citation], there are many cases also holding that after 'a trespasser is seen in a position of danger, due care must be exercised to avoid injuring him, and it is negligence not to do so.' [Citation.] This duty of reasonable care not only extends to situations where the land owner knows of a trespasser's presence, but also to situations where he should know of his presence. Thus, the Restatement of Torts, vol. 2, § 336, declares that if the possessor of land does not know of a trespasser's presence, but 'from facts known to him should know or believe that another is or may be' trespassing, he is 'subject to liability for bodily harm thereafter caused to the trespasser by the possessor's failure to carry on his activities upon the land with reasonable care for the trespasser's safety.' Many California cases are cited as being in accord in the California annotation to this section. Many courts, in imposing this duty of reasonable care towards trespassers and licensees, have drawn a distinction between active and passive negligence, and have limited the reasonable care test to overt acts of negligence. [Citation.] California has quite clearly adopted this distinction and imposed a duty to exercise reasonable care towards known licensees or trespassers so far as active operations are concerned. In the well-reasoned case of Oettinger v. Stewart, 24 Cal. 2d 133, 138, 148 P.2d 19, 156 A.L.R. 1221, cases to the contrary were expressly overruled." In the present case the defendants did not know of the presence of plaintiff on the pet store premises until after plaintiff was injured. The court could reasonably infer, however, from the fact that the pet store was located near a large shopping and parking area that the defendants should have believed or anticipated that persons might walk or trespass within the 15-foot radius where the watchdog was allowed to range, and where at times he was concealed from view in his shelter or behind crates, trash cans or the counter. In Northon v. Schultz, 130 Cal.App.2d 488, 279 P.2d 103, a visitor in a home was injured when a dog therein ran against the back of the visitor's legs and caused her to fall. In that case the court indicated that the owner's conduct in allowing the dog to run against the visitor was "active conduct." It was said therein (130 Cal.App.2d at page 490, 279 P.2d at page 104) that since the decision in Oettinger v. Stewart, 24 Cal.2d 133, 148 P.2d 19, it is settled that a landowner owes to a licensee the duty of not injuring him by "active conduct." It was also said in that case (130 Cal.App.2d at page 489, 279 P.2d 103): "The keeper of a dog who has knowledge that it possesses traits which may make it a source of danger to other persons is subject to an absolute liability to another who is injured by the dog as a result of such traits." In the present case the keeping of the trained watchdog, under conditions where at times he was concealed from view and where no warning was given of his presence, was similar to maintaining a trap whereby invitees, licensees, or trespassers might be injured.

The evidence was sufficient to support the findings, and the findings support the judgment.

The judgment is affirmed.

VALLÉE, J., concurs.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

I concur in the judgment. There was no active negligence of the defendants. They merely created a dangerous condition for intruders in the portion of the premises set aside for the dog, and if he had been in sight all the time, trespassers upon his domain would have only themselves to blame if he chased them away, even by the use of extreme measures. Any grown-up should have gumption enough to stay out of the reach of a chained watchdog, especially one as faithful and efficient as a well-trained German shepherd. But the defendants' dog had a large packing crate in which to nap during the daytime, when his presence might go unnoticed. He would then constitute a pitfall for the unwary. Defendants should have maintained a warning sign. Their failure to do so rendered them liable for injuries, even to trespassers who were unaware of the presence of the dog. For this reason alone, I agree there was a liability to plaintiff.

Hearing denied; SCHAUER and McCOMB, JJ., dissenting.

158 Cal.App.2d 675

Gerald F. MURPHY, William H. Gilmore, Lawrence G. Dillon, Anthony J. Duffy, Petitioners and Appellants,

v.

Francis P. WALSH, Charles T. McDonough, William P. Lahanier, as and constituting the Civil Service Commission of the City and County of San Francisco; William L. Henderson, Secretary of the Civil Service Commission of the City and County of San Francisco; The City and County of San Francisco, a municipal corporation, Respondents, Clarence Rosenstock and Bruno Bassi, Intervenors and Respondents.

Civ. 17775.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

March 26, 1958.

Mandamus proceeding to annul portion of civil service promotional examination for position of assistant fire chief and to enjoin certification of eligible list for position compiled as result of examination. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Thomas Coakley, J., rendered judgment denying application for writ of mandamus and refusing the injunction, and the petitioners appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Brazil, J. pro tem., held that under the circumstances the Civil Service Commission did not act arbitrarily, capriciously, in abuse of discretion or in violation of the charter.

Affirmed.

1. Mandamus ⇐187(9)

On appeal from judgment denying mandamus to annul civil service promotional examination and refusing to enjoin certification of eligible list based thereon, the questions involved were not moot, notwithstanding that an eligible list is in effect for only four years and that instant eligible list was four years old, where rights of intervenors, who were the two highest on the list and who had occupied advanced positions as result of examination, were in question and problems raised by appeal were of a recurring nature and were of prospective interest to municipal civil service authorities and future applicants.

2. Municipal Corporations ⇐216(2)

Rules promulgated by civil service commission pursuant to authority granted to commission by city charter have the force and effect of law so long as they are reasonable and within the fundamental principles of the charter.

3. Municipal Corporations ⇐216(1)

A city civil service commission has wide discretionary powers in many of its fields of operation, but such commissions have only such powers as are conferred on them, and when they exceed or abuse their powers it is not only within the power, but it is the duty, of the judicial branch of government to prevent such excess or abuse on petition of those adversely affected.

4. Administrative Law and Procedure ⇐324, 761

Officers ⇐103

Administrative boards and officers are vested with a high discretion in working out their problems, and an abuse of that discretion must appear very clearly before the courts will interfere.

5. Municipal Corporations ⇐217(3)

Judicial interference with broad discretionary powers of city civil service commission in matter of subjects of examination and qualifications which are to be measured is not justified except on showing of arbitrary, fraudulent, or capricious conduct, or clear abuse of discretion.

6. Mandamus ⇐168(3)

In mandamus proceeding to annul portion of civil service promotional examination for position of assistant fire chief and to enjoin certification of eligible list for position compiled as result of examination, evidence was not admissible to show that key answer to question did not conform to the question itself.

7. Evidence ⇐518

In mandamus proceeding to annul portion of civil service promotional examination for position of assistant fire chief and to enjoin certification of eligible list for position compiled as result of examination, it was not error to refuse to permit experts and grammarians to testify as to meaning of words used in the instructions and the questions or problems.

8. Mandamus ⇐168(3)

In mandamus proceeding to annul portion of civil service promotional examination for position of assistant fire chief, where an examination question required preparation of five-minute radio script requesting public support of voters for bonds to construct new fire houses, it was not error to refuse permission to call witnesses to show that radio script writing was not a duty of assistant chief.

9. Mandamus ⇐168(3)

In mandamus proceeding to annul portion of civil service promotional examination for position of assistant fire chief, it was not error to refuse to permit employee in charge of fire department equipment to show the equipment in the fire department at the time of the examination.

10. Mandamus ⇐168(3)

In mandamus proceeding to annul portion of civil service promotional examination for position of assistant fire chief, it was not error to refuse to permit petitioners to present as witness the expert consultants who aided the civil service commission in the examination, in view of commission's authority under the charter to hire outsiders to help in giving the examination. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 2055.

11. Municipal Corporations ⇐196

In conducting civil service promotional examination for position of assistant fire chief, the examiners could set up key answers to essay questions after the examination was held and the papers graded rather than prior to the examination.

12. Mandamus ⇐168(4)

In mandamus proceeding to annul portion of civil service promotional examination for position of assistant fire chief and to enjoin certification of eligible list for position compiled as result of examination, record failed to show that participants in the examination were denied the opportunity to protest timely and prior to the adoption of the tentative list.

Molly H. Minudri, San Francisco, for appellants.

Dion R. Holm, City Atty. of City and County of San Francisco, William F. Bourne, Deputy City Atty., San Francisco, for respondents.

M. Mitchell Bourquin, San Francisco, for respondents and intervenors.

BRAZIL, Justice pro tem.

[1] Petitioners appeal from a judgment denying their application for a writ of mandate to annul a portion of a civil service promotional examination taken by them for the position of Assistant Fire Chief and refusing to enjoin the respondents from certifying an eligible list for that position compiled as a result of that examination. An eligible list is in effect for only four years. Although the certification of the list is now four years old, the questions involved in this appeal are not moot because of the rights of the intervenors, the two highest on the list, who have occupied the advanced positions during all this time as a result of the examination which is being questioned. The problems with which this appeal is concerned are also of a continuing or recurring nature and of prospective interest to the Commission and future applicants.

[2] The Charter of the City and County of San Francisco, in section 140 thereof, establishes a Civil Service Commission, charged with the duty of providing qualified persons for employment in the many departments of the city. Job appointments must be made solely upon merit and fitness as established by appropriate tests. The next section provides that the Commission shall adopt rules to carry out the civil service provisions of the charter which rules, together with applicable charter sections, govern all examinations and promotions. Rules made under such a power have the force and effect of law, so long as they are reasonable and within the fundamental principles of the charter provisions. (10 Cal.Jur.2d 438.)

Pertinent parts of section 145 are: "* * * The commission shall control all examinations and may employ suitable persons in or out of the public service to act as examiners. The tests may be written, oral, mechanical or physical, or any combination of them, practical in character and related to matters fairly to test the relative capacity of the applicants for the positions to be filled. The commission shall be the sole judge of the adequacy of the tests to rate the capacity of the applicants to perform service for the city and county * * *."

An amendment to the charter adopted by an election in 1940 makes an exception to the provisions of section 145 with relation to promotive examinations in the police and fire departments. We are here concerned with a promotive examination in the fire department. The amendment is now section 146, which provides: "Whenever it deems it to be practicable, the civil service commission shall provide for promotion * * * on the basis of such examinations and tests as the commission may deem appropriate * * *. All such promotive examinations in the police and fire departments shall be entirely of a written character, and all questions asked or problems given in said examinations shall pertain to matters concerning the duties of members of the department for which the examination is held."

The petitioners allege that the respondents acted arbitrarily, capriciously and in abuse of discretion and without regard to the provisions of section 146. At the trial and on appeal, petitioners have enlarged the scope of their complaint to include failure of the commission to follow its own rules in the conduct of the examination and in the matter of allowing protest of key rating factors or results.

On August 21, 1953, the commission prepared and issued an official announcement of a promotional examination in the class H–50 Assistant Chief of Department; which included a statement of duties of the position and the scope of the examination. The examination was held November 4, 1953. It was divided into two parts, the first being only true or false questions upon which the participants could receive a maximum 550 points out of a total of 750. No complaint is made about the content or the manner in which the first part of the examination was conducted.

The second portion, in which the controversy centers, is as follows:

"Question 1—Weight 150 Points

"Discuss and give your views on:

"Improvements you would recommend in the present fire-fighting equipment to increase efficiency.

"Note: Discussion should be confined to a maximum of 500 words."

"Question 2—Weight 50 Points

"A bonded indebtedness in the sum of $1,500,000 for the construction of new fire houses is to be submitted to the voters of San Francisco at a special municipal election to be held on December 1, 1953.

"Prepare a five-minute radio script requesting public support of the bonds."

Part II was prepared in this manner. "Instructions: the purpose of this part of the examination is to test your ability to analyze a situation, organize your thoughts and to develop a written statement in a clear and logical manner. The soundness and clarity of your reasoning is as important as is any factual knowledge presented. Your approach and the organization of your statement, as well as its substantive content, will be considered in grading this part of the examination."

The commission's rules for the conduct of an examination provide for rating key answers to be available for inspection of participants for three days before the examination papers are graded. With the multiple choice questions of the first part, this was done; but with the essay type questions of the second part key answers were not made available. Instead key rating factors were made available after the papers were graded and a tentative eligible list was posted. The rating factors used for the second part problems, were made up after a consideration of the essays written by all the participants. What all the participants had to say on the subject formed the basis of the rating factors. A period of protest and counter protest was allowed for about four weeks after the rating factors were made available and before the final list of eligibles was determined.

In one long sentence of their brief, appellants list their grievances under a general heading that the court erred in refusing to admit evidence that the commission acted arbitrarily, capriciously, in abuse of discretion and in violation of the charter. Each complaint of that sentence will hereinafter be given separate consideration. The trial court at the start of the case suggested an offer of proof from petitioners, and after it was made sustained respondents' objection thereto. Nowhere in the offer was there any suggestion that petitioners sought to prove favoritism, fraud or dishonesty on the part of anybody. The court received in evidence the charter provisions, rules of the commission, the written examination and related matters, and the rating factors or criteria used in grading Part II of the examination.

Before examining the complaints of the petitioners it is well to have in mind the basic rules that guide the courts in a review of the conduct of a civil service commission in the conduct of an examination.

[3] "The Commission has wide discretionary powers in many of its fields of operation. However, such commissions have only such powers as are conferred upon them. When they exceed or abuse their powers it is not only within the power, but it is the duty of the judicial branch of the government to prevent such excess or abuse upon the petition of those adversely affected." Allen v. McKinley, 18 Cal.2d 697, 705, 117 P.2d 342, 347.

[4] "Moreover, with particular reference to the administration of civil service, it is the policy of the courts of this state that 'Courts should let adminstrative boards and officers work out their problems with as little judicial interference as possible. * * * Such boards are vested with a high discretion, and its abuse must appear very clearly before the courts will interfere.' (Citations.)" Nelson v. Dean, 27 Cal.2d 873, 881, 168 P.2d 16, 21, 168 A.L.R. 467.

[5] "* * * the civil service commission has been given broad discretionary powers in determining the subjects of examination and the qualifications which are to be measured. (Citations.) Judicial interference under such circumstances is unjustified except on a showing of arbitrary, fraudulent, or capricious conduct or a clear abuse of discretion (citations.)" Wilson v. Los Angeles, County Civil Service Comm., 103 Cal.App.2d 426, 432, 229 P.2d 406, 410.

"There are many decisions involving mandamus and its application, but none has been presented in the briefs, nor have we been able to find one, where a court employed mandamus to pass upon answers to questions in an examination held by any board or commission authorized to hold such examination", and "* * * analysis shows a marked uniformity of decision on the part of courts to leave examinations in the hands of members of boards to whom they have been intrusted." Mitchell v. McKevitt, 128 Cal.App. 458, 462, 465, 17 P.2d 789, 791.

The particulars of petitioners' general complaint, that the court refused to receive evidence to prove capricious, arbitrary or unlawful conduct are set forth as quotations from the brief at the beginning of each paragraph.

[6] "It refused the petitioners the right to put on evidence showing that the key answers to Part I of Question II of the examination did not conform to the question itself."

It is not for a court to second guess the conductors or examiners on the accuracy of the answers. "Much must be left here to the judgment of the examiners. The test cannot be wholly objective and to the extent that it is subjective the result may depend as much upon the fitness of the examiners as upon the fitness of the candidate. That is a risk inherent in all systems of examination." Sloat v. Board of Examiners, 274 N.Y. 367, 9 N.E.2d 12, 15, cited with approval in Almassy v. Los Angeles County Civil Service Comm., 34 Cal.2d 387, 401, 210 P.2d 503.

"Refused the appellants permission to call as witnesses experts and grammarians * * * to assist the court in the meaning of the words used * * * to show that the key answers did not conform to the questions propounded."

[7] The obvious answer is that the examination was not given for experts and grammarians but for firemen who wanted to be promoted to Assistant Fire Chief. Words mean what people generally understand their meaning to be. A dictionary is only a compilation of what words sounds mean to the greatest number of people ordinarily using the words. The trial judge was in as good a position as the experts or grammarians to determine what meaning the hopeful applicants would ascribe to the words, alone or in their context, which were used in the instructions and the questions or problems.

[8] "Refused permission to call witnesses to show that radio script writing was not a duty of H 50 Assistant Chief."

There was no need for such evidence for all agree that script writing is not part of an assistant chief's duty. Section 146 of the charter does place a limit on the kind of question or problem that can be propounded—it must pertain to matters concerning the duties of the department for which the examination is held. It is for the commission within its broad discretionary powers to first decide what question or problem pertains to the duties of the position, considering the rule that the commission's exercise of its discretion will not be upset in the absence of clear abuse. It is not unreasonable to find that the problem involved in Question II is not one of radio script writing but one which involves its topic. The subject matter of the suggested script does pertain to the duties of the position to be filled. The suggested method of answering the problem is but a short illustration of the form the answer to the problem should take. The attributes of a radio script can well be adapted to the making of reports either within the department or to the public in the interest of an efficient administration of a fire department. It must be remembered that petitioners were seeking to qualify for one of the highest positions in a very large fire department. Among other duties of an assistant chief was that of taking over as chief of the entire department should occasion ever require. It is reasonable to expect a person in such high position to be able to communicate well and forcibly with the men in the department or with the general public.

[9] "Refused to permit the appellants to call as a witness the employee of the Fire Department in charge of equipment to show the equipment in the Fire Department at the time of the examination."

Appellants' contention here is based upon their interpretation of the word "Improvements" contained in Question I. They say the word can only relate to existing equipment, and cannot include within its meaning additions to or purchases of equipment. The key rating factor includes purchases and additions to present equipment as an improvement in present fire-fighting equipment. The court cannot substitute, if it would, a different rating factor, for it is apparent that the commission's interpretation is not unreasonable. Additionally, it should be noted that the interpretation is that which the majority of applicants thought it meant, for the rating factor is based upon the answers they all gave to the problem.

[10] "It refused to permit the petitioners to present to the Court as witnesses under section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure the expert consultants who aided the Civil Service Commission in this examination so as to show their true function."

What useful purpose this line of questioning would serve has not been shown by appellants and it is not apparent. Section 145 of the Charter gives the commission the authority to hire, even outsiders, to help in giving the examination.

[11] "[A]nd the fact that the key answers were set up after the examination was held and the papers graded, rather than prior to the examination as provided in Rule 12 of the Civil Service Commission".

Rule 12 is far too long to quote verbatim, but in part it reads: "Prior to the rating of the examination papers, the questions asked in the written examination and the rating key answers will be available for three days. * * * The purpose of this inspection of rating key answers is to correct any errors in the rating key answers or any of the questions asked in the examination that may be ambiguously or incorrectly phrased; therefore, protests by participants must be filed in writing during this rating key inspection period." First it should be noted that Rule 12 is limited to "questions" leaving a reasonable inference that it does not apply to "problems". Although labeled questions, the two parts of Part II are in fact not questions at all but are in the nature of problems requiring an essay as a proper answer. Section 146 of the charter refers to both questions and problems which must be in writing.

There was evidence introduced on this last subject from the Secretary of the Commission who testified that the rating factor for an essay type question was not posted until the papers were graded for there was no fair or practical way of getting the proper rating factor until all the examination papers were read. To such a question there is no definite wrong or right answer, such as there is in a multiple choice question, from which a key answer can be made up before the grading. What all the participants have to say about the problem forms the basis upon which the rating criteria are based. A rating factor made up in advance of answers by participants, might find all answers way below par, or find answers which were better than that which had been set up as 100 per cent. The witness stated that this procedure had always been the administrative interpretation of the rules regarding rating keys or rating factors.

[12] "And in order to show that participants were denied the opportunity to protest timely and prior to the adoption of the tentative list."

There was no limitation in the trial court in presenting evidence on this point even though there was and is doubt as to whether or not it was a proper issue before the court under the pleadings. The court found that there was substantial compliance with all the applicable rules of the commission relating to protest. Appellant has not shown wherein this finding is not justified from the evidence. It was found that the Commission did not rate factors for Part II until after the papers were graded and a tentative list of eligibles had been prepared; that the rating factors were posted February 19, 1954, that although all petitioners entered protests, none did so on the ground of failure to post rating factors before grading. The protests were heard by the Commission at a regularly noticed hearing and as a result thereof two of the petitioners were upgraded five points each, which, however, did not change the result in their cases. With the exceptions noted all protests were denied.

The civil service examination was a competitive examination, held to create an eligible list for vacant positions. The applicants are in fact in competition with each other, for the vacancies are filled only from among those who take the examination, with the one getting the highest mark being entitled to the first vacancy and so on down the line until all are filled. It is not the same as an entrance examination where to be successful, a participant must receive a passing grade which is dependent upon a standard of excellence predetermined by a board of examiners. The important thing in an entrance examination is to get a passing grade; in a civil service promotional examination it is important to get a better grade than any body else.

Judgment affirmed.

DOOLING, Acting P. J., and DRAPER, J., concur.

158 Cal.App.2d 556

J. W. VAN HOOK, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA WAITERS ALLIANCE, LOCAL 17, an unincorporated association, Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 22271.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

March 20, 1958.

Rehearing Denied April 17, 1958.

Hearing Denied May 14, 1958.

Former officer of local union brought action against local union to recover retirement benefits, which resolution of local union assured him he would receive if he would remain with union and refuse offer of outside employment. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Donald E. Dunbar, J., entered judgment in favor of the former officer, and the local union appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Kincaid, J. pro tem., held that evidence sustained finding that there was a promissory estoppel so as to entitle former officer to recover retirement benefits.

Affirmed.

1. Limitation of Actions ⇐43

Cause of action accrues, so that the statute of limitations begins to run at moment when party having cause of action is entitled to begin and prosecute action thereon.

2. Limitation of Actions ⇐43

Cause of action will "accrue", so that the statute of limitations begins to run, when it comes into existence or becomes a presently enforceable demand.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Accrue".

3. Limitation of Actions ⇐104½

The running of statute of limitations is suspended during any period in which plaintiff is legally prevented from taking action to protect his rights.

4. Limitation of Actions ⇐65(3)

If former officer of union was first required by constitution of international union to exhaust his internal remedies within union by way of successive appeals before filing his action, which was based on promissory estoppel, against union to recover retirement benefits, running of statute of limitations was suspended until date when general executive board of international union notified him that his appeal was denied and that decision of general president was affirmed.

5. Limitation of Actions ⇐13

Where delay in commencing action is induced by conduct of defendant, he cannot avail himself of defense of statute of limitations.

6. Limitation of Actions ⇐13

Where former union official and local union both considered that a former officer was required to invoke and exhaust internal remedies within union and international union by way of successive appeals before instituting any action against local union to recover retirement benefits, and local union actively participated in successive appeals by former officer, and no objection to such procedures was ever voiced by local union until after action was filed by former officer to recover retirement benefits, local union was estopped by its own conduct from asserting that statute of limitations had run.

7. Estoppel ⇐85

Elements of doctrine of promissory estoppel are a promise, clear and unambiguous in its terms, reasonable and foreseeable reliance by party to whom promise is made, and injury of such party because of his reliance.

8. Estoppel ⇐118

In action by former officer of local union against local union to recover retirement benefits, which resolution of union assured him he would receive if he would remain with union and refuse offer of outside employment, evidence sustained finding that there was a promissory estoppel which would entitle former officer to recover.

Alexander H. Schullman, Los Angeles, J. W. Brown, Cincinnati, Ohio, and S. L. Kurland, Los Angeles, for appellants.

Cantillon & Cantillon, Beverly Hills, for respondent.

KINCAID, Justice pro tem.

This action was instituted May 11, 1954. A trial by jury resulted in a verdict for plaintiff and defendant appeals from the resulting judgment in the sum of $109,900 plus interest.

A second amended complaint sets forth causes of action based upon promissory estoppel and upon a contract. No evidence was offered or received under the second cause of action. This complaint alleges in its first cause of action that for many years prior to 1957 plaintiff was a salaried officer of the defendant union; that as such an officer he was required every two years to submit his candidacy to a vote of the membership; that at no time during his employment by defendant was there in effect any provision for the pensioning or retirement of members who had served defendant as salaried officers regardless of the length of time of such service; that prior to November 10, 1947, a restaurateur in Los Angeles County offered plaintiff employment for a term of 10 years at a fixed salary plus a percentage of the net profits; that plaintiff determined to accept this employment as it afforded him more financial security than his position with the union; that the fact of this offer of employment and the fact of plaintiff's intention to accept the same were communicated to defendant through its officers and members. That thereafter, and on or about the 10th day of November, 1947, and for the purpose of inducing plaintiff not to accept employment other than with the defendant, the defendant promised plaintiff that upon his retirement he would be entitled to certain benefits; that in reliance upon this promise of the defendant, plaintiff refused the offer of outside employment and remained in the service of defendant for a period in excess of two years. In conclusion, the complaint alleges that plaintiff retired and demanded performance of defendant's promise; that plaintiff was not paid or given the retirement benefits promised him; that on the contrary, the defendant repudiated its obligation to him; and that plaintiff has exhausted all the available and required trade union appellate procedures.

The answer of defendant admits that it is an unincorporated association existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of California; that plaintiff was an officer of defendant for a long and continuous period of time prior to the 10th day of November, 1947, during which time plaintiff received a weekly salary for his services; that plaintiff's official capacity with defendant and his salary incident thereto, were contingent upon his being re-elected at general elections held every two years; that there were no provisions in the by-laws or the constitution of the defendant, for the pensioning or retirement of union officials irrespective of their length of service. The defendant admits by its answer that plaintiff appealed to the International Union, of which defendant is an affiliate, and admits that said appeal was denied; that every one of its members is required by the constitution to exhaust all remedies of appeal or protest before resorting to any other court or tribunal, and that any member who brings a legal action against defendant without first availing himself of all remedies of appeal provided for in such constitution, shall thereafter be ineligible to hold any office in any local or international union. The defendant denies that the exhaustion of said appellate procedures was necessary in plaintiff's case; that plaintiff either received or intended to accept an offer of employment by Robert Murphy as alleged in the complaint.

At the inception of the trial the defendant moved pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure, section 597, that the court try the special issues raised by the plea of the statute of limitations. The court granted defendant's motion and a hearing on this special defense was had by the court sitting without a jury.

In connection with this hearing, and for all purposes of the trial, the plaintiff and the defendant entered into the following stipulations: (1) that at some time prior to October 27, 1947, respondent informed appellant that he intended to resign his elective office as executive secretary in order to accept an offer of employment by the House of Murphy; (2) that on October 27, 1947, and at a general membership meeting of appellant, the retirement resolution was read and the same was ordered referred to the executive board for its consideration since the resolution proposed the expenditure of money; (3) that on November 6, 1947, the executive board of appellant met, considered the retirement resolution and recommended that the same be adopted by appellant's membership; (4) that on November 10, 1947, a general membership meeting of appellant was held, whereat the retirement resolution together with the recommendations of the executive board were considered and the same were then and there adopted; (5) that on February 9, 1948, a general membership meeting approved the minutes of the general membership meeting of November 10, 1947; (6) that on March 6, 1950, Mr. Van Hook was defeated for re-election as secretary of appellant; (7) that on March 11, 1950, and prior to the expiration of his term of office, Mr. Van Hook wrote a letter to appellant wherein he stated that he was retiring and now availed himself of the retirement benefits promised him according to the terms of the resolution of November 10, 1947; (8) that on March 13, 1950, a general membership meeting carried a motion to refer the matter of respondent's retirement to the executive board; (9) that on March 23, 1950, the executive board of appellant directed that it employ an attorney to analyze the legal aspects of the resolution; (10) that on April 10, 1950, the executive board of appellant received an attorney's memorandum on the subject of the retirement resolution and ordered that the same be sent to the general president of the International Union; (11) that on December 13, 1951, one Richard H. Cantillon, an attorney at law, communicated with the International president to ascertain what disposition, if any, had been made by him of respondent's claim to retirement benefits; (12) that on December 17, 1951, the International president responded to Mr. Cantillon's inquiry by letter, and stated, among other things: "It would appear to us that this is a simple trade union matter that does not require the services of an attorney * * *"; (13) that on February 18, 1952, respondent wrote a letter to appellant in which he recited the fact of his prior written notice and in which letter he enclosed the minutes of the meetings of October 27, 1947, November 6, 1947, November 10, 1947, and February 10, 1948, hereinabove referred to. Respondent also stated in said letter that the only information that was available to him relative to the appellant's disposition toward his claimed retirement benefits was contained in the minutes of the meetings of March 23 and 27, and April 6 and 10, 1950. Respondent also stated that unless prompt remittance was made of the money then due, he would take what action he deemed necessary; (14) that on February 25, 1952, appellant wrote a letter to respondent acknowledging receipt of the letter of February 18, 1952, and stating that legal counsel for appellant had advised them that they were "under no contractual obligation to pay you any money"; (15) that on March 6, 1952, respondent wrote a letter to the International president "[a]ppealing from the decision contained [in the letter of February 25, 1952]." This appeal was supported by copies of the pertinent 1947 resolution and minutes, together with a copy of the minutes of the meeting of February 10, 1948; (16) that on March 24, 1952, a general membership meeting of appellant adopted a resolution repudiating any obligation to respondent; (17) that on March 28, 1952, the International president denied respondent's "appeal" by rendering "Decision 3110." (The evidence discloses that on April 2, 1952, the executive board of appellant received and read Decision 3110 of the International president and referred the same to the general membership meeting of April 28, 1952, whereat "the fact was noted [in the minutes] that the General President denied the appeal." At this meeting a motion was made, seconded and carried that Decision 3110 be "noted and filed"; (18) that on May 24, 1952, respondent appealed the decision of the general president (Decision 3110) of March 28, 1952, to the General Executive Board of the International Union; and (19) that on July 3, 1952, the General Executive Board of the International Union notified respondent that his appeal to them was denied and they affirmed the decision of the general president.

In support of the judgment the evidence discloses that while Mr. Van Hook was secretary of Local 17 he became acquainted with one Robert Murphy, an employer who was engaged in the successful operation of a restaurant in Los Angeles, California.

In the latter part of 1946 Mr. Van Hook had a conversation with Mr. Murphy wherein the latter proposed that Mr. Van Hook go to work for Mr. Murphy in his cafe. Following this initial conversation respondent and Mr. Murphy met on several occasions and discussed the subject of his employment by Murphy. The last of these meetings took place some time in the middle of the summer of 1947, at which time Mr. Murphy presented Mr. Van Hook with a written contract offering Mr. Van Hook the position of manager of the House of Murphy.

Shortly after Mr. Van Hook received the written contract of employment he communicated this fact to the officers of Local 17 who were assembled at an executive board meeting. Later he informed the general membership of Local 17 of his intention to accept Mr. Murphy's offer of employment and resign as secretary and business manager of Local 17. He informed them that he had an offer of a position with Bob Murphy at his House of Murphy at a better salary and on a long-term contract. He advised them that under Murphy's contract he would have security for the rest of his life.

On October 27, 1947, a resolution [1] signed by approximately three hundred members

1. "Resolution

"Whereas, for 20 years Brother J. W. Van Hook has loyally and faithfully served our Union as President, Business Agent, and Secretary-Treasurer, and

"Whereas, during this time, we have seen our Union grow from a very small membership to more than three thousand members, with almost 100 per cent organization of the waiters of Los Angeles, and

"Whereas, during the early period of our organization, Brother Van Hook and all of our officers made many sacrifices, personally and financially, in their efforts to organize the workers in our industry, and

"Whereas, the progressive steps made in elevating wage standards, bettering the working conditions of our membership, the care and welfare of our sick members, the burial of our deceased members, the ownership of our palatial home, and our substantial financial condition can mainly be attributed to the diligence, honesty, faithfulness, and ability of Brother Van Hook, and

"Whereas, James W. Van Hook has won the gratitude, respect and friendship of every member of Local 17, and

"Whereas, Our Local realizes that the expert knowledge of Brother Van Hook and his insight into the numerous and complicated ramifications and problems was presented in a general membership meeting of Local 17. The resolution provided Mr. Van Hook would receive certain benefits upon his retirement as an officer of Local 17. The resolution urged that Mr. Van Hook not leave and find other employment. Because this resolution required the expenditure of monies the president and chairman presiding at the membership meeting prohibited the members from acting thereon and referred the resolution to the executive board.

On November 6, 1947, the executive board of Local 17 met and after excluding Mr. Van Hook, who was a member of that board, from participating in the proceedings, the retirement resolution was considered. While the resolution was under consideration the president left the meeting and inquired of Mr. Van Hook whether or not he would decline the offer of employment he had received from Mr. Murphy if the executive board recommended passage of the retirement resolution. Mr. Van Hook told the president that if the executive board recommended passage of the retirement resolution and if the general membership adopted this recommendation, he would feel it his duty to remain with Local 17 and refuse Mr. Murphy's offer.

On November 10, 1947, a general membership meeting of appellant was convened. There were more than two hundred members at this meeting and the resolution bearing that date and providing for the retirement of Mr. Van Hook was unanimously passed.

A copy of the retirement resolution passed by Local 17 was handed to Mr. Van Hook by the recording secretary. Mr. Van Hook then informed Mr. Murphy that he would not be able to accept his offer of employment as he considered himself under the circumstances to be duty bound and obligated to remain in the service of Local 17.

Sometime shortly after the meeting of February 9, 1948, and when Mr. Van Hook made inquiry relative to a contract pursuant to the resolution of November 10, 1947, the president of Local 17 told him that there wasn't any need for a contract as the resoof the culinary profession are invaluable not only to Local 17 but to the entire Union, and

"Whereas, it is the desire of Local 17 to continue to receive the advice of Brother Van Hook and the benefit of his wide and varied experience in employee and employer relationships in this City, now therefore "Be It Resolved that the Executive Board and the President and Recording Secretary of this Local 17 be and they are hereby instructed to enter into a contract as of this date, to-wit, the 10 day of November, 1947, for and on behalf of Local 17 with James W. Van Hook whereby the Local agrees that upon his retirement as Secretary-Treasurer, Business Representative, he is to be employed in an advisory capacity as long as he shall live at a salary of 75% of the salary he is receiving at the time of his said retirement; as such advisor he is to confer with, advise and assist the Executive Board and officers of Local 17 whenever requested by them, or on his own initiative; he is to attend the meetings of the Executive Board of Local 17 and the Joint Executive Board with the privilege of voice, but no vote; he is also to attend the meetings of the State American Federation of Labor and of the American Federation of Labor, but only to represent the interests of Local 17 and not as a delegate. His traveling expenses to and from said A. F. of L. conventions and his hotel expenses while such conventions are in session are to be defrayed by Local 17. The contract shall provide that the foregoing duties, but not his compensation, will be subject to his physical condition permitting.

"Be It Further Resolved that it is not the intent of this resolution to urge the early retirement or dispense with the valuable services of Brother Van Hook, but to assure him financial security so that he will not feel it necessary to find other employment than that in which he is now engaged as the loss of his services would be of great damage to Local 17.

"Be It Further Resolved that this resolution be spread upon the minutes of Local 17, and that this signed resolution be attested, signed and stamped with the seal of the Local by the President and Recording Secretary and presented to Brother Van Hook.

"Adopted: Nov. 10, 1947

"/s/ Samuel Gessin Recording Secretary"

lution was couched in the same language as the resolution by which the general president of the American Federation of Musicians was retired.

At an election of officers held on March 6, 1950, Mr. Van Hook was defeated in his effort to be re-elected to the office of secretary of Local 17.

On March 10, 1950, and prior to the actual expiration of his term of office as secretary of Local 17, he retired and gave notice that he was availing himself of the benefits promised by the 1947 resolution.

Mr. Van Hook then related in chronological order the subsequent procedures, both preliminary and appellate, followed by him within the trade union structure. He testified as to his various demands and appeals and he concluded by identifying as exhibits the decisions of the general president and executive board which denied his appeal for relief within the union organization.

Defendant-appellant argues that the court erred in instructing the jury that the defense of the statute of limitations was not available to defendant, contending that plaintiff's cause of action accrued no later than March 6, 1950, the day he was defeated for re-election as secretary. Defendant claims that a two-year limitation applies on the ground that the cause of action is not based upon an instrument in writing and that, even assuming that the resolution constituted an instrument in writing, the four-year period would have expired on March 6, 1954, and prior to the filing of the complaint herein.

[1, 2] A cause of action accrues at the moment when the party owning it is entitled to begin and prosecute an action thereon. The term "accrue" as applied to a cause of action, means to arrive; to commence; to come into existence; to become a presently enforceable demand. Smith v. Minnesota Mut. Life Ins. Co., 86 Cal.App. 2d 581, 590, 195 P.2d 457.

[3, 4] "It is well recognized that the running of the statute of limitations is suspended during any period in which the plaintiff is legally prevented from taking action to protect his rights." Dillon v. Board of Pension Com'rs, 18 Cal.2d 427, 431, 116 P.2d 37, 39, 136 A.L.R. 800; see Skaggs v. City of Los Angeles, 43 Cal.2d 497, 500, 275 P.2d 9. It follows then if plaintiff was first required to exhaust his internal remedies within the organization by way of successive appeals before filing his action in the courts the statute of limitations was suspended until July 3, 1952, the date when the General Executive Board of the International Union notified plaintiff that his appeal to them was denied and they affirmed the decision of the general president. In this event, the action having been filed on May 11, 1954, the two-year statute of limitations would not have run.

The constitution of the International Union in effect at the time here in question is ambiguous in its terms as to the right of a member to appeal to the convention. Section 13 provides: "Limitation on Rights of Members to Appeal. Except as stated herein, an appeal of a member may not be taken beyond the General Executive Board." Section 12 provides: "Appeal Bodies. Appeals may be taken from a decision of a Local Union to the Joint Executive Board, if one exists * * * decisions of the General Executive Board may be appealed to the Convention; however where the penalty imposed does not exceed a fine of $100.00 or suspension of more than thirty (30) days, an appeal as of right may not be taken beyond the General President." It is difficult to ascertain from these terms whether an appeal to the convention would be limited to fines exceeding $100 or suspension of members for more than 30 days. This is further complicated by section 14 providing that "Appeals to the Convention must obtain the approval of the Law Committee before being submitted to the Convention. When appeals by General Officers or International Organizers are involved, the Law Committee shall grant such right to appeal and establish the rules for conducting the hearing before the Convention." It would appear then that if such an appeal were taken by one not a General Officer or International Organizer no such right need be granted nor rules for conducting the hearing before the convention be established.

Defendant asserts that a convention of the International Union would have been held in Atlantic City, N. J., in April 1953. This would have necessitated another nine or more months delay in obtaining a decision. In the light of the ambiguities and uncertainties of the foregoing constitutional provisions, the added delay and the continuing opposition to plaintiff's claim it is reasonable to find that plaintiff was excused from any further attempted appeal beyond the ruling of the General Executive Board as being futile. Mooney v. Bartenders Union Local No. 284, 48 Cal.2d 841, 844, 313 P.2d 857; Cason v. Glass Bottle Blowers Ass'n, 37 Cal.2d 134, 143, 231 P.2d 6, 21 A.L.R.2d 1387; De Monbrun v. Sheet Metal Workers, 140 Cal.App.2d 546, 562, 295 P. 2d 881.

Defendant now contends that plaintiff's cause of action arises out of a claim for money rather than involving a matter of internal union discipline and therefore it was not necessary for plaintiff to first exhaust the internal remedies of the trade union under its constitution and that he could have filed his action in the courts in March 1950. Defendant cites De Monbrun v. Sheet Metal Workers, supra, and Mooney v. Bartenders Union Local No. 284, supra, in support of this contention. These cases acknowledge the general and established jurisdictional rule that a plaintiff who seeks judicial relief against an organization of which he is a member must first invoke and exhaust the remedies provided by that organization applicable to his grievance. Holderby v. Internat. Union, etc., Engrs., 45 Cal.2d 843, 846, 291 P.2d 463. The Mooney case involved the right of union members to the revelation of any misuse of funds by an immediate examination of the organization's books. The De Monbrun case involved a claim for accounting and wrongful misappropriation of union funds. In each of these cases the defendant union insisted that the plaintiffs must first exhaust the internal remedies within the organization before going to the courts but each case was held under the facts there existing to be an exception.

In the Holderby case it was again contended that the plaintiff had failed to exhaust the remedies available within the union and that he therefore was not entitled to judicial relief. After reciting the above quoted general jurisdictional rule first requiring the exhaustion of internal remedies the court said (45 Cal.2d at pages 846–847, 849, 291 P.2d at page 466): "The plaintiff claims that an exception to the general rule made it unnecessary that he pursue the internal remedies for review before commencing this action. In Weber v. Marine Cooks' & Stewards' Ass'n, 93 Cal.App.2d 327, at page 338, 208 P.2d 1009, at page 1016, it is stated that 'where an organization has violated its own laws and arbitrarily violated a member's property rights the rule of exhaustion of remedies by appeal to a higher body within the organization need not be adhered to before direct resort to a judicial tribunal.' See Harris v. National Union, etc., Cooks & Stewards, 98 Cal.App.2d 733, at page 736, 221 P.2d 136. If such an exception is construed as broadly as the quoted language would permit, it would make it unnecessary for any party with a justified grievance involving personal and property rights against an organization of which he is a member, including the plaintiff in the present case, to have the matter corrected internally by the machinery provided before resorting to the courts. The exception in such a case would swallow the rule, a result clearly not intended by the cases relied on as authority for the broad interpretation sought by the plaintiff to justify this action. * * * A violation of other laws and wrongs done within the organization are intended to be conciliated and corrected by the appellate machinery provided therein, if properly invoked by an aggrieved party and applied by the organization. If recourse to such appellate machinery is not sought an aggrieved party foregoes his right to a judicial review regardless of the breach of its own rules by the organization in causing the grievance in the first instance."

The steps taken by the parties herein as well as the record of this case clearly demonstrate that both plaintiff and defendant considered themselves obligated to first invoke and exhaust the internal remedies within the organization by way of successive appeals before instituting any action in the courts on plaintiff's claim. Here defendant union seeks to prejudice one of its members because of adherence by both parties to this union tradition. No objection to these procedures so invoked by plaintiff was ever voiced by defendant until the statute of limitations was pleaded as an affirmative defense in its answer to the case on file. Defendant actively participated in the successive appeals within the organization and the delays incidental to the obtaining of the final decision of rejection of the appeal by the General Executive Board of the International Union on July 3, 1952, may largely be charged to it. Indeed the evidence indicates that for a period of about 1½ years plaintiff's claim lay dormant with no decision having been rendered thereon by either the general president or the defendant Local 17.

[5, 6] By its conduct herein the defendant lulled plaintiff into a sense of false security in implying that by proceeding through the successive steps of appeal provided by the constitution of the International Union his claim might be recognized or a settlement reached. "It is well settled that where delay in commencing an action is induced by the conduct of the defendant, he cannot avail himself of the defense of the statute [of limitations]." Gaglione v. Coolidge, 134 Cal.App.2d 518, 527, 286 P.2d 568, 574. That the defendant is estopped by its own conduct from now asserting the defense of the running of the statute of limitations against the plaintiff herein is further shown by the rules so clearly set forth in Industrial Indemnity Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 115 Cal.App. 2d 684, 689, 690, 252 P.2d 649, 652. "The equitable doctrine of estoppel in pais is applicable in a proper case to prevent a fraudulent or inequitable resort to the statute of limitations. (Citations.) A person by his conduct may be estopped to rely on the statute. Where the delay in commencing an action is induced by the conduct of the defendant, it cannot be availed of by him as a defense. (Citations.) When the act or promise of one causes another to do or forbear to do something which he otherwise would have done, the other is estopped from taking advantage of the act or omission caused by his own act or promise. (Citations.) One cannot justly or equitably lull his adversary into a false sense of security, and thereby cause him to subject his claim to the bar of the statute of limitations, and then be permitted to plead the very delay caused by his conduct as a defense to the action when brought. (Citation.)

"Actual fraud in the technical sense, bad faith, or an intent to mislead, are not essential to create such an estoppel. It is sufficient that the debtor made misrepresentations or so conducted himself that he misled the creditor, who acted thereon in good faith to the extent that he failed to commence action within the statutory period. (Citations.) Acts or conduct which wrongfully induce a party to believe an amicable adjustment of his claim will be made, may create an estoppel against pleading the statute. (Citation.) An insurer cannot hold out a hope of amicable adjustment of a claim and thus delay action against it, and then plead the delay caused by its own conduct as a defense to an action when brought. (Citation.) It is only when a substantial period for instituting proceedings supervened after expiration of the delay engendered by a party that his conduct or representations will not estop him from asserting the bar of the statute, or where such conduct or representations did not in fact induce the party to forbear from institution [sic] proceedings. (Citation.) A party has a reasonable time in which to bring his action after the estoppel has expired. (Citation.)" (See, also, Benner v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 26 Cal.2d 346, 350, 159 P.2d 24; Carruth v. Fritch, 36 Cal.2d 426, 434, 224 P.2d 702, 24 A.L.R.2d 1403; Mills v. Mills, 147 Cal.App.2d 107, 120, 305 P.2d 61.)

The evidence fully supports the implied finding of fact that the acts, representations and conduct of defendant and the officers of the International Union lulled plaintiff into a sense of security preventing him from instituting proceedings before the running of the statute, that plaintiff relied thereon to his prejudice and that an estoppel exists as against defendant. Industrial Indemnity Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra, 115 Cal.App.2d 684, 690, 252 P.2d 649; Cruise v. City & County of San Francisco, 101 Cal.App.2d 558, 562, 225 P.2d 988.

Since plaintiff brought his action within the two-year period following receipt by him of notice of denial of his appeal by the General Executive Board of the International Union this is within a reasonable time after the estoppel has expired.

Plaintiff's second amended complaint pleads facts setting forth a cause of action for promissory estoppel. Defendant maintains that the court erred in its instructions to the jury as to this subject; that the evidence is insufficient to establish promissory estoppel against defendant and there was not and could not be promissory estoppel as a matter of law.

[7] The elements necessary for the doctrine of promissory estoppel are well set forth in Graddon v. Knight, 138 Cal.App. 2d 577, 583, 292 P.2d 632, as (1) a promise clear and unambiguous in its terms; (2) reliance by the party to whom the promise is made; (3) his reliance must be both reasonable and foreseeable; (4) the party asserting the estoppel must be injured by his reliance. And at page 582 of 138 Cal.App. 2d, at page 636 of 292 P.2d the rule is stated as set forth in section 90, Restatement of Contracts: "A promise which the promisor should reasonably expect to induce action or forbearance of a definite and substantial character on the part of the promisee and which does induce such action or forbearance is binding if injustice can be avoided only by enforcement of the promise." Also, section 1962, subdivision 3, Code of Civil Procedure is there quoted: "Whenever a party has, by his own declaration, act, or omission, intentionally and deliberately led another to believe a particular thing true, and to act upon such belief, he cannot, in any litigation arising out of such declaration, act, or omission, be permitted to falsify it * * *."

[8] Applying the foregoing rules to the evidence in this case for the purpose of testing both the court's instructions on the subject and the finding of promissory estoppel as against defendant we find such evidence amply sufficient in each instance. The duly adopted resolution of November 10, 1947, is a clearly worded undertaking by defendant to assure or promise plaintiff the payment to him in the future of the retirement benefits therein definitely specified. It states it is "to assure him financial security so that he will not feel it necessary to find other employment than that in which he is now engaged as the loss of his services would be of great damage to Local 17." The word "assure" is a synonym for the word "promise." It is evident that by this resolution defendant not only intended to and did assure plaintiff of future financial security if he would continue his employment but deliberately intended to induce plaintiff to forego any other offer of employment.

There is material evidence which the trier of facts was entitled to believe that in reliance upon the promise of defendant, plaintiff rejected other remunerative employment offered him by a third party. That this employment was of substantial character is established by the showing that it was by a well-known restaurant under a 10-year contract at a specified salary of $250 per week, plus a percentage of the profits of the business. Upon advising defendant of this proffered and remunerative employment, upon the urging of Mr. Finnigan, the then president of defendant local and upon adoption of the resolution by defendant the new employment was rejected; that said employment was rejected in reliance upon the resolution and upon the assurance therein contained of future financial security. Under the terms of the promise he was asked and was expected to continue his active services in behalf of defendant, the retirement provisions and payments to commence only at such time as his retirement became effective. He was thereafter re-elected as secretary-treasurer and served for another two-year term. He stood for re-election again and was defeated for another term and then, on a date prior to the expiration of his term of office, notified defendant in writing of his retirement and of his demand for the retirement benefits promised him according to the provisions of the resolution. This evidence sufficiently establishes a promissory estoppel as to defendant in favor of plaintiff and the jury was correctly instructed as to this subject.

Other cases illustrative of the doctrine of promissory estoppel are Seymour v. Oelrichs, 156 Cal. 782, 106 P. 88, wherein a police officer was induced to resign his position upon the representation of defendants that they would employ him for a period of 10 years at a stipulated salary and would give him a written contract to that effect. After working for defendants for two years the written contract was not given him and his employment was terminated by defendants without cause. The court rejected appellants' contentions, holding they were estopped by their conduct and promises from denying plaintiff's right to the benefit promised him, saying (156 Cal. at page 794, 106 P. at page 93): "It was the change of position caused by his resignation from the police department upon which his claim wholly rests, and this resignation was, of course, no part of the performance of the contract of service, but was something that must be done by plaintiff before he could begin to perform, as was known to the defendants. Plaintiff's case, in this regard, would be just as strong if after his resignation he had been prevented by defendants from beginning to perform." (Emphasis added.)

In West v. Hunt Foods, Inc., 101 Cal. App.2d 597, 604, 605, 225 P.2d 978, defendant assured its employee-plaintiff that if he would remain with the company he would be given a pension upon his retirement. In reliance on such promise he remained with the company. The court held that a promissory estoppel was thus created and defendant was obligated to pay plaintiff the promised pension. To the same effect see Hunter v. Sparling, 87 Cal.App.2d 711, 725, 726, 197 P.2d 807; Wade v. Markwell & Co., 118 Cal.App.2d 410, 419, 258 P.2d 497, 37 A.L.R.2d 1363; Frebank Co. v. White, 152 Cal.App.2d 522, 525, 313 P.2d 633.

We have considered the other incidental points raised by appellant but deem them of no merit and that further discussion as to them is unnecessary.

The judgment is affirmed.

ASHBURN, Acting P. J., and HERNDON, J., concur.

158 Cal.App.2d 691

In the Matter of the ESTATE of Alvin C. ALGEE, also known as A. C. Algee, Deceased.

Madeline J. ALGEE, Executrix, Appellant,

v.

W. W. ESCHWIG, Respondent.

Civ. 22822.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

March 26, 1958.

Proceeding on application by attorney for an allowance of fees. From an order of the Superior Court, San Luis Obispo County, Allen B. Campbell, J., awarding attorney a sum as his share of statutory compensation, the executrix appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J., held that wife's share of community property is a part of her deceased husband's estate and was properly included in base for computation of statutory attorney's fees.

Order affirmed.

1. Executors and Administrators ⇐236

Where another attorney was substituted as counsel for executrix in respondent's place, making of allowance to respondent of his share of statutory attorney's fees ultimately payable from estate was a proper exercise of discretion on part of trial judge although executrix had not made a final accounting. West's Ann.Prob. Code, §§ 904, 911.

2. Husband and Wife ⇐276(1)

Wife's share of community property is a part of her deceased husband's estate and was properly included in base for computation of statutory attorney's fees. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 161a; West's Ann. Prob.Code, § 202.

3. Husband and Wife ⇐276(4, 7)

Personal representative of husband is entitled to possession of entire community property and is chargeable with same upon his accounting.

4. Courts ⇐472(4)

Upon death of husband, determination of what constitutes community property and apportionment of wife's share to her is a matter resting exclusively within probate court.

Butler & Hegner, Compton, for appellant.

W. W. Eschwig, in pro. per., for respondent.

ASHBURN, Justice.

[1] Madeline Algee, widow and executrix of the will of decedent, appeals from an order allowing respondent Eschwig $3,000 as his share of the statutory attorney's fee, another attorney having been substituted as counsel for the executrix in his place. Respondent served in that capacity from December 10, 1956 to May 24, 1957, when the substitution was made. He thereupon applied for an allowance upon attorney's fees, same was contested, and the court awarded him $3,000 as his share of the statutory compensation, together with the sum of $263.16 in repayment of moneys advanced by him. The estate had not then progressed to the stage of an accounting. The full fee for ordinary services computed upon the basis of the appraised value of $163,489.49 would have been $3,832.34. Appellant does not argue that this allowance was excessive per se, but relies upon two basic propositions, (1) that no allowance upon statutory fees may be made before final accounting, and (2) as all the property was community, one-half of which belonged to the surviving widow, that half did not constitute part of the husband's estate and could not be included in the base for fee computation.

In support of the first proposition appellant cites In re Estate of Hite, 155 Cal. 448, 458, 101 P. 448, which does hold that no allowance upon statutory fees can be made in advance of final accounting. The opinion says, 155 Cal. at page 458, 101 P. at page 452: "We do not think that it was intended by section 1616, of the Code of Civ. Proc. to require a court to make any allowance on account of such commissions in advance of a final account by the executor or administrator. * * * It is settled that an executor or administrator is not entitled to the commissions allowed him by law until the settlement of his final account. See In re Estate of Rose, 80 Cal. 166, 180, 22 P. 86; In re Estate of Carter, 132 Cal. 113, 114, 64 P. 123, 484. We think the same rule must be held applicable to attorneys under the commission method of compensation provided for by section 1619, so far as the ordinary probate proceedings are concerned, and that nothing is due from the estate on account thereof until such services are completed." This ruling was made on March 31, 1909. At that time § 1616, Code of Civil Procedure, provided: "* * * Any attorney who has rendered services to an executor or administrator may at any time during the administration * * * apply to the court for an allowance to himself of compensation therefor, and the court shall on the hearing of such application make an order requiring the executor or administrator to pay to such attorney out of the estate such compensation as to the court shall seem proper. Any payment made by an executor or administrator in conformity with such order shall be allowed by the court in his account." Stats.1905, Ch. 577, p. 776. The 1911 legislature amended the section (Stats.1911, Ch. 390, p. 708) with presumptive intent to change the law. People v. Weitzel, 201 Cal. 116, 118, 255 P. 792, 52 A.L.R. 811; Clements v. T. R. Bechtel Co., 43 Cal.2d 227, 231, 273 P.2d 5. The provision for an application at any time during administration was retained, but the phrase "such compensation as to the court shall seem proper" was changed to read "such compensation on account of services rendered by such attorney up to the date of such order;" and this significant phrase was added, "and such payment shall be forthwith made."[1] In 1929 the section was again amended (Stats.1929, Ch. 492, p. 853) to provide that the application could be made at any time after six months from admission of the will to probate or the granting of letters of administration; the provision that "such payment shall be forthwith made" remained in the section.[2] In the process of codification as § 911, Probate Code, the language was slightly changed but no substantial alteration made in the wording or meaning of the section. It then and now reads: "Any attorney who has rendered services to an executor or administrator, at any time after six months from the issuance of letters testamentary or of administration, and upon such notice to the executor or administrator and to the persons interested in the estate as the court or judge thereof shall require, may apply to the court for an allowance upon his fees; and on the hearing the court shall make an order requiring the executor or administrator to pay such attorney out of the estate such compensation, on account of services rendered up to that time, as the court shall deem proper, and such payment shall be made forthwith."

As the Hite case, supra, analogized the attorney's fee to the executor's fee in this respect it is significant that the 1911 amendment to § 616, Code of Civil Procedure (Stats.1911, Ch. 390, p. 708) also conferred upon the personal representative the right to apply for an allowance "upon his commissions" at any time after one year from probate of will or issuance of letters of administration, and authorized the court to allow him "such portion of his commissions as to the court shall seem proper;" it then added this counterpart to the provision for immediate payment to the attorney of the amount awarded him, "and the portion so allowed may be thereupon charged against the estate," [3] which means that the representative may immediately pay himself the amount so allowed. Section 904, Probate Code, is in substantially this same form today.

1. Stats.1911, Ch. 390, p. 708: "* * * Any attorney who has rendered services to an executor or administrator may at any time during the administration, and upon such notice to the other parties interested in the estate as the court shall by order require, apply to the court for an allowance to himself of compensation therefor, and the court shall on the hearing of such application make an order requiring the executor or administrator to pay to such attorney out of the estate such compensation on account of services rendered by such attorney up to the date of such order as to the court shall seem proper, and such payment shall be forthwith made. * * *"

2. Stats.1929, Ch. 492, p. 853: "* * * Any attorney who has rendered services to an executor or administrator may at any time after six months from the admission of a will to probate, or the granting of letters of administration, and upon such notice to the other parties interested in the estate as the court shall by order require, apply to the court for an allowance to himself of compensation therefor, and the court shall on the hearing of such application make an order requiring the executor or administrator to pay such attorney out of the estate such compensation on account of services rendered by such attorney up to the date of such order as to the court shall seem proper, and such payment shall be forthwith made."

The conclusion seems inescapable that the legislature, over the years following the Hite decision, has deliberately reversed the policy there declared concerning allowances upon statutory fees of personal representatives and their attorneys.

In Re Estate of Jones, 166 Cal. 147, 152, 135 P. 293, 295 (decided in 1913), the court was dealing with an allowance on account of an executor's commissions and said, without reference to the Hite decision: "The allowance of commissions to the executor is objected to on the ground that the court is not authorized to apportion commissions between successive personal representatives until the estate has been completely administered and is ready for distribution. Such was unquestionably the law prior to the amendment in 1911 of section 1616 of the Code of Civil Procedure [Stats.1911, p. 707]. In re Estate of Barton, 55 Cal. 87; In re Levinson's Estate, 108 Cal. [450] 456, 41 P. 483, 42 P. 479. But under the amendment referred to, the executor or administrator may at any time after one year from the admission of the will to probate, or the granting of letters of administration, 'apply to the court for an allowance to himself upon his commissions,' and the court is empowered to make an order 'allowing such executor or administrator such portion of his commissions as to the court shall seem proper, and the portion so allowed may be thereupon charged against the estate.' This provision plainly contemplates an allowance on account of commissions before the administration is completed, and to this extent changes the law as declared in the cases above cited. There is nothing to indicate that the rule is not applicable to an executor who dies or is removed, as well as to one continuing in office."

In re Estate of Piercy, 1914, 168 Cal. 750, 145 P. 88, was an appeal from an order settling an administrator's third account current. The court had refused to allow any counsel fees or commissions in a situation essentially the same as the one before us,—need for an apportionment between administrators, one of whom had retired from the proceeding. At pages 754–755 of 168 Cal. at page 90 of 145 P. the court said: "The appellant complains of the refusal of the court to allow him administrator's commissions and counsel fees. The appellant had been succeeded as administrator by Andrew J. Piercy and the administration of the estate remained uncompleted. The former administrator was not, therefore, entitled to the statutory commissions, but, at most, to such part thereof as the court might apportion to him upon a consideration of the respective rights of the successive administrators. Prior to the amendment in 1911, of section 1616 of the Code of Civil Procedure, no such apportionment could be made until the estate had been completely administered and was ready for distribution. In re Estate of Barton, 55 Cal. 87; In re Levinson's Estate, 108 Cal. [450] 456, 41 P. 483, 42 P. 479. The amended section provides, however, for an application, after the expiration of one year from the grant of letters, for an allowance upon commissions. This provision is applicable to successive administrators. In re Estate of Jones, 166 Cal. 147, 135 P. 293. * * * This conclusion is no bar to the right of the appellant to proceed hereafter for a partial allowance under section 1616. * * * The demand for an allowance for attorney's fees stands upon similar grounds." To the same effect is In re

3. Stats.1911, Ch. 390, p. 708: "At any time after one year from the admission of a will to probate, or the granting of letters of administration, any executor, or administrator, may, upon such notice to the other parties interested in the estate as the court shall by order require, apply to the court for an allowance to himself upon his commissions, and the court shall on the hearing of such application make an order allowing such executor or administrator such portion of his commissions as to the court shall seem proper, and the portion so allowed may be thereupon charged against the estate."

Estate of Mallory, 99 Cal.App. 96, 106, 279 P. 488.

Concerning an allowance to the attorney made under § 911, Probate Code, Zagoren v. Hall, 122 Cal.App. 460, 465, 10 P.2d 202, 204, says: "The final provisions of section 911 of the Probate Code that 'such payment (for attorney's fees) shall be made forthwith,' should be construed to mean that prompt payment shall be made when there are available funds in the estate from which the obligation may be satisfied. When an estate possesses available funds with which to pay attorney's fees which have been allowed, and the administrator or executor fails or refuses to comply with the order, adequate remedy exists either by citation or by resorting to the provisions of section 954 of the Probate Code." To the same effect, see In re Estate of McDonald, 37 Cal.App.2d 521, 525, 99 P.2d 1115.

We entertain no doubt that the making of the allowance to respondent as his share of the attorney's fees ultimately payable from this estate was a proper exercise of discretion on the part of the trial judge.

[2] The contention that the wife's share of community property cannot be considered in computing fees proves to be equally untenable. The argument is that half of the community property is vested in the wife during the lifetime of both spouses, becomes her separate property immediately upon the husband's death, is not taken into the possession of the personal representative nor chargeable to him in his accounts, does not pass to the widow by decree of distribution, and hence does not and cannot constitute a part of a deceased husband's estate; being no part of that estate it cannot be included within the base for computation of fees. Appellant concedes that the contrary is ruled in Re Estate of Phillips, 123 Cal.App. 2d 570, 266 P.2d 954 (4th Dist.; hearing denied), and would have the reasoning of that case reexamined. The conclusion there expressed is this: "We conclude that the wife's share of the community property is a part of the 'estate' which came into the hands of this executor within the meaning of that term as used in sections 901 and 910, is property which the executor is responsible for and is chargeable with, and was properly included in the amount used as a basis for fixing the ordinary commissions and fees." 123 Cal.App.2d at page 574, 266 P.2d at page 956. We find that opinion persuasive and in our opinion sound in result.

Appellant's argument in this regard reflects a series of misapprehensions. There are few absolutes in the law and the postulate that the wife is the present owner of one-half of the community property is not one of them. Section 161a, Civil Code, which declares the existence of that present interest, is qualified by § 202, Probate Code: "Community property passing from the control of the husband, either by reason of his death or by virtue of testamentary disposition by the wife, is subject to his debts and to administration and disposal under the provisions of Division 3 of this code * * *." Mr. Justice Vallée thus aptly phrases the matter in Re Estate of Atwell, 85 Cal.App.2d 454, 464, 193 P.2d 519, 525: "One-half of the entire community property belongs and goes to the widow upon condition, the condition being that the property lawfully diverted during the course of administration, i. e., necessary for the payment of debts, expenses of administration, the federal estate tax, etc., shall be used for such purposes and shall not go to the widow. The property so lawfully diverted therefor never passes to the widow." The Supreme Court defined the wife's right as follows in Re Estate of Coffee, 19 Cal. 2d 248, 252, 120 P.2d 661, 664: "It is clear, therefore, that the portion of the community property which belongs to the wife is the one-half which remains after the payment of the husband's debts and the expenses of administration apportioned between the community and separate property in accordance with the value thereof, and this is true even when the husband's share of the community together with his separate property, is ample to pay those debts and expenses."

[3] The personal representative of the husband is entitled to possession of the entire community property and is chargeable with same upon his accounting. Chase v. Leiter, 96 Cal.App.2d 439, 457, 215 P.2d 756; In re Estate of Phillips, supra, 123 Cal.App.2d 570, 574, 266 P.2d 954; 20 Cal. Jur.2d § 259, p. 417. In the Chase case, supra, the court said: "The action of the trial court in awarding the widow possession of any of the community property as against the executors was erroneous. All of the community property is subject to administration in the estate of the husband." 123 Cal.App.2d at page 457, 215 P.2d at page 766. In Phillips, supra: "When a husband dies, the probate court has jurisdiction to pass upon the wife's claim to a community interest, In re Estate of Kurt, 83 Cal.App.2d 681, 189 P.2d 528, and must determine what part of the property is community property, what part is needed to pay debts, what election has been made by the widow, and other questions, before it can be known what 'belongs' to the widow. When these matters are determined, and the wife's share can be identified, it must then be separated from the rest of the estate in some orderly manner by an order or decree made by the court. In the meantime the executor must remain in possession, and it cannot reasonably be said that he is not chargeable with, and responsible for, all the property thus placed in his keeping. The wife's community interest is necessarily involved in a large part, if not all, of such administration, and should logically be considered a part of that estate for the purpose of fixing and paying the proper cost of administration. The executor remains responsible for and chargeable with all of the property, until released by the court through some order making a proper 'disposal' of the remaining portion which 'belongs' to the widow." 123 Cal.App.2d at page 574, 266 P.2d at page 956.

[4] Upon death of the husband, the determination of what constitutes community property and the apportionment of the wife's share to her is a matter resting exclusively with the probate court (In re Estate of Kurt, 83 Cal.App.2d 681, 684, 189 P.2d 528; Central Bank v. Superior Court, 45 Cal.2d 10, 17, 285 P.2d 906; In re Estate of Nash, 132 Cal.App.2d 233, 237, 282 P.2d 184; In re Estate of Hartnett, 155 Cal.App. 2d 280, 318 P.2d 81), and a decree of distribution is necessary to that end. In re Estate of Nash, supra, 132 Cal.App.2d at page 237, 282 P.2d 184; Colden v. Costello, 50 Cal.App.2d 363, 370, 122 P.2d 959. In Colden, supra, it is said: "The title of a surviving wife to her interest in the community estate rests upon a decree of distribution. Her right as survivor of the community is one thing; the decree of distribution which determines and identifies the estate which comes to her by virtue of her right is quite another, and is indispensable as a muniment of her title." 50 Cal.App.2d at page 370, 122 P.2d at page 963.

The analogy of a mortgaged property, upon which appellant relies (In re Estate of Lampman, 15 Cal.2d 212, 100 P.2d 488), is not a true one, nor is it helpful. This is pointed out in Phillips, supra, 123 Cal.App. 2d at page 573, 266 P.2d at page 956: "The wife's one-half of the community property is by the statutes made subject to administration and, impliedly at least, to the costs of administration. Being subject to administration, and necessarily to be handled and accounted for by the executor of the husband's estate it should naturally be considered a part of the estate being administered insofar as fixing and paying all costs of administration is concerned. In Re Estate of Lampman, supra [15 Cal. 2d 212, 100 P.2d 491] it was held that while possession of the property was one element to be considered the true test, in determining whether the value of certain property should be considered in fixing fees, is whether or not the executor 'was chargeable with, or responsible for,' the portion of the property in question."

Cases which hold that estate and inheritance taxes do not attach to the wife's share of the community property are likewise not controlling. See Phillips, supra, 123 Cal. App.2d at page 572, 266 P.2d 954. Though her half may not be literally a part of the deceased husband's estate, it is made so by § 202, Probate Code, and the burdens thereby placed upon it.

As above indicated, we consider that the Phillips case is soundly reasoned, buttressed by ample precedents, and sound in its conclusion that the wife's half of the community property is chargeable with a proportionate part of the costs of administration of the deceased husband's estate and that attorney's fees are a part of such costs. In addition to the authorities above cited we refer to In re Estate of Marinos, 39 Cal.App.2d 1, 7, 102 P.2d 443, which makes the same holding as Phillips.

Order affirmed.

FOX, P. J., and HERNDON, J., concur.

157 Cal.App.2d Supp. 863

William E. FENTRESS, Appellant,

v.

VAN ETTA MOTORS et al., Defendants; Ford Motor Company, Respondent.

C. A. 2521.

Appellate Department, Superior Court, San Francisco County, California.

Jan. 31, 1958.

Automobile purchaser's action against manufacturer and dealer for damages to automobile due to alleged negligence in manufacturer of brakes and wheel bearings of automobile and for negligence and alleged breach of warranty. The Municipal Court for the City and County of San Francisco, James J. Welsh, J., entered judgment for manufacturer and purchaser appealed. The Appellate Department, Superior Court, Devine, P. J., held that an action would lie against manufacturer of article which when negligently made was likely to produce injury to person or property, for damages resulting from accident caused by negligence, even though the damages were confined to the destruction or harm of the article itself.

Reversed and trial court directed to set aside order sustaining demurrer without leave to amend.

1. Negligence ⇐27

An action will lie against manufacturer of an article, which if negligently made, is likely to produce injury to person or property, for damages resulting from accident caused by negligence, where damages are confined to the destruction or harm to the article itself.

2. Automobiles ⇐16

Purchaser, whose automobile was damaged in an accident when the brakes failed to hold, was entitled to bring an action against manufacturer of automobile for damages to vehicle.

3. Negligence ⇐27

In order that an action might lie against manufacturer of article which if negligently made is likely to produce injury to person or property, for damages resulting from accident caused by the negligence, where damages are confined to the destruction or harm to article itself, negligence must be proved in accordance with general rule of manufacturer's negligence, article must be of a nature that, if negligently made, it is reasonably certain to produce harm to persons or property, an accident must have resulted, and accident must be a casualty involving some violence or collision with external objects rather than a mere marked deterioration or even a complete ruin brought about by internal defect.

Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, San Francisco, for appellant.

Charles O. Morgan, Jr., San Francisco, for respondent.

DEVINE, Presiding Judge.

Plaintiff has appealed from a judgment in favor of Ford Motor Company, based on an order sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend. The action is against Van Etta Motors, vendor of a Mercury automobile, on an alleged warranty; answer of that defendant has been filed; but it is also against Ford Motor Company for damages alleged to have been caused by negligence in the manufacture of the brakes and wheel bearings of the automobile. The damages were to the automobile itself, in an accident in which it was wrecked when the brakes failed to hold. No damage to person or to other property is alleged.

[1, 2] The order and judgment were made by the trial judge because of our decision in Judson Pacific Murphy, Inc. v. Thew Shovel Co., 127 Cal.App.2d 828, 275 P.2d 841, and appellant frankly bases his appeal on the proposition that we should overrule that earlier decision of our own court. The question may be stated simply, but it is one which has very rarely been considered. It is this: Will an action lie against the manufacturer of an article which, if negligently made, is likely to produce injury to person or property, for damages resulting from an accident caused by the negligence, where the damages are confined to destruction or harm to the article itself? In the Judson case we answered this question in the negative, on the ground that to extend the manufacturer's responsibility to include the article itself would make the manufacturer virtually a warrantor.

We have reached a conclusion different from our former holding, and we are causing this opinion to be published because the earlier one was reported.

Although the main reason for our change has been none other than an altered judgment based on further reflection, it may be mentioned that one or two cases have been brought to our attention which were not before us—and some had not then been decided—when we decided the Judson case. Also, the trend of judicial decisions seems to carry on what Justice Cardozo, in Ultramares Corporation v. Touche, 255 N.Y. 170, 180, 174 N.E. 441, 445, 74 A.L.R. 1139, called "the assault upon the citadel of privity." See for example Biakanja v. Irving, 49 Cal.2d 647, 320 P.2d 16, in which the court, disapproving earlier decisions, held that a notary who prepared an invalid will was liable to a prospective legatee despite the absence of privity.

Shortly after the landmark case on manufacturer's liability of MacPherson v. Buick Motor Co., 217 N.Y. 382, 111 N.E. 1050, L.R.A.1916F, 696, Ann.Cas.1916C, 440, the Supreme Court of New York held, in Quackenbush v. Ford Motor Co., 167 App. Div. 433, 153 N.Y.S. 131, that the manufacturer's liability for negligence in an automobile brake failure case extends to damage solely to the article itself, the automobile. Unlike the MacPherson case, the Quackenbush case was not carried to the court of appeals. As authority for the proposition that the manufacturer's liability for negligence extends to damage to the article itself, the Quackenbush case stands almost alone. The decision in International Harvester Co. v. Sharoff, 10 Cir., 202 F.2d 52 does hold the manufacturer liable, the article itself being the sole casualty, but the manufacturer was the immediate vendor, and the cause having been stated on warranty as well as on negligence, the decision does not necessarily ground itself upon the charge of negligence. On the other hand, the Judson decision seems to be the only one denying the manufacturer's liability in this type of case.

In the Quackenbush case, it was reasoned by the court that it would be illogical to hold that a person driving a car with negligently fabricated brakes could recover from the manufacturer if he suffered personal injury, but if he had jumped from the vehicle and escaped personal injury, and the automobile was destroyed, he could not recover for the damage to the car. The accident and the negligence causing it, rather than the results of the accident were held to be the controlling factors. We accept that reasoning, and we shall add some thoughts of our own.

[3] To accept the rule of the Quackenbush case will not make the manufacturer a warrantor to the ultimate purchaser. In the first place, negligence must be proved, in accordance with the general rule of manufacturer's negligence. Burr v. Sherwin-Williams Co., 42 Cal.2d 682, 695, 268 P.2d 1041.

In the second place, the article, while no longer, as in the early days of the doctrine of manufacturer's liability, required to be inherently dangerous, must be of such nature that, if negligently made, it is reasonably certain to produce harm to persons or to property. Kalash v. Los Angeles Ladder Co., 1 Cal.2d 229, 34 P.2d 481; Sheward v. Virtue, 20 Cal.2d 410, 126 P.2d 345. Injury or damage must have been foreseeable, reasonably, by a prudent manufacturer. 65 C.J.S. Negligence § 100, p. 631; Restatement of Torts, p. 1039, § 388. This at once removes a host of articles which could become harmful to the public only by remote possibilities or under bizarre circumstances, from the rule of manufacturer's liability in general, and from liability for damage to the very articles, in particular.

In the third place, an accident must have resulted. In the case of Trans World Airlines, Inc. v. Curtiss-Wright Corp., 1 Misc. 2d 477, 148 N.Y.S.2d 284, plaintiff sought damages against the manufacturer in the nature of the cost of repairs to airplane engines which it had bought through a seller whom, for an unknown reason, said the court, plaintiff did not choose to sue on warranty. The court held that, although certainly the engines, if negligently made, were likely to endanger persons and property, nevertheless, since the fault was found in time to avert accident, the manufacturer's negligence would not cause liability. Otherwise, the court pointed out, there would not be much scope for the law of warranty, and persons who had no contractual relations with the manufacturer could escape the limitations, if any there were, agreed upon in their contract of purchase made with their immediate vendors.

Finally, it seems that the accident must be a casualty involving some violence or collision with external objects, not a mere marked deterioration, or even a complete ruin brought about by internal defect. In Wyatt v. Cadillac Motor Car Division, 145 Cal.App.2d 423, 302 P.2d 665, judgment for defendant manufacturer on order sustaining demurrer without leave to amend was affirmed, where the complaint alleged that a paper was negligently sealed in an automobile's breather pipe, causing ruin of the engine, the defect not having been one which would be likely to produce injury to persons or to other property. The manufacturer, in guarding against damage to the public at large, would not have to guard against such a defect, its liability extending only to its own vendee.

Although we need not define the limitations set forth above, we mention them as showing that, by answering the question above stated in the affirmative, we are very far from embracing an unlimited manufacturer's responsibility.

Besides the fact that the rule contended for by appellant does not, when restricted by the limitations which no doubt are to be applied, convert the manufacturer's position to that of warrantor to third persons, there are positive reasons for its acceptance. The manufacturer's liability is based on reasons of public policy. The purchaser is a member of the public. If his property happens to be the article negligently made, he is entitled to damages no less than is a total stranger to the property. In fact, his purchase, though not directly from the manufacturer, may have promoted the latter's business, and his position should not be inferior to that of others. Nothing is added to the required quantum of care, because the manufacturer must observe that duty in order to avoid responding to strangers, in any event, where the articles are of the nature described above. The amount of care itself required is not enlarged, but the owner of the article is regarded as not being excluded from the protection afforded to the entire public.

There may be many occasions when the liability of a retailer as a warrantor would not, for practical purposes, be as availing to a plaintiff as would that of a manufacturer. The retailer is closer to the plaintiff in the sense of contractual privity, but the manufacturer is the more responsible in the sense of fault if, as alleged, it is his negligence which brought about the loss.

The judgment is reversed, and the trial court is directed to set aside the order sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend.

MOLKENBUHR and SHOEMAKER, JJ., concurred.

50 Cal.2d 163

Walter W. PHILLIPS, Appellant,
v.
Glenn R. NOBLE, Respondent.

Walter W. PHILLIPS, Appellant,
v.
Charles MITCHELL, Respondent.

L. A. 24706.

Supreme Court of California,
In Bank.
March 28, 1958.

Action by passenger against both drivers for personal injuries sustained in automobile collision. From a judgment for defendants entered in the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Fred Miller, J., the passenger appeals. The Supreme Court, Gibson, C. J., held that where no instruction on res ipsa loquitur was requested or given, and the case was not one in which the doctrine could be applied as a matter of law on basis of undisputed facts, and the Supreme Court could not say that it was more probable than not that both drivers were negligent, or that one was at fault to exclusion of the other, failure to instruct on res ipsa loquitur was not reversible error.

Affirmed.

Schauer and McComb, JJ., dissented in part.

Opinion 313 P.2d 22, vacated.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐216(1)

In the absence of a request for instructions on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, it is not reversible error to give the instruction on the mere happening of an accident, if the application of the doctrine depends upon the determination of disputed facts.

2. Automobiles ⇐181(1)

Where there was evidence that plaintiff was a guest in automobile colliding with another, he could not recover against the driver unless he established that the injury resulted from wilful misconduct of the driver. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 403.

3. Automobiles ⇐242(2)

"Res ipsa loquitur" which permits the drawing of an inference that ordinary care was not used, cannot serve as a means of establishing intoxication or wilful misconduct permitting recovery by a guest against driver of automobile. West's Ann. Vehicle Code, § 403.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Res Ipsa Loquitur".

4. Automobiles ⇐245(24)

In action for injuries sustained by guest in automobile, where no instruction on res ipsa loquitur was requested or given, case was not one in which doctrine could be applied as a matter of law on the basis of undisputed facts, where court could not say, that it was more probable than not, that both drivers were negligent or that one was at fault to the exclusion of the other. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 403.

5. Appeal and Error ⇐216(2)

In action by guest for injuries sustained in automobile collision brought against both drivers, where plaintiff did not request an instruction apprising court that he was relying on doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, judgment would not be reversed because of failure of the trial court to use words in the challenged instruction which would have avoided conveying idea, that there was no probability of negligence on the part of at least one of the drivers.

6. Appeal and Error ⇐901

An appellant has the burden to present a record which is sufficiently complete to establish that the claimed errors were not invited by him, and in the absence of such a showing, he may not properly complain.

Everett E. Demler and Eric A. Rose, Long Beach, for appellant.

Bauder, Gilbert, Thompson & Kelly, Los Angeles, Ball, Hunt & Hart, Clarence

S. Hunt, Long Beach, and Jean Wunderlich, Los Angeles, for respondents.

GIBSON, Chief Justice.

This is an appeal by plaintiff from an adverse judgment entered on a jury verdict in consolidated actions to recover damages for personal injuries suffered by him when a car driven by defendant Mitchell, in which plaintiff was riding, collided with one driven by defendant Noble.

The collision occurred at the intersection of Sepulveda Boulevard and 22nd Street in Manhattan Beach. Sepulveda, a six-lane thoroughfare, runs in a north-south direction, and 22nd connects with Sepulveda from the east, forming a T-shaped intersection. There were no stop signals on Sepulveda at the intersection, but there was a reflector stop sign on 22nd. Immediately before the collision occurred, Mitchell was driving in a northerly direction on Sepulveda in the lane next to the center line, and Noble was making a left turn from 22nd onto Sepulveda.

Mitchell testified that as he was approaching the intersection there were cars in each of the two lanes to his right and that these cars started to slow down when they were about ten feet from the intersection, at which time he was about 25 feet farther back. Not knowing why the other cars were stopping, Mitchell applied his brakes and stopped a foot or two inside the intersection. He said he did not see Noble's car until a second before the collision.

Noble testified that he stopped at the reflector sign on 22nd Street for about 15 seconds and then proceeded into the intersection at a speed of from three to five miles per hour. As he entered the intersection, the cars in the two northbound lanes closest to him slowed down and stopped. These vehicles obstructed his view of the third lane so that he did not see the Mitchell car until he passed the two outside lanes. When he first saw Mitchell's car it was about 25 feet away and traveling between 30 and 35 miles per hour, and it did not slow down before the collision. Mitchell's right front fender struck Noble's left front fender, and Mitchell's car continued in motion after the collision for about 14 feet.

Plaintiff testified that he paid Mitchell fifty cents a day for transportation. Mitchell denied that he received any compensation.

The trial court, at defendant's request, gave the following instruction: "The mere fact that an accident happened, considered alone, does not support an inference that some person, or any party to this action, was negligent." It is plaintiff's contention that an inference of negligence arose from the happening of the accident under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, and he asserts that the instruction precluded the jury from drawing the inference.

An issue as to the propriety of the quoted instruction has frequently arisen in cases where there was evidence warranting the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur. See Shaw v. Pacific Greyhound Lines, Cal.Sup., 323 P.2d 391; Jensen v. Minard, 44 Cal.2d 325, 329, 282 P.2d 7; Barrera v. De La Torre, 48 Cal.2d 166, 170 et seq., 308 P.2d 724. This is because the instruction contains an idea which, unless explained, might be understood by laymen as being inconsistent with the doctrine. See Shaw v. Pacific Greyhound Lines, Cal.Sup., 323 P.2d 391; Brown v. George Pepperdine Foundation, 23 Cal.2d 256, 261–262, 143 P.2d 929; England v. Hospital of Good Samaritan, 22 Cal.App.2d 226, 230, 70 P.2d 692; Ellis v. Jewett, 18 Cal.App.2d 629, 634, 64 P.2d 432.

[1] We have recently held that, in the absence of a request for instructions on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, it is not reversible error to give the instruction on the mere happening of an accident if the application of the doctrine depends upon the determination of disputed facts. Barrera v. De La Torre, 48 Cal.2d 166, 170 et seq., 308 P.2d 724. In such a case a request for appropriate instructions on the doctrine is essential so that the court may be apprised of the plaintiff's reliance on it and have an opportunity to explain the relationship between the doctrine and the instruction on the mere happening of an accident. In the absence of such a request, the only situation in which the giving of the challenged instruction was held to constitute error was where the res ipsa loquitur inference arose as a matter of law from facts conceded by the defendant. Jensen v. Minard, 44 Cal.2d 325, 329, 282 P.2d 7.

[2–4] Here no instruction on res ipsa loquitur was requested or given, and the case is not one in which the doctrine may be applied as a matter of law on the basis of undisputed facts. The evidence relating to the conduct of the defendants prior to the collision is conflicting, and we cannot say that it is more probable than not that both drivers were negligent or that one was at fault to the exclusion of the other. With respect to the cause of action against Mitchell, there was evidence that plaintiff was a guest within the meaning of section 403 of the Vehicle Code, in which event he could not recover unless he established that the injury resulted from the intoxication or wilful misconduct of Mitchell.[1] Obviously res ipsa loquitur, which permits the drawing of an inference that ordinary care was not used, cannot serve as a means of establishing intoxication or wilful misconduct. Fiske v. Wilkie, 67 Cal.App.2d 440, 449–452, 154 P.2d 725; cf. Cadotte v. Industrial Accident Comm., 86 Cal.App.2d 754, 757, 194 P.2d 563. Insofar as Noble is concerned, there can be no justification for applying the doctrine as a matter of law against him alone. Assuming that the doctrine might be used in some collision cases to require an explanation from both defendants, Noble would be placed at a serious disadvantage if he were required as a matter of law to exculpate himself in order to avoid liability when Mitchell, who may have been equally or solely negligent, would not be required to do so if plaintiff were considered his guest.

The case of Godfrey v. Brown, 220 Cal. 57, 29 P.2d 165, 93 A.L.R. 1092, relied upon by plaintiff, is clearly distinguishable. The court pointed out that the injury there involved took place before the effective date of the guest statute (now section 403 of the Vehicle Code, referred to above) and that for this reason the driver of the car in which the plaintiff was riding was liable for ordinary negligence. 220 Cal. at page 60, 29 P.2d at page 166. Accordingly, the case can be of no assistance to plaintiff with respect to his action against Mitchell. The case is likewise not authority regarding Noble's liability. The court was there concerned with the propriety of an instruction which permitted the jury to apply res ipsa loquitur to the driver of the car in which the plaintiff was riding, and there was no discussion of the liability of the driver of the other vehicle, who, although a defendant in the trial court, was not a party to the appeal.

Shaw v. Pacific Greyhound Lines, Cal. Sup., 323 P.2d 391, is also distinguishable. That case involved the propriety of an order granting a motion for a new trial where an instruction on res ipsa loquitur containing only minor defects was refused although an appropriate instruction would have been clearly justified by the evidence.[2] In view of the broad discretionary powers of a judge in passing upon a motion for a new trial we upheld the order, but we recognized that the reversal of a judgment on appeal would not be warranted in circumstances such as those now before us.

1. Section 403 of the Vehicle Code provides: "No person who as a guest accepts a ride in any vehicle upon a highway without giving compensation for such ride * * * has any right of action for civil damages against the driver of such vehicle * * * on account of personal injury * * * unless the plaintiff in any such action establishes that such injury * * * proximately resulted from the intoxication or wilful misconduct of said driver."

2. Although the defendant in Shaw v. Pacific Greyhound Lines, Cal.Sup., 323 P.2d 391, was a common carrier, application of res ipsa loquitur was not required because the evidence was conflicting with respect to whether the plaintiff was injured as a result of the operation of the defendant's vehicle.

[5] It should be pointed out, however, that the form of the challenged instruction does not fit a factual situation like the one involved in the present case. The instruction told the jury that the mere fact that an accident happened does not support an inference that "some person, or any party to this action," was negligent. It should have been worded so as not to deny the existence of a probability that someone was negligent but instead to state that no inference arises that both drivers were negligent or that a particular one was negligent to the exclusion of the other. However, since plaintiff did not request an instruction which would have apprised the court that he was relying on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, we cannot say that the judgment here should be reversed because of the failure of the trial court to use words in the challenged instruction which would have avoided conveying the idea that there was no probability of negligence on the part of at least one of the drivers.

[6] Plaintiff claims that the trial court modified two instructions requested by him and that the modifications rendered the instructions uncertain and erroneous. The record, however, does not show the instructions in the form requested by plaintiff, and the asserted errors may be attributable to him. It is, of course, plaintiff's burden, as appellant, to present a record which is sufficiently complete to establish that the claimed errors were not invited by him, and in the absence of such a showing he may not properly complain. (Cf. Lynch v. Birdwell, 44 Cal.2d 839, 846–847, 285 P.2d 919.)

The judgment is affirmed.

SHENK, TRAYNOR and SPENCE, JJ., concur.

CARTER, Justice (concurring).

I concur in the judgment of affirmance but upon the sole ground that the instruction here in question, while erroneous, was not prejudicial to plaintiff under the facts as disclosed by the record in this case. The instruction referred to reads as follows: "The mere fact that an accident happened, considered alone, does not support an inference that some person, or any party to this action, was negligent." In my opinion it is error to give the foregoing instruction in any negligence case. The declaration contained in this instruction is in direct conflict with the experience of everyone who has been involved in an accident. Barring accidents which may be solely the result of acts of God or of circumstances or conditions entirely beyond the control of the parties involved, it is inconceivable to me that an accident could happen in the absence of negligence on the part of someone. The instruction above quoted served no purpose except to confuse and mislead the jury, and in my opinion, plays a more important part in this direction than the erstwhile stock instruction on unavoidable accident (see, Parker v. Womack, 37 Cal. 2d 116, 230 P.2d 823; Butigan v. Yellow Cab Co., 49 Cal.2d 652, 320 P.2d 500).

There is obviously no necessity for giving the above quoted instruction in any negligence case and the giving of such an instruction cannot possibly aid the jury in determining whether or not the defendant was guilty of negligence which proximately contributed to plaintiff's injury or that plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence. In the conventional negligence case, instructions are given defining negligence, proximate cause and burden of proof. The jury is then told that before the plaintiff can recover he must prove by a preponderance of the evidence that defendant was guilty of negligence which was the proximate cause of the accident, and if contributory negligence is pleaded as a defense, that the burden is on the defendant to prove that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence which contributed to his own injury in some degree. With these instructions in mind, the jury are in a position to return a verdict based upon the evidence. Since the jury has been told that plaintiff cannot recover damages from the defendant unless the latter was guilty of negligence which was the proximate cause of the accident and that plaintiff must have been free from negligence himself which proximately contributed to the accident, any additional instructions such as the one above quoted or the one on the subject of unavoidable accident condemned in the Butigan case, are mere surplusage and tend to mislead and confuse the jury. For this reason I would hold that the giving of either of such instructions is error.

The question of whether or not plaintiff has suffered prejudice as the result of the giving of either of the above mentioned instructions is sometimes a close one. In the ordinary case where there is a sharp conflict in the evidence but where there is sufficient competent evidence to establish negligence on the part of the defendant and evidence of contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff is either weak or non-existent, I would hold the giving of either of the above mentioned instructions prejudicial error justifying a reversal of the judgment in favor of the defendant if the instructions were given at his request. On the other hand, where the evidence of defendant's negligence is weak and there is substantial evidence in support of the defense of contributory negligence, I would be disposed to hold the giving of the questioned instructions not necessarily prejudicial.

The foregoing reasoning leads me to the conclusion that in cases where plaintiff has made out a case under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur and offers appropriate instructions applying this doctrine, it would be prejudicial error for the court to give either of the above mentioned questionable instructions at the request of defendant. I am likewise of the opinion that where the evidence makes out a case under the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur as a matter of law, such as Jensen v. Minard, 44 Cal.2d 325, 282 P.2d 7; Danner v. Atkins, 47 Cal. 2d 327, 303 P.2d 724; and Barrera v. De La Torre, 48 Cal.2d 166, 308 P.2d 724, it would be prejudicial error to give either of the above questioned instructions even in the absence of the offer by plaintiff of res ipsa loquitur instructions on his behalf.

In the case at bar no instructions applying the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur were offered by plaintiff and in my opinion the record does not disclose a case giving rise to this doctrine as a matter of law. In the absence of proposed instructions by plaintiff applying the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur as to one or both of the defendants, it is obvious that no error can be predicated upon the failure of the court to submit the case to the jury under this doctrine, and we are not faced with the question as to whether or not it would have been error for the trial judge to refuse to instruct the jury under this doctrine if appropriate instructions applying this doctrine had been presented by plaintiff. I have heretofore given expression to the view that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur may be applicable to many cases involving collisions between two or more automobiles or an accident in which only one automobile is involved (see, dissenting opinions in Danner v. Atkins, 47 Cal.2d 327, 334, 303 P.2d 724; Barrera v. De La Torre, 48 Cal.2d 166, 173, 308 P.2d 724), and I am in full accord with the views expressed by this court in Godfrey v. Brown, 220 Cal. 57, 29 P.2d 165, 93 A.L.R. 1092, and with the statement of Dean Prosser in the second edition of his work on torts, on pages 207 to 209, and the discussion in The Law of Torts by Harper and James (1956), pages 1090 to 1092, and I am unwilling to join with the majority in restricting the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur to the very limited field in which it has been applied by the majority of this court in recent decisions (Danner v. Atkins, supra, 47 Cal.2d 327, 303 P.2d 724; Barrera v. De La Torre, supra, 48 Cal.2d 166, 308 P.2d 724).

It is perfectly obvious to me that in a case where the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is applicable, and instructions applying this doctrine are given, the giving of either of the above questionable instructions creates a patent conflict, as the court in one breath tells the jury that the mere happening of the accident gives rise to an inference of negligence, and in the next, that it does not. I can see no merit whatsoever in the specious reasoning of Mr. Justice SCHAUER on this subject, as everyone familiar with the trial of a law suit knows that when instructions are given to a jury, sufficient evidence has been introduced to establish the fact that the accident was the result of the negligence of someone connected with the case, or the issue of negligence would not be submitted to the jury. If the case were tried in a vacuum and there was no evidence as to how the accident happened or from which inferences or presumptions could be drawn, the abstract reasoning of Mr. Justice SCHAUER might come into play, but it can have no place in the trial forum where there is direct or indirect evidence as to how the accident happened.

For the reason above stated, that it does not appear as a matter of law that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is applicable to the facts of this case and where no instruction applying this doctrine was offered by plaintiff, I am constrained to agree with the majority that the giving of the above quoted instruction, while error, was not prejudicial to the plaintiff.

SCHAUER, Justice (concurring and dissenting).

In this case the majority reach a correct judgment but, regrettably, their opinion contains unsound discussion which, coupled with what appears to be intended as directions to be followed by counsel and trial courts in the preparation of instructions, may well lead to confusion and error.

The trial court in this case had given the time-tried and rationally correct instruction that "The mere fact that an accident happened, considered alone, does not support an inference that some person, or any party to this action, was negligent." In criticism the majority declare: "The instruction told the jury that the mere fact that an accident happened does not support an inference that 'some person, or any party to this action,' was negligent." In view of the heretofore recognized elements of proof (in addition to the mere happening of an accident) essential to drawing of the res ipsa loquitur inference, is not the statement indisputably correct? But the majority continue: "It should have been worded so as not to deny the existence of a probability that someone was negligent but instead to state that no inference arises that both drivers were negligent or that a particular one was negligent to the exclusion of the other." It may be asked, wherein does the quoted instruction "deny the existence of a probability that someone was negligent"? And is it not a startling thesis that the instruction should "instead * * * state that no inference arises that both drivers were negligent or that a particular one was negligent to the exclusion of the other"? Such a factual statement by a trial judge would clearly constitute an invasion of the jury's province. And the majority continue: "However, since plaintiff did not request an instruction which would have apprised the court that he was relying on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, we cannot say that the judgment here should be reversed because of the failure of the trial court to use words in the challenged instruction which would have avoided conveying the idea that there was no probability of negligence on the part of at least one of the drivers." I read and re-read the "challenged instruction" in vain for "words * * * conveying the idea that there was no probability of negligence on the part of at least one of the drivers." This instruction does not deal with "probability of negligence"; it is, rather, explanative and cautionary, in a purely abstract way, as to the elements of proof essential to the drawing of an inference.

If in addition to "the mere happening of an accident" there is evidence tending to show that a defendant had some substantial connection with the cause of the accident, and if there is also evidence showing the circumstances of the accident and those circumstances reasonably warrant an inference that the accident would not ordinarily or probably have happened in the absence of negligence by the defendant, then manifestly an inference may be drawn against him, and the jury may be so told. But obviously there is absolutely nothing in the challenged instruction which suggests the contrary. That instruction merely guards against drawing the inference upon proof of the "mere happening of an accident, without more." Application of the rule must depend upon what facts are found. Where the evidence admits of different findings, all potentially appropriate rules should be stated to the jury.

I concur in the majority's holding that "res ipsa loquitur * * * cannot serve as a means of establishing intoxication or wilful misconduct," and also in the judgment of affirmance.

McCOMB, J., concurs.

50 Cal.2d 153

Ernest SHAW, Respondent,

v.

PACIFIC GREYHOUND LINES (a Corporation), Appellant.

L. A. 24748.

Supreme Court of California, In Bank.

March 28, 1958.

Rehearing Denied April 23, 1958.

Action for injuries sustained by passenger when bus of defendant allegedly made a suddent slowdown or stop. Judgment for defendant in the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Caryl M. Sheldon, J., and a new trial was granted and the defendant appeals. The Supreme Court, Gibson, C. J., held new trial was properly granted for an instruction, that the mere fact that an accident happened, considered alone, did not support an inference that some party was negligent.

Affirmed.

Schauer and McComb, JJ., dissented.

Opinion 314 P.2d 167, vacated.

1. Carriers ⇐321(21)

In action by passenger against carrier for injuries allegedly sustained when bus made a sudden slowdown or stop, instructing that mere fact that an accident happened, considered alone, does not support an inference that some party was negligent, is subject to objection that it contains an idea which may be understood by a layman to be inconsistent with the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur," meaning that an inference arises from happening of an accident that the proximate cause of the occurrence was some negligent conduct by defendant.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Res Ipsa Loquitur".

2. Carriers ⇐321(23)

In action by passenger for injuries sustained when bus made a sudden slowdown, evidence that plaintiff was injured from such sudden slowdown and that no improper conduct by the plaintiff proximately contributed to his injuries, would entitle plaintiff, upon request, to instructions on doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.

3. Carriers ⇐316(3)

In action by passenger for injuries allegedly sustained when bus made a sudden slowdown, if plaintiff was intoxicated and because thereof, he fell and injured himself through no fault of the driver, injury would not result from negligent management of the bus, and plaintiff would not be entitled to inference afforded by application of res ipsa loquitur.

4. Trial ⇐261

A trial judge is not required to correct a requested instruction which is incomplete or erroneous.

5. Trial ⇐261

Where instruction tended by plaintiff on doctrine of res ipsa loquitur was incomplete in that plaintiff did not fill in the blank space after the word "namely", and also was defective because of plaintiff's failure to choose between alternatives offered by certain words and to make appropriate deletions, court was not required to give the instruction.

6. Appeal and Error ⇐854(6), 977(1)

Determination of a motion for new trial rests so completely within court's discretion, that its action will not be disturbed, unless a manifest and unmistakable abuse thereof clearly appears, and order will be affirmed, if it may be sustained on any ground, although reviewing court might have ruled differently in the first instance.

7. Appeal and Error ⇐978(1)

Where the trial court grants a new trial for an erroneous instruction, if the instruction was erroneous in any degree, or even if it is only fairly debatable that such instruction may have been misleading, broad discretion of the trial court may not be disturbed.

8. New Trial ⇐39

In action by passenger for injuries sustained when bus made a sudden slowdown, trial court did not abuse its discretion in granting plaintiff a new trial, because it instructed that the mere fact that an accident happened, considered alone, did not support an inference that some person or any party to the action was negligent.

Moss, Lyon & Dunn, Gerold C. Dunn and Henry F. Walker, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Milan Medigovich, Los Angeles, for respondent.

GIBSON, Chief Justice.

Plaintiff, a passenger on one of defendant's buses, brought this action for injuries to his knee allegedly resulting from the negligence of the driver in suddenly reducing the speed of the bus. Pursuant to a verdict, judgment was rendered in favor of defendant. A new trial was granted upon the ground that there had been an error of law occurring at the trial. Defendant has appealed.

The testimony of plaintiff may be summarized as follows: He boarded the bus at Corona del Mar about 12:30 in the morning and sat in the second seat behind the driver. About 30 minutes later, while the bus was traveling at a speed of approximately 65 miles an hour, it suddenly slowed down as though there had been a severe application of the brakes. Plaintiff was thrown against the seat in front of him, and, as a result, his knee was injured. Before the bus reached the next stop, Doheny Palisades, plaintiff informed the driver that he had been injured by the movement of the bus and that he was in "terrific pain." At the Doheny Palisades stop plaintiff attempted to get up but was unable to do so. When the bus arrived in San Diego he was met by two claims adjusters for defendant who helped him off the bus and drove him to a hospital. X-rays were taken of his knee, and his leg was placed in a cast. Plaintiff said that several hours before he boarded the bus at Corona del Mar he had had four highballs, a full-course dinner, and an after-dinner drink, but that he did not become intoxicated.

The bus driver testified that plaintiff stumbled when he entered the bus at Corona del Mar and that there was an odor of alcohol on his breath. The driver said that he did not apply the brakes of the bus abruptly during the portion of the trip in question, that plaintiff first complained of his injury at the Doheny Palisades stop, and that plaintiff was then standing on the ground outside the bus, holding onto the door.

Other witnesses testified that plaintiff was intoxicated shortly before he got on the bus and that the brakes of the bus were not applied suddenly. According to a person employed by defendant who was present when plaintiff was questioned by a claims adjuster, plaintiff said that the bus was going from 35 to 40 miles an hour when he was hurt and that he first told the driver of his injury when the bus stopped at Doheny Palisades.

The jury was instructed: "The mere fact that an accident happened, considered alone, does not support an inference that some person, or any party to this action, was negligent."

[1] Although it is proper in many cases to give an instruction that the mere happening of an accident does not support an inference of negligence, a problem arises where, as here, there is evidence warranting the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur. It is apparent that an instruction like the one quoted above contains an idea which might be understood by a layman to be inconsistent with the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur. Brown v. George Pepperdine Foundation, 23 Cal.2d 256, 261–262, 143 P.2d 929; England v. Hospital of Good Samaritan, 22 Cal.App.2d 226, 230, 70 P.2d 692; Ellis v. Jewett, 18 Cal.App.2d 629, 634, 64 P.2d 432. The direction that the mere happening of an accident, considered alone, does not support an inference of negligence would appear to contradict the usual statement of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur as found in the typical instructions given on the subject, namely, that an inference arises from the happening of the accident that the proximate cause of the occurrence was some negligent conduct on the part of the defendant. In the absence of a proper explanation of the relationship between the two instructions, the words "mere" and "considered alone" might not prevent laymen from erroneously concluding that under no view of the evidence could an inference of negligence be drawn from the happening of the accident. And it has been held that where both instructions were given without explanation, an order granting a new trial should be affirmed. (Brown v. George Pepperdine Foundation, 23 Cal.2d 256, 261–262, 143 P.2d 929; England v. Hospital of Good Samaritan, 22 Cal.App.2d 226, 230, 70 P.2d 692; Ellis v. Jewett, 18 Cal.App.2d 629, 634, 64 P.2d 432.

In Jensen v. Minard, 44 Cal.2d 325, 329, 282 P.2d 7, it was held that the giving of the mere happening of an accident instruction was prejudicial error where it had been conceded by the parties that defendant had fired a bullet which killed a child. It was pointed out that, in view of the concession, the instruction in effect told the jury that the fact that the child was killed by the defendant's act afforded no evidence of negligence. The opinion then stated that, even though instructions on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur were not requested, the jury should not have been foreclosed from considering the evidence provided by the happening of the accident itself.

[2, 3] Plaintiff's testimony in the present case would support findings that he was injured when he was riding as a passenger on defendant's bus, that the injury resulted from a sudden slowing of the vehicle due to a severe application of the brakes, and that no improper conduct by plaintiff proximately contributed to his injuries. This evidence entitled plaintiff, upon request, to instructions on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur. Hardin v. San Jose City Lines, Inc., 41 Cal.2d 432, 435 et seq., 260 P.2d 63; St. Clair v. McAlister, 216 Cal. 95, 97 et seq., 13 P.2d 924. On the other hand, the jury could reasonably have found from the evidence that the bus did not slow down suddenly, that plaintiff was intoxicated and that, because of his condition, he fell and injured himself through no fault of the driver. Under this view of the evidence, the injury did not, as plaintiff claimed, result from the negligent operation or management of the vehicle, and he was not entitled to the inference afforded by the application of res ipsa loquitur. See Hardin v. San Jose City Lines, Inc., 41 Cal.2d 432, 435–437, 260 P.2d 63; Mudrick v. Market Street Ry. Co., 11 Cal.2d 724, 731, 81 P.2d 950, 118 A.L.R. 533; Freitas v. Peerless Stages, Inc., 108 Cal.App.2d 749, 757, 239 P.2d 671, 33 A.L.R.2d 778. The doctrine was not, therefore, applicable as a matter of law, and this case does not come within the rule announced in Jensen v. Minard, 44 Cal.2d 325, 282 P.2d 7.

In Barrera v. De La Torre, 48 Cal.2d 166, 170 et seq., 308 P.2d 724, where, because of the factual situation, it did not appear that res ipsa loquitur was applicable as a matter of law and no instruction upon the doctrine was requested or given, the court in affirming a judgment for defendant held that it was not error to instruct the jury that the mere fact that an accident happened does not support an inference of negligence. As we have seen, however, where both the mere happening of the accident and the res ipsa loquitur instructions were given without explanation of the conflicting ideas contained in the two instructions, it has been held that the trial court was justified in granting a new trial. Brown v. George Pepperdine Foundation, 23 Cal.2d 256, 261–262, 143 P.2d 929; England v. Hospital of Good Samaritan, 22 Cal.App.2d 226, 230, 70 P.2d 692; Ellis v. Jewett, 18 Cal.App.2d 629, 634, 64 P.2d 432.

The following instruction on res ipsa loquitur offered by plaintiff was refused: "If, and only in the event, you should find that there was an accidental occurrence as claimed by the plaintiff, namely: ———; and if you should find that from that accidental event, as a proximate result thereof, plaintiff has suffered injury, you are instructed as follows: an inference arises that the proximate cause of the occurrence in question was some negligent conduct on the part of the defendant. That inference is a form of evidence, and if there is none other tending to overthrow it, or if the inference preponderates over contrary evidence, it warrants a verdict for the plaintiff. Therefore, you should weigh any evidence tending to overcome that inference, bearing in mind that it is incumbent upon the defendant to rebut the inference by showing that he (it) did, in fact, exercise ordinary (the utmost) care and diligence or that the accident occurred without being proximately caused by any failure of duty on his (its) part." (2 Cal.Jury Instns., Civ. (4th rev. ed. 1956) No. 206, pp. 636–637.)

[4, 5] The requested instruction was incomplete in that plaintiff did not fill in the blank space after the word "namely," and it was also defective because of plaintiff's failure to choose between the alternatives offered by the words appearing in parentheses and to make the appropriate deletions. A trial judge is not required to correct a requested instruction which is incomplete or erroneous. Tossman v. Newman, 37 Cal. 2d 522, 525, 233 P.2d 1; Davis v. Johnson, 128 Cal.App.2d 466, 473, 275 P.2d 563; Bertolozzi v. Progressive Concrete Co., 95 Cal.App.2d 332, 337–338, 212 P.2d 910.

Since it cannot be said as a matter of law that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is applicable here, and since the court was not required to give the inaccurate instruction offered by plaintiff and no instruction on the subject was given, we would probably have affirmed the judgment under the rule of Barrera v. De La Torre, 48 Cal.2d 166, 308 P.2d 724, had the court not granted the motion for a new trial. The question presented here, however, is whether the court under the circumstances abused its discretion in granting a new trial.

[6, 7] The determination of a motion for a new trial rests so completely within the court's discretion that its action will not be disturbed unless a manifest and unmistakable abuse of discretion clearly appears, and the order will be affirmed if it may be sustained on any ground, although the reviewing court might have ruled differently in the first instance. Brandelius v. City & County of San Francisco, 47 Cal. 2d 729, 733–734, 306 P.2d 432. In the Brandelius case it was stated that the granting of a new trial could be reversed "only if * * * the questioned instruction was absolutely accurate and under no reasonable interpretation could possibly have misled or confused the jury." 47 Cal. 2d at page 745, 306 P.2d at page 442. It has also been said that the power of the judge to do justice by ordering a new trial is not impaired even though the moving party is technically estopped to claim error or has waived his right to complain. See Hoel v. City of Los Angeles, 136 Cal. App.2d 295, 307, 288 P.2d 989; Conroy v. Perez, 64 Cal.App.2d 217, 226–227, 148 P.2d 680; Nieves v. Vigolino, 135 Cal.App. 763, 765, 27 P.2d 916. Of particular significance here is the statement made in a recent decision which sustained an order granting a new trial: "If the challenged instruction was erroneous in any degree, or even if it is only 'fairly debatable' that such instruction may have been misleading, the broad discretion of the trial court may not be disturbed * * *." Bolton v. Martin, 126 Cal.App.2d 178, 180, 271 P.2d 991, 992; see also Sloboden v. Time Oil Co., 131 Cal.

App.2d 557, 559, 281 P.2d 85; Balthrop v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 142 Cal.App. 2d 823, 826, 299 P.2d 341.

[8] The minor defects in the res ipsa loquitur instruction could have been easily cured by striking out the word "namely," eliminating the blank space, and choosing the alternatives which were obviously appropriate. The drawing of the inference afforded by the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur was of great importance to plaintiff's case, and, in view of all the circumstances, we cannot say that the trial court abused its broad discretionary powers in granting a new trial.

The order is affirmed.

SHENK, TRAYNOR and SPENCE, JJ., concur.

CARTER, Justice (concurring).

I concur in the judgment of affirmance. The instruction that "The mere fact that an accident happened, considered alone, does not support an inference that some person or any party to this action was negligent." was clearly erroneous (see, my concurring opinion, Phillips v. Noble, Cal.Sup., 323 P.2d 388). Since the trial court granted a new trial we are not here concerned with the question of prejudice. Bolton v. Martin, 126 Cal.App.2d 178, 271 P.2d 991; Sloboden v. Time Oil Co., 131 Cal.App.2d 557, 281 P.2d 85; Balthrop v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 142 Cal.App.2d 823, 299 P.2d 341.

In my opinion it was the obvious duty of the trial judge to make any corrections necessary in the proposed instruction on res ipsa loquitur and to give it to the jury. Because of the error committed in giving the instruction above quoted and in refusing to give an instruction on res ipsa loquitur, the order granting a new trial must be affirmed.

SCHAUER, Justice (dissenting).

I cannot agree with the majority's holding that it was error, and that the trial judge properly found it to be prejudicial error, to instruct the jury that "The mere fact that an accident happened, considered alone, does not support an inference that some person, or any party to this action, was negligent."

The fact that an accident happened considered with other circumstances may in the light of those circumstances support an inference of negligence. But the "mere fact that an accident happened, considered alone," cannot ever prove negligence of any person if for no other reason than that the narrow hypothesis of such statement excludes from its purely abstract concept evidence of any circumstance whatsoever indicative of the cause of the accident or showing the connection of any person with the accident either as causing it or being injured by it. Likewise, the "mere fact that an accident happened, considered alone," severs the hypothesis from the circumstance that an instrumentality may have been involved in the accident, and if an instrumentality was involved, it excludes the effect of proof that any person was in control, or responsible for management, control or condition, of such instrumentality. Manifestly, the "mere fact that an accident happened, considered alone," does not include consideration of a showing that the accident did not happen to a trespasser on private property, or that it did occur on a public highway, or to a passenger in a vehicle whether as a guest or a fare-paying patron of a common carrier, or of any other circumstance whatsoever.

The majority assert that "The direction that the mere happening of an accident, considered alone, does not support an inference of negligence would appear to contradict the usual statement of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur as found in the typical instructions given on the subject, namely, that an inference arises from the happening of the accident that the proximate cause of the occurrence was some negligent conduct on the part of the defendant. In the absence of a proper explanation of the relationship between the two instructions, the words 'mere' and 'considered alone' might not prevent laymen from erroneously concluding that under no view of the evidence could an inference of negligence be drawn from the happening of the accident."

The above quoted declaration appears to me to be unjustifiable. It appears to be more concerned with the interests of the claimant than with fairness of the trial. Heretofore the law has been that much more than the "mere happening of an accident, considered alone" must be shown to support an inference of negligence. Even the learned author of the majority opinion in this case has in the past recognized that there must be some rational basis of probability in fact for the inference of negligence and some factual showing of some connection through control, management or responsibility between the defendant and the instrumentality, if any, causing the injury to the plaintiff. (See e. g., Escola v. Coca Cola Bottling Co. (1944), 24 Cal.2d 453, 457 [1] et seq., 150 P.2d 436; Ybarra v. Spangard (1944), 25 Cal.2d 486, 489 [1], 154 P.2d 687, 162 A.L.R. 1258; Zentz v. Coca Cola Bottling Co. (1952), 39 Cal.2d 436, 440 et seq., 247 P.2d 344; Burr v. Sherwin Williams Co. (1954), 42 Cal.2d 682, 687 [2], 268 P.2d 1041.)

The language of the quoted instruction is clear and unless the law is to be materially changed to an extent not delimited by the majority it merely declares an uncontrovertible truth. The giving of it is simply an aid to the layman juror, designed to assist him in gaining a true and clear understanding of the law upon which liability of the defendant justifiably may be found; it tends to preclude him from being misled into believing that proof of an accident without more is proof of fault on the part of any person involved. It serves to make clear to the jurors that it is not the mere happening of the accident, but is in the circumstances causing it, that fault and liability may be found.

Our concern should be addressed to both parties, to the end that each may have justice under the law. It is especially important that the subject instruction be given whenever the res ipsa loquitur instruction is given, lest the jurors be misled as to the essentials for application of the latter doctrine. If the res ipsa doctrine is lawfully to be applicable in any case, then certainly much more must be proven, and necessarily must be considered in determining whether the defendant was negligent, than the "mere fact that an accident happened, considered alone." The issue to be resolved in such cases is not merely did an accident happen, but, rather, do the circumstances relative to the cause of the accident reasonably indicate that the defendant was negligent and that his fault was a proximate cause of the accident?

An enumeration of the elements essential to warrant invocation of the res ipsa doctrine in resolving the issue demonstrates that the instruction complained of here is in no way inconsistent with proper application of res ipsa when its elements are proven. To hold that it would be error in a res ipsa loquitur case to instruct that the "mere fact that an accident happened, considered alone, does not support an inference that * * * any party to this action, was negligent," is either to belie all other [1] supposed essential elements of res ipsa, or to conceal or de-emphasize and confound them to the bemuddlement of jurors. The innocent declaration of the subject instruction does nothing worse than tend to make the jurors understand that liability, if it exists, must be found in the cause, not the mere happening, of the accident.

I take further issue with the majority on the ground that their holding essentially implies that jurors are stupid, too stupid to understand the meaning of the simple words appearing in the criticized instruction, or to co-relate its concept to other instructions and the evidence. My observation of jurors in action supports a conclusion quite to the contrary. Certainly we must recognize that jurors are laymen, many of them unlearned in the law, and they are entitled to every help the court can give them. But it should not be presumed that they can understand all other instructions except the simple one quoted above. In my view the subject instruction would tend to clarify, not to confuse, the applicable law and, hence, to protect the jurors against inappropriate inferences based on the mere happening of the accident and without proof of all the elements prerequisite to the res ipsa loquitur inference.

1. Other than the "mere fact that an accident happened, considered alone."

The opinion of the majority here appears to be another considered step toward the goal forseen in the dissent in Butigan v. Yellow Cab Co., 1958, 49 Cal.2d 652, 320 P.2d 500.

For the reasons above stated I would reverse the order granting a new trial.

McCOMB, Justice, concurs.

Rehearing denied: SCHAUER, and McCOMB, JJ., dissenting.

50 Cal.2d 75

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Max OSSLO, Joseph McFaden, Arthur Meyer, Chester D. Hazel, Louis J. Cacio, Paul E. Dempster, Jerry L. Dimitratos and Charles A. Tucker, Defendants and Appellants.

Cr. 6127.

Supreme Court of California,
In Bank.

March 26, 1958.

Rehearing Denied April 23, 1958.

Writ of Certiorari Denied June 9, 1958.

See 78 S.Ct. 1152.

Prosecution for conspiracy to commit assault, and for assault by means of force likely to produce great bodily harm. The Superior Court, San Diego County, John J. Hewicker, J., entered judgment of conviction and defendants appealed. The Supreme Court, Schauer, J., held that an individual judge, as distinguished from a court, is not empowered to retain jurisdiction of a cause, and therefore, provisions of probation orders by which individual judge purported to retain jurisdiction of the cause would be stricken.

Orders granting probation modified and affirmed, judgments and order denying new trial affirmed.

Carter, J., Gibson, C. J., and Traynor, J., dissented.

Opinion, 310 P.2d 1020, vacated.

1. Criminal Law ⇐1159(2)

On appeal, a court will not attempt to determine the weight of the evidence, but will decide only whether upon the face of the evidence it can be held that sufficient facts could not have been found by the jury to warrant inference of guilt.

2. Criminal Law ⇐1160

It is the function of the jury in a criminal case in the first instance, and of the trial court after verdict, to determine what facts are established by the evidence, and before the verdict of the jury, which has been approved by the trial court, can be set aside on appeal upon the ground of insufficiency of the evidence, it must be made clearly to appear that on no hypothesis whatever is there sufficient substantial evidence to support the conclusion reached in the lower court.

3. Criminal Law ⇐1144(13), 1159(6)

The Supreme Court must assume in favor of the verdict the existence of every fact which the jury could have reasonably deduced from the evidence, and then determine whether such facts are sufficient to support the verdict, and if the circumstances reasonably justify the verdict of the jury, the opinion of the reviewing court that those circumstances might also reasonably be reconciled with the innocence of the defendant will not warrant interference with determination of guilt by the jury.

4. Assault and Battery ⇐92
Conspiracy ⇐47

Evidence sustained convictions for conspiracy to commit crime of assault, and for assault by means of force likely to produce great bodily injury. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 182, 245.

5. Criminal Law ⇐406(7)

Falsifications by a defendant in a criminal prosecution evidence consciousness of guilt and in view of fact they suggest no honest explanation for incriminating circumstances, constitute admissions of guilt.

6. Conspiracy ⇐45

In prosecution for conspiracy to commit crime of assault, trial court did not err in admitting evidence that members of a union to which certain defendants belonged participated in labor disputes to which such union was not a party, in view of fact such evidence tended to show that employment of such defendants by another union probably would result in acts of violence by such defendants.

7. Criminal Law ⇐1169(1)

In prosecution for conspiracy to commit crime of assault, and for assault, arising out of a union jurisdictional dispute, although evidence concerning fights, unconnected with union activities, involving two of the defendants was not admissible as tending to show characteristics of such defendants, its admission was harmless error in view of evidence that defendants participated in assault charged.

8. Criminal Law ⇐386

In prosecution for conspiracy to commit assault, arising out of a union jurisdictional dispute, evidence of telephone calls between defendants and members of their union organizations was admissible to show defendants' association.

9. Criminal Law ⇐1170(1)

In prosecution for conspiracy to commit assault, and for assault, arising out of a jurisdictional union dispute, although testimony of a defendant that he had been frightened by a group of people belonging to a rival union was relevant to show noncriminal purpose of employment of certain defendants, and should have been admitted, in light of other evidence of guilt, its exclusion was not prejudicial.

10. Conspiracy ⇐28

Conspiracy to commit assault charges a crime under the Penal Code. West's Ann. Pen.Code, § 182.

11. Jury ⇐131(17)

In prosecution for conspiracy to commit assault, and for assault, arising out of a jurisdictional union dispute, questions directed to prospective jurors during voir dire examination by prosecuting attorney, as to whether they did not believe that might makes right, or that a person because he is a member of a labor union deserves to get beat up once in a while, were not improper, in view of fact they were designed to elicit relevant information concerning prospective jurors' state of mind, and question as to whether such jurors knew a clerk was beaten was not improper in view of fact that such beating was indubitably established and concerned subject of the assault charge which jurors were being selected to try.

12. Criminal Law ⇐703

In prosecution for conspiracy to commit assault, and for assault, arising out of a jurisdictional union dispute, reference of prosecuting attorney to "goons" during his opening statement, was not improper, in the light of evidence developed by the prosecution.

13. Criminal Law ⇐722(2), 730(12)

In prosecution for conspiracy to commit assault, and for assault, arising out of a jurisdictional union dispute, where witness identified one of the defendants as "the second gentleman" action of prosecuting attorney in stating that he objected to the use of the word "gentleman" in reference to such defendant, while highly improper, would not be deemed prejudicial, in view of the fact trial judge immediately rebuked the prosecuting attorney and admonished the jury to disregard his remark.

14. Criminal Law ⇐720(7)

In prosecution for conspiracy to commit assault, and for assault, arising out of a jurisdictional union dispute, reference of prosecuting attorney to certain people as unindicted coconspirators, while unfair to such persons, was not prejudicial to defendants, and in view of fact it suggested view of evidence taken by prosecuting attorney, and view taken by jury, it would not be deemed to constitute misconduct.

15. Criminal Law ⇐730(7)

In prosecution for conspiracy to commit assault, and for assault, arising out of a jurisdictional union dispute, statement of prosecuting attorney in argument that a certain person was the finger man, would not be deemed prejudicial, even though there was no support for such statement in the evidence, in view of fact that trial judge promptly admonished the jury to remember the evidence, and to not take any inferences not supported by the evidence.

16. Criminal Law ⇐982

Where it was found that certain defendants were guilty of crimes growing out of union activities, condition of probation that such defendants could not hold any union position or receive remuneration from any union during probationary period was not improper.

17. Criminal Law ⇐982

The granting of probation is entirely within the sound discretion of the trial court, and a defendant has no right to probation, although he does have the right, if he feels that the terms of probation are more harsh than the sentence imposed by law, to refuse probation and undergo sentence.

18. Criminal Law ⇐982

An individual judge, as distinguished from a court, is not empowered to retain jurisdiction of a cause, and therefore provisions of probation orders by which an individual judge purported to retain jurisdiction of a cause would be stricken.

19. Criminal Law ⇐982

Rules of court which provide that post-trial proceedings in a cause shall be heard by the judge who tried the matter are entirely proper, but an individual judge cannot order that such proceedings must be heard by him.

20. Criminal Law ⇐632

The precedence to which criminal cases are entitled is not of such an absolute and overriding character that the system of having separate departments for civil and criminal matters must be abandoned.

21. Criminal Law ⇐632

In prosecution for conspiracy to commit assault, and for assault, record failed to establish there was an improper channeling to a particular judge of the case, as an individual, rather than as judge of the presiding criminal department, in view of fact trial was held in department where it had been from inception of case. West's Ann. Pen.Code, §§ 681a, 1050.

Aaron Sapiro, Charles M. Arak, Los Angeles, and Charles P. Scully, San Francisco, for appellants.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., and Norman H. Sokolow, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SCHAUER, Justice.

Defendants were charged with (count I) "Conspiracy to Commit the Crime of Assault (PC 182)" and (count II) "Assault by Means of Force Likely to Produce Great Bodily Injury (PC 245)." A jury found them guilty as charged. Imposition of sentence upon defendants Osslo, McFaden, and Meyer was suspended and they were granted probation. Judgments of conviction were entered against defendants Hazel, Cacio, Dempster, Dimitratos, and Tucker. Defendants' motion for new trial was denied. Defendants appeal, respectively, from the probation orders and judgments, and from the order denying their motion for new trial. They present a multifold attack upon the orders and judgments. Defendants urge that the evidence is insufficient; that there was prejudicial error in the admission and exclusion of evidence; that the charge of conspiracy to commit the crime of assault is not a charge of a crime known to the laws of this state; that there was prejudicial misconduct of the prosecuting attorney; that the punishment imposed upon defendants Osslo, McFaden and Meyer is improper and excessive; and that the case was erroneously channeled into a particular department of the superior court. For the reasons developed in the ensuing discussion we have concluded that these contentions are without substantial merit except that one of the terms, hereinafter described, of the orders granting probation to Osslo, McFaden, and Meyer is erroneous, and that the orders should be modified by striking out the erroneous provision.

The conduct and incidents involved in this prosecution arose out of a jurisdictional dispute in San Diego County between the local Butchers' Union and the local Retail Clerks' Union. Preceding this dispute members of the Clerks' Union employed in markets which stocked frozen and packaged dinners had handled the sale of such dinners. The Butchers' Union determined that its members rather than members of the Clerks' Union should have the handling of the frozen dinners which included a meat or poultry serving, and demanded that the markets govern their employes accordingly. The Butchers claimed "violation of contract" by the markets' permitting Clerks to continue handling the dinner items and called a strike at one of the markets.

The Clerks endeavored to have the dispute settled through legal proceedings. About October 5, 1955, the secretary-treasurer of the Clerks' local wrote "to the market operators informing them of the jurisdictional dispute and the stand the Clerks were taking." Representatives of the Butchers and the Clerks met a few days prior to October 12 (according to one witness, prior to October 8). The secretary-treasurer of the Clerks' local "made demand upon Mr. Osslo [who held various offices, hereinafter detailed, with the Butchers] to cause to have the merchandise in dispute at Ferguson's market, as an example, placed back under the jurisdiction of the Clerks, or our organization would take every legal means necessary to enforce the jurisdiction." (Italics added.) Osslo "pounded the table three times, stated he was boss of the West Coast and he would fight for jurisdiction."

On October 18, 1955, four days before the assault of which defendants stand convicted, the Clerks filed with the National Labor Relations Board a petition "for the purpose of having the Board determine who the jurisdiction belonged to."

In contrast to the efforts of the Clerks to settle the controversy by legal proceedings, and inferentially to carry out the declaration of Osslo that "he was boss of the West Coast and he would fight for jurisdiction," the Butchers, assertedly for the purpose of providing "observers" to accompany Butchers' representatives and assist in "inspecting" markets which were permitting, or suspected of permitting, grocery clerks to sell the packaged foods, imported defendants Hazel, Cacio, Dempster, Dimitratos, and Tucker, hereinafter sometimes called the sailor defendants, from San Francisco and started calling on the markets.[1] The hereinafter described brutal assault and battery upon Maurer, a business agent for the local Retail Clerks, followed.

[1–3] The evidence, pertinent portions of which are hereinafter summarized or quoted, is in some respects substantially conflicting, but in every respect is ample to support the verdicts. If the jury believed the prosecution witnesses and disbelieved the testimonies of those defendants who took the stand, they properly could have felt that the cumulative effect of the evidence was not only sufficient, but overwhelming. Study of the record constrains us to conclude that the latter view is correct. "The rule applicable where there is evidence, circumstantial or otherwise, that a crime has been committed and that the defendant was the perpetrator thereof, has been many times reiterated by the reviewing courts of this state as follows: The court on appeal 'will not attempt to determine the weight of the evidence, but will decide only whether upon the face of the evidence it can be held that sufficient facts could not have been found by the jury to warrant the inference of guilt. For it is the function of the jury in the first instance, and of the trial court after verdict, to determine what facts are established by the evidence, and before the verdict of the jury, which has been approved by the trial court, can be set aside on appeal upon the ground' of insufficiency of the evidence, 'it must be made clearly to appear that upon no hypothesis whatever is there sufficient substantial evidence to support the conclusion reached in the court below. * * * We must assume in favor of the verdict the existence of every fact which the jury could have reasonably deduced from the evidence, and then determine whether such facts are sufficient to support the verdict.' If the circumstances reasonably justify the verdict of the jury, the opinion of the reviewing court that those circumstances might also reasonably be reconciled with the innocence of the defendant will not warrant interference with the determination of the jury." (People v. Daugherty (1953), 40 Cal.2d 876, 885, 256 P.2d 911.)

1. The Clerks, too, had persons from elsewhere than San Diego assisting them in connection with the jurisdictional dispute, but they were members of the Retail Clerks' Union and they did not become involved in violence. "They accompanied the local business agents here on field trips to observe where the merchandise was located in the markets that was in dispute and to assist in making diagrams of the stores, also to assist the local men in getting petitions signed to submit to the National Labor Relations Board."

Defendants' contentions require a rather extensive review of the evidence in order that they may be viewed and resolved in fair perspective to the entire case.

[4] The Evidence. James Ray Jackson, a business agent for the Butchers, testified for the prosecution as a rather reluctant witness. His testimony, read as a whole, and in the light of the entire record, leads inevitably to the inference that the, sailor defendants, Dimitratos, Cacio Tucker, Dempster, and Hazel, who were neither members of the Butchers' Union nor residents of San Diego, were employed by the Butchers with the expectation that they would engage in acts of violence, although in terms Jackson insisted that they were employed merely as "observers." The substance of Jackson's testimony is as follows:

Jackson's duties as business manager were "to sign contracts, work on grievances, check violations," and "I do organizing * * * and any other work that is necessary to do." During the 18 years Jackson had been a member of the Butchers, defendant Osslo had been secretary-treasurer of the San Diego local to which Jackson belonged. Osslo was president of the Western Federation of Butchers, the affiliated butchers' unions of California, and a member of the board and executive committee of the International Butchers' Union at the time of the assault and battery (October 22, 1955). In June, 1956, Osslo was elected vice president of the International. Membership in the Butchers in the United States was about 300,000. Defendant McFaden had been a business agent of the San Diego local since 1941 and defendant Meyer had been a business agent since 1955.

About September 8, 1955, there was a strike of the Butchers at the Food Basket Market because of an asserted "violation of contract" in that certain prepared and packaged complete dinners included meat items and such packages were being handled by the Clerks in the grocery department rather than by the Butchers. As a result of the strike the Food Basket Market brought an injunction suit against the San Diego local of the Butchers. The court ordered that the disputed prepared dinners be taken off sale. It may be inferred that a purpose of the order was the prevention of the sort of violent altercation which, as hereinafter related, forms the basis of defendants' conviction of assault.

Concerning the relations between the Clerks and the Butchers at the time of the Food Basket strike, Jackson testified as follows:

"Q. Now at Food Basket, * * * did you talk with the Clerks representative while you were on strike at Food Basket, by any chance? A.

Yeah, I guess we did. General conversation. * * *

"Q. Let me ask you this: Were you present at any conferences at which any of the Clerks representatives discussed the Food Basket situation with Mr. Osslo? A. Sir, I had my foot broken the day before anything like that was discussed, I believe. * * *

"Q. Do you, of your own knowledge, know whether or not any discussions were held between Mr. Osslo and representatives of the Retail Clerks Union? A. When?

"Q. After and at about the time of the Food Basket incident. A. No, sir. * * * I don't know. * * *

"Q. Now when was the contract that was in effect at Food Basket up for renewal? A. November. * * *

"Q. Yes. Now what are your functions as a business agent; just what do you do? A. My duties are to get—to sign contracts, work on grievances, check violations. * * * I do organizing, work on grievances, sign contracts, and any other work that is necessary to do."

On October 12, 1955 (a Wednesday), the Clerks struck Ferguson's Market. Jackson and McFaden went to the market. Approximately 25 clerks were present, among them Mr. Montgomery, hereinafter mentioned as one who was attacked but succeeded in escaping serious injury in the subsequent assault of October 22, 1955. In addition to the members of the Butchers who worked at the market, defendant McFaden, and Jackson, two or three other members of the Butchers' Union were present. The Clerks "gave us [the Butchers] some pretty good looks." Jackson felt that these "looks" were threatening.

Discussions were had by the Butchers as to what they would do at stores where the Clerks walked out. Defendant Osslo was present at these discussions.

Sailors Dimitratos and Hazel arrived in San Diego by airline from San Francisco on Saturday, October 15, 1955. On the following Monday they met with defendants McFaden and Meyer and the witness Jackson. Defendant Osslo had previously stated that Harry Lundeberg "was sending a couple of fellows down to help us out, go with us, be our observers, and see that we weren't jumped from behind, or bothered." "[T]hey were to accompany us and work with us." There were older, unemployed members of the Butchers who could have acted as observers but they were not called upon to do so. The sailors "were going to observe and—

"Q. Observe what? A. Observe what was going on.

"Q. What were they to do after they observed what was going on? A. To protect us and see that nobody created any trouble or violence or anything of that sort."

The witness did not call the police for protection; he did not know whether anyone else had done so.

"Q. Were the men from San Francisco, the sailors, more proficient, to your knowledge, than the San Diego Police Department? A. Well, I don't know. Maybe they might be for labor work. They know what to look for.

"Q. You mean that they are experienced in this type of an action, or this matter? A. What action are you talking about, sir?

"Q. Well, in coming down and being observers. You mean they were more experienced in that line of work? A. I believe they would be.

"Q. Than a police officer might be? A. I believe they would be, yes.

"Q. In what respect would they be more proficient? A. They worked in labor for a good many years. That is their job, working as laboring people.

"Q. What are they going to observe? I am kind of interested in that.

What are they going to observe that an older dues paying member [of the Butchers] couldn't observe? A. They could observe what goes on.

"Q. I see. In other words, what that takes is a good pair of eyes? A. It takes a little brains, too.

"Q. Well, a man that has been a master craftsman and worked up to a head meat cutter would have those qualifications, wouldn't he? A. Some might. Most of them might.

"Q. What were they to do after they observed? Were they to make any reports? A. Yeah.

"Q. To whom were they to report? A. I guess they would make them to our Secretary?

"Q. Mr. Osslo? A. And to the Western Federation of Butchers or the State Federation of Labor. * * *

"Q. What are you looking for to observe? I am not clear on that or on these reports. Did they make any reports, let me ask you that? A. They reported on what they knew and saw.

"Q. They were oral reports, were they? A. Yes.

"Q. How often did they make the reports? A. I guess daily. * * *

"Q. What I am interested in, Mr. Jackson, is this: * * * why, if you are looking for just observers to go around and find out what is going on, didn't you give any preferential treatment to the local people in San Diego in other unions? A. Well, sir, not that I know of.

"Q. Here is what I want to know: why is the Sailors Union selected as the ones you are going to go to to get observers? A. Well, I would assume that the reason is—I don't know for sure—these fellows are out on a ship and they come back in and they have got time on their hands waiting around for another ship.

"Q. Did you check any other labor hiring halls here in town, the laborers union, the plasterers union, or— A. I didn't.

"Q. Do you know whether or not anybody else checked any of the other labor hiring halls locally to see if there were any people available that could be employed as observers? A. I don't know, sir.

"Q. To your knowledge was that done? A. No, sir."

"[W]e had told the other labor organizations in San Diego what was going on. Indirectly that is asking for help and aid. As far as specifically asking for the loaning of a man or two men or more, I don't know of that being done, sir."

"Q. What did Mr. Osslo say about the two men that were coming down, if anything? * * * A. He said they were coming down to go around with us. * * *

"Q. What did you do when you went around to these stores and what did they do to earn this $150.00 a week plus expenses [the amount which the sailors were paid by the Butchers]? A. They were with us. * * *

"Q. Tell me what the work was they were doing? A. Checked the markets.

"Q. What do you do when you check a market? How did they know about a violation? They are sailors, aren't they? A. They know what they are looking for.

"Q. What were they looking for? A. A violation of our contract in the meat department.

"Q. How did they know a violation of a contract if they just flew in from San Francisco and had a short meeting with you? Is it that easy that you can become a business agent? A. As I said before, * * * they were here to go with us, act as observers and to protect us in case there might be any violence. * * *

"Q. If there was a contract violation. How would they know what the contract was? A. We would have to tell them.

"Q. You would have to tell them what was in your contract? A. Point out the items, if there is a violation on the items.

"Q. These men are sailors and here is what I am confused about, and I would think an old timer in the meat business would have been important to you. What instructions did you give these men from San Francisco that made them proficient in a short period of time to be able to observe these contract violations, if there were any? A. The violations part of it wasn't necessarily their objective to observe. They were sent down here, or called down here, to protect us, as I said before, and see we weren't jumped from behind, or jumped at all.

"Q. And the services of the San Diego Police Department, which are free, weren't ever used in that respect? * * * A. I did not call the police department, no, sir. * * *

"Q. Were you in any way threatened? A. By certain gestures, yes, sir.

"Q. When were you threatened by certain gestures? A. At Tang's Market.

"Q. That is after Dimitratos and Hazel are with you, isn't it? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. I am talking about before, before these men are hired what gestures were made that caused you personally to feel that you had been threatened. A. The incident at Ferguson's. * * * I was in the alley between the truck and the building when several of them walked back. * * *

"Q. What did they do? A. Actually nothing but give us a good look. * * *

"Q. That scared you? A. It could have been a threatening look, yes, sir. * * *

"Q. Well, who did you report the threatening looks you got in the alley way at Ferguson's to? A. I believe they were all reported to each other, Brother Osslo, myself and Mack and Brother Meyer.

"Q. Did you ever report those threatening looks to the police department? A. I did not, no, sir.

"Q. As a matter of fact, you weren't even concerned with them, were you? A. Well, no, sir. * * * [After the question was read and reread] I was concerned. * * *

"Q. You didn't report it to the police? A. There is not much to report, sir."

"Q. * * * In the particular market how would they [Dimitratos and Hazel] know [which items were to be handled by the Butchers], just walking into the place? A. They wouldn't necessarily. They were with me or some of the rest of us. * * *".

McFaden arranged for hotel reservations for Dimitratos and Hazel and a few days later, when the additional three sailor defendants (Cacio, Tucker and Dempster) were imported from San Francisco, arranged for their reservations.

The sailor defendants each received $150 a week plus airline transportation, hotel accommodations and expenses from the Butchers. The salary of a beginning apprentice butcher was $72 a week. The "top rate" which a journeyman butcher was paid was $102 a week. A head meat cutter received $107 a week. Jackson, as business agent, received $140 a week.

Dimitratos and Hazel attended union meetings of the Butchers. Such meetings were not open to the public but "We have visitors. Anyone working for the organization is permitted," and frequently visitors not connected with the union were invited.

At Tang's (sometimes called Ming's) Market a representative of the Clerks assertedly threatened the witness Jackson by telling him that the Clerks "were taking everything that bleeds, all the red meat, everything. That is not only a threat to me, that is a threat on the organization, the way I took it. * * *

"Q. Did you report it to the police department? A. No, sir.

"Q. Did you report it to Mr. Osslo? A. Yes, sir. * * * I reported to McFaden and he, in turn, reported it, and Mr. Dimitratos and Mr. Hazel were there."

At Tang's Market one Butler, a Clerk, assertedly "displayed" a knife. Counsel asked:

"Q. Now was there any display of a knife? A. Yes, sir. * * *

"Q. And what was Butler doing with the knife? A. Playing with it, fumbling it, handling it * * * he [was] cleaning his fingernails with it * * *.

"Q. What did Butler do with the knife when you came over * * * and were introduced to him? A. He didn't have the knife in his hand at that time, sir."

He had been "say twelve to fifteen feet" away when the witness saw him with the knife. Mr. Anderson, another representative of the Clerks, "came storming in," according to the testimony of Dimitratos; the bulge of a gun was visible "On his left arm pit up in the shoulder * * *. You could just about see the shape of it." But apparently no one claimed to have actually seen a gun. The testimony of Mr. Jackson continues:

"Q. Did Mr. Anderson threaten you at all? A. Only in a way that he carried himself.

"Q. How did he carry himself? A. Pushed his way through * * * the crowd, through the store.

"Q. Who did he push? A. He didn't push anyone. I say pushed his way through."

When Jackson's recollection was refreshed he admitted that he had testified before the grand jury that at Tang's no threats were made to him or in his presence.

After the incidents at Tang's Market, defendants Cacio, Tucker, and Dempster were also hired by the Butchers and brought from San Francisco to San Diego.

At about 11 o'clock on the morning of October 22 the five sailor defendants together with McFaden, Meyer, Jackson, and one Woodard, an International representative of the Butchers, went to Ferguson's Market. This was the first occasion that Cacio, Dempster, and Tucker went out with the Butchers. There was a slowdown in the meat department for about 40 minutes. Ferguson's was said to be "one of the sensitive points" in the jurisdictional dispute. The group of Butchers' representatives accompanied by their five sailor employes then went to two other markets, in each of which they remained only a few minutes. The sailors assertedly were present "as observers, witnesses, whatever you want to call it." The group returned to Ferguson's Market and "started a conversation" with one of the proprietors. Standing in the market were Montgomery and Maurer. The proprietor pointed out Montgomery and Maurer as Clerks.

The testimony of various witnesses as to how many of the sailors actively participated in the ensuing assault and battery is conflicting. However, the following direct evidence supports a determination that all five of the sailor defendants actively participated: These five defendants surrounded Clerks Montgomery and Maurer and some of the defendants stomped on Montgomery's and Maurer's feet. "Dimitratos and Hazel attempt[ed] to get Montgomery, but he * * * [though pursued] got away and they stepped right back out * * * Maurer couldn't get * * * past the customers because of a railing and a bunch of pushcarts * * * and he was being pursued * * * until two men got hold of him and held him * * *." Cacio struck Maurer in the stomach. Dempster and Tucker pinned Maurer's arms to his sides. "Dimitratos judo chopped him terribly, fifteen or twenty shots," and "Hazel was bombing in with his fists and with judo chops." Maurer was beaten and kicked. "[W]hen they let go and dropped him to the floor he was in kind of a hulk lying on his side. That is when Cacio used the boots on him. * * * Kicked him in the back twice and then he flopped over on his back and he was kicked, I think, right in the side terribly hard." The witness then "Checked to see if the police were called, checked to see if the ambulance had been called."

Defendants' argument that there is no "credible" evidence that Dempster, Dimitratos, and Hazel participated in the assault is obviously completely devoid of merit when presented to a reviewing court. Such argument goes to the weight of the evidence, and resolution of the conflicting evidence is for the trier of fact. (People v. Daugherty (1953), supra, 40 Cal.2d 876, 885, 256 P.2d 911).

McFaden, Meyer, Jackson, Woodard, and the five sailor defendants had gone to Ferguson's Market in two cars; some of the Butchers and some of the sailors were in each car. When they fled from the market after the assault and battery, the sailors left in one car and the Butchers left in the other car.

A cashier at the market had obtained the license number of the car in which the sailors fled. A boy also attempted to write down the license number but one of the defendants snatched it from the boy's hand. Police officers, immediately notified of the license number, stopped the car, arrested the sailors, took them to the police station, and questioned them.

Defendant Dempster stated to the police that although he had been at Ferguson's Market he knew nothing about a fight there. He also falsely denied that he had any connection with the Butchers. He stated that he had come from San Francisco on a vacation.

Defendant Tucker at first refused to answer police questions about whether he had been at Ferguson's Market. He stated that he had come to San Diego to do some drinking and to visit Tia Juana. In a subsequent conversation with the police Tucker stated that he had been at Ferguson's Market and that there had been a fight but denied that he or his friends were involved in the fight. He also falsely denied that the Butchers had hired him.

Defendant Dimitratos stated to the officers that he had come to San Diego for a vacation; that neither he nor the group he was with were involved in the fight to his knowledge. On the witness stand he admitted prior conviction of felony and that he made false statements to the officers.

Defendant Cacio told the officers that he had been drinking; that he vaguely remembered being hit or kicked, but that he did not remember hitting anyone. He denied knowing who Jackson and defendant McFaden were and also falsely denied that he was employed by the Butchers.

Defendant Hazel told the officers that he was in San Diego on a vacation and had no interest in unions; that he and defendant Dempster had gone into Ferguson's Market to buy cough drops; that he knew nothing of any fight; and that he did not know McFaden or Jackson.

On November 27, 1955, defendant Meyer told a police officer that he had not been at Ferguson's Market on October 22.

[5] The foregoing statements of defendants to the officers concerned matters which were within the defendants' own knowledge, they related materially to the issue of their guilt or innocence of the offenses of which they now stand convicted, and they were manifestly false through deliberate and willful intent. Such falsifications cogently evidence consciousness of guilt and suggest that there is no honest explanation for incriminating circumstances, and thus are admissions of guilt. (People v. Darrow (1931), 212 Cal. 167, 177 [1], 298 P. 1; People v. Tolson (1952), 109 Cal.App.2d 579, 581 [2], 241 P.2d 32; People v. Farrell (1951), 107 Cal.App.2d 25, 29 [2], 236 P.2d 424; see also People v. Wayne (1953), 41 Cal.2d 814, 822–823 [4, 5], 264 P.2d 547; concurring opinion of Mr. Justice Traynor in People v. Albertson (1944), 23 Cal.2d 550, 581–582, 145 P.2d 7.)

At the trial defendants Hazel, Dimitratos, Cacio, and Dempster testified. Defendants Osslo, McFaden, Meyer, and Tucker did not take the stand.

The Butchers paid bail bond fees of $4,500 for the sailor defendants. They paid $10,000 to a private investigator for an investigation of this matter.

It must be borne in mind that the jurors not only heard the evidence which has been summarized but also had the benefit of observing the defendants and the witnesses from day to day during the trial, and that the record shows the receipt in evidence of 59 exhibits. These exhibits include pictures of the scene of the assault, records of telephone calls among the defendants, and records of expenditures of the Butchers on behalf of and to the sailor defendants.

Defendants do not dispute that the overt acts charged in the conspiracy count of the indictment were proved.[2] But they urge that it does not appear that these overt acts were a part of a conspiracy. It is true that there is no direct evidence of a conspiracy; all the direct evidence bearing on the question is to the effect that the defendants who actually participated in the assault and battery had been instructed to avoid the use of violence. But "A conspiracy can generally be established only by circumstantial evidence. It is not often that the direct fact of a common unlawful design can be proved other than by the establishment of independent facts bearing on such design." (People v. Robinson (1954), 43 Cal.2d 132, 136 [1], 271 P.2d 865; People v. Steccone (1950), 36 Cal.2d 234, 237–238 [2, 3], 223 P.2d 17; cases collected in 5 McKinney's New Calif.Digest, Conspiracy, § 23.)

Undisputed evidence establishes the following facts: After the jurisdictional dispute between the Butchers and the Clerks began, and prior to the assault here, prosecution witness Jackson and defendants Osslo, McFaden, and Meyer, and representatives of the Butchers, met with representatives of the Clerks; Osslo said that the Butchers were going to "show" the Clerks; he said that he was "top man" on the west coast and "that was it." Anticipating violence—assertedly that representatives of the Butchers would be "jumped" by the Clerks—Osslo, through the Sailors Union of the Pacific, imported and employed the five sailor defendants, and defendants McFaden and Meyer assented to their employment. Dimitratos, Hazel, Tucker and Dempster had been members of the Sailors Union of the Pacific for a number of years, and Cacio, a Teamster, had sailed in the Merchant Marine. Members of the Sailors Union of the Pacific had participated in other labor disputes to which that union was not a party and had committed an assault and battery in connection with one such dispute.

2. Those acts are as follows:

No. 1. That defendant Osslo had a conversation with Harry Lundeberg on October 13, 1955.

No. 2. That Dimitratos and Hazel came to San Diego on October 15, 1955.

No. 3. That McFaden, at the request of Osslo, made reservations for three rooms about October 14.

No. 4. That McFaden, Dimitratos, and Hazel met on October 15.

No. 5. That Hazel and Dimitratos met at the Butchers' local on October 17.

No. 6. That Dimitratos, Hazel, Meyer and other representatives of the Butchers met at Tang's Market on October 18.

No. 7. That Dempster, Cacio, and Tucker met in San Diego on October 21.

No. 8. That Dempster, Cacio, Tucker, Dimitratos, and Hazel met in San Diego on October 21.

No. 9. That Dimitratos, Cacio, Tucker, Dempster, and Hazel accompanied McFaden and Meyer to Ferguson's Market on October 22.

No. 10. That Dempster, Cacio, Tucker, Dimitratos, and Hazel were in an automobile leased by the Butchers on October 22.

Nos. 11 through 15. That Osslo or McFaden agreed to pay each of the sailor defendants a weekly salary and expenses.

It is a reasonable inference that Osslo, McFaden, and Meyer, who had been actively and extensively engaged in union affairs, knew of such participation and assault and battery. Pretending concern for their own safety, but never asking police protection, Osslo, with the assent and aid of McFaden and Meyer, set up a situation which inferentially was designed to, and which clearly did, increase the likelihood of violence in the jurisdictional dispute. On a view of the evidence favorable to the prosecution, which the law at this stage of the proceeding requires of us, it is fairly inferrible that Osslo, McFaden, and Meyer at least tacitly understood, anticipated, and agreed that the remaining five defendants would not merely be present to act as "observers" and protect the Butchers from violence, but would and should initiate the violence, which they subsequently did initiate, to "show" the Clerks that Osslo indeed "was boss of the West Coast and he would fight for jurisdiction" and "that was it."

[6] Admission and Rejection of Evidence. Defendants urge that it was prejudicial error to admit evidence that members of the Sailors Union of the Pacific participated in other labor disputes to which that union was not a party, and that some of such members (not the defendants here) were guilty of assault and battery in connection with their participation in such a dispute. This evidence, in the light of the other circumstances, including the prior activities of Osslo, McFaden, and Meyer, was properly admitted as tending to show that the last named defendants contemplated that the employment of the sailor defendants probably would result in acts of violence by the latter defendants.

[7] Evidence was received concerning fights, unconnected with union activities, in 1951 involving Dimitratos and in 1952 involving Dimitratos and Dempster. The evidence was expressly received as to the conspiracy charge only. The trial judge so instructed the jury at the time it was admitted. He further then instructed them that if they believed the evidence "it would only tend to show the characteristics of a particular defendant in this case, and if that characteristic goes to the offense and if a conspiracy is shown, it would be binding on all the defendants so far as the conspiracy count is concerned." The theory on which this evidence was received is erroneous. That Osslo, with McFaden and Meyer, employed persons who had previously participated in fights unconnected with union activity does not tend to show that those persons were hired with the expectation that they would commit assaults connected with union activity, for there is no showing that Osslo, McFaden, or Meyer knew of the 1951 and 1952 altercations. However, in view of the ample evidence that Dimitratos and Dempster participated in the assault and battery here material, and in the light of the circumstances surrounding their importation and employment, it does not appear that the jury could have been misled by evidence that they had been involved in other altercations.

[8] Defendants complain of the admission of evidence of many telephone calls between the defendants and other members of their organizations. This evidence was properly received to show defendants' association; that that association was criminal is shown by the other evidence, viewed as a whole.

Defendants complain of the admission in evidence of the testimony of a police officer concerning the arrest of Clerks Anderson and Weathers on November 1, 1955, after the assault of which defendants were convicted. This testimony was as follows: Defendant Osslo told the officer that his life had been threatened by Anderson. The officer located Anderson and Weathers was with him. At the officer's request Anderson and Weathers accompanied the officer to the police station. The district attorney, after deputies examined an affidavit furnished by the Butchers on which their charge was based, refused to take action in the matter. The city prosecutor filed charges against Anderson, but they were dismissed. This testimony tends to show that defendant Osslo, after the assault, attempted to harass the Clerks by unsubstantiated accusations and to distract emphasis from the charges against him by countercharges; it was thus admissible as tending to show that Osslo was a conspirator carrying on an effort to make good his declaration that he "was boss of the West Coast and he would fight for jurisdiction," and not, as he argues, the innocent employer of persons who were to act as "observers" or at the most to show the Clerks that the Butchers were protected, without the exercise of force.

[9] Defendants complain that the trial judge refused to permit Jackson to testify that on October 13, 1955, defendant McFaden reported to Jackson and defendant Osslo that he had been frightened by a group of Clerks at Ferguson's Market. This testimony was relevant to the purpose of the employment of the sailor defendants and should have been admitted, but in the light of the entire record its exclusion certainly did not prejudice defendants.

[10] The Crime of Conspiracy to Commit Assault. Defendants urge that the charge of "Conspiracy to Commit the Crime of Assault (PC 182)" is not a charge of a crime under the laws of this state because no statute prescribes a punishment for such a crime. Section 182 of the Penal Code provides in material part:

"If two or more persons conspire:

"1. To commit any crime. [Subdivisions 2 through 6 enumerate specified objects of criminal conspiracy.] * * *

"They are punishable as follows: [The next three paragraphs prescribe the punishment for conspiracy to commit crimes against certain officials, for conspiracy to commit any other felony, and for conspiracy to commit two or more felonies which have different punishments.] * * *

"When they conspire to do any of the other acts described in this section they shall be punishable by imprisonment in the county jail for not more than one year, or in the state prison for not more than three years, or by a fine not exceeding five thousand dollars ($5,000) or both."

According to defendants, conspiracy to commit a misdemeanor assault is not one of the acts "described in this section." But, as defendants concede, it was held in Doble v. Superior Court (1925), 197 Cal. 556, 565 [2], 241 P. 852 (where the question was whether section 182 of the Penal Code provided punishment for a conspiracy to violate the Corporate Securities Act), that "it was the legislative intention that the words 'any crime' should include all crimes—whether felonies or misdemeanors—which are known to the laws of this state and whether defined and made punishable by the Penal Code or by any other law or statute of this state," and (page 566 [5] of 197 Cal., page 856 of 241 P.) "the words 'any of the other acts described in this section' were meant to, and do in fact, include all other conspiracies to commit crimes or acts prohibited by the section [182] regardless of whether they are denounced by subdivision 1 or any other subdivision thereof." We conclude that the Doble case is applicable here.

Misconduct of the District Attorney. Certain specifications of misconduct of the prosecuting attorney, hereinafter discussed, present the most nearly substantial basis for attacking the verdicts, but the evidence so overwhelmingly supports the implied findings that it does not appear reasonable to believe that the misconduct was a contributing factor in the jury's arriving at such verdicts.

Defendants complain of a press release of the prosecuting attorney which was published before trial. This press release stated that the defendants were attempting to delay trial. In this connection the record indicates that on the day the case was to have gone to trial in the regular criminal department (Department 4), that department was engaged in a trial. The presiding judge in Department 2 was willing to select a jury to be used for actual trial in Department 4 and for that purpose the case was transferred from Department 4 to Department 2. Defense counsel announced defendants' willingness to be tried in Department 2, either with or without a jury, but objected to having a jury selected by one judge and then having the actual trial proceed before another judge. The case was thereafter continued in Department 2 from time to time for a week until Department 4 was available for selection of the jury and further trial. The press release to the effect that defendants were attempting to delay the trial appears unfair; defendants were merely objecting, as they had a right to do, regardless of whether their objection was or was not meritorious, to the procedure (described by the presiding judge as "standard procedure in this County") of having a jury selected by one judge and the actual trial conducted by another judge. However, it does not appear that the newspaper statement prejudiced defendants in the eyes of the jury which tried their case. The trial judge, in accord with the request of defendants' counsel, specifically admonished the jurors to pay no attention to this article and generally admonished them to pay no attention to newspaper articles.

[11] During the voir dire examination of the prospective jurors the prosecuting attorney asked such questions as, "You don't believe that might makes right?," "And do you feel that a person, because he is a member of a labor union, deserves to get beat up once in a while?," and "You wouldn't permit sympathy or the feeling to 'let's give him another chance' to influence your decision in this matter?" These questions, of which defendants complain, were not improper; they were designed to elicit relevant information concerning the prospective jurors' state of mind. The question, "You know a clerk was beaten?," of which defendants complain, was not in the circumstances improper and certainly could not be prejudicial; the fact was indubitably established and it concerned the very subject of the assault charge which the jurors were being selected to try. Other questions complained of by defendants need not here be quoted; they were either proper or not prejudicial.

Complaint is made of the following matters in the prosecuting attorney's opening statement: The prosecuting attorney said, "Mr. Max J. Osslo was a member of the 1955 Grand Jury that returned the indictment." Defense counsel, moving to strike the statement, said, "Although everybody knows that, it is incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial." In view of the concession that "everybody knows that" it does not appear that the mention of the fact before the jury could have prejudiced defendants.

[12] The prosecuting attorney stated at some length details concerning the secretary-treasurer of another Butchers' local being "worried about Osslo and worried about goons." Evidence concerning this matter was subsequently excluded. It does not appear that the reference to the matter could have prejudiced defendants. This and other references to "goons" by the prosecuting attorney were no more improper, in the light of the evidence developed by the prosecution, than would be a reference to "thieves" in a case in which defendants were on trial for larceny.

The trial judge instructed the jury before the taking of evidence began, as well as at the close of the case. In the course of his preliminary instruction he commenced to read an instruction concerning assault with a deadly weapon which the prosecuting attorney had incorrectly included in his requested instructions. The judge immediately stopped reading and asked the prosecuting attorney if it was his contention that a deadly weapon was used. The attorney answered, "No. By means of force," but then said, "A prize fighter is a weapon?" This remark or query was improper, as was the request for an instruction concerning assault with a deadly weapon. But these incidents, not persisted in before the jury, do not appear to have been prejudicial.

Defendants complain that during the course of trial the prosecution brought into the courtroom and the sight of the jury a board on which were pictures referred to by counsel as "rogue's gallery" photographs of the defendants, made at the time of their arrest. The court declined to permit the use of these photographs in evidence. It is defendants' position that the prosecution, knowing that the photographs were improper, brought them into the courtroom in a manner such that the jury saw them and were prejudiced. The record does not disclose that the jury saw these photographs clearly or at length, but only that there was a dispute between prosecution and defense counsel as to whether they could readily have been seen by the jury. In the circumstances, even assuming that the jury did see the photographs, it is not shown that defendants were harmed. The jury were clearly and repeatedly instructed that they must determine the facts from the evidence produced in court, and that they must not consider any offer of evidence which was rejected by the court.

Objection was made and sustained to two questions of the prosecution as to whether Mr. Lundeberg supplied "strong arm men" for use in labor disputes. The use of the term "strong arm men," in the light of the evidence of circumstances under which the sailor defendants were employed by the Butchers, appears more realistic than prejudicial. In a pre-trial statement of defendant Osslo in connection with his motion to quash the indictment it is admitted that "Osslo turned to Harry Lundeberg for help. This procedure in labor circles is not considered unusual. The mere presence of some formidable appearing men to accompany his business representatives he felt both would 'offset the pressure' and reduce the possibility of 'designs of injury.'"

[13] A witness testified that a person whom she had seen at the time of the assault "is the second gentleman," indicating the defendant Cacio. The prosecuting attorney said, "I object to the use of the word 'gentleman.'" In contrast to what occurred in People v. Williams (1942), 55 Cal.App.2d 696, 700–702, 131 P.2d 851, the trial judge here immediately rebuked the prosecuting attorney and admonished the jury to disregard his remark. In the circumstances, the rebuke and admonishment appear sufficient to cure any harm which might have resulted from the prosecuting attorney's highly improper remark, and the Williams case is not authority to the contrary.

A police officer testified that he saw two of the sailor defendants in Osslo's office. The prosecuting attorney asked, "As a matter of fact, if you hadn't seen them in Osslo's office you would have run them out of town?" This question followed the officer's testimony that "I didn't like a couple of big, husky men walking around as bodyguards and gave the appearance of being toughs of the worst sort." Defense counsel objected that the prosecuting attorney's question was misconduct and the trial judge said, "That is uncalled for, Mr. O'Laughlin [the prosecuting attorney]. Don't repeat it. Proceed." It does not appear, in the light of the trial judge's rebuke, and of the facts that the jurors had ample opportunity to determine from personal observation whether the defendants were "big, husky men," and were admonished that they must decide the issues of fact on the evidence before them, not upon remarks of counsel, that the improper question was prejudicial.

The prosecuting attorney asked defendant Dimitratos, when Dimitratos was testifying, "As a matter of fact, any time Lundeberg gets in any type of dispute that he is out for a jurisdictional grab it is the old Communist slogan he uses—." Defense counsel interrupted with an objection and the trial judge sustained the objection and directed the jury to "disregard it." In the circumstances the interrupted, improper question does not appear to have been prejudicial.

Twice defense counsel objected to the prosecuting attorney's "yelling" at the defendant Cacio while Cacio was being cross-examined. On each occasion the trial judge replied that the prosecuting attorney could use any tone of voice which he wished to use. Although conceivably there could be circumstances under which the court's ruling might be questionable, it is not shown that the asserted "yelling" intimidated the witness or harmed defendants. Hence, we cannot determine that the ruling was either erroneous or prejudicial.

In closing argument the prosecuting attorney referred to a case in which "a man died in the gas chamber" because of a battery, assertedly similar to that administered to the clerk Maurer by the sailor defendants, which resulted in the death of a woman. The judge promptly admonished the prosecuting attorney to "Confine yourself to this case." It does not appear that the defendants were harmed by the reference to the homicide case.

[14] Defendants complain of the reference of the prosecuting attorney to Mr. Lundeberg and Mr. Jackson as "unindicted co-conspirators." The reference, although unfair to those gentlemen in the sense that they were not before the court and thus were not in a position to answer the charge, could not have been prejudicial to the defendants. It suggested only that entirely tenable view of the evidence which was taken by the prosecuting attorney and which we must presume was taken by the jury. Hence it did not constitute misconduct.

[15] The prosecuting attorney in argument stated, "Meyer is the finger man." We have discovered no evidence to this effect. It appears that any prejudicial effect of the reference was corrected by the trial judge's prompt admonition that "The jury will remember the evidence. * * * [I]f the evidence isn't there the inference isn't there and they will disregard it."

It is to be noted that the prosecuting attorney at the beginning of his argument said, "what I am about to say is not evidence and if, in any way your version of the evidence is different than mine, you please take your own version of it." And the judge clearly and repeatedly instructed the jury that they were to decide the case on the basis of the evidence and further clearly instructed them that arguments of counsel were not evidence.[3]

Defendants object to statements in argument of the prosecuting attorney that Mr. Lundeberg was "a bed fellow of Harry Bridges," that "It is two per cent his [Lundeberg's] fight against Communism and ninety eight per cent his grab for jurisdictional power," and other similar statements. These statements were made in reply to defense counsel's argument that "The Sailors Union was the only thing that stood between complete Communist control of the Maritime industry since 1935 and Harry Lundeberg personally was responsible for that on every occasion. He held that Sailors Union right and the Sailors Union had to fight in order to hold itself to keep from coming under the Bridges' control, as every other Maritime Union did." In the circumstances the statements of the prosecution were not prejudicial.

[16] The Conditions of Probation. Defendants argue that the conditions of probation exceeded the trial judge's power by reason of the provision that defendants Osslo, McFaden, and Meyer shall not, dur-

3. The judge told the jury, among other things, that "it is up to you to determine what the facts are from the evidence introduced at the trial. * * * You are to be governed solely by the evidence introduced in this trial and the law as stated to you by me. * * * [Y]ou must determine the facts from the evidence produced here in court," and "argument of counsel on both sides is not evidence. * * * Whatever they say about the evidence, if you find that to be true, why you follow it. If whatever either side said about the evidence doesn't correspond with your views as you heard the evidence as it came in, why you disregard any comments they made and follow the evidence as you see it."

ing the ten year probationary period, hold any union position or receive remuneration from any union. However, since it could be and presumably was found that these defendants are guilty of crimes growing out of union activities, it appears not improper that restrictions be placed upon such activities as a condition of probation.

[17] The granting of probation is entirely within the sound discretion of the trial court; a defendant has no right to probation; he does have the right, if he feels that the terms of probation are more harsh than the sentence imposed by law, to refuse probation and undergo such sentence. (People v. Frank (1949), 94 Cal. App.2d 740, 741–742, 211 P.2d 350.) In the Frank case the defendant, a pediatrician, was convicted of contributing to the delinquency of a minor by a lewd act committed on a child in a plaster cast. It was held proper that the terms of his probation include the requirement that defendant not practice medicine during the five years he was on probation. The court specifically rejected the argument, similar to the argument of defendants Osslo, McFaden, and Meyer here, that the condition of probation was unreasonable and beyond the power of the court.

Defendants are mistaken in their argument that the trial judge imposed on Osslo, McFaden, and Meyer county jail sentences and independently of such sentences granted periods of probation. Each probation order expressly suspends imposition of sentence and provides that probation is granted on the condition, among others, that defendant spend a designated number of months in the county jail.

[18, 19] It does not appear that the trial judge had power to impose the following terms in his probation orders: "that this Court and Judge shall retain jurisdiction of this matter throughout the said period of probation and no other department of the Court or other Judge shall modify this order without notice to the Judge who tried the case." An individual judge (as distinguished from a court) is not empowered to retain jurisdiction of a cause. The cause is before the court, not the individual judge of that court, and the jurisdiction which the judge exercises is the jurisdiction of the court, not of the judge. Rules of court which provide that post-trial proceedings in a cause shall be heard by the judge who tried the matter are entirely proper, but the individual judge cannot order that such proceedings must be heard by him.

The Asserted Channeling of the Case into a Particular Department. By stipulation this case was set for trial on July 9, 1956. All proceedings up to and including the making of the stipulation were had in Department 4 (Judge John A. Hewicker). The minutes of Department 4 show that on July 9 the cause was transferred to Department 2 (Presiding Judge Turrentine) for trial. Actually, the reporter's transcript shows, the transfer was for the purpose of selecting a jury only. The reporter's transcript further shows that, as already indicated, defense counsel refused to accede to the procedure of having a jury selected in Department 2 while the trial then pending in Department 4 was being completed and then having the cause transferred to Department 4 for completion of trial. Defense counsel moved that the cause be assigned to any available department for immediate trial. The court stated, "Motion granted, and the first court available will be Judge Hewicker, the regular criminal department. * * * [T]he case will be continued until two o'clock at which time the defendants, and all attorneys, and the jury is asked to return. If we are not ready then, why we will have to have continuances half a day at a time until we have a court available to try this case. I can't tell you exactly when that will be, but the case in Judge Hewicker's court may terminate at any moment * * * or it may take the rest of the week, but there is no alternative to that procedure * * *." Defense counsel objected to the continuance "on the ground that there are courts available and that there is going to be civil trial to be started in one of the Superior Courts this morning, and a criminal case has precedence over a criminal [sic] case." The court said, "Objection overruled."

The cause was continued two or three times each day until July 16 when selection of a jury began in Department 4 before Judge Hewicker. On numerous occasions defense counsel objected to the continuances, pointed out that civil cases were commenced in other departments and that a jury had been selected in another department to try a criminal case which was originally set for trial later than defendants' case, and urged that the continuances were "part of the plan to channel a case into a particular court."

Judge Turrentine, in overruling one of defense counsel's objections to a continuance, explained at some length the reasons for the continuances. He said that "the case was originally pending in that Department [4] and was to go to trial there and it was only sent to this Department by Judge Hewicker for the purpose of getting a jury to try the case. * * * [I]n view of the objection to me trying—to me selecting a jury the only thing that could logically happen would be that it would go back to the Department where it originated and should be because Department 4 is the Presiding Criminal Department, and I am complying with the suggestion and request of Judge Hewicker."

Judge Turrentine further stated that the selection of a jury by a department other than the one in which the case was to be tried "is almost routine in this County. So we assumed * * * that on July 9th we would proceed in this Department to select the jury in order to give you a speedy trial and this was done at the request and suggestion of Judge Hewicker. It necessitated a very considerable rearrangement of business in this County to do it. We have four regular judges either away or assigned to duty on the District Court of Appeal, and, of course, we have the rather long trial in Department 4 going on. It is our general policy in criminal cases to give preference to the trial of those criminals who are incarcerated in jail so if they are deprived of their liberty unlawfully they may have their day in court and get out in preference to those who have the financial means to make bail. * * * [Defendants were at liberty on bail.] If it were not for the fact that we had members of the San Diego County Bar who were willing to serve as Judges pro tem without compensation to themselves we would just simply be bogged down with nothing but a number of these short jury trials where the defendants are in jail awaiting trial."

The judge went on to explain the condition of the calendar in various departments, pointing out that a jury trial of a person confined as mentally ill was being had in one department, that the juvenile calendar was "very congested," and that "today we have three criminal trials going on out of five regular judges, one regular and two pro tems * * *."

Defendants contend that the continuance of the case after the date set for trial, when civil cases were being tried in other departments, was in violation of section 681a of the Penal Code ("The welfare of the people of the state of California requires that all proceedings in criminal cases shall be heard and determined at the earliest possible time. It shall be the duty of all courts and judicial officers and of all district attorneys to expedite the hearing and determination of all such cases and proceedings to the greatest degree that is consistent with the ends of justice") and the provision of section 1050 of that code that "Criminal cases shall be given precedence over all civil matters and proceedings."

[20, 21] It does not appear that the policy of sections 681a and 1050 was disregarded. Judge Turrentine's explanation of the condition of the calendar shows that defendants were not being deprived of precedence over civil cases for any arbitrary reason and that the continuances to enable trial in Department 4 were not made for the purpose of improperly channeling the case into that department. Rather, it appears that the orderly administration of a crowded calendar required the continuances to enable trial of the case in a proper department. The precedence to which criminal cases are entitled is not of such an absolute and overriding character that the system of having separate departments for civil and criminal matters must be abandoned. And certainly it does not appear, as defendants suggest, that the "channeling" of this cause to Department 4, where it had been from its inception, was an improper channeling to a particular judge as an individual rather than as the judge of the presiding criminal department.

For the reasons above stated, the provisions by which the individual judge purported to retain jurisdiction of the cause are stricken from the orders granting probation. In all other respects such orders, and the judgments and order denying a new trial, are affirmed.

SHENK, SPENCE, and McCOMB, JJ., concur.

CARTER, Justice.

I dissent.

This case demonstrates, more than any other which has come under my observation, the abuse of our conspiracy statute. While the statute has a salutary objective, it may become a weapon in the hands of an overzealous prosecutor to make felonies out of mere misdemeanors and thus inflict great injustice upon people who are entirely innocent of any crime, but who may have had some connection or association with a person who has committed a misdemeanor. Under the holding of the majority in this case, it would be possible to obtain a felony conviction against all five occupants of an automobile for illegal parking, a misdemeanor, for which the driver of the car was entirely responsible. Take the case where a city ordinance prohibits parking within ten feet of a fire plug—a car with five persons in it parks within the restricted zone. A police officer arrests all five occupants on the theory that the illegal parking was the result of an agreement between them—conspiracy to violate the parking ordinance. Under the majority holding here, the mere presence of the five in the automobile would give rise to a permissible inference of conspiracy to violate the parking ordinance and all five could be prosecuted and convicted of conspiracy which is a felony under section 182 of the Penal Code (People v. Malotte, 46 Cal.2d 59, 292 P.2d 517) and all five could be sentenced to a state prison even in the face of their uncontradicted testimony that none of them except the driver had anything to do or say about the parking of the car. Such an outrageous travesty would be no greater than the prosecution, verdicts, judgments, sentences and affirmance of the judgments in this case. The foregoing statement is based upon the undeniable fact that there is not one word of testimony or any evidence in the record in this case of any agreement or understanding between any of the defendants that any crime would be committed by any defendant or that any conspiracy existed between them to violate any law, and there is no basis whatever for an inference that such a conspiracy existed.

The majority has quoted extensively from the testimony of some of the witnesses, but in all of this testimony there is not even a suggestion that there was an agreement or understanding between the defendants that any of them would commit a crime or that there was a plan, design or scheme to violate any law in any respect whatsoever, and the majority opinion does not refer to any evidence in the record which even remotely gives rise to an inference that a conspiracy existed between the defendants to violate a law.

True, a misdemeanor may have been committed by one or more of the defendants, but it requires something more than legal reasoning or judicial interpretation to find evidence of a conspiracy between the defendants that any defendant should engage in the commission of an unlawful act.

The record shows that a jurisdictional dispute existed in San Diego County between the local butchers' union and the local retail clerks' union. The butchers' union was of the opinion that its members should handle certain merchandise such as frozen TV dinners rather than members of the clerks' union. Defendant Osslo was secretary-treasurer of the butchers' local, McFaden and Meyer were business agents for the same union. Four of the other five defendants were members of the Sailors Union of the Pacific and Cacio was a member of the Teamsters Union who had come from San Francisco to San Diego to accompany and protect the business agents of the butchers' local. The five defendants arrived in San Diego several days prior to October 22, 1955 and were in contact with Osslo, McFaden and Meyer; they attended a butchers' union meeting on October 21st. The record shows that these five defendants were paid weekly by the butchers.

The altercation out of which this case arose took place in Ferguson's Market in Chula Vista. The facts giving rise to the fight in which one Maurer, a retail clerk, was struck and injured are hotly disputed and present a very close question.

Defendants' major contentions are these:

(1) That there is no evidence that they conspired to commit assault;

(2) That the district attorney was guilty of prejudicial misconduct in numerous instances;

(3) That the court committed prejudicial error in the admission and exclusion of certain evidence;

(4) That the punishment imposed as to defendants Osslo, McFaden and Meyer is improper, excessive and unauthorized under the laws of the state and constitutes cruel and unusual punishment in violation of the Constitution.

The evidence, fairly stated, is as follows:

Early in September, 1955, there had been a strike of the butchers at the Food Basket Market in Pacific Beach which was authorized by Osslo, who was secretary-treasurer of the local union as well as the President of the Western Federation of Butchers, and the executive board. This strike arose over some 23 disputed items containing meat which were handled in the grocery department. After the strike in which about 20 persons were involved, the market brought an action for an injunction, and after the hearing the items were taken off sale. On October 13, 1955, there was a retail clerks' strike at Ferguson's Market and there were pickets carrying signs. Outside the market, there were about 25 persons including business agents for the clerks and butchers, as well as some butchers employed elsewhere. Defendants Osslo, McFaden and Meyer claim that they were threatened at this time by members of the clerks' union and that as a result Harry Lundeberg of the Sailors Union of the Pacific was contacted and requested to send some men to accompany them during their rounds of checking contracts to see that they were not jumped from behind or injured by members of the clerks' union. Defendants Dimitratos and Hazel arrived in San Diego and reported to McFaden and on October 19th accompanied Jackson (butchers' union) and Meyer to Tang's Market where they were, apparently, threatened by a member of the clerks' union who had a switch-blade knife and an outsider who had a gun. Osslo was contacted in Honolulu and advised Dimitratos to get some additional assistance which he did in the persons of Dempster, Cacio and Tucker.

On October 22nd, Osslo, McFaden and Meyer, accompanied by the five other defendants, visited several markets in San Diego. They arrived at Ferguson's Market at about 11 o'clock in the morning for the purpose of seeing one Linnville, partner and manager of the market. They were told to return at 1 o'clock. At 1 o'clock Dimitratos, Cacio, Hazel, Jackson, Meyer, Woodard, Dempster, Tucker and McFaden returned and went into the market. McFaden, Jackson and Meyer stayed near the entrance talking to Linnville; Hazel went to the back to talk to a young lady in the delicatessen department (the young lady testified that Hazel was with her at the time of the assault); Dimitratos went to the back and observed the meat department at the right; Tucker and Cacio, who had been to Tia Juana the night before and who had been drinking heavily, went in search of buttermilk and when they did not find it turned back and came across Maurer and Montgomery who were representatives of the Clerks from outside San Diego. Defendants claim that as Dempster walked past them, followed by Tucker and Cacio, Maurer put his foot out; that Dempster saw it and stepped over it, but that Tucker, thinking Maurer was trying to trip him, stepped on Maurer's foot; that Maurer struck at Tucker and missed and hit Cacio; and Cacio struck back at which time Maurer grabbed Cacio by the testicles and lifted him off the ground; that Tucker and Cacio then struck Maurer until he dropped Cacio and Maurer went down; that Cacio and Tucker thought Maurer was reaching for a gun and Tucker kicked him until he was knocked out. Dempster came back and caught Cacio who was in great pain. Montgomery had disappeared at the first sign of trouble.

Dempster took Cacio whose trousers were torn and who was in pain to one of the two cars. He then asked McFaden for the keys and Dimitratos, Hazel, Cacio and Dempster then drove off looking for the Ace Motel where they were staying. They lost their way and were picked up by the police who found that Cacio and Tucker had been drinking and noted Cacio's condition and that of Tucker's hands. Maurer arrived at the police station that afternoon and identified them.

A bakery clerk at the market said that Tucker, Cacio and Dempster were the ones responsible for the beating. Maurer's testimony implicated Dimitratos in the fight; and showed that he thought he had hit Cacio in the stomach; that up until the time he was called a foul name and had been hit he did nothing at all to provoke a fight; that he and Montgomery had been trying to leave the store when they were "surrounded" by men. An organizer for the Clerks testified that Dempster was also in the fight; that Dimitratos and Hazel attempted to "get" Montgomery by chasing him.

The record contains testimony from both members of the clerks' and butchers' unions who were working in the market. A member of the Butchers testified that Maurer was "looking for trouble" on the day in question. The Clerks, on the other hand, testified that Mauer was just standing and minding his own business. It is obvious from the record that the testimony from both sides of the controversy was diametrically opposed.

The police officers testified that they had been alerted by radio from the Chula Vista police department; that when they stopped the car, Cacio, Dempster, Dimitratos and Tucker got out; that Cacio and Tucker said that "someone" had been reaching for a gun; that Tucker's hand was red and swollen; that Cacio's trouser leg was torn in two places at the thigh and that the men had been drinking. Dempster stated to the police that he had come from San Francisco on a vacation with his friends Tucker and Cacio; that he knew Dimitratos was in San Diego; that he did not know anything about a fight; that he knew nothing about a dispute between the Butchers and Clerks; that he had not attended a union meeting and that he had nothing to do with the butchers' union. Tucker stated that he had come to San Diego with Cacio to do some drinking and visit Tia Juana; that he had not come with Dempster; that he had nothing to say about going to Ferguson's Market; that he had attended a union meeting; that he had heard about the jurisdictional dispute between the Butchers and Clerks. He denied any connection with the butchers' union; he denied that the butchers' union had hired him to come to San Diego. Dimitratos told the officers he had come to San Diego with Hazel for a vacation; that they were staying at the Grant Hotel; that he had spent time with his friend McFaden; that he had not, nor had his friends, been involved in the fight at Ferguson's Market. Cacio denied being employed by the butchers' union; or that he had any interest in, or knowledge of, the dispute between the Butchers and the Clerks. Hazel's answers to police questions were also confusing and inconsistent.

Meyer denied being at Ferguson's Market on the day of the fight.

The People allege the following overt acts with respect to the conspiracy to commit assault count:

(1) That Osslo had a conversation with Harry Lundeberg, on or about October 13, 1955, in San Diego;

(2) That Dimitratos and Hazel met in San Diego on or about October 15, 1955;

(3) That McFaden, at Osslo's request, made reservations for three rooms at the U. S. Grant Hotel in San Diego on or about October 14, 1955;

(4) That McFaden, Dimitratos and Hazel met at the U. S. Grant Hotel on or about October 15, 1955;

(5) That Dimitratos and Hazel met at Butchers' Local 229, 227 E. Street, San Diego, on or about October 17, 1955;

(6) That Dimitratos, Hazel and Meyer, and other representatives of butchers' local met at Tang's Market, 4508 Cass Street, San Diego on or about October 18, 1955;

(7) That Dempster, Cacio and Tucker met in San Diego, on or about October 21, 1955;

(8) That Dempster, Cacio, Tucker, Dimitratos and Hazel met at the Ace Motel, San Diego, on or about October 21, 1955;

(9) That Dempster, Cacio, Tucker, Dimitratos and Hazel accompanied McFaden and Meyer to Ferguson's Market in Chula Vista on or about October 22, 1955;

(10) That Dempster, Cacio, Tucker, Dimitratos and Hazel were in a certain Ford sedan leased by butchers' local in San Diego on October 22nd;

(11) That Osslo and/or McFaden agreed to pay Dimitratos his expenses and a weekly salary on or about October 15, 1955;

(12) (13) (14) (15) That there was a similar agreement with Hazel, Tucker, Dempster and Cacio.

The People argue that from the above alleged overt acts, a jury could reasonably infer that a conspiracy to commit assault existed between the defendants; that the jury could reasonably determine that Osslo, with the knowledge and approval of McFaden and Meyer procured the services of the five sailor defendants for the purpose of intimidating the Clerks "by their appearance and that if this was not sufficient, of perpetrating an assault upon a clerk who should happen into their proximity."

There is evidence in the record which tends to prove all of the alleged overt acts. As I read the record, however, there is no evidence (and the People point to none) that the fight was planned, or premeditated, or that any of the proved overt acts lead to that conclusion. Assuming that Cacio provoked the altercation and that Maurer did not (although the evidence is extremely close on that point) telephone calls between the defendants, payment of expenses, salaries, and the making of hotel reservations, do not lead to the conclusion that the defendants were engaged in a conspiracy to commit an assault. The People argue, by quoting from the remarks made by the trial court, that because the five defendants were furnished bail, counsel, and their salaries were paid after the assault, that the assault had been planned between all defendants prior to its commission. In People v. Williams, 30 Cal.App.2d 234, 85 P.2d 974, relied on by the People, there was direct evidence that a conspiracy existed to commit assault. The same is also true of the case of People v. Dail, 22 Cal.2d 642, 140 P.2d 828, relied upon by the People. It is my conclusion that the alleged and proved overt acts charged against these defendants do not support the judgment convicting them of conspiracy to commit assault.

Misconduct of District Attorney:

It is the defendants' contention that the district attorney engaged in a course of prejudicial misconduct during the course of the voir dire examination of prospective jurors, throughout the course of the trial, and during the arguments to the jury. Defendants cite numerous examples of misconduct, among which are the following:

On voir dire examination, prospective jurors were asked whether they felt that "any segment of our society should be immune from the law" or "should take the law unto themselves" and whether they felt that because a person was a "member of a labor union, [he] deserves to get beat up once in awhile"; whether (after the sustaining of an objection) the prospective juror felt that "might makes right"; whether because the Clerks and Butchers had settled their difficulties it would cause the prospective juror to adopt a "let's forget it" attitude; whether the prospective juror felt that "the community might have some interest in the matter"; whether the prospective juror had read "Victor Riesel's column 'Inside Labor' "; whether any of the people in the jury box had read the column; whether the prospective juror realized that every time the district attorney introduced a "bit of evidence in this case that in some way or other I am going to be prejudicing these defendants in your eyes"; that the juror realized "don't you, that we are not up here in a criminal department to elect Mr. San Diego"; that "if in the course of this trial and as you examine the facts surrounding the beating of the clerk in Chula Vista, if you become aroused, and as a public citizen as to what happened, will you try and remove that from your mind and just try the case on the evidence and the Court's instructions and use that to arrive at your conclusion"; whether the prospective juror had heard that Mr. Osslo was a member of the Grand Jury that indicted him. (An objection was sustained to the last question.) It should be here noted that defense counsel objected throughout the course of the questioning that the questions were argumentative; that the district attorney was attempting to prejudice the jury; that the questions were irrelevant and immaterial; that the questions were for the purpose of inflaming the minds of the jurors.

During the opening statement, the district attorney again referred to the fact that Osslo had been a member of the Grand Jury that indicted him and defense counsel's objection was overruled. The district attorney then stated that the evidence would show that "in the middle of October, 1955, another person was worried about Osslo and worried about goons." When defense counsel asked what the last word was, the district attorney replied: "Goons, Another man was worried about Osslo and about goons. G-o-o-n-s (spelling). That man is Mr. Herb De Motte. He is a Secretary-Treasurer of a Butchers Local in Wilmington." Defense counsel's objection was overruled and the district attorney then made a long and involved statement concerning the internal affairs of the butchers' union and the difficulties between De Motte and Osslo; that De Motte was afraid of "goons. He was afraid to hold meetings." The district attorney's statement was obviously an attempt to show that Osslo was a man to be feared because he would set "goons" upon any person with whom he disagreed. Defense counsel's objections were overruled and the district attorney told the jury that De Motte would testify as to his fear of "goons." The defendants were constantly referred to as "goons."

Prior to the taking of testimony, the trial court inadvertently started to instruct the jury concerning assault with a deadly weapon. When defense counsel objected that no use of a weapon had been charged and that the evidence would show that no weapon had been employed, the district attorney asked his co-counsel in the hearing of the jury: "A prize fighter is a weapon?" Also assigned as misconduct is the fact that before the court had ruled on the matter, and during a conference in chambers concerning the admissibility thereof, a board containing photographs of all the defendants, some of which were taken on the day they were arrested, was so carried and placed in the courtroom that it was visible to the jury.

During the course of the trial, a witness was asked if he knew that Harry Lundeberg supplied "strong arm men in the labor movement." When an objection was sustained, the district attorney again asked if the witness knew whether or not on any prior occasion Lundeberg sent strong arm men into jurisdictional disputes or disputes with management. When a witness referred to Cacio as the "second gentleman there * * *" the district attorney said, "I object to the use of the word 'gentleman.'" The district attorney also managed to get in evidence the general strike in Oakland in 1948, or 1949, the Wall Street strike in 1948, the Western Union strike in 1952, the United Financial Employees strike in 1948, in an attempt to show that Harry Lundeberg furnished "strong-arm" men from the Sailors of the Pacific to aid in the strikes. To all of this evidence, defense counsel's objections were overruled. The district attorney in his questioning referred to sending two sailors out to "bird dog Anderson" and to sending two sailors out "to finger Anderson." When Captain Roland, a police officer, testified that he "didn't like a couple of big, husky men walking around as bodyguards and [that they] gave the appearance of being toughs of the worst sort. I didn't like it, but it wasn't their physical appearance, other than they were big and husky," the district attorney asked him "As a matter of fact, if you hadn't seen them in Osslo's office you would have run them out of town?" In questioning the defendant Dimitratos, the district attorney asked: "As a matter of fact, any time Lundeberg gets in any type of dispute that he is out for a jurisdictional grab it is the old Communist slogan he uses. * * *"

During closing argument to the jury, the district attorney stated "Incidentally, let me say this: a man died in the gas chamber not too long ago for just this type of conduct. He beat a woman in the face and when she fell he kicked and killed her and he died for that." He also stated: "Incidentally, while mentioning him, let me say this: one or more of the jurors may say, 'Well, that Jackson was in this thing and he was at the scene and he did as much as some of the other people. Why isn't Jackson indicted? Why isn't Lundeberg indicted?' Those are unindicted co-conspirators. That shouldn't concern you here. In other words. * * *" After objection, the court stated that the district attorney's "remarks weren't directly in conformity with the Indictment. The indictment does not name them as unindicted co-conspirators, but if he feels under the evidence they are co-conspirators he may so state." After other objections, the court again stated that if the district attorney felt that "some of his witnesses were co-conspirators he may so tell the jury, if he bases it on the evidence." The district attorney also told the jury "You hear about the great man, Harry Lundeberg, that is clearing the waterfront of Communists. Let me say this: Harry Lundeberg, Barney Mayes and Harry Bridges were all bed fellows at one time. * * *" After being told by the court to proceed with his argument, the district attorney said: "The water tenders, the firemen and what have you is an independent union and Lundeberg, in his grab for power, has used that old slogan to grab these unions, so that is malarky when they try to inject Communism in this case. It has been something Lundeberg used to control the docks. It is two percent his fight against Communism and ninety eight per cent his grab for jurisdictional power. That is what it amounts to. So don't let them get you off base on this big man who, as I said, was a bed fellow of Harry Bridges back in the thirties. Bridges sponsored him to be head of the Maritime Federation of the Pacific." After the court told the district attorney to confine himself to the evidence, he said: "So that fellow Lundeberg, don't get any misconception about him. That fellow Lundeberg, where were the Communists on Wall Street when they had five hundred men—

"The Court: Mr. O'Laughlin, I kept that out of evidence.

"Mr. O'Laughlin: Well, where were the Communists in the Western Union strike? When old Thompson got beat up because he happened to cross a picket line? None of that at all. Lundeberg—and the reason we were bringing it in, counsel says what has Wall Street to do with it and the general strike in Oakland, or what has the Western Union strike to do with it. It shows a pattern that Lundeberg supplies the noise and the muscle. He can swing a jurisdictional dispute; he can swing an election. You and I might be members of a union and be sore at the particular administration and we might want it out for one reason or another, but if the pack that is in brings down the muscle, brings down some of Lundeberg's boys, we are going to be silenced because we are going to be afraid of our lives, afraid to open our mouths, because if we do we might get the treatment Maurer and Thompson got." When this was objected to by defense counsel as unsupported by the evidence and as improper and inflammatory, the court merely told the district attorney to "Proceed."

While numerous additional instances of the same type of conduct could be cited, it appears that the above is sufficient to show that the district attorney was guilty of prejudicial misconduct insofar as all of these defendants are concerned. As we said in People v. Dail, 22 Cal.2d 642, 650, 140 P.2d 828, 832, "It is also true, however, that in a close case where the evidence is sharply conflicting, substantial and serious errors vital to defendant that may have resulted in a miscarriage of justice must be regarded as prejudicial and grounds for reversal. People v. Silver, 16 Cal.2d 714, 723, 108 P.2d 4." In the case at bar, the district attorney managed to interject much immaterial and irrelevant matter concerning strikes, the use of pickets, and assaults in other strikes which could not have had any other effect than to prejudice these defendants who were not claimed to have taken part therein. Further, the numerous references to the defendants as "goons," "strong-arm" men, "muscle" men, and the objections to the term "gentleman" as applied to one of the defendants were highly inflammatory and prejudicial, as were the district attorney's references to Lundeberg as a former Communist. From the district attorney's comments, arguments and questions, it appears that the entire labor movement was on trial and that anyone connected therewith was suspect as a participant in the trial of this particular case. Such conduct is reprehensible and should not be condoned. In People v. Lyons, 47 Cal.2d 311, 318, 303 P.2d 329, 333, we said, quoting from Viereck v. United States, 318 U.S. 236, 248, 63 S.Ct. 561, 87 L.Ed. 734: "'The United States Attorney is the representative not of an ordinary party to a controversy, but of a sovereignty whose obligation to govern impartially is as compelling as its obligation to govern at all; and whose interest, therefore, in a criminal prosecution is not that it shall win a case, but that justice shall be done. As such, he is in a peculiar and very definite sense the servant of the law, the twofold aim of which is that guilt shall not escape or innocence suffer. He may prosecute with earnestness and vigor—indeed, he should do so. But, while he may strike hard blows, he is not at liberty to strike foul ones. It is as much his duty to refrain from improper methods calculated to produce a wrongful conviction as it is to use every legitimate means to bring about a just one.'" Here, as in People v. Teixeira, 136 Cal.App.2d 136, 288 P.2d 535, 542, "* * * it is hard to believe that this experienced prosecutor asked them [questions] in good faith and for any purpose other than to degrade defendants." In People v. Vienne, 142 Cal. App.2d 172, 297 P.2d 1027, it was held that the district attorney is bound to refrain from making inflammatory statements (see, also, People v. Wilkes, 44 Cal.2d 679, 284 P.2d 481); in People v. Henderson, 144 Cal. App.2d 706, 301 P.2d 468 (where the same district attorney was involved), it was held prejudicial and reversible error for the prosecutor to state or imply the existence of facts concerning which no evidence had been introduced.

Admission and Exclusion of Evidence:

It is first claimed by the defendants that the court erred in admitting the testimony of Captain Hodson. This testimony included the admission in evidence of part of the log book of the steamship Luckenbach concerning a fight in 1952 in which defendants Dimitratos and Dempster were involved. Defendants contend, and their counsel argued at the time the evidence was admitted that the evidence was immaterial, irrelevant, too remote from the San Diego incident, and that it was prejudicial error for the prosecution in the first instance to put in evidence the bad character of the defendants. The trial court also permitted the People to put in evidence testimony that defendant Dimitratos had been stabbed in a fight on board ship in 1951; and that Dempster and Hazel were in the same crew. In People v. Teixeira, 136 Cal.App.2d 136, 148, 288 P.2d 535; People v. Adams, 76 Cal.App. 178, 244 P. 106; People v. Nunley, 142 Cal. 441, 76 P. 45, it was held that such evidence was inadmissible as an attack on the character of the defendant by the prosecution and constituted prejudicial error. In People v. Lyons, 47 Cal.2d 311, 317, 303 P.2d 329, 332, where the prosecution alluded on the cross-examination of the defendant's wife to a prior conviction of defendant, we said: "It would be an impeachment of the legal learning of counsel for the People to intimate that he did not know the aforesaid questions to be improper, wholly unjustifiable and peculiarly calculated to prejudice the appellant before the jury." (Emphasis added.) See, also, People v. Hardy, 33 Cal.2d 52, 61, 198 P.2d 865; People v. McKelvey, 85 Cal. App. 769, 771, 260 P. 397.

The above evidence was held admissible by the trial court on the theory that a conspiracy had been charged even though the People did not contend that the conspiracy had dated back to 1951 and 1952. Defense counsel's motion to strike was denied by the trial court. From the trial court's remarks, it is obvious that the evidence was held admissible on the theory that a conspiracy presently existed between all defendants.

The evidence was inadmissible on any theory and its prejudicial effect is at once apparent.

The admission of evidence concerning the Wall Street strike, the general strike in Oakland and the Western Union strike has heretofore been commented upon in the discussion concerning the prejudicial misconduct of the district attorney. The trial court's statement that "The reason I let this testimony in was to show other instances where the members of the Sailors Union were used and what transpired, to show the demeanor of the sailors used on the picket lines. In this conspiracy count you are entitled to know all the surrounding circumstances of the people that were employed in the incident down here, if one happened," and the court's later admission that there was an entirely different group of sailors in San Diego, clearly show the error that was committed. The case at bar involved an assault and a conspiracy to commit an assault and the fact that other sailors were used in picket lines in other areas remote in place and time is completely immaterial and irrelevant and was highly prejudicial to the defendants in the case at bar. People v. Lyons, 47 Cal.2d 311, 303 P.2d 329; People v. Hardy, 33 Cal.2d 52, 61–62, 198 P.2d 865; People v. Wynn, 44 Cal.App.2d 723, 732–733, 112 P.2d 979; People v. Freitas, 34 Cal.App.2d 684, 687, 94 P.2d 397; People v. Stafford, 108 Cal.App. 26, 29–31, 290 P. 920.

Defendants contend that the court erred in excluding testimony offered by them to show that threats had been made against some of them which necessitated the request to Lundeberg for bodyguards to accompany the Butchers' business agents on their rounds. Inasmuch as the evidence is in sharp conflict as to which side started the fight, this testimony should have been admitted. If threats had been shown to have been made against the business agents of the Butchers by members of the clerks' union, the evidence would be admissible as tending to prove the defense theory that the five defendants were summoned to San Diego to act as bodyguards only and to disprove the People's theory that a conspiracy to commit assault existed between all eight of the defendants.

Punishment of Osslo, McFaden and Meyer as Improper, Excessive and Unlawful:

Osslo and McFaden were each fined $1,500 to be paid from their own funds; Meyer was fined $750 to be paid from his own funds.

Osslo and McFaden were ordered to serve six months in the county jail; Meyer was ordered to serve three months in the county jail.

These three defendants were placed on ten years' probation, during which time they could hold no union office and receive no salary for any union services, or participate in any union negotiations. In addition, these defendants were required to fill out an annual affidavit that the fine payments were made from their own funds and that they held no union office, etc., and "further, that this Court and Judge shall retain jurisdiction of this matter throughout the said period of probation and no other department of the Court or other Judge shall modify this order without notice to the Judge who tried the case. * * *"

Defendants argue that the terms of their probation cut off their ability to earn a livelihood; that said terms violate the principle back of probation which "is defined as an act of grace and clemency, which may be granted by the court to a seemingly deserving defendant, whereby he may escape the extreme rigors of the penalty imposed by law for the offense of which he stands convicted," (People v. Hainline, 219 Cal. 532, 534, 28 P.2d 16, 17; Lee v. Superior Court, 89 Cal.App.2d 716, 717, 201 P.2d 882) and that it violates the principle that the terms and conditions of probation must be reasonable under all the circumstances (In re Trombley, 31 Cal.2d 801, 811, 193 P.2d 734).

While these three defendants were found guilty of both conspiracy to commit assault, and assault with force likely to produce great bodily harm, it is apparent from the record that they were not involved in the actual assault. Defendants claim, with merit, that it is impossible to determine whether they were convicted of a felony or a misdemeanor since they were charged with and found guilty of conspiracy to commit assault and charged with, and found guilty of, assault with force likely to produce great bodily injury.

Defendants' arguments in this respect have merit. It appears that the terms of probation are such as would deprive defendants of their means of livelihood and also violate the principles of probation. The purpose of probation is not to impose penalties (In re Hays, 120 Cal.App.2d 308, 310, 260 P.2d 1030; In re Martin, 82 Cal. App.2d 16, 22, 185 P.2d 645). It is my opinion that the trial court was guilty of an abuse of discretion with respect to the terms and conditions of probation imposed on defendants Osslo, McFaden and Meyer.

Errors in the Majority Opinion:

The Evidence:

I have heretofore set forth a fair statement of the evidence as it relates to the case at bar. We are here concerned with evidence to support a judgment of conviction of conspiracy to commit assault. There is no doubt that an assault was committed by some of the defendants. Defendants Osslo, McFaden and Meyer were not involved in the actual assault and the People do not so argue. The majority opinion quotes at length from the testimony of one Jackson, a business agent for the butchers. Nothing said by the witness, or quoted in the majority opinion, leads to the conclusion that these defendants were engaged in a conspiracy to commit assault. The majority makes much of the statements of the witness that the police force was not called for protection rather than members of the sailors' union, that older, unemployed members of the butchers' union of San Diego were not called upon to act as observers and that members of other San Diego labor unions were not called upon. The witness' testimony regarding his belief that members of the butchers had reason to fear violence from the clerks is quoted extensively in an endeavor by the majority to show that no such fear could reasonably have existed. In the first instance there is no law that I am aware of which would require these defendants to ask police protection or to hire any particular segment of society to act as their observers. I also know of no law prohibiting the hiring of a bodyguard for protection. It also appears to me highly unlikely that any police force would have sufficient men available to accompany members of labor unions on their rounds in order to prevent trouble which at that time was only a possibility. Insofar as the fear of trouble was concerned and any threats, by conduct, or otherwise, made by members of the clerks to members of the butchers were concerned it appears to me that fear is subjective and that these men, who were there at the time, were far more able to recognize it than the members of the majority of this court who only know what appears in the record as we see it today.

Because defendant Osslo said he was "top man" on the west coast and "that was it" and because he said the butchers would "show" the clerks, the majority infers that Osslo "set up a situation which inferentially was designed to, and which clearly did, increase the likelihood of violence in the jurisdictional dispute. On a view of the evidence favorable to the prosecution, which the law at this stage of the proceeding requires of us, it is fairly inferrible that Osslo, McFaden, and Meyer at least tacitly understood, anticipated, and agreed that the remaining five defendants would not merely be present to act as 'observers' and protect the Butchers from violence, but would and should initiate the violence, which they subsequently did initiate, to 'show' the Clerks that Osslo indeed 'was boss of the West Coast and he would fight for jurisdiction' and 'that was it.'" No such inferences can be fairly drawn from the record. It should be borne in mind that the conspiracy charged here was to commit assault—not a conspiracy to make Osslo "boss" of the west coast! There is absolutely nothing in the record from which an inference may be drawn that Osslo intended the five defendants to "initiate" violence and in the state of this record with its numerous instances of prejudicial misconduct and the close question of fact presented concerning just which labor union instigated the altercation, this court should not concern itself with drawing such an inference. Because other members of the sailors' union had participated in other labor union disputes in other parts of the country in 1948, 1949 and 1952, and had, according to the majority, been guilty of assault and battery in connection therewith, we are told that we may infer that Osslo, McFaden and Meyer knew that these defendants would initiate violence. So far as this record is concerned we do not know whether or not the members of the sailors' union engaged in those other strikes were the guilty ones in the crime of assault and battery. For all we know, the other parties involved may have been the guilty ones and the sailors' members completely innocent. Even if the members of the sailors' union involved in those other strikes were the guilty ones, should every member of a labor union to which he must belong if he is to earn his livelihood be held guilty of the same crime? The question answers itself and shows the fallacy in the reasoning of the majority. That reasoning carries the philosophy of "guilt by association" to its ultimate extreme.

Admission and Rejection of Evidence:

The majority feels that the admission of evidence concerning other and remote labor disputes in which other members of the sailors' union were involved was not prejudicial error when considered in the "light of other circumstances, including the prior activities of Osslo, McFaden, and Meyer" to show that these men "contemplated that the employment of the sailor defendants probably would result in acts of violence by" the other five defendants. First we are told to rely on the asserted violent tendencies of other members of the sailors' union to show that Osslo, McFaden and Meyer are guilty as charged and, secondly, that "the prior [unexplained] activities" of the three men made such evidence admissible because it showed their knowledge that violence would result. There is absolutely nothing in the record to show any connection between the other strikes in which other members of the sailors' union participated and any of these defendants except that some of them belonged to the sailors' union.

The majority finds that the jury could not have been misled because of the admission of evidence of fights, unconnected with labor activities, which occurred in 1951 and 1952, and which occurred on board ships on which Dimitratos and Dempster were sailors. It is said that "in the light of the circumstances surrounding their importation and employment, it does not appear that the jury could have been misled by evidence that they had been involved in other altercations." The only reason for the admission of such evidence would be to show the allegedly bad character of these two defendants and was wholly inadmissible as I have heretofore pointed out and such evidence has, up until this case, been held to constitute an unwarranted attack on the character of a defendant and to constitute prejudicial error. The question is not one of misleading the jury but goes to the question of due process in that every person accused of a crime is entitled to a fair trial on the merits of his particular case.

Concerning the admission of evidence of telephone calls between the defendants and other members of their organizations of which the defendants complain, the majority says "This evidence was properly received to show defendants' association; that that association was criminal is shown by the other evidence, viewed as a whole." This statement assumes the answer to the main question involved—whether defendants conspired to commit the assault and battery which occurred. Mere association and telephone calls, the subject matter of which is completely unknown, have never, until now been sufficient to show that a conspiracy to commit a crime existed. Under the holding here, no association, no telephone call, can be innocent and immune from a later charge of conspiracy if one of the parties should later be accused of a crime of any type.

With respect to the admission of evidence of the arrest of two members of the clerks' union after the assault and battery involved here occurred, and of which defendants complain, the majority says that "This testimony tends to show that defendant Osslo, after the assault, attempted to harass the Clerks by unsubstantiated accusations and to distract emphasis from the charges against him by countercharges; it was thus admissible as tending to show that Osslo was a conspirator carrying on an effort to make good his declaration that he 'was boss of the West Coast and he would fight for jurisdiction,' and not, as he argues, the innocent employer of persons who were to act as 'observers' or at the most to show the Clerks that the Butchers were protected, without the exercise of force." The conspiracy charged here was that of assault and battery, not the promotion of Osslo as "boss" of the west coast. The assault and battery had occurred before the arrest of the clerks and hence the conspiracy, if any, had been terminated. To be admissible, the act or declaration must have been made during the pendency and prior to the termination of the enterprise and in furtherance of the common design (People v. Brown, 59 Cal. 345; In re Estate of Strachan, 166 Cal. 162, 135 P. 296; Budd v. Morgan, 187 Cal. 741, 203 P. 754; People v. Ferlin, 203 Cal. 587, 265 P. 230; People v. Smith, 151 Cal. 619, 91 P. 511; People v. Kynette, 15 Cal.2d 731, 104 P.2d 794; People v. Steccone, 36 Cal.2d 234, 223 P.2d 17).

The majority holds that the exclusion of evidence concerning McFaden's report to Jackson and Osslo that he had been frightened by the clerks could not, in the "light of the record" have prejudiced defendants. This evidence was patently admissible under the defendants' theory and should have been admitted. It is clearly seen that evidence damning to them is held properly admitted while evidence in their favor is held properly excluded. A fair trial encompasses all the relevant and material admissible evidence whether favorable or unfavorable to either side. A fair trial does not mean a trial where the prosecution uses every means, whether fair, or foul, to gain a conviction and no court should condone such a practice. As we said in People v. Lyons, 47 Cal.2d 311, 317, 303 P.2d 329, 332, it would be an impeachment of the legal learning of counsel for the People to intimate that he did not know that what he was doing was improper, wholly unjustifiable and peculiarly calculated to prejudice the appellant before the jury. Counsel for the People knew, or should have known, that his conduct and a great deal of the evidence produced by him was wholly irrelevant and that it was "peculiarly calculated to prejudice" the defendants in the eyes of the jury. He should also have known that evidence relevant to defendants' side of the case was admissible and a part of the entire background of the American system of jurisprudence—a fair trial.

Misconduct of the District Attorney:

I have heretofore set forth in detail some of the instances in which the district attorney was guilty of prejudicial misconduct and the majority has cited some additional examples all of which were calculated to and did inflame the minds of the jurors. The majority, however, finds that "the evidence so overwhelmingly supports the implied findings that it does not appear reasonable to believe that the misconduct was a contributing factor" in arriving at the verdicts. As I have pointed out at length the evidence is far from overwhelming—it is non-existent so far as a conspiracy is involved since the overt acts, in and of themselves, while proved, do not lead to the inevitable conclusion that defendants conspired to commit assault and battery. The overt acts charged consisted of a number of conversations and meetings between the defendants, a labor meeting at which defendants were present, hotel reservations made for some of the defendants; defendants' presence in cars leased by the butchers' local of San Diego; salaries agreed to be paid to the five defendants by Osslo or McFaden. There was no proof, either direct or circumstantial, of what the conversations were at either the meetings or at the labor meeting; there was no proof either direct or circumstantial that at any of the times charged, defendants conspired to commit assault and battery. The majority, however, infers that all of these meetings were used for an evil and unlawful purpose and concludes that the evidence against all the defendants is so "overwhelming" that no misconduct could have prejudiced the defendants in the eyes of the jury.

It can hardly be doubted that the interjection of Communism in the case was prejudicial to the defendants as was the use of the words "goon," "finger man," "strong-arm men," and "toughs." All of these things tended to attack the character of the defendants so as to prejudice them in the minds of the jurors and from the state of the record were obviously calculated to do just that by the prosecutor.

An admonition to the jury to decide the case on the evidence produced is insufficient to cure the errors and misconduct which occurred in this case. A reading of the record shows that from the voir dire examination of prospective jurors, throughout the trial, and until its close, the prosecution was guilty of a deliberate attempt to harass, embarrass, and prejudice these defendants. The majority finds nothing wrong with the trial judge permitting counsel for the People to "yell" at one of the defendants while on the stand. It is said that the record does not show that the "yelling" intimidated the witness. The district attorney is a representative of the People and as such is not "at liberty to strike foul" blows. Here, as in People v. Teixeira, 136 Cal.App.2d 136, 288 P.2d 535, 542, "* * * it is hard to believe that this experienced prosecutor" yelled at a witness "in good faith and for any purpose other than to degrade" him.

Conditions of Probation:

I have heretofore discussed these conditions and my reasons for feeling that they were excessive and in violation of the principle of probation. The majority cites People v. Frank, 94 Cal.App.2d 740, 741–742, 211 P.2d 350, as authority for its holding that the punishment imposed was perfectly proper. In the Frank case the defendant was himself guilty of committing a crime. In the case at bar, defendants Osslo, McFaden and Meyer were not guilty of the actual assault and it is only by means of the improper use of the conspiracy statute that they are in any way involved. As I have pointed out the record shows a total lack of evidence that these defendants conspired with the others to commit the crime with which they were charged and a majority of this court, in affirming the judgments of conviction and the terms of probation, has deprived these three defendants of their means of earning a livelihood since they may not even work as the most menial of laborers in their own union and cannot receive remuneration "from any union." The terms of probation are wholly out of line with the cases holding that probation is an act of grace and clemency for the purpose of permitting rehabilitation of a defendant who is "seemingly deserving" and for the purpose of permitting him to "escape the extreme rigors of the penalty imposed by law for the offense of which he stands convicted" (People v. Hainline, 219 Cal. 532, 534, 28 P.2d 16, 17; Lee v. Superior Court, 89 Cal.App.2d 716, 717, 201 P.2d 882).

Summation:

In my opinion:

1. The judgment should be reversed with directions to dismiss the charge of conspiracy to commit assault as to all defendants because of the total lack of evidence in the record to support the charge.

2. The record shows that only the defendants, Cacio, Tucker and possibly Dempster and Dimitratos, could have engaged in the assault. There is no evidence to show that it was other than a spontaneous assault and, in view of the sharp conflict in the evidence as to the person responsible for starting the altercation and the prejudicial misconduct of the district attorney, as well as the highly prejudicial character of the evidence erroneously admitted (as heretofore discussed), the judgments should be reversed as to them in order that they may have a fair trial on the merits. We held in People v. Lyons, 47 Cal.2d 311, 319, 303 P.2d 329, 334, that "It is axiomatic that when an accused is denied that fair and impartial trial guaranteed by law, such procedure amounts to a denial of due process of law (Powell v. State of Alabama [1932], 287 U.S. 45 [53 S.Ct. 55, 77 L.Ed. 158, 84 A.L.R. 527])."

3. Since there is no evidence which tends to connect defendants Osslo, McFaden, Meyer and Hazel with the actual assault, the trial court should be directed to dismiss as to these defendants the charge of assault by means of force likely to produce great bodily injury.

GIBSON, C. J., and TRAYNOR, J., concur.

Rehearing denied; GIBSON, C. J., and CARTER and TRAYNOR, JJ., dissenting.

50 Cal.2d 137

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Bernard P. CALHOUN, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 6111.

Supreme Court of California, In Bank.

March 27, 1958.

Rehearing Denied April 23, 1958.

Defendant was convicted of conspiring to violate the Elections Code, conspiring to commit acts injurious to public morals, to obstruct justice and to prepare false records for fraudulent purposes for use in proceedings and inquiries authorized by law, and from a judgment and order denying a motion for new trial in the Superior Court, San Diego County, John A. Hewicker, J., the defendant appealed. The Supreme Court, McComb, J., held that the trial court did not err in telling the jury that although a codefendant was not present, the jury could try all acts committed by codefendant as though he were present in the case being tried; that evidence tending to prove the existence of the conspiracy was admissible; but that the trial court erred in holding that evidence that defendant claimed the Fifth Amendment before the grand jury could be received in evidence as an admission and be used to support a verdict.

Reversed.

Opinion, 310 P.2d 94, vacated.

1. Conspiracy ⇐48

In prosecution for conspiring to violate the Elections Code, trial court's statement to jury, that although codefendant was not present, the jury would have to try each and all acts committed by codefendant as though he were present and being tried was not error, on ground that court implied that if codefendant was guilty of conspiring with any of the unnamed but unindicted alleged conspirators, defendant would also be guilty. West's Ann.Elections Code, § 5002.5.

2. Criminal Law ⇐423(1)

Where the existence of a conspiracy is established, evidence of acts and declarations of the conspirators in furtherance thereof is admissible.

3. Conspiracy ⇐23

In prosecution for conspiracy, it is not essential to conviction of a coconspirator that any or all other coconspirators shall be tried and convicted.

4. Conspiracy ⇐45

In prosecution for a conspiracy to violate the Elections Code, admitting testimony relating to matters occurring before the formation of the conspiracy was not an abuse of discretion. West's Ann.Elections Code, § 5002.5; West's Ann.Pen. Code, § 182, subd. 5.

5. Criminal Law ⇐680(1)

The trial court has a reasonable discretion as to the order of proof.

6. Conspiracy ⇐24, 47

A conspiracy may be established by direct evidence or circumstantial evidence or a combination of both, and it need not be shown that the parties entered into a definite agreement, but it is sufficient they positively or tacitly come to a mutual understanding to accomplish the act and unlawful design. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 182, subd. 5.

7. Conspiracy ⇐45

Any competent evidence tending to prove the existence of a conspiracy or any competent acts or declarations tending to show a common design is admissible. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 182, subd. 5.

8. Conspiracy ⇐45
Criminal Law ⇐419(1)

In prosecution for conspiring to violate the Elections Code, testimony of witness concerning payment of attorney's fees to defendant and of payments to witness' employee was properly admitted as against claim of hearsay and as material to show the conspiracy. West's Ann.Elections Code, § 5002.5; West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 182, subd. 5.

9. Criminal Law ⇐1169(1)

In prosecution for conspiring to violate the Elections Code, testimony that defendant paid $3,000 from fund of an organization soliciting contributions from liquor licensees to another for attorney's fees in defending a person in a prior action while not very material was not prejudicial where it was one of a long list of things done by the various conspirators. West's Ann.Elections Code, § 5002.5; West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 182, subd. 5.

10. Conspiracy ⇐45

In prosecution for conspiring to violate the Elections Code by soliciting contributions from liquor licensees for use in re-election campaigns of equalization board member, admitting testimony respecting deposits and disbursements and checks and other documents was proper to establish the conspiracy. West's Ann.Elections Code, § 5002.5; West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 182, subd. 5.

11. Witnesses ⇐309

There is no implication of guilt to be drawn from defendant's reliance on the constitutional guarantees of the Fifth Amendment. West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 13; U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 5.

12. Criminal Law ⇐407(2)

In prosecution for conspiracy, where defendant appeared before the grand jury in response to a subpoena, evidence of defendant's refusal to answer questions before the grand jury based on the Fifth Amendment was inadmissible as an admission and could not be used to support the verdict. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 688, 1323, 1323.5; U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 5; West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 13.

13. Witnesses ⇐269(1), 297

No person can be compelled in a criminal action to be a witness against himself and if he offers himself he can be cross-examined by the People's counsel only about matters to which he testified in chief. U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 5; West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 13.

14. Grand Jury ⇐35

In grand jury proceedings, a defendant shall at his own request but not otherwise be deemed a competent witness. U. S.C.A.Const. Amend. 5; West's Ann. Const. art. 1, § 13.

John W. Preston, Los Angeles, William P. Mahedy, San Diego, and Charles H. Carr, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., William E. James, Deputy Atty. Gen., James Don Keller, Dist. Atty., and Jack R. Levitt, Deputy Dist. Atty., San Diego, for respondent.

McCOMB, Justice.

Defendant, with William G. Bonelli and certain John Does, was charged in an indictment with conspiring to violate section 5002.5 of the Elections Code.[1] The indictment alleged that the persons so charged, together with ten unindicted coconspirators, conspired to commit the crimes of soliciting, asking and receiving political contributions, from persons licensed to sell liquor by the Board of Equalization, such contributions being for use in campaigns for the re-election of Bonelli as a member of that board.

In the second and third counts they were charged with conspiring to commit acts injurious to public morals, to pervert and obstruct justice, and to prepare false papers and records for fraudulent purposes for use in proceedings and inquiries authorized by law, in violation of section 182, subd. 5, of the Penal Code.[2]

Mr. Bonelli was not available for the trial, and it proceeded as to defendant Calhoun alone. After trial before a jury, he was found guilty on all three counts. He appeals from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The evidence, viewed in the light most favorable to the People, discloses a plan which was followed in various counties in soliciting, receiving and using campaign contributions from liquor licensees in connection with the 1950 and 1954 campaigns of Bonelli for re-election to the Board of Equalization. Checks for contributions from retail liquor licensees were made payable to the National Democratic Club, the Aldine Printing Company, the Woolever Press, and a fictitious company known as the Allied Printing Company. Defendant was general counsel and "Public Relations Man" for the Southern California Spirits Foundation, an association composed of wholesale liquor distributors whose members paid regular dues which were supposed to be used for certain purposes only.

1. Section 5002.5 of the Elections Code reads: "Any elective State officer who is authorized by law to issue licenses, or who is a member of any board or agency authorized to issue licenses, or any person seeking election to such office, board or agency, or any appointee or employee of such office, board or agency, who directly or indirectly solicits, receives or agrees to receive any money or other thing of value, or any promise thereof, from any licensee named in, or any holder of, any license issued by such officer, board or agency, or from any agent of such licensee or license holder, for any political campaign of any person seeking election or reelection to the office, board or agency authorized to issue such license, is guilty of a misdemeanor."

2. Section 182 of the Penal Code reads in part: "If two or more persons conspire: * * * 5. To commit any act injurious to the public health, to public morals, or to pervert or obstruct justice, or the due administration of the laws * * * they are punishable as follows: * * *."

Another fund existed known as the "Research and Public Relations Fund," to which the Spirits Foundation was the largest contributor, but which contained other contributions arranged for by defendant. As a practical matter, defendant exercised control over the expenditure of the money in this fund. On his instructions large amounts were drawn on this fund by checks payable to cash, and other checks were drawn in payment of bills presented by the above-named printing companies and an advertising company for expenses in connection with the Bonelli campaign.

These funds and checks were manipulated in various ways. For instance, the evidence indicated that a check payable to defendant, as trustee, was used to replace several small checks made payable to Aldine and signed by retail liquor licensees.

At the trial 59 witnesses testified for the prosecution and 17 for defendant. The reporter's transcript contains 2498 pages, including 370 pages of testimony by defendant.

The record discloses that defendant spent many thousands of dollars from funds of the Spirits Foundation and Research Fund without direct authorization for the particular expenditures, the checks being made to the same printers and advertisers as were the checks of the retail licensees. None of them showed on their face that they were for Bonelli's campaign, and the way many checks were issued, receipts handled, and entries made on the records may have been designed to conceal that fact.

Defendant ordered a large amount of the printing for Bonelli's campaign, conferred with Bonelli and with the printers, and cashed certain checks and had others issued in their place before paying some of these bills.

In many instances individuals and firms were told to send checks to these printing companies, and later received invoices for printing which they had never ordered or received. Several witnesses testified that they were told to do this by defendant.

Defendant told one Casteel, who offered to make a contribution to Bonelli's 1954 campaign, to make the check payable to the National Democratic Club. When Casteel objected, defendant told him to make it to the Aldine Printing Company and said, "We will see that you get a bill for printing or something of that sort and that will take care of it." Defendant admitted telling Casteel how to make a contribution on Bonelli's behalf.

One member of the Spirits Foundation testified that he asked defendant at several meetings where the funds of the Foundation were being spent and was told by several people, and possibly by defendant, that he had "probably better not know."

There is a great deal of evidence that checks from liquor licensees, for contributions solicited on Bonelli's behalf, were payable to these printing firms, which were doing large amounts of printing for the Bonelli campaigns, and that defendant played an important part in connection with the solicitation, receipt, and disbursement of these funds which were used for the purpose of securing the re-election of Bonelli.

Defendant was charged not only with soliciting but with receiving such contributions, and the evidence shows that, aside from the dues paid into the Spirits Foundation, he received political contributions from six other concerns and individuals which were used for the benefit of the Bonelli campaigns.

While defendant insisted that he had used the dues paid by the members of the Spirits Foundation strictly in accordance with their authorization and desires, several of them testified that they did not know how he was using this money and that they would not have approved of the way it was in fact used.

Defendant testified that in 1954 he spent more time wtih Bonelli than in any prior campaign, primarily because of Proposition Number 3; that "* * * it is almost impossible to segregate the two campaigns"; that "The bills that I paid were bills he [Bonelli] always gave to me and asked if I could take care of. That was the net result. I paid those bills directly to the parties who had sent in the bills and paid them by check"; and that "I think all of the payments that went for Bonelli's bills came out of the Research and Public Relations Fund." When asked why he had used this money in the Bonelli campaigns, he replied that he did it because the members of the association had to keep Bonelli on their side; and that "They had to conduct their business under Mr. Bonelli's direction and the liquor business is very highly regulated and suspensions can be had very easily for violations, intentional or otherwise, many times unintentional."

Although not separately so stated or argued, defendant's basic contentions are that he was the mere agent of the Spirits Foundation and his acts and conduct in receiving and handling funds and paying bills in connection with Bonelli's campaigns were solely those of such an agent; that these funds came from regular dues paid by the members and were in no way solicited; and that if any conspiracy existed, the evidence is not sufficient to connect him with the acts and conduct of Bonelli and other actors in any such conspiracy.

Defendant's Contentions

[1] First: That the trial court erred in telling the jury that although Bonelli was not present at the trial, the jury would have to try each and all acts committed by Bonelli as though he were present and being tried.

This contention is untenable. It is argued that the court implied that if Bonelli was guilty of conspiring with any of the named but unindicted alleged coconspirators, then defendant would also be guilty; that Bonelli could be guilty and defendant innocent of the crime charged, and it was reversible error "to indissolubly connect them together"; and that there was no evidence reasonably tending to show that there was a conspiracy between Bonelli and defendant.

The judge told the jury, in effect, that there would be no change in the testimony because of the absence of Mr. Bonelli; that the case would have to be tried on the same basis as if Bonelli were present and represented by counsel; and that "* * * you have to try each and every act that he committed, if there was a conspiracy here, try each and every act within the conspiracy, if one existed, as though he were sitting down there." (Italics added.)

[2] This was a correct statement. Where the existence of a conspiracy is established, evidence of the acts and declarations of the conspirators in furtherance of the conspiracy is admissible, and the judge in no way intimated that a conspiracy did exist or that any act was done within the scope of any conspiracy.

[3] In a prosecution for conspiracy it is not essential to the conviction of a coconspirator that any or all other coconspirators shall be tried and convicted. (People v. Gilbert, 26 Cal.App.2d 1, 26, 78 P.2d 770.) Where the conspirators are not jointly tried, the admissibility of evidence as to the conspiracy may well be the same, as a coconspirator is liable for the acts of the other conspirators done in furtherance of the conspiracy.

[4] Second: That the court erred in admitting in evidence hundreds of pages of testimony relating to matters occurring before the formation of the alleged conspiracy, in the absence of any evidence that a conspiracy existed or that defendant was a member thereof if one existed.

This contention is unsound. It is urged by defendant that the court admitted the testimony of the first 20 witnesses without any showing that a conspiracy existed or that defendant was a member thereof and that "the great bulk of the testimony of the other 39 witnesses for the State also failed to show that a conspiracy existed between Bonelli and defendant to solicit, ask and receive campaign contributions for Bonelli from liquor licensees of the Board of Equalization."

The record does not bear out the contention that 20 witnesses were allowed to testify before any evidence was introduced to establish the existence of a conspiracy.

The testimony of the first witness, Al Tossas, was directed to the conspiracy charged in the first count. The testimony of the second witness, Mary Forsythe, was directed to count two, and that of the third witness, Raymond McCullough, to count three.

[5] It was not necessary to connect defendant with the conspiracy at the beginning of the evidence or before any other evidence of a conspiracy was received. As defendant concedes, the court had a reasonable discretion as to the order of proof, and there is nothing to indicate that this discretion was abused.

[6] It is settled that a conspiracy may be established by direct evidence or circumstantial evidence, or a combination of both. It need not be shown that the parties entered into a definite agreement, but it is sufficient if they positively or tacitly come to a mutal understanding to accomplish the act and unlawful design. The evidence may cover many transactions, extend over a long period of time, and show acts which occurred some time before the alleged formation of the conspiracy, as long as the facts shown have some bearing or some tendency to prove the ultimate facts in issue.

[7] Any competent evidence which tends to prove the existence of the conspiracy or any competent acts or declarations tending to show a common design is admissible. (People v. Steccone, 36 Cal.2d 234, 237 [2, 3], 223 P.2d 17; People v. Lyon, 135 Cal.App.2d 558, 578 [5], 288 P.2d 57; People v. Chait, 69 Cal.App.2d 503, 515 [10], 159 P.2d 445; People v. Malone, 20 Cal.App.2d 1, 6 [3], 66 P.2d 216; People v. Stevens, 78 Cal.App. 395, 407 [6], 248 P. 696.)

No particular evidence is pointed out in this connection as being inadmissible, and the contention that all of this evidence was inadmissible is without merit.

[8] Third: That the court erred in admitting the testimony of one Tomerlin concerning payment of (1) attorney's fees to defendant, and (2) $4,500 to Tomerlin's employee, Dennis Moore; and in admitting evidence that defendant paid $3,000 from the funds of the Spirits Foundation to Leonard Wilson as attorney's fees in defending Charles E. Berry in a prior action.

This evidence was properly admitted. It is argued with respect to the Tomerlin matters that this testimony was hearsay, that it is not shown to have any connection with the offenses charged in the indictment, and that there was no evidence of what Moore did with the money paid to him. This testimony was in connection with a contribution by the Wilton Hotel, that hotel being one of four to which defendant had promised assistance in obtaining a reduction or revocation of a license suspension. There was evidence that Tomerlin gave the money to Moore upon instructions from defendant in connection with an effort to have the suspension of the hotel's liquor license revoked and that no legal work was done or appearance made by defendant.

Defendant had told Tomerlin that someone would contact him for certain money which was to go to Bonelli, and the evidence was therefore material, although it did not directly show exactly where the money went.

[9] Regarding the Berry matter, it is claimed that the testimony was not relevant to any issue in this case. This matter, while not very material, was one of a long list of things done by the various conspirators, and the evidence respecting it was not prejudicial.

[10] Fourth: That the court erred in admitting "hundreds of pages of testimony concerning the deposits of cash and checks" by one Snyder in the bank account of the National Democratic Club and disbursements from said fund by Snyder; in admitting the testimony of Al Weigel and other witnesses concerning deposits in and checks drawn upon the Research and Public Relations Fund; and in admitting scores of checks, deposit slips, invoices and other documents without showing that defendant was connected therewith, and without first establishing prima facie that a conspiracy existed and that defendant was a member thereof.

This contention is unsound. All of this evidence was properly admitted under well-established rules governing the receipt of evidence for the purpose of establishing a conspiracy.

Fifth: That defendant was not given a fair and impartial trial (1) because of certain statements made by the trial judge, and (2) because of alleged prejudicial misconduct by the district attorney. Since the judgment must be reversed for the reasons set forth below and it is unlikely that the statements and conduct complained of will recur on a retrial, it is unnecessary to consider this contention.

Sixth: That the trial court committed prejudicial error in admitting, over objection, statements made by defendant before the 1954 San Diego Grand Jury in response to a grand jury subpoena.

This contention is sound. In his opening statement to the trial jury, the district attorney, referring to defendant's appearance before the grand jury and his refusal to answer questions, stated:

"You will also hear from the evidence that Mr. Calhoun testified before the San Diego County Grand Jury on December 22, 1954. At that time Mr. Calhoun invoked the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination 47 times and thereby refused to answer 47 questions that were put to him. Some of the questions were this:

"'Question. Is it a fact that the Research and Public Relations Fund account paid approximately $31,000.00 in the year 1954 in the campaign, Bonelli's campaign?

"'Answer. I am going to decline to answer that question on the grounds that the answer might tend to incriminate me.

"'Question. Did you ever discuss campaign expenditures with Mr. Bonelli?

"'Answer. I am going to decline to answer that question on the same grounds.

"'Question. When was the last time you saw Mr. Bonelli?

"'Answer. Well, I am going to decline to answer that question on the same grounds. I am going to decline to answer any questions in any way involving Mr. Bonelli.

"'Question. Have you talked to Mr. Bonelli since you have been served with this subpoena?

"'Answer. I think I will decline the answer that question on the same grounds, Mr. Sheela.

"'Question. Has Mr. Bonelli ever asked you to pick up his printing bills or his outdoor advertising bills?

"'Answer. I am going to refuse or decline to answer that question.'"

Defendant's counsel then moved to strike the objectionable matter as "not proper in an opening statement," to which the trial judge said, "Well, I think he has gone far enough."

Thereafter during the trial, before the People had closed its case-in-chief and before defendant had taken the stand and testified, questions propounded to defendant before the grand jury and his responses thereto were, over his objection, read to the trial jury. In this way, evidence of defendant's refusal to answer 47 questions asked him by the district attorney when he was before the grand jury was put before the trial jury. To each question defendant had said, "I am going to decline to answer that question on the grounds that the answer might tend to incriminate me."

Defendant appeared before the grand jury in response to a subpoena. He was not there in the position of one who voluntarily appeared or one who appeared by mere request of the grand jury as in the cases of People v. Lyon, 135 Cal.App.2d 558, 288 P.2d 57; People v. Byers, 5 Cal.2d 676, 55 P.2d 1177; and People v. Walsh, 47 Cal.2d 36, 301 P.2d 247.

The People contend that the testimony was admissible because (1) it was an admission made by a party in response to an accusatory statement, and (2) defendant's reaction thereto showed a consciousness of guilt.

[11] Neither of these grounds is tenable, for the reason that no implication of guilt can be drawn from a defendant's relying on the constitutional guarantee of the fifth amendment to the Constitution of the United States,[3] article I, section 13, of the Constitution of the State of California,[4] or Penal Code sections 688,[5] 1323,[6] and 1323.5.[7] (People v. Simmons, 28 Cal. 2d 699, 702 [12], 172 P.2d 18; Grunewald v. United States, 353 U.S. 391, 77 S.Ct. 963, 982 [21] et seq., 1 L.Ed.2d 931; People v. Talle, 111 Cal.App.2d 650, 663 [1] et seq., 245 P.2d 633).

[12] In view of the foregoing rule, the trial court prejudicially erred in holding that the grand jury testimony could be received in evidence as an admission and used to support a verdict. The use of evidence of the assertion of the privilege against self-incrimination as an indication of guilt and as support for a verdict is directly contrary to the intent of the constitutional provisions set forth above. Such evidence does not fall within the scope of the 1934 amendment to article I, section 13, of the Constitution of the State of California, which provides that "in any criminal case, whether the defendant testifies or not, his failure to explain or to deny by his testimony any evidence or facts in the case against him may be commented upon by the court and by counsel, and may be considered by the court or the jury." Any inferences to the contrary in People v. Byers, 5 Cal.2d 676, 55 P.2d 1177, are overruled.

[13, 14] Provisions of the federal and state Constitutions and the Penal Code sections referred to above establish that: (1) No person can be compelled in a criminal action to be a witness against himself; (2) if he offers himself, he can be cross-examined by the People's counsel only about matters to which he testified in chief; and (3) in grand jury proceedings, among others, he shall "at his own request, but not otherwise, be deemed a competent witness."

In view of the error in the admission of this testimony, the judgment is reversed.

GIBSON, C. J., and CARTER, TRAYNOR and SCHAUER, JJ., concur.

Rehearing denied; SHENK and SPENCE, JJ., dissenting.

3. The fifth amendment to the United States Constitution reads in part: "No person * * * shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself."

4. Article I, section 13, of the California Constitution reads in part: "No person shall * * * be compelled, in any criminal case, to be a witness against himself."

5. Section 688 of the Penal Code reads in part: "No person can be compelled, in a criminal action, to be a witness against himself * * *."

6. Section 1323 of the Penal Code reads: "A defendant in a criminal action or proceeding cannot be compelled to be a witness against himself; but if he offers himself as a witness, he may be cross-examined by the counsel for the people as to all matters about which he was examined in chief. The failure of the defendant to explain or to deny by his testimony any evidence or facts in the case against him may be commented upon by counsel."

7. Section 1323.5 of the Penal Code reads: "In the trial of or examination upon all indictments, complaints, and other proceedings before any court, magistrate, grand jury, or other tribunal, against persons accused or charged with the commission of crimes or offenses, the person accused or charged shall, at his own request, but not otherwise, be deemed a competent witness. The credit to be given to his testimony shall be left solely to the jury, under the instructions of the court, or to the discrimination of the magistrate, grand jury, or other tribunal before which the testimony is given.

"This section shall not be construed as compelling any such person to testify."

50 Cal.2d 149

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Lawrence O'Neil SMITH, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 6139.

Supreme Court of California,
In Bank.
March 27, 1958.

Defendant was convicted of possession of heroin with a prior conviction of narcotic addiction. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, H. Burton Noble, J., entered judgment, and the defendant appealed. The Supreme Court, Traynor, J., held that where defendant was not misled in making his defense because of fact that information gave date of offense as April 8, 1956 and proof was that offense occurred on March 8, 1956, because defendant knew from testimony given at preliminary hearing that date of alleged offense was March 8, 1956, and his own witnesses testified to events on that date, and he was not in danger of being placed in double jeopardy, variance was not fatal.

Judgment affirmed.

Opinion 311 P.2d 857, vacated.

1. Criminal Law ⇐395

In prosecution for possession of heroin, wherein defendant made a motion to suppress the heroin, on ground that it had been obtained from defendant, who had it in his mouth, by police officer by use of brutal force, evidence sustained finding that officer did not choke defendant and did not use brutal force to obtain the heroin. West's Ann.Health and Safety Code, § 11500.

2. Arrest ⇐63(4)

Where police officers had no search warrant and apparently no warrant for arrest of defendant, lawfulness of the arrest turned on question of whether officers had reasonable cause to believe that defendant had committed a felony.

3. Arrest ⇐63(4)

Reasonable cause to justify an arrest without a warrant may consist of information obtained from others and is not limited to evidence that would be admissible at the trial on issue of guilt.

4. Arrest ⇐63(4)

If police officers had reasonable grounds to rely on informer's report that defendant had just purchased heroin and that he could be found with it, at the place where he was arrested, they were justified in arresting him without a warrant.

5. Arrest ⇐63(4)

Where past experience of police officer with informer gave officer reasonable grounds to rely on reports of informer, and that officer and another officer had knowledge that defendant was a drug addict, and the informer reported that defendant had just purchased heroin and could be found with it at certain place, officers had right to arrest defendant at such place without a warrant.

6. Indictment and Information ⇐171

Test of materiality of variance is whether indictment or information so fully and correctly informed defendant of criminal acts, with which he is charged, that, taking into consideration proof which is introduced against him, he is not misled in making his defense, or is placed in danger of being twice put in jeopardy for same offense.

7. Indictment and Information ⇐176

Where defendant was not misled in making his defense in prosecution for possession of heroin, because of fact that information gave date of offense as April 8, 1956 and proof was that offense occurred on March 8, 1956, because defendant knew from testimony given at preliminary hearing that date of alleged offense was March 8, 1956, and his own witnesses testified to events on that date, and he was not in danger of being placed in double jeopardy, variance was not fatal. West's Ann. Health and Safety Code, §§ 11500, 11712, 11721.

8. Criminal Law ⇐295

On plea of double jeopardy, extrinsic evidence is admissible on the trial to identify crime of which defendant has been convicted.

Lawrence O'Neil Smith, in pro. per., and Ward Sullivan, Los Angeles, under appointment by the Supreme Court, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., and William E. James, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

The trial court sitting without a jury, found defendant guilty of a felony violation of section 11500 of the Health and Safety Code. It also found that he was previously convicted of narcotic addiction (Health & Safety Code, § 11721), a misdemeanor, and sentenced him to imprisonment in the state prison for a term prescribed by law. (See Health & Safety Code, § 11712.) Defendant appeals.

A police officer of the Los Angeles Police Department, on the day before the arrest, received information from an informer that defendant had just purchased a "spoonful of heroin" and that it would be on his person at a certain residence. The officer knew that defendant was a narcotic addict. On the day of the arrest, two officers approached the house in question and through a window observed defendant and a woman sitting on a bed, but saw nothing incriminating. They went to the front door and knocked. An elderly lady opened the door. The officers identified themselves, entered, and walked toward the room where they had seen defendant. One of the officers testified that the elderly lady then shouted, "Lawrence, the police are here." The bedroom door was closed, but the officer did not know if it was locked. Defendant's witnesses testified that the door was locked. When the officers entered the bedroom, they saw defendant move his hand to his mouth and told him to "Spit it out." There is a conflict in the testimony as to whether defendant was choked by one of the officers. Defendant spat out a package containing five rubber ballons later shown to contain heroin. He admitted that the package was his and that he attempted to swallow it when he heard the police at the door. The officers then arrested him. The package containing the heroin was introduced in evidence at the preliminary hearing.

[1] At the trial the transcript of the preliminary hearing was introduced in evidence. Defendant's motion to suppress the evidence on the ground that it had been obtained in violation of the rules stated in Rochin v. People of California, 342 U.S. 165, 72 S.Ct. 205, 209, 96 L.Ed. 183 and People v. Martinez, 130 Cal.App.2d 54, 278 P.2d 26, was denied. In those cases the conduct condemned was brutal force, "conduct that shocks the conscience." In the Martinez case the court said: "It is clear that the substance was choked out of Martinez. The fact that the officers and Martinez were thrown to the ground indicates the extent of the force that was deemed necessary and that sufficient force was used to accomplish that purpose." 130 Cal.App.2d 54, 56, 278 P.2d 26, 27. Although defendant's testimony would tend to show that the officer choked him, there was testimony to the contrary by one of the arresting officers. We cannot hold that the trial court erred in believing the officer's testimony.

[2] The officers had no search warrant and, apparently, no warrant for defendant's arrest. Thus, the lawfulness of the arrest turns on the question whether the officers had reasonable cause to believe that the defendant had committed a felony. People v. Boyles, 45 Cal.2d 652, 655–656, 290 P.2d 535.

[3–5] Reasonable cause to justify an arrest may consist of information obtained from others and is not limited to evidence that would be admissible at the trial on the issue of guilt. People v. Boyles, supra; Willson v. Superior Court, 46 Cal.2d 291, 294, 294 P.2d 36. If the officers had reasonable grounds to rely on the informer's report that defendant had just purchased heroin and that he could be found with it, at the place where he was arrested, they were justified in arresting him. Willson v. Superior Court, supra. The record supports the trial court's conclusion that the officer's past experience with the informer,[1] together with their knowledge that defendant was a drug addict, gave the officers reasonable cause to believe that defendant had committed a felony. Moreover, at the trial defendant made no attempt to determine the identity of the informer or to question his reliability.

[6–8] In his brief in propria persona, filed before the appointment of counsel, defendant contends, that there was a fatal variance between the date of the offense charged in the information, April 8, 1956, and the date of the offense proved, March 8, 1956. In People v. LaMarr, 20 Cal.2d 705, 711, 128 P.2d 345, 348, this court stated: "An immaterial variance should be disregarded. 14 Cal.Jur. 96; People v. Mizer (1940), 37 Cal.App.2d 148, 153, 154, 99 P.2d 333. The test of the materiality of a variance is whether the indictment or information so fully and correctly informs the defendant of the criminal act with which he is charged that, taking into consideration the proof which is introduced against him, he is not misled in making his defense, or placed in danger of being twice put in jeopardy for the same offense." Defendant was not misled in making his defense, for he knew from the testimony given at the preliminary hearing that the date of the alleged offense was March 8, 1956, and his own witnesses testified to events on that date. Nor is he in danger of being placed in double jeopardy, for it is "well settled that on a plea of double jeopardy, extrinsic evidence is admissible on the trial to identify the crime of which a defendant has been convicted." People v. Williams, 27 Cal.2d 220, 226, 163 P.2d 692, 695.

The judgment is affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, CARTER, SCHAUER, SPENCE and McCOMB, JJ., concur.

1. One of the arresting officers testified:
"A. I have been there when he [the informant] has given us approximately six other bits of information and about three of them have been—on three of them we have made arrests and the other three we just hit it too late.
"Q. Well, in those three bits of information where you made arrests, those have been narcotic cases; is that correct? A. Yes.
"Q. And when you would go out to where he would tell you to go did you find any narcotics? A. Yes.
"The Court: In other words, this informer is a reliable informer?
"The Witness: Very reliable."

49 Cal.2d 855

HENRY R. JAHN & SON, Inc. (a Corporation), Petitioner,

v.

The SUPERIOR COURT of the State of California, IN AND FOR COUNTY of SAN MATEO, Respondent, American Drying Systems, Inc. (a Corporation), Real Party In Interest.

S. F. 19841.

Supreme Court of California,
In Bank.
March 26, 1958.

Petition by defendant for writ of mandamus to compel Superior Court to set aside order for substituted service of process and to quash service of summons on defendant. The Supreme Court, Traynor, J., held that where defendant made regular purchases of goods in California from plaintiff as its exclusive export agent and it took title to goods in California and directed its agent how and where to ship goods and after defendant ceased doing business with plaintiff it entered into a similar course of business dealings with a partnership in California, defendant was doing business in state and was amenable to suit in California.

Alternative writ discharged and peremptory writ denied.

Schauer and McComb, JJ., dissented.

1. Corporations ⇐668(14)

Affidavit for service of process on Secretary of State against a foreign corporation can be made by plaintiff's attorney. West's Ann.Corp.Code, § 6501.

2. Constitutional Law ⇐309(3)
Corporations ⇐642(1)

Under statute authorizing service of process on foreign corporations that are "doing business in this state", the quoted words are a descriptive term that courts have equated with such minimum contacts with state that maintenance of suit does not offend traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice, and whatever limitation it imposes is equivalent to that of due process clause and is synonymous with power of state to subject foreign corporations to local process. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 411, subd. 2.

3. Corporations ⇐642(4½)

Where defendant made regular purchases of goods in California from plaintiff as its exclusive export agent and it took title to goods in California and directed its agent how and where to ship them and after defendant ceased doing business with plaintiff it entered into a similar course of business dealings with a partnership in California, defendant was doing business in state and was amenable to suit in California. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 411, subd. 2.

4. Courts ⇐4

Where defendant's burden of defending in California was no greater than plaintiff's burden of suing in New York and cause of action directly related to defendant's dealings with California plaintiff and other California defendants and a denial of jurisdiction would lead only to a duplicity of litigation, quality and nature of activity in relation to fair and orderly administration of laws justified subjecting defendant to jurisdiction of California courts.

Joseph C. Meyerstein, San Francisco, and Donald J. Kennedy, Palo Alto, for petitioner.

No appearance for respondent.

Pedder, Ferguson & Pedder and Robert J. Pedder, San Francisco, for real party in interest.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

Petitioner, Henry R. Jahn & Son, Inc., seeks a writ of mandate to compel the Superior Court of San Mateo County to set aside its order for substituted service of process and to quash service of summons on petitioner in an action brought by plaintiff, the real party in interest in this proceeding. See Code Civ.Proc. § 416.3. Dante J. Cacciari and Alexander Columbo, individually and as copartners doing business as the C & C Company, were joined as defendants in plaintiff's action. The superior court made an order allowing plaintiff to serve process on petitioner pursuant to section 6501 of the Corporations Code.[1] Thereafter petitioner

1. Section 6501 of the Corporations Code reads: "If the agent designated for the service of process be a natural person and cannot be found with due diligence at the address stated in the designation or if such agent be a corporation and no person can be found with due diligence to whom the delivery authorized by Section 6500 may be made for the purpose of delivery to such corporate agent, or if the agent designated is no longer authorized to act, or if no agent has been designated and if no one of the officers or agents of the corporation specified in Section 6500 can be found after diligent search and it is so shown by affidavit to the satisfaction of the court or judge, then the court or judge may make an order that service be made by personal delivery to the Secretary of State or to an assistant or deputy secretary of state of two copies of the process together with two copies of the order, except that if the corporation to be served has not appeared specially and moved to set aside the order for service of process and to quash the service of summons. These motions were denied.

Plaintiff alleged in its complaint that it entered into a series of three-party contracts with Jahn and various distributors in South and Central America for the purpose of marketing grain driers in those areas. Jahn had the exclusive right to sell plaintiff's products, and the distributors agreed not to handle competing products. Pursuant to these contracts, Jahn purchased driers from plaintiff and resold them through the various distributors. Business was conducted accordingly for over two years.

Defendants Cacciari and Columbo were associated with a company that manufactured driers for plaintiff according to secret plans and specifications supplied by plaintiff. They resigned from that company, taking plaintiff's plans and specifications with them. Thereafter they conspired with Jahn to take over plaintiff's business. Cacciari and Columbo formed a California partnership to manufacture and sell driers similar to plaintiff's driers, making use of plaintiff's plans and specifications. Jahn became the partnership's exclusive agent for exporting its driers. Jahn and the partners conspired to induce breaches of plaintiff's exclusive contracts with distributors, making use of confidential mailing lists and other data bearing on plaintiff's South and Central American business.

Plaintiff prayed that defendants be enjoined from inducing breaches of its distributorship contracts, using plaintiff's confidential mailing lists and other customer data, manufacturing and selling driers similar to plaintiff's driers, and using plaintiff's plans and specifications. It also prayed for an accounting of the business diverted by the foregoing activities, the appointment of a receiver, and exemplary damages.

[1] There is no merit in Jahn's contention that the affidavit for service on the Secretary of State did not meet the requirements of Corporations Code, section 6501. The existence of the required facts was alleged directly and without qualification. Cf., Columbia Screw Co. v. Warner Lock Co., 138 Cal. 445, 447, 71 P. 498. The statute does not provide that the affidavit cannot be made by the plaintiff's attorney.

Jahn further contends that it was not and is not doing business in this state within the meaning of Code of Civil Procedure, section 411(2) and is therefore not subject to service of process pursuant to Corporations Code, section 6501.

[2] The statute authorizes service of process on foreign corporations that are "doing business in this State." That term is a descriptive one that the courts have equated with such minimum contacts with the state "that the maintenance of the suit does not offend 'traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice.'" International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 316, 66 S.Ct. 154, 158, 90 L.Ed. 95. Whatever limitation it imposes is equivalent to that of the due process clause. "'[D]oing business' within the meaning of section 411 of the Code of Civil Procedure is synonymous with the power of the state to subject foreign corporations to local process." Eclipse Fuel etc. Co. v. Superior Court, 148 Cal.App.2d 736, 738, 307 P.2d 739, 741; see also, Gray v. Montgomery Ward, Inc., 155 Cal.App.2d 55, 317 P.2d 114; McClanahan v. Trans-America Ins. Co., 149 Cal.App.2d 171, 172, 307 P.2d 1023; Jeter v. Austin Trailer Equipment Co., 122 Cal.App.2d 376, 387, 265 P.2d 130; Kneeland v. Ethicon Suture Laboratories, 118 Cal.App.2d 211, 218–224, 257 P.2d 727, and cases cited; LeVecke v. Griesedieck Western Brewing Co., 9 Cir., 233 F.2d 772, 775; Kenny v. Alaska Airlines, D.C., 132 F.Supp. 838, 850.

filed the statement required to be filed by Section 6403 then only one copy of the process and order need be delivered but the order shall include and set forth an address to which such process shall be sent by the Secretary of State."

[3] Jahn's purchase of goods in this state is a regular part of its business. It nevertheless contends that it is not amenable to suit here, invoking Rosenberg Bros. & Co. v. Curtis Brown Co., 260 U.S. 516, 43 S.Ct. 170, 67 L.Ed. 372. The United States Supreme Court, however, has advanced beyond the presence theory of jurisdiction underlying that case. McGee v. International Life Insurance Co., 355 U.S. 220, 78 S.Ct. 199, 200, 2 L.Ed.2d 223; see also, International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 316–317, 66 S.Ct. 154. Under the minimum contacts test of the International Shoe case regular sales solicitation alone can constitute doing business rendering the foreign corporation amenable to process in actions engendered by such activities. See Travelers Health Ass'n v. Virginia, 339 U.S. 643, 648–649, 70 S.Ct. 927, 94 L.Ed. 1154; Nippert v. Richmond, 327 U.S. 416, 426, 66 S.Ct. 586, 90 L.Ed. 760; Scholnik v. National Airlines, 6 Cir., 219 F.2d 115, 119; Frene v. Louisville Cement Co., 77 U.S. App.D.C. 129, 134 F.2d 511, 515–517, 146 A.L.R. 926; Jeter v. Austin Trailer Equipment Co., 122 Cal.App.2d 376, 385, 265 P.2d 130; Koninklijke Luchtvaart Maatschappij v. Superior Court, 107 Cal.App.2d 495, 500, 237 P.2d 297. Since there is no distinction for jurisdictional purposes between regular selling and regular buying (Sterling Novelty Corp. v. Frank & Hirsch D. Co., 299 N.Y. 208, 210, 86 N.E.2d 564, 12 A.L.R.2d 1435; Star Elkorn Coal Co. v. Red Ash Pocahontas Coal Co., D.C., 102 F.Supp. 258, 259), the Rosenberg case is as obsolete for the one as for the other. Many cases anteceding the Rosenberg case and many since the International Shoe case have sustained jurisdiction on the basis of the defendant's purchasing activities in the state. Colorado Iron-Works v. Sierra Grande Min. Co., 15 Colo. 499, 25 P. 325, 327–328; Premo Specialty Mfg. Co. v. Jersey-Creme Co., 9 Cir., 200 F. 352, 356, 43 L.R.A.,N.S., 1015; Dungan, Hood & Co. v. C. F. Bally, Limited, D.C., 271 F. 517, 519; Payne & Joubert v. East Union Lumber Co., 109 La. 706, 33 So. 739, 740–741; Duluth Log Co. v. Pulpwood Co., 137 Minn. 312, 163 N.W. 520, 521; Sterling Nov. Corp. v. Frank & Hirsch D. Co., 299 N.Y. 208, 212, 86 N.E.2d 564, 12 A.L.R.2d 1435; National Furniture Co. v. Wm. Spiegelman & Co., 198 App.Div. 672, 190 N.Y.S. 831, 832; Scheier v. Stoff, Sup., 142 N.Y.S.2d 716, 717; Star Elkhorn Coal Co. v. Red Ash Pocahontas Coal Co., D.C., 102 F.Supp. 258, 259; see also, Johnson v. Atlantic & Pacific Fisheries Co., 128 Wash. 578, 224 P. 13, 14.

The Supreme Court has emphasized its departure from the presence test by the significance it now attaches to the fact that the cause of action arises out of the defendant's contacts with the state asserting jurisdiction. The Rosenberg case deemed it immaterial that the cause of action arose out of the corporation's New York activities, on the ground that its total activities there did not support the conclusion that it was present. Now, however, it "is sufficient for purposes of due process that the suit was based on a contract which had substantial connection with [the] State." McGee v. International Life Insurance Company, 78 S.Ct. 199, 201. "But to the extent that a corporation exercises the privilege of conducting activities within a state, it enjoys the benefits and protection of the laws of that state. The exercise of that privilege may give rise to obligations; and, so far as those obligations arise out of or are connected with the activities within the state, a procedure which requires the corporation to respond to a suit brought to enforce them can, in most instances, hardly be said to be undue." International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 319, 66 S.Ct. 154, 160.

Whenever litigation arises out of business transactions conducted across state lines between parties whose principal places of business are in different states, there may be hardship to the party required to litigate away from home. There is no constitutional requirement, however, that this hardship must invariably be borne by the plaintiff whenever the defendant is not deemed present in the state of plaintiff's residence. In some circumstances there is adequate basis for jurisdiction when the defendant has elected to deal with the plaintiff even though only by mail. McGee v. International Life Insurance Co., 78 S.Ct. 199, 201; Parmalee v. Iowa State Traveling Men's Ass'n, 5 Cir., 206 F.2d 518, 522, 44 A.L.R.2d 410. Again, there is jurisdiction when the cause of action arose out of the breach of a contract made and to be performed in the state (Compania De Astral, S. A. v. Boston Metals Co., 205 Md., 237, 107 A.2d 357, 108 A.2d 372, 49 A.L.R.2d 646, certiorari denied 348 U.S. 943, 75 S.Ct. 365, 99 L.Ed. 738; see also, S. Howes Co. v. W. P. Milling Co., Okl., 277 P.2d 655, 657–658) or even out of a mere isolated act in the state by the defendant or his agent. Nelson v. Miller, 11 Ill.2d 378, 143 N.E.2d 673; Smyth v. Twin State Improvement Corp., 116 Vt. 569, 80 A.2d 664, 25 A.L.R.2d 1193; Hess v. Pawloski, 274 U.S. 352, 47 S.Ct. 632, 71 L.Ed. 1091; Johns v. Bay State Abrasive Products Co., D.C., 89 F.Supp. 654.

We need not here determine whether an action arising from an isolated purchase of goods here through interstate communication would subject Jahn to the jurisdiction of the California courts. Jahn made regular purchases from plaintiff as its exclusive export agent. It took title to the goods in this state. It directed its agent how and where to ship them. Even after it ceased doing business with plaintiff, it entered into a similar course of business dealings with defendant partnership. It reaped the benefits of our laws that protected its goods while they were here, and it had access to our courts to enforce any rights in regard to these transactions. The alleged cause of action grew directly out of Jahn's relationship with plaintiff and the partnership in this state. See Giusti v. Pyrotechnic Industries, 9 Cir., 156 F.2d 351, 354; Steiner v. 20th Century-Fox Film Corp., 9 Cir., 232 F.2d 190, 198; DeGolia v. Twenticth Century-Fox Films Corp., D.C., 140 F.Supp. 316. Although some of the evidence may be more readily available in New York, there is other evidence already here. That which must be secured from overseas can as easily be presented here as in New York. The inconvenience to Jahn in defending here is relevant (International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 317, 66 S.Ct. 154, 90 L.Ed 95), but "Looking back over this long history of litigation a trend is clearly discernible toward expanding the permissible scope of state jurisdiction over foreign corporations and other nonresidents. In part this is attributable to the fundamental transformation of our national economy over the years. Today many commercial transactions touch two or more States and may involve parties separated by the full continent. With this increasing nationalization of commerce has come a great increase in the amount of business conducted by mail across state lines. At the same time modern transportation and communication have made it much less burdensome for a party sued to defend himself in a State where he engages in economic activity." McGee v. International Life Insurance Company, 78 S.Ct. 199, 201. It also bears emphasis that if plaintiff were unable to bring an action against Jahn here, it would be similarly frustrated with regard to Jahn's codefendants in New York. Two actions instead of one would then be necessary to litigate the existence or nonexistence of a single tortious conspiracy.

"It is evident that the criteria by which we mark the boundary line between those activities which justify the subjection of a corporation to suit, and those which do not, cannot be simply mechanical or quantitative. The test is not merely, as has sometimes been suggested, whether the activity, which the corporation has seen fit to procure through its agents in another state, is a little more or a little less. [Citations.] Whether due process is satisfied must depend rather upon the quality and nature of the activity in relation to the fair and orderly administration of the laws which it was the purpose of the due process clause to insure." International Shoe Co. v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 319, 66 S.Ct. 154, 159.

[4] Jahn's burden of defending here is no greater than plaintiff's burden of suing in New York. The cause of action is directly related to Jahn's dealings with the California plaintiff and the California defendants. A denial of jurisdiction would lead only to a duplicity of litigation. "[T]he quality and nature of the activity in relation to the fair and orderly administration of the laws" fully justifies subjecting Jahn to the jurisdiction of our courts.

The alternative writ is discharged and the peremptory writ denied.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, CARTER, and SPENCE, JJ., concur.

McCOMB, J., dissents.

SCHAUER, Justice (dissenting).

From the record in this case the following facts appear: Petitioner has at no time maintained any offices in California, or made any sales or sales solicitations here. It is the exclusive export agent for American Drying Systems, Inc. (Real Party in Interest), and also the agent for one other California manufacturer. Petitioner places its orders for purchase of the products of these two manufacturers by mail or telephone from New York, and, although the course of purchases is regular, no purchase orders are placed from California. The goods are shipped f. o. b. California, are packaged for shipping in California, and are shipped by the manufacturers to a general forwarding company in California. The forwarding company is selected by petitioner, and receives its shipping instructions directly from petitioner. On two occasions, when the orders were rather large, petitioner sent one of its auditors to California with the check for payment, and he ascertained that the order was properly filled before making payment. Petitioner has apparently had no contacts with California other than those just mentioned.

In the light of the basic facts it appears that in holding that petitioner was "doing business in this State" so as to subject it to service of process pursuant to section 6501 of the Corporations Code, the majority opinion indicates a trend toward, if not implicitly an actual, holding that all persons residing and doing business outside California but who place orders by telephone or correspondence for goods in this state and who arrange (as they must, if the orders are to be filled) for packing, shipping and delivery of the goods so purchased, will thereby become subject to the jurisdiction of California courts and subject to suit in this state. Such a holding seems especially unfortunate and undesirable, particularly for the manufacturers and producers of California, as it must inevitably tend to deter those who are in the market for California products from sending to this state for them. It is a matter of common knowledge that efforts are constantly being made by the various states on both a governmental and a private industry level to attract additional industry and commerce, and I believe that where, as here, the law is at least equally open to a contrary ruling, the court should not choose the course which will be detrimental to the interests of California.

I would grant the peremptory writ.

50 Cal.2d 127

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Elmer TAHTINEN, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 6108.

Supreme Court of California, In Bank.

March 27, 1958.

Prosecution for unlawful possession of narcotics. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Allen T. Lynch, J., entered judgment of conviction and defendant appealed. The Supreme Court, Traynor, J., held that where police officers had reasonable cause to believe that narcotics were being sold by a certain person at his residence, defendant's conduct in the vicinity of such house, parking across the street from such house, entering an alley near such house, driving past such house and stopping and reaching towards the ground at the base of a tree, near alley he had previously entered, gave officers reasonable cause to believe defendant had purchased narcotics and had them in his possession, and therefore, their arrest and search of defendant without a warrant was lawful, and narcotics found as a result of such search were admissible.

Judgment affirmed.

Carter, J., dissented.

Opinion, 309 P.2d 497, vacated.

1. Criminal Law ⇐576(5)

Constitutional right of a defendant to a speedy trial, and statutory requirements as to a speedy trial may be waived. West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 13; West's Ann.Pen. Code, §§ 681a, 686, 995, 1050, 1382.

2. Criminal Law ⇐576(5)

Where defendant in criminal prosecution was represented by counsel, and did not object to date set for trial, even though such date was more than 30 days after entry of his plea of not guilty, he waived his right to have trial set for an earlier date. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1050.

3. Criminal Law ⇐576(5)

Where defendant in a criminal prosecution agreed to a delay in retrial following a mistrial, as requested by the public defender, defendant waived any right to be tried prior to date agreed upon.

4. Criminal Law ⇐589(1), 608

Where the condition of a court's business will not permit a trial to proceed, good cause is shown for a delay in trial, and a continuance is justified, although burden of showing existence of such condition is upon the prosecution.

5. Criminal Law ⇐576(5)

Although a minute notation that criminal case was continued for trial "owing to congested condition of the calendar" fell short of establishing good cause for the delay, in view of fact defendant did not object to the continuance and did not move to dismiss the action, his consent to the delay would be presumed.

6. Criminal Law ⇐576(5)

Assent of a defendant's counsel to a continuance waived defendant's right to complain of continuance of trial date. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1050.

7. Arrest ⇐63(4), 71
Criminal Law ⇐395

Where police officers had reasonable cause to believe that narcotics were being sold by a certain person at his residence, defendant's conduct in the vicinity of such house, parking across the street from such house, entering an alley near such house, driving past such house and stopping and reaching towards the ground at base of a tree, near alley he had previousy entered, gave officers reasonable cause to believe defendant had purchased narcotics and had them in his possession, and therefore their arrest and search of defendant without a warrant was lawful, and narcotics found as a result of such search were admissible, in prosecution of defendant for unlawful possession of narcotics. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11500.

8. Criminal Law ⇐261(2)

In prosecution for unlawful possession of narcotics, rearraignment of defendant after a mistrial was not necessary, and defendant's admission of prior convictions was conclusive in subsequent proceeding. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1025.

9. Indictment and Information ⇐114

In prosecution for unlawful possession of narcotics, information properly charged defendant's prior conviction of a misdemeanor violation of narcotics statute. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, §§ 11500, 11712.

10. Criminal Law ⇐566

In criminal prosecution, mere fact that arresting officers did not identify defendant by name, but merely referred to him as a defendant, did not mean that there was no evidence that defendant was the person who committed the crime, in view of fact it was clear from the record that defendant was the person referred to by the witnesses.

11. Criminal Law ⇐641(1)

In criminal prosecution, defendant would not be deemed to have been denied effective assistance of counsel by virtue of fact that, after a mistrial, when court set a date for retrial, defendant's counsel was not present, in view of fact nothing occurred on such occasion other than setting of a date for retrial, and in view of fact defendant did not suggest how he was injured by absence of counsel on such occasion.

Elmer Tahtinen, in pro. per., and Albert C. Garber, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Clarence A. Linn, Asst. Atty. Gen., William E. James and William M. Bennett, Deputy Attys. Gen., for respondent.

TRAYNOR, Justice.

The trial court, sitting without a jury found defendant guilty of a felony violation of section 11500 of the Health and Safety Code. It also found that he was previously convicted of a felony violation of federal narcotics laws and a misdemeanor violation of section 11500 of the Health and Safety Code and sentenced him to imprisonment in the state penitentiary for the term prescribed by law. See Health & Safety Code, § 11712. Defendant appeals.

It is contended at the outset that defendant was deprived of his right to a speedy trial. See Cal.Const. art I, § 13; Pen. Code, §§ 681a, 686, 1050, 1382. The information was filed November 29, 1955. On December 1, 1955, defendant appeared for arraignment. The public defender was appointed to represent him, and the case was continued to December 6 for plea. On December 6, defendant by his counsel moved to set aside the information (Pen. Code, § 995), and the case was continued for disposition of the motion until December 21. On December 21 the court denied the motion to set aside the information. Defendant pleaded not guilty and denied the prior convictions, and trial was set for January 26, 1956. On January 26, trial was postponed until February 10. On February 10, trial was postponed until February 14. On February 14, trial was postponed until February 15. On February 15, trial was postponed until February 16. On February 16, trial was postponed until February 17. On February 17, trial was postponed until February 20. On February 20, defendant withdrew his former denial and admitted the prior convictions, and trial commenced. On February 21, the jury announced that it was unable to reach a verdict, and the court declared a mistrial and continued the case to February 24. On February 24 trial was reset for March 28. On March 28, defendant waived jury trial and by his counsel stipulated that the case be decided on the evidence produced at the preliminary hearing and such other testimony as either side might adduce. Trial was continued to April 20. On April 20, trial was again continued to April 23. On April 23, trial was completed, and the court found defendant guilty as charged.

[1] Section 1050 of the Penal Code provides: "The court shall set all criminal cases for trial for a date not later than thirty (30) days after the date of entry of the plea of the defendant. No continuance of the trial shall be granted except upon affirmative proof in open court, upon reasonable notice, that the ends of justice require a continuance. * * * Criminal cases shall be given precedence over all civil matters and proceedings. If any court is unable to hear all criminal cases pending before it within thirty (30) days after the respective defendants have entered their pleas, it must immediately notify the Chairman of the Judicial Council." Section 1382 of the Penal Code provides: "The court, unless good cause to the contrary is shown, must order the action to be dismissed in the following cases: * * * 2. If a defendant, whose trial has not been postponed upon his application, is not brought to trial in a superior court within 60 days after * * * filing of the information * * *." It is well settled, however, that the constitutional right to a speedy trial and the foregoing statutory requirements may be waived. Ray v. Superior Court, 208 Cal. 357, 281 P. 391; People v. Echols, 125 Cal.App.2d 810, 818, 271 P.2d 595.

The record does not disclose upon whose application the continuances for plea and for disposition of the motion to set aside the information were granted. Since they were for defendant's benefit, however, they are fairly chargeable to him.

[2] Trial was set for January 26, 1956, more than 30 days after entry of defendant's plea on December 21. It appears, therefore, that section 1050 was not complied with. Since defendant was represented by counsel, however, and did not object to the date set, he waived his right to have the trial set for an earlier date. Ray v. Superior Court, supra, 208 Cal. 357, 358, 281 P. 391; People v. Bradford, 130 Cal.App.2d 606, 607–608, 279 P.2d 561.

[3] The public defender requested the delay from January 26 to February 10 because of his crowded calendar. The court asked defendant whether, under the circumstances, he waived trial at an earlier date. Defendant answered, "Yes." Thus defendant consented to the delay and thereby waived any right to be tried before February 10. In re Lopez, 39 Cal.2d 118, 120, 245 P.2d 1.

[4, 5] By consenting to trial on a date beyond the 60 day period, however, a defendant does not waive the right to speedy trial thereafter, nor does he waive the requirement that further delay be justified by a showing of good cause therefor. In re Lopez, supra, 39 Cal.2d at page 120, 245 P.2d at page 2. Defendant contends that the several postponements from February 10 to February 20 were not justified. The court's minutes disclose that each of these postponements was granted because of the "congested condition of the calendar." In In re Lopez, supra, 39 Cal.2d at page 120, 245 P.2d at page 2, we held that "where the condition of the court's business would not permit the trial to proceed" good cause is shown and a continuance is justified. The burden of showing the existence of this condition, however, is upon the prosecution (People v. Echols, supra, 125 Cal. App.2d at page 816, 271 P.2d at page 599), and on the record before us the prosecution has failed to sustain that burden. The minute notation that the case is continued for trial "owing to congested condition of the calendar" falls short of establishing that trial could not proceed in any department of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County. Herrick v. Municipal Court, 151 Cal.App.2d 804, 312 P.2d 264, and cases there cited; People v. Echols, supra, 125 Cal.App.2d at pages 816–817, 271 P.2d at pages 598–599; Pen.Code, § 1050. Since defendant, however, did not object to these postponements or move to dismiss the action, his consent to the delay is presumed. Ray v. Superior Court, supra, 208 Cal. 357, 358, 281 P. 391.

[6] The People had 60 days from February 21, 1956, the date of the mistrial, to bring defendant to trial a second time. People v. Angelopoulos, 30 Cal.App.2d 538, 543, 86 P.2d 873. On March 28 the transcript of the preliminary hearing was introduced into evidence, and the trial commenced. Further continuances had to be grounded on good cause. Pen.Code, § 1050. The record discloses that the trial did not proceed on March 28 owing to the People's unpreparedness. Apparently April 20 was the earliest date next available to the court, and trial was continued to that date. The public defender accepted the continuance as "satisfactory." His counsel's assent to the continuance waived defendant's right to complain. Ray v. Superior Court, supra, 208 Cal. 357, 358–359, 281 P. 391.

With respect to the continuance from April 20 to April 23, the reporter's transcript reveals the following conversation:

"Mr. Jackson [district attorney]: Your Honor, I think I have already indicated that the People are not ready to proceed at this time because a necessary witness is not here, officer Berteaux and Sergeant Vega, his fellow officer, is on vacation. I heard from officer Berteaux a short time ago, and it will be about forty minutes before he can make it, and I believe counsel would not have any objection to a continuance for one week.

"The Defendant: Your Honor, may I say something? I thought I was entitled to a quick and speedy trial. I have been in jail for five months and twelve days already.

"The Court: You have been in jail five months and twelve days. That is a long time. There is no question about it.

"Mr. Jackson: Your Honor, if the defendant insists on going to trial here today, we can wait for the officer to be here.

"The Court: How about continuing it until Monday at 1:30?

"Mr. Brill [public defender]: I think that would be more satisfactory, your Honor.

* * * * * *

"The Court: Will that be agreeable with you [defendant]?

"The Defendant: It will have to be, I guess."

This conversation reveals that had defendant insisted, trial would have proceeded on April 20. Thus, he consented, even though reluctantly, to the continuance.

[7] The most incriminating evidence introduced by the People was two packages containing 38 capsules of heroin taken from defendant's automobile at the time of his arrest and another capsule of heroin taken from his pocket. Defendant contends that this evidence should have been excluded as the product of an unlawful search.

The police had separately arrested three persons for narcotics offenses, each of whom, at different times and places, informed the police that they had obtained narcotics from one Joe Hernandes at his home at 112 East 111th Street. On November 8, 1955, two officers assigned to the narcotics detail went to the vicinity of Hernandes' residence. As they drove past the house, the officers saw defendant sitting in a 1941 Buick automobile parked across the street. They knew that defendant was not Hernandes. The officers drove around the block, and when they returned defendant was gone. The officers continued to patrol the area. They observed defendant traveling south on Main Street. He turned left on 111th Street, parked on the south side of the street, made a U-turn, and then parked on the north side, across the street from Hernandes' house. Defendant remained in his automobile approximately half an hour and then walked towards Hernandes' house. He disappeared into an alley next to the house, which Hernandes used as a driveway. After 10 or 15 minutes defendant returned to his automobile, drove to the corner of Main Street and 111th, turned right on Main and proceeded north to 110th Street, turned right on 110th and drove east to San Pedro Street, turned right on San Pedro and proceeded south to 111th Place, drove along 111th Place and parked just east of the end of the alley that he had formerly entered. He opened the car door on the passenger side, reached towards the ground at the base of a tree and appeared to pick up some object. Defendant then drove away. The officers followed him a distance of one to three miles, and when defendant stopped at a red light, the officers approached his automobile, identified themselves and arrested him on suspicion of possessing narcotics. A search of the automobile disclosed the two packages of heroin. Defendant was taken to a nearby gas station and searched. The single capsule of heroin was found in his pocket. The officers had no search warrant, nor did they have a warrant for defendant's arrest.

Defendant contends that the officers arrested him without reasonable cause to believe that he had committed a felony (Pen. Code, § 836, subd. 3), and that therefore the search incident to the arrest was illegal. This contention cannot be sustained. The information obtained from the three persons previously arrested gave the officers reasonable cause to believe that narcotics were being sold by Hernandes at his residence, and defendant's furtive conduct in the vicinity of Hernandes' house gave the officers reasonable cause to believe that defendant had purchased narcotics and had them in his possession. This conduct distinguishes the present case from People v. Schraier, 141 Cal.App.2d 600, 297 P.2d 81, which held that merely leaving a house that had been under surveillance is not sufficient to justify arrest. People v. Brown, 45 Cal.2d 640, 290 P.2d 528; People v. Simon, 45 Cal.2d 645, 290 P.2d 531; People v. Yet Ning Yee, 145 Cal.App.2d 513, 302 P.2d 616; People v. Harvey, 142 Cal.App. 2d 728, 299 P.2d 310; and Hernandez v. United States, 9 Cir., 17 F.2d 373, cited in appellant's brief are distinguishable on like grounds.

[8] Other contentions were made by defendant in his brief in propria persona before this court appointed counsel to represent him. He contends that since he was not rearraigned after the mistrial, he did not admit the prior convictions for purposes of retrial. He cites no authority requiring rearraignment after a mistrial and we have discovered none. Nor do we perceive any logical or practical necessity for such a procedure. The record plainly discloses that defendant admitted the prior convictions, and section 1025 of the Penal Code provides that, unless withdrawn by consent of the court, such admission is conclusive in all subsequent proceedings.

[9] Defendant's contention that his prior conviction of a misdemeanor violation of section 11500 of the Health and Safety Code, not being a felony, should not have been charged in the information is likewise without merit. Health & Safety Code, § 11712; see People v. Burke, 47 Cal.2d 45, 50, 301 P.2d 241.

[10] Neither at the preliminary hearing nor at the trial did the arresting officers identify defendant by name. They referred to him simply as "the defendant." Defendant contends that there is, therefore, no evidence that he is the person who committed the crime. It is abundantly clear from the record that defendant is the person referred to by the witnesses.

[11] Lastly, defendant contends that he was denied effective assistance of counsel by virtue of the fact that, after the mistrial, when the court set retrial for March 28, 1956, defendant's counsel was not present. The record does not disclose the reason for counsel's absence. Nothing occurred on this occasion other than the setting of a date for retrial. The date set was well within 60 days after the mistrial (see People v. Angelopoulos, supra, 30 Cal.App. 2d at page 543, 86 P.2d at page 876), and defendant does not suggest how he was injured by the absence of counsel. People v. Rice, 73 Cal. 220, 221–222, 14 P. 851. Moreover, defendant was represented by counsel at the retrial, and the error now complained of was never brought to the attention of the trial court.

The judgment is affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, SCHAUER, SPENCE, and McCOMB, JJ., concur.

CARTER, Justice (dissenting).

I do not agree with the holding of the majority that the arresting officers had reasonable cause to believe that defendant was guilty of a crime and that the search of his automobile was legal, and therefore the heroin found therein was admissible in evidence against him.

In the first place the officers had no reason to be more than merely suspicious that Hernandes was selling drugs, near whose home defendant had parked his car. The officers had arrested three persons on separate occasions who had told them they had obtained the drugs from Hernandes at his home. It does not appear what they were arrested for or that they had possession of or dealt in narcotics.

Secondly, the officers had no reason whatsoever to believe that defendant was committing a crime. They knew nothing of him until they drove by Hernandes' house and saw defendant in a parked car across the street. That certainly gave them no grounds to believe he was committing a crime even if we assume Hernandes was selling narcotics. Next, defendant got out of his car and went into the alley near Hernandes' home. Such conduct gives rise to no grounds for belief of the commission of a crime. There are many reasons why he may have gone into the alley wholly inconsistent with the theory that he had launched on a course of criminal conduct. Later, when defendant drove away in his car for a time and stopped his car, and reached toward the ground, the officers had no reason to believe he was picking up narcotics. There are likewise many reasonable causes for stopping having no connection with criminality. To say that it appeared that defendant had first gone to Hernandes' house and made arrangements to buy some narcotics and later picked them up is pure speculation. If he were going to get narcotics he would have gotten them when he went down the alley, since he apparently was unaware of any police surveillance. The assumptions that must be made are too many and too great. It must be assumed that he went to Hernandes' house merely because he was near there; that Hernandes was selling narcotics; and that he picked up narcotics from the base of the tree although it was not known whether he picked up anything. The majority opinion states he was acting in a furtive manner but there is nothing to show that he was acting furtively or sculking. There is no more here than there was in People v. Martin, 46 Cal.2d 106, 293 P.2d 52, where two men were searched merely because they were in a car parked in lovers' lane. I refer to my discussion there (46 Cal.2d 108, 293 P.2d 53) as being clearly applicable to the case at bar.

Because the evidence against defendant was obtained as the result of an illegal search, I would reverse the judgment.

159 Cal.App.2d 109

In the Matter of the ESTATE of Walter L. LEE, Deceased.

ALMA INVESTMENT COMPANY, a corporation, Appellant,

v.

Leonard T. LEE, Administrator of the Estate of Walter L. Lee, Deceased, and Laurence DeTilla, Respondents.

Civ. 5639.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

April 2, 1958.

Estate proceeding. The Superior Court, Kern County, Norman F. Main, J., vacated order confirming sale of realty, and purchaser appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, J., held that where successful bidder at private sale conducted by administrator was advised that no further bids could be made at hearing for confirmation of sale and bidder was not given notice of time and place of hearing, his failure to be present at the hearing was through mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect, and consequently it was not abuse of discretion to set aside order confirming sale to higher bidder at the hearing.

Order affirmed.

1. Executors and Administrators ⇐149

Where successful bidder at private sale conducted by administrator was advised that no further bids could be made at hearing for confirmation of sale and bidder was not given notice of time and place of hearing, his failure to be present at the hearing was through mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect, and consequently it was not abuse of discretion to set aside order confirming sale to higher bidder at the hearing. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

2. Executors and Administrators ⇐149

Where money paid by higher bidder at hearing to confirm administrator's sale to previous high bidder at private sale was on deposit in trust fund of estate, court could set aside order confirming sale to higher bidder at hearing without ordering return of such money to such bidder; instead, the court could assume that proper disposition of the money would be made by the administrator upon the final determination of the matter. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

Norbert Baumgarten, Lompac, for appellant.

S. B. Gill, Bakersfield, for respondents.

MUSSELL, Justice.

On December 12, 1956, the administrator of the estate of Walter L. Lee, deceased, sold at private sale a parcel of real property belonging to the estate to Laurence DeTilla for the sum of $500. On January 23, 1957, the administrator filed a petition for confirmation of this sale and the petition came on regularly for hearing in the Superior Court on February 11, 1957. Laurence DeTilla was not present at this hearing. The court ordered that the property be sold to appellant Alma Investment Company, a corporation, for the sum of $550 as the corporation had increased DeTilla's bid in open court by ten per cent. and there were no higher bids for the property. This sale was confirmed and the administrator was authorized to transfer and deliver the property to the appellant. On the same day the appellant paid the amount of its bid to DiGiorgio and Davis, attorneys for the administrator, and a receipt was given therefor. No deed to this property has been delivered to the appellant.

On March 5, 1957, Laurence DeTilla filed in the Superior Court a notice of motion to set aside the court's order confirming the said sale to appellant. This motion was based on section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure and on the ground that DeTilla was prevented from being present at the time and place of the hearing of said confirmation for the purpose of protecting his bid and that his failure to be present was through mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect. Affidavits of DeTilla and Naomi Dennis, one of the heirs, and of V. P. DiGiorgio were filed in support of the motion. Affidavits were also filed by Fred Drinkhouse, agent of appellant, and by the administrator. The matter was then heard on these affidavits and the court made and entered an order vacating and setting aside its previous order confirming the sale. This appeal followed.

Appellant claims that the court abused its discretion in vacating the sale to appellant and that the court further abused its discretion in failing to make the return of the purchase price to the buyer as a condition to its order. These arguments are untenable.

In Estate of Herz, 147 Cal.App.2d 100, 106, 305 P.2d 278, this court held that relief under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure may be granted for the purpose of vacating an order confirming a probate sale. (Citing Estate of Moreland, 49 Cal. App.2d 484, 121 P.2d 867, 868; Estate of McCrae, 133 Cal.App.2d 634, 284 P.2d 914, 915.)

In Estate of Moreland, supra, it was held that the probate court has power to vacate an order of confirmation of sale under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure on motion of either a prospective bidder or the administrator. In that case the administrator had by inadvertence and mistake notified both the original and a prospective bidder that the hearing upon the return of sale would be held on a certain date instead of the day for which the hearing had been duly noticed and in fact was held. Relief was granted under section 473, and the court said: "It is the settled law that the section is addressed to the legal discretion of the trial court 'and in the absence of a clear showing of abuse in the exercise thereof an appellate court will not disturb the order of the court below,' * *"

In Estate of McCrae, supra, Ruth and H. A. Grinnell, high bidders at the private sale, were "desirous and anxious" of attending the hearing of the petition for confirmation of sale. Immediately prior to the date set for the hearing, H. A. Grinnell became very ill and it was necessary that Ruth Grinnell attend him during his illness. By reason thereof, neither of said bidders was able to attend the hearing and they were unable to arrange for any representative to be present. The petitioners were prepared to protect their bid for the property and offered to increase it substantially. Relief was granted under section 473 and it was held that there was no abuse of discretion shown; that the vital interest that respondents had in the property, the illness which prevented them from being present at the hearing, and the fact that respondents were thereby rendered unable to protect their prior bid at said hearing, with the further result that the estate was prevented from realizing an increased amount for the property, were all factors to be considered; and that section 473 is remedial in nature, and, in the interest of disposing of matters upon their merit, must be liberally construed.

In Estate of Efird, 130 Cal.App.2d 227, 230, 278 P.2d 730, 732, it was held that "Section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure is applicable to probate proceedings, Estate of Moreland, 49 Cal.App.2d 484, 487, 121 P.2d 867, and is a remedial statute designed to make judicial proceedings equitable and fair and to relieve a party from excusable neglect to take the procedural steps at the precise time designated. Denke v. Bowes, 77 Cal.App.2d 642, 645, 176 P.2d 81."

[1] In the instant case it is stated in the affidavits of Laurence DeTilla, filed in support of his motion, that he was the successful bidder for the property involved at the private sale thereof conducted by the administrator; that he discussed his bid and the sale with V. P. DiGiorgio, the then attorney of record for the administrator; that as a result of said conversation and bid he was informed that it would not be necessary for him to be present at any future court hearing for the purpose of protecting his bid; that he further understood he would be informed of the time and place of any hearing for the confirmation of said sale; that he did not receive any notice of the time and place of hearing of such confirmation and further believed that no one could make any bid in excess of his and thereby acquire title to said property; that had he been advised of the time and place of said hearing, he would have been present; that had he been advised that his successful bid could be set aside in the event of a higher bid in court, he would have taken every precaution to protect his bid and interest in the property; that if the court grants his motion to vacate the sale to Alma Investment Company, he will be present at the new time and place of confirmation and will protect his bid; that he is now prepared to make an offer to purchase the property for the sum of $600, which bid he will reassert in open court at the time of the new hearing; that at the time he was advised by attorney DiGiorgio that he was the successful bidder for the property, DiGiorgio stated that he (affiant) was then the owner of the property and that he could sell or assign his rights in the property to any one whom he desired; that he was informed at this time that a court order would be issued confirming the sale and that he would receive a deed to the property forthwith.

Naomi Dennis stated in her affidavit that prior to the confirmation of the sale to appellant she discussed the sale and the bid of DeTilla with V. P. DiGiorgio, attorney for the administrator; that she understood from said discussion that no further bids could be made at the hearing for confirmation and that notice thereof would be mailed to her; that she did not know the time and place actually set and for that reason was not present.

The facts set forth in the foregoing affidavits were sufficient to justify the trial court in setting aside the sale to appellant under the rules heretofore announced.

[2] We find no reversible error in the failure of the trial court to make the return of the purchase price to appellant a condition of the order setting aside the sale. The record indicates that the money paid by appellant was and is deposited in a trust fund of the estate and it is assumed that proper disposition of this sum will be made by the administrator upon the final determination of the matters here involved.

Order affirmed.

BARNARD, P. J., and GRIFFIN, J., concur.

159 Cal.App.2d 67

Alice M. WALKER, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Jefferson WALKER, Defendant and Respondent.

No. 17576.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

April 1, 1958.

Divorce action. The Superior Court, San Mateo County, Aylett R. Cotton, J., entered an order refusing to find husband guilty of contempt and denying wife's application for support and maintenance pendente lite, counsel fees and costs, and wife appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held that where husband failed to file a reply brief, and failed to comply with a previous order for support, District Court of Appeal would assume that point made by wife for reversal of order denying her application for support and maintenance pendente lite, counsel fees and costs, was meritorious, and would reverse order denying such application.

Appeal from order dismissing contempt application dismissed; remaining portions of order reversed.

1. Contempt ⇐66(2)

An order refusing to hold a litigant in contempt, as well as one holding him in contempt, is not appealable.

2. Divorce ⇐262, 286

Where husband failed to file a reply brief, and failed to comply with a previous order for support, District Court of Appeal would assume that point made by wife for reversal of order denying her application for support and maintenance pendente lite, counsel fees and costs was meritorious, and would reverse order denying such application.

3. Divorce ⇐188, 213, 225

A property settlement agreement pursuant to a divorce action does not deprive a court of power to award temporary support, attorney's fees and costs pendente lite. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 137.2, 137.3.

Athearn & Athearn, San Francisco, for appellant.

Joseph B. Bates, San Francisco, for respondent.

BRAY, Justice.

Plaintiff appeals from a minute order refusing to find defendant guilty of contempt of court and denying her application for support and maintenance pendente lite, counsel fees and costs.[1]

1. Defendant heretofore appealed from an order setting aside and vacating the interlocutory decree of divorce. February 13, 1958, we dismissed this appeal under rule 17(a), Rules on Appeal, for defendant's failure to file an appellant's brief.

Questions Presented.

1. Is order denying contempt appealable?

2. Effect of defendant's failure to file reply brief.

Record.

March 19, 1956, an interlocutory decree of divorce was granted plaintiff on the ground of desertion. It approved a property settlement agreement dated March 2, 1956. June 8, said decree, on plaintiff's motion on the ground of mistake, inadvertence, etc., was set aside as of May 25. May 25, plaintiff filed an amended complaint adding extreme cruelty and adultery as additional grounds of divorce. June 8, 1956, an order was filed terminating as of March 2 temporary support payments (apparently ordered February 15, 1955) without prejudice to plaintiff's right to again apply therefor. Thereafter, by order to show cause, plaintiff sought to have defendant adjudged guilty of contempt of court for failure to pay the temporary support due as of March 2.[2] At the same time she applied for support pendente lite, counsel fees and costs. The minute order of June 28 provided "Contempt order dismissed; * * * property settlement and agreement made 2nd day of March, '56, in full force and effect; temporary support and counsel fees denied without prejudice." It further provided that defendant must pay support accrued prior to March 2.

1. Denial of Contempt Not Appealable.

[1] It is well settled that an order refusing to hold a litigant in contempt, as well as one holding him in contempt, is not appealable. "The judgment and orders of the court or judge, made in cases of contempt, are final and conclusive." Code Civ. Proc. § 1222; Thomas v. Thomas, 4 Cal.App.2d 317, 318, 40 P.2d 581; Cesena v. Cesena, 103 Cal.App.2d 212, 229 P.2d 453; John Breuner Co. v. Bryant, 36 Cal.2d 877, 229 P.2d 356.

2. Defendant's Failure To File Brief.

[2, 3] Applicable here is the following from Postin v. Griggs, 66 Cal.App.2d 147, 148, 151 P.2d 887: "Although given ample opportunity to do so, respondent has not seen fit to file a brief on this appeal. As a result, the cause has been submitted on appellant's opening brief pursuant to Rule 17(b) of the Rules on Appeal. Under the provisions of that rule we are entitled to accept as true the statement of facts in the opening brief. We are under no duty to seek out points of law in support of the judgment, are entitled to assume that respondent has abandoned any attempt to support the judgment, and that the point made by appellant for reversal is meritorious." See also Yarbrough v. Yarbrough, 144 Cal.App.2d 610, 301 P.2d 426; 4 Cal. Jur.2d 334–335. In the Postin and Yarbrough cases we discussed the merits of the appeal in spite of the respondents' failures to file briefs. Under the circumstances of this case, however, where in addition to failing to perfect his own appeal and to file a reply brief on plaintiff's appeal, defendant has failed to comply with the court's order for support from which no appeal was taken, we see no reason to depart from the rule above mentioned other than to call the trial court's attention to Locke Paddon v. Locke Paddon, 194 Cal. 73, 81, 227 P. 715, and Steinmetz v. Steinmetz, 67 Cal.App. 195, 196, 227 P. 713, holding that a property settlement agreement does not deprive the court of the power under former section 137, Civil Code (now § 137.2 and § 137.3) to award temporary support, attorney's fees and costs pendente lite.

Plaintiff's appeal from that part of the order which dismisses the contempt application is dismissed. The remaining portions of the order are reversed. Plaintiff will recover costs.

PETERS, P. J., and FRED B. WOOD, J., concur.

2. The order vacating the interlocutory decree of divorce stated that it was without prejudice to plaintiff's right to the support payments which had accrued prior to March 2, 1956.

159 Cal.App.2d 160

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Frank BAHARA, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 6102.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

April 3, 1958.

Defendant was convicted in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, John G. Barnes, J., for statutory rape, and he appealed. The District Court of Appeals, Vallée, J., held that effect on complaining witness' testimony of her failure to inform anyone of alleged offense for a period of two months was a matter for trial court rather than for reviewing court.

Affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇐260(11)

It was function of trial court, not reviewing court, to resolve inconsistencies and contradictions, if any, in testimony of complaining witness in statutory rape prosecution.

2. Criminal Law ⇐553

Trier of fact may believe and accept part of testimony of witness and disbelieve remainder.

3. Criminal Law ⇐1144(13)

On appeal, that part of evidence which supports the judgment, rather than that which tends to defeat it, must be accepted.

4. Criminal Law ⇐553

Testimony is not inherently improbable unless it appears that what was related or described could not have occurred.

5. Criminal Law ⇐1159(2)

Even testimony which is subject to justifiable suspicion does not warrant reversal of judgment.

6. Criminal Law ⇐260(11)

Effect on complaining witness' testimony of her failure to inform anyone of alleged offense for a period of two months was a matter for trial court, in statutory rape prosecution, rather than for reviewing court.

7. Rape ⇐52(1)

Statutory rape conviction was sustained by evidence.

Frank Bahara, in pro. per., for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., and Lynn Henry Johnson, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

VALLÉE, Justice.

Defendant was convicted of statutory rape. The complaining witness was an unmarried girl 16 years of age. Defendant appeals from the decision finding him guilty and from the judgment.

On a Thursday in March 1957 six or seven young folks, including the complaining witness and defendant, had a party in a home in Sun Valley, Los Angeles County. All of the participants except the complaining witness and defendant left the party to go to a liquor store. The complaining witness testified that while the others were gone defendant committed the act charged.

Defendant's only contention is that the testimony of the complaining witness was internally conflicting; that it was so inherently improbable as to be unworthy of belief; and that it was contradicted by his testimony. He asserts that at one time the complaining witness testified she and defendant were alone 45 minutes and at another time they were alone an hour. He says at one time she testified there were seven persons at the party and at another time there were ten persons present. And he says he contradicted her testimony by positively testifying they were alone only ten minutes, and there were only six persons present.

[1–3] It was the function of the trial court, not this court, to resolve inconsistencies and contradictions, if any, in the testimony of the complaining witness. The trier of fact may believe and accept a part of the testimony of a witness and disbelieve the remainder. On appeal that part which supports the judgment must be accepted, not that part which would defeat, or tend to defeat, the judgment. People v. Thomas, 103 Cal.App.2d 669, 672, 229 P.2d 836.

[4, 5] Testimony is not inherently improbable unless it appears that what was related or described could not have occurred. Trancoso v. Trancoso, 96 Cal.App.2d 797, 798, 216 P.2d 172. "[T]he rule is well settled that to warrant the rejection of the statements given by a witness who has been believed by a jury, or trial court, there must exist either a physical impossibility that they are true, or their falsity must be apparent without resorting to inferences or deductions, People v. Huston, 21 Cal.2d 690, 693, 134 P.2d 758, and it is the exclusive province of the trial judge or jury to determine the credibility of a witness and the truth or falsity of the facts upon which a determination depends, Hicks v. Ocean Shore Railroad, Inc., 18 Cal.2d 773, 781, 117 P.2d 850." People v. Simpson, 43 Cal.2d 553, 562, 275 P.2d 31, 36. Even testimony which is subject to justifiable suspicion does not warrant the reversal of a judgment. People v. Cahan, 141 Cal.App.2d 891, 897, 297 P.2d 715.

[6, 7] We find no physical impossibility in the facts testified to by the complaining witness and there is no apparent falsity in her story. Defendant argues her testimony should be rejected because she waited two months before informing anyone the act had been committed. That fact does not brand her statements as false. She testified she revealed the fact when she discovered she was pregnant. The effect on her testimony of her failure to inform anyone for a period of two months was a matter for the trial court, not this court. The finding of guilt is amply supported by the record.

The appeal from the nonappealable decision finding defendant guilty is dismissed. The judgment is affirmed.

SHINN, P. J., and PARKER WOOD, J., concur.

158 Cal.App.2d 756

CARL E. ANDERSON COMPANY, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

John W. MAUCK, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 17560.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

March 27, 1958.

Rehearing Denied April 25, 1958.

Hearing Denied May 21, 1958.

Proceeding on motion to set aside default judgment in action for goods sold and delivered over a period of years. The Superior Court, County of Santa Clara, William W. Jacka, J., entered order setting aside default judgment and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Dooling, J., held that where record showed that defendant's bookkeeper had died after complaint had been served and another bookkeeper was employed to examine and recapitulate records, but after working thereon past date on which default was taken, advised defendant that he could not properly compile such accounting information, there was no abuse of discretion by trial court in finding that neglect of defendant's attorney in failing to file answer until he had a report, was excusable.

Order affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐935(2)
Judgment ⇐135

Fixed policy of law always is to allow a controversy to be tried and determined on its merits, and appellate courts are disposed to affirm an order to that effect and in determining an appeal from such an order appellate court will resolve any doubts in favor of application for such relief.

2. Judgment ⇐143(3)

In proceeding on motion to set aside default judgment in action for goods sold and delivered over a period of years, where record disclosed that defendant's bookkeeper died subsequent to service of summons and complaint and that another person was employed to examine books and recapitulate records but on date after which default was taken he reported that he could not properly compile accounting information, there was no abuse of discretion by trial court in finding that the neglect of defendant's attorney in waiting for report before filing answer, was excusable.

Costello & Johnson, Palo Alto, for appellant.

Haley & Rockefeller, Sunnyvale, for respondent.

DOOLING, Justice.

This is an appeal from an order setting aside a default judgment. The complaint was for goods sold and delivered over a period of years. The complaint was filed on November 28, 1955, and respondent's bank account was attached on December 27, 1955. By stipulation this attachment was dissolved on January 11, 1956, upon respondent's filing a bond.

Summons and complaint were not served on respondent until February 28, 1956. After several oral demands that an answer be filed, on March 29, 1956, counsel for respondent sent a letter to counsel for appellant stating that respondent's accountant had recently died and for that reason there had been a delay in compiling the necessary information and promising an answer the following week. No answer was filed and on May 2, 1956, demand was made on respondent's attorneys to file an answer within ten days or a default would be taken. Default was taken and a default judgment entered on June 4, 1956.

The affidavit in support of the motion to set aside the default stated that on March 16, 1956, respondent's regular accountant and bookkeeper, who had kept all of his books for seven years, had died; that the action involves accounting information of a varied and intricate nature and to properly file a pleading it is necessary that the accounting records be recapitulated back to the year 1953; that respondent employed an accountant named Zink to examine and recapitulate said records and that after working thereon from about April 1, 1956, to June 15, 1956, Zink advised respondent that it would be impossible for him to properly compile said accounting information.

[1] In Beckley v. Reclamation Board, 48 Cal.2d 710, 718, 312 P.2d 1098, 1103, our Supreme Court reaffirmed the long-settled rule that it is "* * * the fixed policy of the law always to allow a controversy to be tried and determined on its merits"; that appellate courts "* * * are disposed to affirm an order to that effect [citation] and in determining an appeal from such an order will resolve any doubts in favor of the application for such relief."

So in Benjamin v. Dalmo Mfg. Co., 31 Cal.2d 523, 525, 190 P.2d 593, 594, the same court said: "This court has always looked with favor upon orders excusing defaults and permitting controversies to be heard upon their merits. Such orders are rarely reversed, and never 'unless it clearly appears that there has been a plain abuse of discretion.'"

[2] Here, while the neglect of respondent's attorneys is clear, the excuse for that neglect is that counsel did not have sufficient facts upon which to base an answer by reason of the death of respondent's bookkeeper and that respondent's attorneys were awaiting a report from another accountant to whom the matter was entrusted and who was actually examining the accounts from April 1, 1956, until June 15, 1956—a date after the default was in fact entered.

Whether the conduct of respondent's attorneys in waiting for this report before filing an answer was "excusable" presented a question for the trial court, and under the liberal rules established for the consideration of appeals from orders granting relief from defaults we cannot find that the trial judge was clearly guilty of a plain abuse of discretion in finding that the neglect of respondent's counsel was excusable under the circumstances.

Order affirmed.

KAUFMAN, P. J., and DRAPER, J., concur.

158 Cal.App.2d 785

Patrick Thomas HANCOCK, Travis Lafferty, Joseph Chasin, and Holden Hayden, Plaintiffs and Appellants,

v.

Hugh M. BURNS, individually and as Chairman of the Senate Fact Finding Committee on Un-American Activities (a California Legislative Committee); The Senate Fact Finding Committee on Un-American Activities (a California Legislative Committee); Nathan F. Coombs, Earl D. Desmond, John F. McCarthy and John F. Thompson, individually and as members of said Committee; Richard E. Combs, individually and as Chief Counsel for said Committee, Defendants and Respondents.

No. 16902.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

March 28, 1958.

Rehearing Denied April 25, 1958.

Hearing Denied May 21, 1958.

Suit against members of Senate Fact Finding Committee on Un-American Activities, in their official and individual capacities, on ground that defendants maliciously induced plaintiffs' employer to discharge plaintiffs for plaintiffs' alleged refusal to cooperate with Committee. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Frank T. Deasy, J., entered a judgment in favor of defendants after demurrer to complaint had been sustained without leave to amend, and the plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, McMurray, J. pro tem., held that the action of the members of Senate Fact Finding Committee on Un-American Activities in recommending that plaintiffs' employer discharge plaintiffs was protected by members' legislative immunity from suit.

Affirmed.

1. Torts ⇐12

A cause of action may lie for wrongfully inducing one to breach a contract of employment if such act is not protected by some privilege of immunity.

2. Pleading ⇐214(2)

The general rule of pleading that a demurrer admits the fact pleaded has no application to facts of which the court may take judicial notice.

3. Pleading ⇐214(5)

A demurrer does not give statements of contentions and conclusions alleged in complaint the status of admitted facts, nor does it admit deductions the pleader draws from the facts alleged, nor does it admit allegations of conclusions of law.

4. Pleading ⇐214(5)

In suit against members of Senate Fact Finding Committee on Un-American Activities on ground that defendants maliciously induced plaintiffs' employer to discharge plaintiffs for plaintiffs' alleged refusals to cooperate with Committee, allegations that defendants acted in their individual capacities was a "conclusion of law" not required to be accepted as true on demurrer to the complaint.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Conclusion of Law".

5. Pleading ⇐214(5)

In suit against members of Senate Fact Finding Committee on Un-American Activities on ground that defendants maliciously induced plaintiffs' employer to discharge plaintiffs for plaintiffs' alleged refusals to cooperate with Committee, allegations that defendants had no authority to make recommendations to employer, that defendants' acts were not within sphere of any legitimate legislative activity and that such acts were done maliciously were "conclusions of law" not required to be accepted as true on demurrer to complaint.

6. Pleading ⇐225(1)

The right to amend a complaint after a demurrer is sustained should not be lightly denied, but it is proper to sustain demurrer without leave to amend when complaint cannot be amended to state a cause of action.

7. Action ⇐12

The courts have privilege and duty of protecting personal civil rights of citizens, but when enforcement of such personal civil rights results in erosion of the government which alone can guarantee such rights, the obligation to society as a whole may dictate that individual forego personal recovery for injuries suffered so that government may continue.

8. Officers ⇐114

The doctrine of separation of powers is recognized as essential to a free form of government wherein public officers may perform their duties untrammelled by fear of sanction in the form of personal liability if it transpires that their acts were unwise or based upon a misinterpretation of the law.

9. States ⇐28(2)

Action of members of Senate Fact Finding Committee on Un-American activities in recommending that plaintiffs' employer discharge plaintiffs for plaintiffs' alleged refusals to cooperate with Committee was protected by members' legislative immunity from suit. Const. art. 4, § 37.

Albert M. Bendich, Staff Counsel, American Civil Liberties Union, Lawrence Speiser, Rubin Tepper, San Francisco, Edward F. Newman, Hayward, for appellants.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Clarence A. Linn, Asst. Atty. Gen., Raymond M. Momboisse, Deputy Atty. Gen., Ralph N. Kleps, Legislative Counsel, Charles W. Johnson, Chief Deputy Counsel, Sacramento, Melvin, Faulkner, Sheehan & Wiseman, San Francisco, for respondents.

McMURRAY, Justice pro tem.

The four plaintiffs filed a complaint against the several named defendants in their individual capacities and as members of "The Senate Fact Finding Committee on Un-American Activities" (a California Legislative Committee) except in the case of Hugh M. Burns who was sued individually and as chairman of said committee and Richard E. Combs who was sued individually and as chief counsel for said committee.

Each plaintiff sued for the violation of rights common to all plaintiffs and alleged in the complaint that the same right to relief arose out of the same series of acts of the defendants therein named.

Each plaintiff alleged employment by the Pacific Gas and Electric Company in the following respective employment: meter reader, apprentice electrician, cable splicer and power lineman; and each alleged different damages for the injuries sought to be alleged in the complaint. Other than these differences, the causes of action sought to be alleged by plaintiffs were identical.

Each plaintiff alleged that the respective defendants were chairman, members, and chief counsel of the named committee at all times mentioned in the complaint; each plaintiff alleged his employment by the Pacific Gas and Electric Company in his particular capacity and alleged that he "always conducted himself in an efficient and punctual manner and was deservedly held in great esteem and credit by his employer and those with whom he worked. That by means of such employment, plaintiff daily acquired divers great gains, profits and emoluments to the support and maintenance of himself and his family and the great increase of his future."

Each plaintiff alleged that at a subcommittee meeting on August 10, 1953, after being subpoenaed, he was asked questions by defendants Burns, Thompson, Coombs, and Desmond as members and defendant Combs as chief counsel, of the said committee and that the said plaintiffs and each of them relying on their rights and privileges under the Constitutions of the United States and of the State of California, including the right not to be witnesses against themselves as provided in the Fifth Amendment of the United States Constitution, refused to answer questions concerning their political beliefs, associations and affiliations. Each plaintiff alleged that subsequent to said hearing the subcommittee and said defendant committee and the defendants individually and as chairman, members, and chief counsel for said committee "did wilfully, wrongfully and maliciously recommend that the said Pacific Gas and Electric Company discharge the plaintiffs and each of them and did wilfully, wrongfully and maliciously induce the said Company to discharge plaintiffs for the plaintiffs' alleged refusals to co-operate with said Committee and on the grounds that the plaintiffs were poor security risks. That said defendant Committee and defendants Burns, Coombs, Desmond, McCarthy and Thompson, individually and as members of said Committee, and defendant Combs, individually and as chief counsel of said Committee, have no authority by reason of legislative action or authority, or by law or custom to make such recommendations nor to induce said Company to discharge the plaintiffs, and that such actions on the part of the defendants were not within the sphere of any legitimate legislative activity. That said recommendations and inducements were made for the sole purpose of injuring the plaintiffs in their employment and the divers great gains, profits the plaintiffs would accrue from their continued employment with said Company."

Each plaintiff alleged that the Pacific Gas and Electric Company on August 14, 1953, acting solely on the basis of the above stated recommendations and inducements, discharged the plaintiffs and each plaintiff further alleges that Pacific Gas and Electric Company thereafter notified the union to which plaintiffs belonged to the effect that said company was acting solely on the basis of the above stated recommendations and inducements in discharging said plaintiffs. A copy of the notification from the company to the union is incorporated by reference in each count of the complaint.

Each plaintiff alleged that he was ready, willing and able to resume his employment for the company. Each plaintiff alleged "[t]he plaintiffs are not potential saboteurs, security risks, nor are they unfit for continued employment by said Pacific Gas and Electric Company. The plaintiffs are loyal citizens of the United States of America and would not commit any action to hurt the security of said nation." Each plaintiff also alleged that the acts and things complained of were a violation of plaintiffs' rights under the Constitution and laws of the United States and the Constitution and laws of the State of California. A demurrer was interposed to the above complaint. Defendants annexed to their demurrer a copy of Senate Resolution No. 127, as amended, relative to creating the Senate Fact Finding Committee on Un-American Activities. The demurrer was sustained without leave to amend and judgment was entered in favor of defendants. From this judgment the plaintiffs appeal.

Appellants here contend that their complaint sufficiently states a cause of action in tort for wrongful inducement of a breach of contract; that the complaint does not contain facts either on its face or from facts of which judicial notice must be taken which show that respondents' conduct was privileged; and that defendants were not protected by the doctrine of sovereign immunity, and ask that judgment of dismissal entered on the demurrer sustained without leave to amend be reversed.

Respondents contend that the demurrer was properly sustained without leave to amend because the lower court, having taken judicial notice of certain facts which, when read with the complaint, disclose the following defenses: absolute privilege for legislative acts within the sphere of legislative authority; qualified privilege for fair and true reports of the proceedings of a public meeting lawfully convened for a lawful purpose and open to the public; privilege to induce a breach of contract under section 767 of the Restatement of Torts (social interest to be protected; relationship of the parties); and privilege to induce another to stand upon his legal rights. They also urge that by allowing a cause of action for wrongful inducement to breach a contract under the facts here presented would destroy the immunity given public officials when acting in their official capacity and mention that a judgment should not be reversed to permit recovery of nominal damages.

[1] At the outset, it may be said that in this state a cause of action may lie for wrongfully inducing one to breach a contract of employment if such act is not protected by some privilege of immunity. Imperial Ice Co. v. Rossier, 18 Cal.2d 33, 112 P.2d 631. The principal question before this court, therefore, is whether or not, under the facts stated in the complaint, defendants may rely on a privilege for making a communication such as is here alleged or whether they may assert an immunity to suit for damages by reason of their status as legislators.

[2] Although it is often stated that in considering a demurrer a court is bound to accept the truth of the allegations thereof, this statement may, in certain instances, be modified where, by the nature of the pleading, the court is apprised of the existence of a fact or facts of which it is bound to take judicial notice under the laws of this state. In 39 Cal.Jur.2d, § 22, under the title "Facts Judicially Noticed" it is said: "* * * In determining the sufficiency of a pleading, it may be read as though it included all such facts, though not pleaded, and even when the pleading contains an express allegation to the contrary. But the general rule of pleading that a demurrer admits the facts pleaded has no application to facts of which the court may take judicial notice. Allegations contrary to facts which the court may judicially notice are not admitted by demurrer, but must be disregarded and treated as a nullity." The complaint here containing, as it does, a reference to Senate Resolution No. 127 would appear well within this rule. The trial court was bound to consider the contents of this Senate Resolution.

[3, 4] Furthermore, it is well settled that a demurrer does not give statements of contentions and conclusions alleged in a complaint the status of admitted facts (Howard v. City of Los Angeles, 143 Cal. App.2d 195, 299 P.2d 294), nor does it admit the deductions the pleader draws from the facts alleged, nor does it admit allegations of conclusions of law. The allegations contained in the complaint before us relative to the capacity in which defendants here acted is a conclusion of law. See Jackson & Perkins Co. of California v. Byron-Bethany Irr. Dist., 136 Cal.App. 375, 29 P.2d 217, 30 P.2d 516. Neither does the use of the words "wilfully, wrongfully and maliciously" add to the pleadings except as they may convey a sense of outrage on the part of plaintiff.

[5] The allegation that the defendants had no authority to make such recommendations is a conclusion as is the statement that defendants' acts were not within the sphere of any legitimate legislative activity. The allegation that an act was done maliciously has been held to be a conclusion (Locke v. Mitchell, 7 Cal.2d 599, 61 P.2d 922).

[6] It is a familiar rule in this state that the right to amend a complaint after a demurrer is sustained should not be lightly denied (Romano v. Wilbur Ellis & Co., 82 Cal.App.2d 670, 186 P.2d 1012). It is, however, proper to sustain a demurrer without leave to amend when the complaint cannot be amended to state a cause of action.

The appellants ably and forcefully contend that the mere fact that some of the complaint is based upon conclusions does not justify the ruling of the court below and state that the real question here presented is whether respondents may claim that they had a privileged relationship with Pacific Gas and Electric Company to induce a breach of contract between that company and appellants.

The respondents urge that the complaint, when read in conjunction with the Senate Resolution creating the committee, discloses that respondents were acting under color of their legislative authority and were immune from civil liability. The contents of Senate Resolution No. 127 are sufficient to constitute the committee as a committee of that body as expressly authorized by our state Constitution in Article IV, section 37. The committee, by this resolution, is created and authorized and directed to investigate, ascertain, study and analyze all facts relating directly or indirectly to certain outlined un-American activities. The committee, by this resolution, is also empowered and directed in paragraph 5(d) thereof "[t]o report its findings and recommendations to the Legislature and to the people from time to time and at any time, not later than herein provided." The argument of appellants as to the possible immunity of defendants for the acts here complained of may be summarized as contending that the respondents may not avail themselves of any sovereign immunity since, by exceeding the sphere of proper legislative power, the defendants have lost the right to claim such immunity.

There is no question that Article IV, section 11, of our state Constitution, providing for legislators' privilege from arrest does not here apply, nor is it here involved. Appellants further urge that by the demurrer here interposed the respondents waived any defense which they might have upon this ground as this demurrer was in fact a general appearance. This latter contention would seem to be more sophistic than real. The first ground of demurrer stated is that the court has no jurisdiction of the defendants or any of them or of the subject matter of the action. Appellants suggest that, even by reading the complaint in conjunction with Senate Resolution No. 127, it cannot be assumed that the defendants did not exceed the scope of legislative authority.

While Senate Resolution No. 127 does not, nor could it, authorize the commission of a tortious act, nevertheless, it does establish a committee of the state Senate authorized to act as an official adjunct of that body. Such committees are expressly authorized by our state Constitution in Article IV, section 37. Therefore, by reading the Resolution in conjunction with the complaint, it becomes apparent that the conjunctive pleading of respondents' status (as to respondents' having acted both as committee members and as individuals in doing the acts here complained of) must be grounded on reasoning that by going outside the legislative sphere the defendants were stripped of any legislative immunity and stand before the court as individuals.

This theory of the evaporative quality of legislative immunity, by its very statement, discloses its own vice. If government, operating through the individuals who form it, is afforded immunity from private suit only when its actions are beyond any question, and loses that immunity upon mere allegation of improper motives or unlawful acts in a complaint seeking damages, then those persons who form government are subject to the threat of personal liability in any matter in which their discretion is exercised.

The fact that a legislative committee erroneously exercised powers, in a mistaken belief that it has such powers, would immediately subject its members to the harassment of litigation. What would a logical extension of this rule lead to so far as the judiciary is concerned? Would a judge who mistakenly assumed jurisdiction in a proceeding be liable to personal suit by an aggrieved party litigant who merely alleged wilfullness, wrongfullness and malice? Would not such a rule require the examination of the motives as well as the propriety of all governmental actions by our courts? We think so.

The basic principle of separation of powers which is one of the bases for our entire form of constitutional government would be diluted to a point where the judicial branch, because of artful allegations in a complaint, would be required to reexamine every act of the executive and legislative branches which had an adverse effect upon any individual.

[7] Granting that the courts have the privilege and the duty of protecting the personal civil rights of the citizens of this country from abuse, nevertheless, when the enforcement of such personal civil rights results in an erosion of the government which alone can guarantee such rights, the obligation to society as a whole may dictate that the individual forego personal recovery for injury suffered so that government may continue.

It has often been said that when elected officials so conduct themselves as to indicate a lack of essential obligation to their responsibilities there are remedies available to the electorate which can correct these abuses; also the power of impeachment still exists. "The Constitution has left the performance of many duties in our governmental scheme to depend on the fidelity of the executive and legislative action and, ultimately, on the vigilance of the people in exercising their political rights." Colegrove v. Green, 328 U.S. 549, 556, 66 S.Ct. 1198, 1201, 90 L.Ed. 1432.

It will no doubt be argued that, by holding the action here taken by the committee as within the protection afforded by legislative immunity, the members of such a committee could commit any tortious act by claiming it to be within the same rule. The argument would, however, fail. Were the committee or its members charged with the commission of some bodily injury inflicted on another in the course of conducting their hearings, such act could not reasonably be urged to come within the immunity here stated, as the mere recitation of the infliction of bodily harm is a statement of an act which by no reasonable means could be encompassed by the immunity.

The act here complained of is one which was committed by the use of the ordinary means adopted by such committees in reporting their findings and conclusions; namely, the preparation and forwarding of a written communication.

[8] One of the basic foundations of our constitutional government is to be found in the separation of powers. This doctrine has been recognized as essential to a free form of government wherein public officers may perform their duties untrammelled by fear of sanction in the form of personal liability if it transpires that their acts were unwise or based upon a misinterpretation of the law. Much has been written, commencing with Montesquieu in the 18th century, and continuing up to date, regarding the necessity or advisability of continuing the doctrine of the separation of powers. It has been said, "The problems of government are complicated and difficult of solution. But must it not be apparent to everyone, as we gaze into the future, that we cannot hope to maintain the way of life which we call American without exercising every effort to preserve to each branch of government its proper sphere and to the states and the Union a due recognition of their proper functions." (The Doctrine of the Separation of Powers and its Present Day Significance, Arthur T. Vanderbilt, p. 142.)

The rights here sought to be enforced are assuredly rights to which a citizen of this country is entitled unless, in the exercise of those rights, the person committing the act is protected by some privilege or immunity. This concept is recognized in section 767 of Restatement of Torts, where it is said, "In determining whether there is a privilege to act in the manner stated in § 766, the following are important factors:

"(a) the nature of the actor's conduct,

"(b) the nature of the expectancy with which his conduct interferes,

"(c) the relations between the parties,

"(d) the interest sought to be advanced by the actor and

"(e) the social interests in protecting the expectancy on the one hand and the actor's freedom of action on the other hand."

It will be noted that under subdivision (e) the social interest of the persons involved must be considered by a court. When so considered, we feel that the continuance of the basic doctrine of the separation of powers has more social importance than is here presented by the individual defendants.

[9] In view of our holding that the action of respondents here was protected by their legislative immunity from suit, it is not necessary to discuss the other points urged by appellants. The immunity appearing on the face of the complaint, it would be useless to allow amendment.

The judgment is affirmed.

PETERS, P. J., and BRAY, J., concur.

Hearing denied; CARTER and TRAYNOR, JJ., dissenting.

159 Cal.App.2d 18

W. C. DILLON & COMPANY, Inc., Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

James William BARTON and Francis McCoach Barton, as Individuals and as Executors of the Estate of John A. Barton, Deceased, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 22765.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

March 31, 1958.

Action by grantee to quiet title to southerly 30 feet of lot conveyed to grantee under deed reserving southerly 30 feet for future road purposes. From adverse judgment of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Alfred Paonessa, J., the grantee appealed. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that evidence was insufficient to sustain finding that grantee had erected a fence on easements of defendants preventing use of said easements by defendants and grantor's successors in interest, and that fence constituted an unlawful interference with defendants' easement rights.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for new trial.

1. Evidence ⇐450(3)

When a deed does not expressly declare easement to be appurtenant or when language of deed is ambiguous, and it does not clearly appear whether easement was intended to be in gross or appurtenant to land, evidence aliunde the document is admissible to determine nature of easement and to establish a dominant tenement.

2. Appeal and Error ⇐671(1)

Reviewing court must review the record as it was actually made and not as it should have been made.

3. Easements ⇐61(9)

In action by grantee to quiet title to southerly 30 feet of lot conveyed to grantee under deed reserving the southerly 30 feet for future road purposes, evidence was insufficient to sustain finding that grantee had erected a fence on easements of defendants preventing use of said easements by the defendants and grantor's successors in interest and that fence constituted an unlawful interference with defendants' easement rights.

4. Easements ⇐50, 51

Owner of servient estate has right to use lands subject to a nonexclusive easement for any purpose or in any manner that does not interfere unreasonably with rights of owner of dominant estate.

5. Easements ⇐61(8)

A judgment requiring removal of any existing fence allegedly interfering with easement rights of another should be supported by pleading and proof showing that its existence constitutes such an interference.

Managh, Reese & Christl, Beverly Hills, by John D. Glynn, Beverly Hills, for appellant.

Dryer, Hails, Burris & Lagerlof, Los Angeles, by H. Jess Senecal, Los Angeles, for respondent.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

Defendant, a subdivider, conveyed three residential lots to the plaintiff by grant deeds which reserved an easement in the following language: "Reserving therefrom unto the Grantor herein the described property for reservation of future road purposes the southerly 30 feet * * *" of the described lots. Prior to the conveyances to plaintiff of said lots, numbered 12, 13 and 14, defendant owned lots 12 to 18 inclusive which were in a series numbered from west to east. The apparent purpose of the reservation was to provide for an east-west roadway or street along and over the southerly ends of the lots mentioned. After the conveyances to plaintiff, defendant conveyed lots 15 and 16 to third parties by a deed which contained no reservation of any easement for road or street purposes. This latter deed made no reference to the easement reserved in plaintiff's deeds. The purchasers of lots 15 and 16 constructed improvements and fences which apparently indicated no intention to provide for any street or roadway over the southerly portion of their property.

Plaintiff filed this suit to quiet title, alleging that it consented to the reservation of the easement in reliance upon the defendant's representation that the easement would be used only if defendant found it necessary or convenient to provide for a road or alley in order to sell his remaining lots lying to the east, that is lots 15 to 18 inclusive. Plaintiff alleged that the subsequent sale of lots 15 and 16, with no provision for the easement, terminated all of defendant's right, title and interest in and to lots 12, 13 and 14, and operated completely to extinguish the servitude.

The record in this case discloses errors and irregularities which render it necessary for us to reverse the judgment. The sole party defendant named in the pleadings is John A. Barton. The trial was commenced on January 25, 1957. The findings recite that John A. Barton died on January 17, 1956. The record, however, discloses no substitution of parties. In the captions of the findings of fact, conclusions of law and judgment the defendants are designated as James William Barton and Francis McCoach Barton "as individuals and as executors of the Estate of John A. Barton, Deceased." In appellant's opening brief it is stated that John A. Barton was the sole party defendant and that there was never any substitution of parties in the trial court. The record discloses no substitution of parties. In respondent's brief we are told that in July, 1956, a stipulation was signed providing for the substitution of the defendants as designated in the findings, that plaintiff's counsel promised to file the stipulation and obtain an order of court thereon, but that he failed to do so. The attorney who represented plaintiff in the trial court, and who prepared its opening brief on appeal, has since died. Present counsel for appellant were later substituted.

The irregularity above discussed, standing alone, perhaps would not necessitate a reversal, but its relation to certain unsupported findings hereinafter discussed is such as to make that result unavoidable.

[1] The essence of the problem presented to the trial court in this case was to determine whether the easement created by the inartificial and uncertain language of the deeds was an easement in gross or whether it was intended to be appurtenant to certain dominant tenements. If found to be appurtenant, there was the further need to ascertain and define the dominant tenements. Basically, this was a problem of ascertaining the intent of the parties from the language of the deeds and from relevant parol evidence, including that which disclosed the surrounding facts and circumstances existent at the time of the conveyances in question. As stated in Wright

v. Best, 19 Cal.2d 368, at page 383, 121 P.2d 702, at page 711: "* * * when the deed does not expressly declare the easement to be appurtenant, or when the language of the deed is ambiguous, and it does not clearly appear whether the easement was intended to be in gross or appurtenant to land, evidence aliunde the document is admissible to determine the nature of the easement and to establish a dominant tenement." (See also, Elliott v. McCombs, 17 Cal.2d 23, 29, 109 P.2d 329; Balestra v. Button, 54 Cal.App.2d 192, 198, 128 P.2d 816; Eastman v. Piper, 68 Cal.App. 554, 568, 229 P. 1002.

The judgment under review fails to define the nature of the easement. It simply decrees that "defendants are the owners of non-exclusive easements for road purposes over the south 30 feet of lots 12, 13 and 14" of the described tract. The findings, however, indicate that the easement was found to be appurtenant to lot 11 and lots 14 to 18 of said tract. Lot 11 was located in the same tract and adjoined lot 12 on the south.

[2] The finding of the trial court that John A. Barton was the owner of lot 11 at the time of the conveyance to appellant of lots 12, 13 and 14, and the finding that on January 10, 1957, John A. Barton conveyed said lot 11 to defendants (evidently referring to James William Barton and Francis McCoach Barton) are without any support in the evidence. Respondent's brief goes outside the record to relate that prior to the trial plaintiff's attorney was provided with evidence which would have supported these findings. Unfortunately, however, no such evidence was offered at the trial. We must review the record as it was actually made and not as it should have been made.

[3–5] Finding number X recites "That plaintiff has erected a fence upon the easements of defendants thus preventing the use of said easements by defendants and successors in interest of John A. Barton." The conclusions of law recite "That plaintiff's fence constitutes an unlawful interference with the easement rights of defendants and should be ordered removed." The judgment orders "That the fence erected by plaintiff upon said easement be removed." Our search of the record confirms appellant's assertion that there is no evidence whatsoever either to support the quoted finding and conclusion or to justify the quoted portion of the judgment. The owner of a servient estate has the right to use land subject to a non-exclusive easement for any purpose or in any manner that does not interfere unreasonably with the rights of the owner of the dominant estate. City of Pasadena v. California-Michigan Land & Water Co., 17 Cal.2d 576, 579, 110 P.2d 983, 133 A.L.R. 1186; Hoyt v. Hart, 149 Cal. 722, 728, 87 P. 569; 17 Cal.Jur.2d 133, 134. A judgment requiring removal of any existing fence should be supported by pleading and proof showing that its existence constitutes such an interference. (See Herzog v. Grosso, 41 Cal.2d 219, 224, 259 P.2d 429.)

Prior to a retrial an appropriate substitution of parties should be effected so that all parties claiming to be interested in the easement may be properly before the court. It is to be assumed that upon retrial the court will be provided with evidence sufficient for the purposes of a complete and accurate adjudication of the nature and extent of the easement, if it continues to exist, and the particular estates, if any, which are dominant with respect to it.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is reversed and the cause remanded for a new trial.

FOURT and LILLIE, JJ., concur.

159 Cal.App.2d 77

Otto J. WEBER, doing business under the firm name and style of California Realty Investment Center, and Robert L. Miller, Plaintiffs, Cross-Defendants and Respondents,

v.

Maude E. ROSS, Defendant, Cross-Complainant and Appellant.

Civ. 17782.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

April 1, 1958.

Hearing Denied May 27, 1958.

Broker's action to recover commission for effecting exchange of properties. The Superior Court, Contra Costa County, Harold Jacoby, J., rendered judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Brazil, J. pro tem., held that finding of performance of condition precedent to binding contract of exchange was implicit in findings actually made by trial court.

Affirmed.

1. Brokers ⇐60

Broker engaged to obtain acceptance of offer for exchange of properties would be entitled to commission if binding contract of exchange was entered into, regardless of whether such agreement was thereafter consummated.

2. Brokers ⇐52

Exchange of Properties ⇐4

Where offer to exchange properties was expressly made "subject to inspection of books and properties of both parties," there could be no binding contract until such inspections were completed; and broker, who had been engaged to obtain acceptance of offer, would not be entitled to his commission until that condition had been satisfied.

3. Brokers ⇐88(14)

In broker's action to recover commission for effecting exchange of properties, finding of performance of condition precedent to binding contract of exchange was implicit in findings actually made by trial court. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 956a.

Robert D. Carter, Modesto, for appellant.

Wagener & Brailsford, Oakland, for respondents.

BRAZIL, Justice pro tem.

The respondent is a real estate broker who was employed by appellant and one Goldenson to effect an exchange of properties. The appellant refused to complete the exchange after Mr. Goldenson had accepted her offer, whereupon the broker sued her for the commission he claimed became due upon the fulfillment of his obligations under the contract of exchange. From a judgment against her, the defendant, Mrs. Ross, has appealed.

Viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to the respondent and resolving conflicts therein in favor of the judgment, we find the following to be a substantial summary of what took place. In December 1954, Mrs. Ross, the appellant, signed an offer of exchange of her properties for a motel in Stockton belonging to Mr. Goldenson. The broker was given the exclusive right for five days to obtain its acceptance. Within the offer there is a provision that Mrs. Ross agrees to pay the broker $3,500 commission upon execution of the agreement by all parties. Mr. Goldenson, after inspecting the properties offered by Mrs. Ross, signed an acceptance thereof on December 4, 1954, without making any reservation or exception.

The written offer, following a recitation of the payment and obligation features of the proposed contract, under the heading "Terms and Conditions of Exchange" contains this clause: "Subject to inspection of books and properties of both parties." On the contract of exchange, as introduced in evidence, there appears opposite the expression last quoted the initials of Mrs. Ross and those of Mr. Goldenson. There is no question on appeal that, as to the latter, the condition was fulfilled and that his signed acceptance at the end of the contract was unconditional. The appellant contends that, as to her, the condition was not performed, that the inspection of books and properties was not complete, that further inspection was contemplated, and that her initialing of the condition was for a purpose other than as an indication that, as to her, the condition had been complied with.

Although the offer was dated December 3, 1954, Mrs. Ross actually signed the paper at her home about nine o'clock p. m. of the day before. The respondent's salesman, Mr. Miller, who handled all the details for the broker, called at Mrs. Ross' home in San Mateo on that evening for the purpose of getting the written offer signed in order that he might thereafter present it to Mr. Goldenson. She was not feeling very well at the time, so only a tentative appointment was made by Mr. Miller to pick her up early the next morning to drive her to Stockton to inspect the books and the property. If Mrs. Ross were too ill to make the trip, she was to have phoned Mr. Miller, otherwise, the appointment was to be kept. Not having heard from her, the salesman called for her at eight o'clock the next morning. In the meantime, Mr. Miller had submitted the written offer to Mr. Goldenson. The pair drove to Stockton, by way of Pleasanton, where by coincidence they met Mr. Goldenson, and he then called his motel manager and told him to arrange for the giving of such information about the motel as Mrs. Ross should want. On getting to Stockton, they went to the motel, met the manager, talked to him and his wife, stayed there about an hour and then proceeded back to San Mateo. While at the motel, there was a general conversation with the manager about business; Mrs. Ross and the wife looked at the yard proper, the backyard of the premises and the general living conditions. While in the office, the manager brought in what books he had, which covered only the last four months, and handed them to her. Apparently, she still wasn't feeling very well for she then said "Well, I don't want to take the time right now," but nevertheless she did glance at them. Much information, such as concerns taxes, monthly payments, wages and other items of expense, that one reasonably would expect a prudent buyer would want to see on such a large transaction were not included in the books that were presented. However, neither Mr. Miller nor Mrs. Ross asked for such information, possibly because it was apparent such information was not at that time and place available. Mr. Miller, at her request, made rough notes mainly about monthly totals.

On the way home, Mrs. Ross wanted to locate a man who was supposed to be interested in her property, but they were unable to find him so they went to Mrs. Ross' home where there was further discussion about the deal. The trip, just referred to, was the second Mrs. Ross had made to the motel; and it also appears from the evidence that Mr. Goldenson had on a previous occasion refused an offer from her for the place. Mrs. Ross is not a person totally unfamiliar with real property transactions, having had limited experience in that field before.

About seven in the evening of the same day they made the Stockton trip, Mr. Miller and appellant at her home discussed the situation as it had developed up to that time. He testified she said everything appeared to be in good order so that he replied "If everything is in order, then we can go ahead with the deal." He then submitted the offer she had already signed for initialing. She put her initials opposite the clause which concerned itself with the right of inspection of books and properties of the parties. In this regard, she testified that Mr. Miller told her when she asked him if such initialing was binding on her that it was not; that the reason he wanted the initials placed on the offer was only to show his boss that he really had made a business trip to Stockton. Mr. Miller denied having made any such statement, testifying that he told her that the initialing meant that she had inspected the books and the property. This only results in a conflict of evidence, of no assistance to appellant for the trial court accepted Mr. Miller's version, not hers, of what took place; and in so doing was not unreasonable.

After leaving Mrs. Ross, the salesman hurried over to Danville to see Mr. Goldenson, and he did see him about nine o'clock of the same evening. Mr. Goldenson, having during the day made an inspection of the properties he was to get in the exchange, signed the acceptance of the offer and put his initials upon the written offer right near where Mrs. Ross had placed hers.

[1] If the condition as to both parties was then met, and no fraud or mistake having been pleaded or proved, there was right then a binding contract of exchange between Mr. Goldenson and Mrs. Ross. In such an event, the real estate agent had performed his agreement and his commission was thereupon due. It would make no difference if the exchange was never thereafter consummated. Deeble v. Stearns, 82 Cal.App.2d 296, 186 P.2d 173. The commission would still be due even if thereafter one of the parties, as Mrs. Ross indicated was her desire, wanted or tried to back out of the agreement.

[2] There can be no doubt that each of the parties to the exchange agreement had a right to inspection of the books and properties; that until this condition was satisfied there would be no binding contract and the broker would not yet be entitled to his commission. Williams v. Belling, 76 Cal. App. 610, 245 P. 455. There could scarcely be any stronger proof of performance of the condition precedent than the statement of the party to be charged that he or she was satisfied that everything was in order, and then initialing the contract right where the condition appeared. If it were not for the initials, and the evidence of Mrs. Ross' understanding of their placement near the condition, it could well be argued that there was actually no inspection of the books or property because so little time was involved and the inspections were so cursory in nature. However, if the parties are satisfied with less than would otherwise have been a reasonable inspection, that is their right, and it isn't for a court to make a contrary finding on the subject.

The crux of the case appears to be whether or not the condition was performed. There is no direct affirmative finding on this essential factual element of the case as there should have been. The affirmative finding of the court "[t]hat by execution of said written exchange agreement, defendant Maude E. Ross agreed to pay plaintiffs" would probably not be a sufficient finding on the vital issue of the performance or nonperformance of the condition. The evidence on the subject being quite conflicting, an appellate court could not, as it sometimes has power to do (Code Civ. Proc. § 956a), supply the missing finding of fact.

"The failure to find upon this issue [a material fact] requires a reversal of the judgment unless it can be said as a matter of law that if a finding had been made it would necessarily have been adverse to the defendant." Chacon v. Austin, 110 Cal. App.2d 145, at page 147, 241 P.2d 1037, at page 1039.

[3] However, in support of the judgment, it can be determined with reasonable certainty that the court made a finding on the material fact here discussed even though it be expressed in a negative sort of way. First, the court finds that appellant agreed to pay the $3,500 commission by the execution of the exchange agreement, which must necessarily mean the completed contract with all conditions performed, if a later finding is considered in connection therewith. This later finding is to the effect that "each and all of the denials and allegations set forth in defendant's Answer to plaintiffs' complaint herein, inconsistent with the Findings of Fact herein, are untrue." The answer, among other things, "denies that the condition in said alleged agreement, 'subject to inspection of books and properties by parties', was ever met." The court, having found this denial to be untrue, by necessary implication, finds the opposite to be true and that is: the condition in said agreement has been met.

The judgment is affirmed.

DOOLING, Acting P. J., and DRAPER, J., concur.

Hearing denied; CARTER J., not participating.

159 Cal.App.2d 247

Marcia Jeanne ALLEN, a minor, by and through W. C. Allen, her guardian ad litem, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

PARADISE GRANGE NO. 490, Inc., a corporation, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 9343.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

April 8, 1958.

Rehearing Denied May 2, 1958.

Hearing Denied June 4, 1958.

Action for personal injuries sustained by 10 year old plaintiff when she fell off a porch of defendant's hall which had been leased to a dance group to which plaintiff's parents belonged. The Superior Court, Butte County, Dudley G. McGregor, J., entered judgment for plaintiff and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Warne, J. pro tem., held that where club to which plaintiff's parents belonged rented defendant's premises without a porch railing, it did not have any right to complain that there should have been a guard rail on the porch, and plaintiff who had accompanied her parents to the premises was, at most, an invitee, and as such had only the rights which the club or its respective members had in event of injury due to lack of the guard rail, and therefore, landlord, who had leased hall in question for a private rather than a public or semi-public purpose, could not be held liable for its alleged negligence in failing to provide a guard rail.

Judgment reversed with directions.

Landlord and Tenant ⇐167(8)

Where club to which infant plaintiff's parents belonged rented premises without a porch railing, plaintiff who had accompanied her parents to the premises was, at most, an invitee, and as such had only the rights which the club or its respective members had in event of injury due to lack of guard rail, and therefore landlord, who had leased hall in question for a private rather than a public or semi-public purpose, could not be held liable for its alleged negligence in failing to provide a guard rail.

Edward A. Friend, San Francisco, for appellant.

Goldstein, Barceloux & Goldstein, Chico, for respondent.

WARNE, Justice pro tem.

The defendant appeals from a judgment entered against it on a jury verdict in favor of plaintiff, a minor, for personal injuries suffered by said minor and from an order denying defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

Defendant is the owner of a one-story building which it rents to various organizations for meetings and social gatherings. Plaintiff's parents were members of a dance club, an unincorporated association, called the "Heavenly Steppers", which rented defendant's hall on Wednesday evenings. No admission was charged to the club's meetings, which were attended solely by the members and their guests. The public was not invited. The cost of renting the hall was defrayed by dues paid by the members of the club. The entire premises were turned over to the Heavenly Steppers and a member of the club was given a key to the hall. There was no retention of control and no official representative of defendant was present. The members occasionally brought their children along. On the night of the accident, plaintiff, a ten year old child, had gone to defendant's hall with her parents who were attending the dance. The club had no organized activities of any kind for the children of the members while attending the dances. At the time arrangements were made for the rental of the hall between the representative of the group and the defendant nothing was said about children and the defendant had no knowledge that any children had ever attended the meetings.

On the night of the accident, plaintiff and several other children were playing a game of "tag" on the front porch of the building while their parents were dancing and while so engaged one of the children bumped or pushed plaintiff and she fell off the porch, so that her knee struck the bumper of a parked automobile, causing substantial injury. The porch had no guard railing of any kind nor did it have a railing at the time the club rented the hall. The porch was three feet off the ground at the site of the accident.

Appellant contends that the rental of the hall was not for a public or semi-public purpose, but was for a limited ascertained group for its own purposes and that under such circumstances defendant is not liable. We feel that there is merit in this contention. The evidence shows that the rental arrangements were informal. There is no written lease and a member of the club was given a key to the building and no representative of defendant was present on the nights that the club used the hall. The Heavenly Steppers was a definite, ascertained, group of limited membership and the dance meetings were held exclusively for the instruction and enjoyment of the members, except that an occasional guest was invited by a member. But the meetings were, as noted, not open to the public nor was the public invited to them. We feel that, under the facts and circumstances, it may not be said that the meetings were either public or semi-public nor that the tenancy was for a public purpose.

What was said in De Motte v. Arkell, 77 Cal.App. 610, 247 P. 254, a case in which it was held that defendant's motion for a nonsuit should have been granted is applicable to the facts of this case. There a member of an unincorporated lodge which leased the second floor of a building owned by the defendant was killed when a defective guard rail on a porch or platform gave way. The court said, 77 Cal.App. at page 619, 247 P. at page 257:

> "* * * The premises were leased to the Odd Fellows' Lodge, of which the deceased was a member, which renders all members of the Odd Fellows' Lodge leasing the premises tenants * * *. The lessee in this case was a private fraternal organization composed of a limited, known, and accepted membership, each one having equal rights and liabilities, and the hall was not a place and was not at the time used as a place for the assembling of the general public. This is not a case of the visiting by a patron of a public amusement place, but is a case of use thereof, which was for the private convenience of the tenants for a limited purpose."

In the instant case the plaintiff stood in no better position than that of any member of the club. Her parents were members of the club and she had accompanied them to the meeting. She, at most, was an invitee and as such she had only the rights which the club or its respective members had in event of any injury from the same cause. The club, having rented the premises without a porch railing, would not have any right to complain that there should have been a guard rail on the porch. De Motte v. Arkell, supra, 77 Cal.App. at page 620, 247 P. at page 258.

In Stanford v. Bailey Incorporated, 132 Cal.App.2d 725, 729–730, 282 P.2d 992, 995, the court said:

> "It is the rule under the general law that a lessor is not liable for injuries to the invitees of a lessee caused by defects in the leased premises. The rule is subject to the exception that if there is some hidden defect in or danger on the premises, which is known to the lessor at the time of executing the lease but which is not apparent to the prospective lessee, the lessor is obligated to inform the lessee thereof; and failing to do so, the lessor renders himself liable for injuries sustained by the lessee resulting from such hidden defects. And in such case the lessor is liable to invitees of the lessee to the same extent that he would have been had the lessee been injured. Stated differently, the lessor's liability in such a case is no greater to the invitee of the lessee than it would be to the tenant himself. Neuber v. Royal Realty Co., 86 Cal.App.2d 596, 610, 195 P.2d 501."

We feel that the rules of law stated in the above cases are applicable to the facts of this case and that under such rule it was error for the trial court not to grant the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

King v. New Masonic Temple Ass'n, 51 Cal.App.2d 512, 125 P.2d 559, relied upon by respondent, is inapplicable to the facts of this case. That case was distinguished in De Motte v. Arkell, supra, on the ground that the Woman's City Club of Long Beach was separate and apart from its members since it was a corporation, and therefore a legal entity in the eyes of the law. In the case at bar the club was an unincorporated association. The King case may further be distinguished from the De Motte case since it appears that there the club's activities were civic and semi-public in nature. It used the rented premises for such purposes. Each member was entitled to three guest cards per year and non-members were admitted to the club meetings upon the payment of twenty-five cents. Gentlemen were welcome without charge at all regular meetings and, as noted, it was a civic club. The club meetings being open to gentlemen free and to any woman for the price of twenty-five cents would make it at least a semi-public organization.

In the instant case, the public was not invited or admitted nor was there any admission charged. It was strictly a private dance club of ascertained membership and it functioned as such. Since we have concluded that the judgment and the order denying defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict must be reversed on the ground that the motion should have been granted, it is not necessary for us to discuss the complaint made by appellant concerning the giving of certain jury instructions nor any other issue presented.

The order denying defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and the judgment are reversed and the trial court is ordered to enter judgment for the defendant with costs.

VAN DYKE, P. J., and PEEK, J., concur.

Hearing denied; CARTER, J., dissenting.

159 Cal.App.2d 171

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Wilmont McCord WILLS, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 2780.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

April 3, 1958.

Appeal by defendant from adverse judgment of the Superior Court, Butte County, J. F. Good, J. The District Court of Appeal, Peek, J., held that judgment of conviction entered pursuant to plea of guilty made by defendant's attorney and not by defendant himself, was invalid.

Judgment reversed.

Criminal Law ⇐980(1)

Judgment of conviction entered pursuant to plea of guilty made by defendant's attorney and not by defendant himself was invalid. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1018.

William P. Smith, Jr., Sacramento, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PEEK, Justice.

Since it appears without contradiction that the judgment of conviction from which defendant appeals was entered pursuant to a plea of guilty made by defendant's attorney and not by defendant as required by section 1018 of the Penal Code, it follows that the judgment was invalid and must be reversed. In re Brain, 70 Cal.App. 334, 233 P. 390.

The judgment is reversed.

VAN DYKE, P. J., and SCHOTTKY, J., concur.

Joseph STEPHENS, Petitioner,

v.

Thomas A. TOOMEY, as Registrar of Voters of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, Respondent.*

Civ. 18037.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

April 1, 1958.

Hearing Granted May 27, 1958.

Proceeding for a writ of mandate to compel the respondent to register the petitioner as an elector. The District Court of Appeal, Peters, P. J., held that one who had been found guilty of robbery in the first degree, a felony, and who was sentenced to prison but the execution of which was suspended and the person placed on probation has not been "convicted" within the constitutional provision that no person convicted of any infamous crime shall ever exercise the privilege of an elector.

Peremptory writ issued.

1. Constitutional Law ⇐32

The constitutional provision that no person convicted of any infamous crime shall exercise the privileges of an elector is self-operating. West's Ann.Const. art. 2, § 1.

2. Elections ⇐90

Once a person has been convicted of an infamous crime he loses his right to vote and the Legislature cannot restore such right to him. West's Ann.Const. art. 2, § 1.

3. Elections ⇐90

All felonies are "infamous crimes" within the constitutional provision that no person convicted of any infamous crime shall exercise the privilege of an elector. West's Ann.Const. art. 2, § 1.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Infamous Crimes".

4. Elections ⇐90

One who had been found guilty of robbery in the first degree, a felony, and who was sentenced to prison but the execution of which was suspended and the person placed on probation has not been "convicted" within constitutional provision that no person convicted of any infamous crime shall ever exercise the privilege of an elector. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 1203.1, 1203.4; West's Ann.Const. art. 2, § 1.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Convicted".

5. Elections ⇐90

The constitutional provision that no person convicted of any infamous crime shall ever exercise the privilege of an elector means the final "conviction" and when the judgment is subject to being set aside it is not final. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1203.4; West's Ann.Const. art. 2, § 1.

* Opinion vacated 338 P.2d 182.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Conviction".

Kenneth C. Zwerin, San Francisco, for petitioner.

Dion R. Holm, City Atty. of the City and County of San Francisco, Lawrence S. Mana, Chief Deputy City Atty., William J. Braun, Deputy City Atty., San Francisco, for respondent.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen. of the State of California, Clarence A. Linn, Asst. Atty. Gen., amici curiae in support of respondent.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

[1–3] Petitioner seeks a writ of mandate to compel the respondent, the Registrar of Voters of San Francisco, to register him as an elector. The respondent refused on the sole ground that petitioner had been convicted of an infamous crime and was therefore deprived of the right to vote under Article II, Section 1, of the California Constitution. That section contains the qualifications of electors and also states certain disqualifications. Among other things, it provides that "no person convicted of any infamous crime * * * shall ever exercise the privileges of an elector in this State." This section is, of course, self-operating. Once a person has been "convicted" of an infamous crime he loses the right to vote and the Legislature is powerless to restore such right to him. All felonies are "infamous crimes." Truchon v. Toomey, 116 Cal.App.2d 736, 254 P.2d 638, 36 A.L.R.2d 1230; Matter of the Application of Westenberg, 167 Cal. 309, 139 P. 674. Thus, the question presented is whether petitioner has been "convicted" of a felony within the meaning of that term as used in Article II, Section 1, supra.

The facts are as follows: On August 6, 1954, petitioner was found guilty of robbery in the first degree, a felony. The following judgment was announced:

"It is therefore ordered, adjudged and decreed that the defendant, Joseph Stephens, be punished by imprisonment in the State Prison at San Quentin, California, for the term prescribed by law." Immediately after this pronouncement the court ordered the execution of the sentence suspended upon condition that petitioner remain on probation for a period of five years. The probation thus ordered is still in full force and effect. Petitioner has complied with all terms of the probation. On November 4, 1957, petitioner attempted to register as an elector. The registrar refused to register him for the reason stated. Thus, the precise question is whether or not one who has been found guilty and is sentenced to prison but the execution of the sentence has been suspended and the person placed on probation, has been "convicted" within the meaning of Article II, Section 1, above quoted.

[4] We do not think that this is an open question in this state. It was necessarily decided in favor of petitioner in the case of Truchon v. Toomey, 116 Cal.App.2d 736, 254 P.2d 638, decided by this court in 1953, and in which a hearing by the Supreme Court was denied without a dissenting vote. In that case Truchon pleaded guilty to the charge of assault with intent to commit rape. He was admitted to probation conditioned upon serving 90 days in the county jail. He successfully completed his probation and then, under the provisions of section 1203.4 of the Penal Code, withdrew his plea of guilty and entered a plea of not guilty. The cause was dismissed and the record expunged. He then applied to register to vote and was refused. This court issued a writ of mandate compelling the registrar to accept his registration. The opinion discusses the applicable principles at some length. The precise holding of the case was that admission to probation and the subsequent dismissal of the prosecution under section 1203.4 of the Penal Code was not a "conviction" within the meaning of the constitutional provision under consideration. It is there pointed out that the term "conviction" has several meanings, and must be construed in its context and in the light of the purpose intended. Running through the opinion is the thought that the term as used in Article II, Section 1, means a "final" conviction. For example, the opinion refers to, quotes from, and relies upon In re Riccardi, 182 Cal. 675, 189 P. 694, in which it was held that an attorney could not be disbarred on account of a "conviction" from which an appeal had been taken and which was pending, because "conviction" as used in the statute referring to disbarment required that the "conviction" be final. Finality is the key to the Truchon case. When a person is on probation, the judgment of conviction is not final because it is subject to dismissal under Penal Code section 1203.4. The Truchon case, although involving a situation where the probationary period had been completed, necessarily stands for the proposition that while Truchon was on probation, and satisfactorily complying with its terms, he would have been entitled to vote had he applied for that privilege. This is so because it is the Constitution itself that operates to deny the franchise to those "convicted" of a felony. If Truchon were to be considered so convicted during his period of probation, the Legislature would be without authority, by section 1203.4 of the Penal Code, or by any other statute, to restore the right to vote. The holding that Truchon was entitled to vote after probation had been completed necessarily constituted a holding that those on probation are entitled to vote. This was clearly recognized by the Attorney General and he so argued in his briefs. In disposing of this point, this court stated (116 Cal.App.2d at page 744, 254 P.2d at page 643):

> "The attorney general suggests that our interpretation would result in the situation that a person on probation would continue to be entitled to vote and that neither the People nor the Legislature intended this result. Fundamentally, there does not appear anything wrong in not taking away the franchise of a person on probation who is behaving in such manner that on the termination of his probation by proceedings under section 1203.4 he would be entitled to continue to vote. If he fails to fulfill the terms of his probation it can be revoked and then because of sentence, the Constitutional inhibition would apply."

Thus, the contention that a defendant on probation after being found guilty of a felony cannot vote was passed on in the Truchon case. That case necessarily stands for the proposition that one on probation may vote. (For a discussion of the general problem see notes 27 So.Cal.L.Rev. 327; 22 So.Cal.L.Rev. 476; 2 Stan.L.Rev. 221.)

The Attorney General argues that the instant case differs from the Truchon case in that in the Truchon case no sentence was imposed, the trial court granting probation following the plea of guilty and prior to imposing sentence. This does not clearly appear in the Truchon opinion but it is claimed that the record shows that this was the fact. We will assume that this is so. In the instant case after the verdict of guilty the trial judge pronounced sentence, immediately suspended the execution thereof, and then granted probation. The Attorney General argues that whatever the rule may be where a sentence is not imposed, where it is imposed, although suspended, the person has been "convicted" within the meaning of Article II, Section 1. It is urged that even under the broadest interpretation of "conviction," all that is required is verdict plus judgment, and that once "judgment" is pronounced the constitutional penalty must be imposed.

The Penal Code confers on trial judges the right to grant probation in either of the two ways mentioned, and makes no distinction between the two methods. Section 1203.1 provides that the court "may suspend the imposing, or the execution of the sentence * * * upon such terms and conditions as it shall determine." No statutory criteria is provided for determining when it is proper to suspend the imposing of sentence and admit to probation, and when it is proper to suspend the execution of the sentence and admit to probation. The determination of what method shall be used is left to the discretion of the trial judge. While there are some differences between the two methods, particularly in the procedure to be followed in case of a violation of probation, it would not seem that a fundamental right such as the right to vote should depend upon the chance of which method is used. Fortunately, such a result is not required.

[5] The argument that, because sentence was here imposed and then suspended, the petitioner was "convicted" and so deprived of the right to vote, completely disregards the basic holding of the Truchon case. That case, as already pointed out, is predicated on the theory that the term "conviction" means final conviction, and that when the judgment is subject to being set aside under section 1203.4 of the Penal Code, it is not final. Of course, that section applies whatever method of probation is adopted by the trial court.

The argument also disregards the obvious and fundamental purpose of Article II, Section 1. Quite clearly the people inserted that provision in the Constitution because it was felt that those "convicted" of a felony constituted a socially undesirable class that should be prohibited from voting. As already pointed out, and as is held in the Truchon case, when probation is granted, a person is not considered to be in that socially undesirable class. In fact, by the granting of probation, whichever method is used, the trial judge has indicated that the person involved is worthy of being given a chance to maintain his place in society. Certainly, Truchon cannot be held to belong to a more socially acceptable class than Stephens simply because in one case probation was granted before sentence and in the other after sentence was imposed. Truchon was required to spend time in the county jail as a condition of his probation, and yet, as already held, he was entitled to vote while on probation. Stephens was not required to serve time in the county jail. From any realistic standard the severe penalty of the deprivation of the right to vote should no more be imposed in one case than in the other. The people in adopting the constitutional provision could not have intended such a result. Obviously, they intended that only those sent to the state prison were to be placed in the excluded class.

Except for the claimed disability it is conceded that petitioner possesses all of the qualifications of an elector. Let a peremptory writ of mandate issue directing the respondent to register petitioner as an elector of the City and County of San Francisco.

BRAY and FRED B. WOOD, JJ., concur.

158 Cal.App.2d 630

In the Matter of the ESTATE OF Edna J. NESBITT, Deceased.

GOOD SHEPHERD FOUNDATION,
Contestant and Appellant,
v.
FIRST WESTERN BANK & TRUST CO.,
Petitioner and Respondent.

Civ. 22654.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

March 24, 1958.

Proceeding respecting final accounting and order of distribution of estate of testratrix whose will provided that the executor should pay out of her general estate, all just debts and funeral expenses and all federal and state and inheritance taxes. From a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, John Gee Clark, J., charitable beneficiary of will appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, P. J., held that where there was no residuary estate and funds in estate were inadequate to meet all bequests, general bequest to charitable beneficiary took precedence over provision for payment of inheritance tax of individual beneficiary.

Reversed with directions.

1. Taxation ⇐856
Wills ⇐736

An inheritance tax is upon the right of succession, but this does not prevent a testator from making an appropriate provision in will by which intended bequest passes to beneficiary undiminished by inheritance tax.

2. Wills ⇐811

A general or specific bequest takes priority over any gift to be paid from residuary estate. West's Ann.Prob.Code, § 161.

3. Internal Revenue ⇐1746
Wills ⇐736, 812

Where testatrix by her will bequeathed money to charity and also bequeathed certain personal property to another beneficiary, and provided that the executor, out of her general estate, should pay all just debts and funeral expenses and all federal and state inheritance taxes, but there was no residuary estate and funds in the estate were inadequate to meet all bequests, general bequest to charity took priority over provision for payment of inheritance tax due on bequest to individual who would be required to bear burden of tax just as though provision in will for payment thereof had never existed. West's Ann.Prob.Code, § 161.

Robert Einstein, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Mabel Clausen, Pasadena, for respondent.

FOX, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal by the contestant from the judgment approving the final accounting and order of distribution in the estate of Edna J. Nesbitt.

It is appellant's position that the executor erred in paying a portion of the inheritance tax out of the decedent's general estate. It contends that such tax should have been paid by the beneficiary.

The testatrix left a will and four codicils. In her will she provided: "I hereby direct my executor * * * to pay, out of my general estate, all my just debts and funeral expenses, and all Federal and State estate and inheritance taxes." By the second codicil testatrix devised to Marguerite Belle Johnson certain real property; by the third codicil she bequeathed $1,000 to the Good Shepherd Foundation, the contestant and appellant herein; by the fourth codicil she bequeathed her household furniture and furnishings to Miss Johnson. The gifts to Miss Johnson were conditioned upon her being continuously in the employ of the testatrix from the date of the two codicils to the death of testatrix. Miss Johnson fulfilled the condition.

The inheritance tax against Miss Johnson's share was $1,397.23. There was only $220.72 left in the estate after the specific devises and bequests and the payment of the expenses of administration. If the estate was to pay the inheritance tax on Miss Johnson's inheritance it needed $1,176.51 additional funds. To meet this need Miss Johnson advanced the estate $1,500. This was $323.49 ($1,500–$1,176.51) more than the amount required to fully pay the inheritance tax. The court found that the sum of $323.49 cash advanced to the estate by Miss Johnson did not constitute an asset of the estate and ordered it returned to her. It is thus apparent that the executor used the balance of the funds on hand in the estate to apply on the inheritance tax on Miss Johnson's inheritance. As a result there was no money left in the estate, hence the Good Shepherd Foundation received nothing. It contends that Miss Johnson should have been required to pay the inheritance tax on her inheritance. On that basis the Foundation would have been entitled to receive the $220.72 remaining in the estate.

[1] An inheritance tax is upon the right of succession. In re Estate of Kennedy, 157 Cal. 517, 523, 108 P. 280, 29 L.R.A.,N.S., 428. "The tax is not one of expenses of administration or a charge upon the general estate of the decedent; it is collectible out of each specific share of interest to which the beneficiary succeeds, and not from the general property of the estate." Cohn v. Cohn, 20 Cal.2d 65, 68, 123 P.2d 833, 834; Kelso v. Sargent, 11 Cal.App.2d 170, 177, 54 P.2d 26. This principle, however, does not prevent a testator from making an appropriate provision in his will by which the intended bequest passes to the beneficiary undiminished by inheritance tax. In re Estate of Irwin, 196 Cal. 366, 237 P. 1074, 1077, relied upon by respondent, illustrates the technique by which this result may be accomplished. See, also, Annotations: 51 A.L.R. 454 and 37 A.L.R.2d 7. In the Irwin case, the fifth paragraph of the will reads:

"5. I give and bequeath to my son-in-law, Charles Templeton Crocker, the sum of one hundred thousand dollars ($100,000) in United States Gold Coin, free and clear of all inheritance taxes, which I direct to be paid from the residue of my estate." In interpreting this paragraph the court stated (196 Cal. at pages 375–376, 237 P. at page 1077):

"In the absence of such a provision as that contained in paragraph 5 of the will that the bequest of $100,000 shall be free and clear of all inheritance taxes and directing the payment of the taxes out of the residue of the estate, it is apparent that the bequest of $100,000 would itself be liable for the payment of the inheritance tax thereon. The actual value of the property therefore transferred to Charles Templeton Crocker by paragraph 5 of the will was not the sum of $100,000 but the sum of $100,000 plus an amount sufficient to permit him to take the $100,000 free from all liability for the inheritance tax * * *. That is to say, the amount bequeathed to him by the will was such an amount as would net $100,000 after the payment of the inheritance tax thereon. In short, by making the payment of the tax payable out of the residue of the estate, the legatee was bequeathed an additional amount sufficient to pay the tax and the tax upon the tax ad infinitum.

"The amount which the residuary legatee actually received was the residuum after the payment of the inheritance tax upon the bequest of $100,000."

While the principle in the Irwin case is applicable in theory to the case at bar, it does not, as a practical matter, solve the problem before the court because of the inadequacy of the funds in the estate. It is true that the provision for payment of estate and inheritance taxes constitutes an attempt to give Miss Johnson an additional legacy. However, this additional legacy was to be paid from the "general estate" of the testatrix. By the term "general estate" the testatrix undoubtedly meant the residue of her estate which remained after the devise and the specific and general bequests. Several cases have held that in a will provision directing that estate and inheritance taxes be paid from the "general estate," the term "general estate" meant the residuary estate. (In re Mills' Will, 272 App.Div. 229, 70 N.Y.S.2d 746, 749, affirmed 297 N.Y. 1012, 80 N.E.2d 535; In re Chambers' Estate, Sur., 54 N.Y.S.2d 88, 90; In re Reid's Will, 193 Misc. 154, 79 N.Y.S.2d 248, 250; In re Bayne's Will, Sur., 102 N.Y.S.2d 525, 528; In re Becher's Estate, 204 Misc. 523, 123 N.Y.S.2d 589, 601; In re Whitman's Estate, Sur., 125 N.Y.S.2d 165, 167. The difficulty in the instant case arose because there was no residuary estate; in fact, the funds in the estate were inadequate to meet all the bequests. Since there was no residuary estate out of which the inheritance tax could be paid, the question for determination is whether the provision for the payment of Miss Johnson's inheritance tax takes precedence over the general bequest to appellant.

[2, 3] We have concluded that the bequest to appellant takes priority. "A residuary legacy embraces only that which remains after all the bequests of the will are discharged." Probate Code, sec. 161; In re Estate of Hall, 183 Cal. 61, 64, 190 P. 364; In re Estate of Marinos, 39 Cal.App.2d 1, 9, 102 P.2d 443. It is obvious from this definition that a general or specific bequest takes priority over any gift to be paid from the residuary estate. This being so, it follows that the general bequest to appellant should have been satisified before resorting to any property in the estate to pay Miss Johnson's inheritance tax. Since only $220.72 remained, this money should have been paid to appellant in partial satisfaction of its $1,000 legacy. There being nothing left in the estate from which the inheritance tax could be paid, it is clear that Miss Johnson must bear the burden of that tax, just as if the provision in the will for payment thereof never existed.

The judgment is reversed with directions to enter a new judgment and order of distribution consistent with the views expressed herein.

HERNDON, J., and KINCAID, J. pro tem., concur.

William A. DRENNAN, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

STAR PAVING COMPANY et al., Defendant and Appellant.*

Civ. 5642.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

April 3, 1958.

Hearing Granted May 27, 1958.

Action by general contractor against paving company, which allegedly bid to perform paving work on a public works construction job, for damages for refusal to perform paving work. The Superior Court of Kern County, W. L. Bradshaw, J., entered judgment for general contractor and paving company appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, J., held where paving company knew that general contractor was going to bid on a school construction job on a particular evening and, late in afternoon of that day, paving company, through representative, made a bid for the paving work, and general contractor secured construction job using pavings company's bid, paving company had made a promise which would reasonably induce action or forbearance of a definite and substantial character on part of general contractor and since it did induce such action, paving company was liable to general contractor.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Estoppel ⇐118

In action by general contractor against paving company which allegedly bid to perform asphaltic paving work for a public works construction job, evidence established that paving company made a definite and specific offer or bid to perform asphaltic paving portion of construction job and that in reliance upon bid, general contractor computed his final figures for job specifically naming paving company as subcontractor selected by him to perform asphaltic paving work.

2. Appeal and Error ⇐1010(1)

Findings supported by evidence would not be disturbed on appeal.

3. Estoppel ⇐85

Where paving company knew that general contractor was going to bid on a school construction job on a particular evening, and, late in the afternoon of that day, paving company, through representative, made a bid for paving work, and contractor secured construction job using paving company's bid, but paving company did not perform, paving company had made a promise which would reasonably induce action or forbearance of a definite and substantial character on part of general contractor and, since it did induce such action paving company was liable, under doctrine of promissory estoppel, to general contractor for refusal to perform.

* Opinion vacated 333 P.2d 757.

Obegi & High, Van Nuys, for appellant.

S. B. Gill, Bakersfield, for respondent.

MUSSELL, Justice.

This is an action for damages alleged to have been caused by the refusal of defendant corporation to perform the asphaltic paving work according to its bid submitted to plaintiff as general contractor. The trial court rendered judgment in favor of plaintiff and against the defendant, Star Paving Company, a corporation, for the sum of $3,817 and costs. The defendant corporation appeals from the judgment, claiming that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the judgment and that the judgment is against the law.

On July 28, 1955, plaintiff William A. Drennan was a licensed general contractor engaged in bidding for a public works construction job known as the "Monte Vista School Job" in the Lancaster school district. The bids of the general contractors for the complete construction job were required by the board of trustees of the school district to be submitted before 8:00 p. m. on July 28, 1955, in the office of the district superintendent of the district. In the afternoon of that day plaintiff's secretary and clerk, Lorraine Johnson, was receiving all subcontractors' bids for the various portions of the school job, recording them in writing on mimeographed forms, and transmitting them to plaintiff, who then posted each sub-bid to his master cost sheet which contained the names and amounts of the bids of all subcontractors bidding on the school job. During the day Mrs. Johnson received approximately seventy-five sub-bids by telephone and recorded them in the manner stated and according to the custom of the business.

Late in the afternoon, between 4:00 and 7:00 o'clock, a telephone conversation was had between Mrs. Johnson and Kenneth R. Hoon, an estimator of bids for the defendant Star Paving Company. Hoon stated his name and 'phone number and stated that he was bidding the paving work on the Monte Vista school, according to the plans and specifications, for $7,131.60, and that he was a representative of the Star Paving Company. Mrs. Johnson asked him to repeat the amount, which he did. Plaintiff listened to this conversation on an extension 'phone and, after receiving the record of it from Mrs. Johnson, he posted the bid to his master cost sheet. Since the bid of the Star Paving Company was the lowest bid received for the asphaltic paving portion of the job, he used it in making his final bid as general contractor and relied on the amount of the bid submitted by Hoon. Plaintiff's bid for the school job was accepted on the night of July 28, 1955. The general contract was awarded to him and thereafter he completed the job.

On the morning of July 29, 1955, plaintiff, while en route to Los Angeles stopped at the office of the defendant company to talk to its representatives and the first person with whom he talked was Mr. Oppenheimer, a construction engineer employed by the defendant company. Plaintiff testified in this connection:

> "I introduced myself and he immediately told me they had made a mistake in their bid to me the night before, they couldn't do it for the price they had bid, and I told him I would expect him to carry through with their original bid because I had used it in compiling my bid and the job was being awarded them. And I would have to go and do the job according to my bid and I would expect them to do the same."

The defendant corporation refused to perform the asphaltic paving work for any sum less than $15,000. Plaintiff then employed the L and H Paving Company to perform said work and was required to pay them the sum of $10,948.60 therefor.

[1, 2] The trial court found, inter alia, that the Star Paving Company, through its agent K. R. Hoon, made a definite and specific offer or bid to perform the asphaltic paving portion of the Monte Vista job according to the official plans and specifications therefor for the sum of $7,131.60; that in reliance upon defendant corporation's bid, plaintiff computed his final figures for said school job and submitted his bid in writing on the evening of July 28, 1955, specifically naming the defendant corporation as the subcontractor selected by him to perform said asphaltic paving work. These findings are supported by substantial evidence and cannot be here disturbed.

[3] Appellant contends that there never was a firm bid given to plaintiff and that the factual situation raises the same problem the court faced in Leo F. Piazza Paving Co. v. Bebek & Brkich, 141 Cal.App. 2d 226, 296 P.2d 368, namely, did a contract exist? However, in that case the trial court found that no contract existed and there was substantial evidence that the subcontractor stated that he could not give the general contractor an exact quotation or bid; that he told the general contractor that he would give him some kind of an idea to use as a bid on the job and that he did not intend to make a firm bid. In the instant case the evidence supports the trial court's finding that the defendant made a definite and specific bid. The representatives of defendant corporation knew that plaintiff as general contractor was going to bid on the school job on the evening of July 28, 1955, and that plaintiff would rely on the bid of defendant corporation in submitting his final bid to the school authorities.

In Wade v. Markwell & Co., 118 Cal. App.2d 410, 420, 258 P.2d 497, 502, 37 A.L.R.2d 1363, the court said, quoting from Carpy v. Dowdell, 115 Cal. 677, 687, 47 P. 695: "'* * * he who, by his language or conduct, leads another to do what he would not otherwise have done, shall not subject such person to loss or injury by disappointing the expectations upon which he acted. Such change of position is sternly forbidden.'" And in Hunter v. Sparling, 87 Cal.App.2d 711, 725, 197 P.2d 807, 816, the doctrine of promissory estoppel is defined as "'A promise which the promisor should reasonably expect to induce action or forbearance of a definite and substantial character on the part of the promisee and which does induce such action or forbearance is binding if injustice can be avoided only by enforcement of the promise.'" This doctrine is applicable under the facts and circumstances shown by the record herein.

Judgment affirmed.

BARNARD, P. J., and GRIFFIN, J., concur.

159 Cal.App.2d 252

Albert I. SILVER, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

SECURITY JEWELRY & LOAN COMPANY, a copartnership, Neil B. Blumenthal, Carole R. Shostak and Harry B. Blumenthal, Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 17624.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

April 9, 1958.

Action to recover amount claimed by plaintiff to be due on a contract for sale of his business to defendant. From adverse judgment of the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Edward Moklenbuhr, J., the defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held that where contract to purchase plaintiff's jewelry, loan and pawnbroker business, stated that subject matter being sold was sole possession of and all equities of seller in pledges of said business, save and except those pledges specifically set forth in separate agreement and schedule attached thereto, and two schedules were made but neither was attached to contract, contract was ambiguous and uncertain permitting admission of parol evidence to explain it.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Evidence ⇐450(8)

Where contract to purchase plaintiff's jewelry, loan and pawnbroker business stated that subject matter being sold was sole possession of and all equities of seller in pledges of said business, save and except those pledges specifically set forth in separate agreement and schedule attached thereto, and two schedules were made but neither was attached to contract, contract was ambiguous and uncertain permitting admission of parol evidence to explain it.

2. Appeal and Error ⇐1011(1)

Where evidence is conflicting, finding of trial court is binding on reviewing court.

3. Appeal and Error ⇐842(1)

Whether contract is ambiguous or uncertain so as to permit extrinsic evidence to show its terms is a question of law for trial court to determine in first instance and its determination is binding on reviewing court, but where contract is ambiguous or uncertain and parol evidence is introduced in aid of interpretation, then question of meaning is one of fact, particularly when evidence on subject is conflicting.

4. Appeal and Error ⇐1011(1)

Where evidence on subject is conflicting, province of reviewing court is merely to determine if there is substantial evidence to support trial court's determination.

5. Evidence ⇐448

If there is any reasonable room for doubt as to what contract means or as to what exact words thereof apply to, parol evidence is admissible.

6. Contracts ⇐169

In discovering elements of intent of parties to contract, trial court may look to circumstances surrounding making of agreement, including object, nature, and subject matter of writing, and preliminary negotiations between parties, and thus place itself in same situation in which parties found themselves at time of contract.

Morris Oppenheim, San Francisco, for appellants.

Truman S. Waterman, Raymond H. Levy, San Francisco, for respondent.

BRAY, Justice.

Defendants appeal from a judgment awarding plaintiff $11,270 balance due on a contract of sale.

Question Presented.

[1] Was the contract ambiguous, thereby permitting the admission of parol evidence to explain it?

Evidence.

The controversy is over the question of whether or not one of two separate inventories of pledged goods was included in the contract price of $15,000. On August 9, 1954, plaintiff and defendants Neil Blumenthal and Carole R. Shostak[1] signed a contract under which plaintiff agreed to sell and said defendants agreed to buy plaintiff's jewelry, loan and pawnbroker business "together with all of the fixtures, furniture, furnishings, safes, and all other personal property, apparatus and paraphernalia * * *." As drawn, the contract included "stock in trade of watches and jewelry." Before signing this clause was stricken out. The contract as drawn also stated that being sold was "the sole possession of and all equities of the seller in the pledges of said business." Before signing, however, the following was added after the word "business": "save and except those pledges specifically set forth in separate agreement and schedule attached hereto." The contract further provided that the parties would "jointly take an inventory of all pledges existing and in effect as of August 31." It was agreed that the seller would continue to conduct the business until August 31 when the buyer would take over. Plaintiff executed a bill of sale dated August 31 which included in the property transferred "all equities of the seller in the pledges of said business." This was delivered at the time of the delivery of the three checks hereafter mentioned. The purchase price was $15,000, of which $5,000 was to be paid upon execution of the contract, the balance to be evidenced by a promissory note, payable in monthly installments of $250 commencing October 1. The note was never executed.

1. The court found that these two defendants were acting for themselves and as trustee for defendant Harry Blumenthal whom it included in the judgment. This finding is not challenged.

No inventory of pledges was attached to the contract. However, on the closing date, August 31, two inventories were prepared. Defendant Neil signed one copy of each and gave them to plaintiff. Plaintiff signed one copy of each, giving them to Neil. One was for pledges made prior to February 24, 1954, totalling $1,051.50. These pledges had expired technically but the interest thereon was being paid and had been pledged by special customers. The inventory stated that receipt of the listed pledges was acknowledged by the buyers and that they agreed to keep these pledges subject to redemption by the pledgors for at least one year. It also acknowledged receipt by the seller of $1,051.50 in consideration of which the seller assigned to buyer all his interest in said pledges or the equities therein. The second inventory was of the other pledges of the business. These totalled $7,055.50 and the inventory contained a receipt of the listed pledges "as per terms of that certain Agreement," the contract above mentioned. It further contained acknowledgment of payment of $7,055.50 "in full for and in consideration of the transfer and sale of all the equities in and to the hereinabove itemized and listed pledges." On the same day as the inventories were signed defendant Neil gave plaintiff three checks, one for $4,500 dated August 30 (admittedly this was the initial payment which the parties had agreed should be less than that provided in the contract), a second, dated August 31, for $7,055.50; on the back was typed "All Equities in pledges"; a third, dated the same day, for $1,051.50; on its back was typed "In full for pledges set forth in separate agreement." January 12, 1955, defendant Neil tendered plaintiff a check for $3,444.50, contending that to be the balance due under the contract and for the pledges listed in the first inventory above mentioned, claiming credit against the $15,000 contract price for the total of the three checks.[2] Plaintiff refused to accept the tender, claiming that the only payment on the contract price was the $4,500 and that the other sums were paid for the pledges which plaintiff claimed were excluded from the contract.

The court found that the contract was ambiguous as to whether or not the understanding of the parties was that the pledges in the second inventory above mentioned were included in the contract price, and permitted oral evidence of the circumstances attendant upon the execution of the contract and the inventories.

[2] Without detailing the evidence, plaintiff's evidence showed that all pledges were left out of the contract and not included in the contract price for the reason that it was not possible at the time of execution of the contract to know the amount of pledges there would be on August 31. A pledgor might redeem any time before the closing date and also plaintiff, as he was continuing the business until that date, might make additional pledge loans. Defendants' evidence was to the effect that only the pledges in the first inventory (pledges made prior to February 24, 1954) were excluded from the contract price, and that all other pledges were to be paid for by the $15,000. This conflict was resolved by the trial court and as the evidence was contradictory we are bound by the court's determination.

2. The excess over $15,000 was for alleged accrued interest.

[3, 4] Defendants contend that the contract is not ambiguous. Under the law, whether a contract is ambiguous or uncertain so as to permit extrinsic evidence to show its terms is a question of law for the trial court to determine in the first instance. Its determination is not binding on this court. Brant v. California Dairies, Inc., 1935, 4 Cal.2d 128, 133, 48 P.2d 13; Barlow v. Frink, 1915, 171 Cal. 165, 172, 152 P. 290. However, where it is ambiguous or uncertain and parol evidence is introduced in aid of interpretation, then the question of the meaning is one of fact. Particularly is this so when the evidence on the subject is conflicting. Then our province is merely to determine if there is substantial evidence to support the trial court's determination. Gibson v. De La Salle Institute, 1944, 66 Cal.App.2d 609, 621, 152 P.2d 774. We agree with the trial court that the contract is ambiguous and uncertain. It provides that "those pledges specifically set forth in separate agreement and schedule attached hereto" are excepted. What does this mean when two agreements and schedules were made, neither of which was attached to the contract? Defendants concede that the pledges listed in the first schedule are excepted from the agreement. A part of the first schedule is a receipt acknowledging that $1,051.50 was received in full payment of the pledges therein listed, and a part of the second schedule is a receipt for the pledges listed therein "as per terms" of the contract, and for $7,055.50 in full payment for those pledges. Thus, this schedule in effect says that the pledges listed on it are those which are excepted in the contract, and therefore are not to be paid for by the $15,000.

[5, 6] Taking the language of the contract to the effect that there was being sold "the sole possession of and all equities of the seller in the pledges of said business, save and except those pledges specifically set forth in separate agreement and schedule attached hereto," coupled with the fact that two schedules were made, neither attached to the contract, and that attached to the schedules were receipts of $1,051.50 in one, and $7,055.50 in the other in payment for the pledges listed in the particular schedule, it is obvious that there was an uncertainty as to what the agreement meant. As said in Pacific Indemnity Co. v. California Electric Works, 29 Cal. App.2d 260, 273, 84 P.2d 313, 320: "* * * if there is any reasonable room for doubt as to what the contract means or as to what the exact words thereof apply to, then parol evidence is properly admitted." Defendants contend on the one hand that the agreement is clear and unambiguous and on the other hand that the evidence as to what was meant by the insertion of the "save and except" clause was admissible. They then contend that the trial court should have accepted the version given by their attorney who testified as to the circumstances under which the clause was inserted and what it meant, whereas the court accepted the version of plaintiff's attorney as to these. Needless to say, the resolving of this conflict was within the province of the trial court. After determining that the contract was ambiguous the trial court determined the true intent of the parties, using the method laid down in Universal Sales Corp. v. California Press Mfg. Co., 20 Cal.2d 751, 761, 128 P.2d 665, 671: "As an aid in discovering the all-important element of intent of the parties to the contract, the trial court may look to the circumstances surrounding the making of the agreement [citations], including the object, nature and subject matter of the writing [citations], and the preliminary negotiations between the parties [citations], and thus place itself in the same situation in which the parties found themselves at the time of contracting." See also Berverdor, Inc., v. Salyer Farms, 97 Cal.App.2d 459, 462–463, 218 P.2d 138.

The judgment is affirmed.

PETERS, P. J., and FRED B. WOOD, J., concur.

159 Cal.App.2d 206

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Charles Fred BRASHER and Raymond Owen Edwards, Defendants,

Raymond Owen Edwards, Appellant.

Cr. 2816.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

April 7, 1958.

Two defendants were convicted of burglary in the second degree and from a judgment of the Superior Court, Stanislaus County, Frank C. Damrell, J., one of the defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Schottky, J., held that evidence including showing that accused was found inside market after closing hours, that door had been forced to gain access, that safe was not locked, that there were indications that someone had attempted to pry open the inner door and that meat was found on floor of meat locker, indicating that someone had moved it, was sufficient to sustain conviction of burglary in the second degree.

Affirmed.

1. Burglary ⇐29

The intent to commit a theft could reasonably be inferred from fact that meat had been moved from its place of storage in market.

2. Burglary ⇐41(1)

Evidence including showing that accused was found inside market after closing hours, that door had been forced to gain access, that safe was not locked, that there were indications that someone had attempted to pry open the inner door and that meat was found on floor of meat locker, indicating that someone had moved it, was sufficient to sustain conviction of burglary in the second degree.

Patrick R. Murphy, Sacramento, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SCHOTTKY, Justice.

Charles Fred Brasher and Raymond Owen Edwards were found guilty by a jury of the crime of burglary in the second degree. Judgment was entered on the verdict and Edwards has appealed from the judgment.

At appellant's request this court appointed Patrick R. Murphy, a member of the Sacramento Bar, to represent appellant upon this appeal. Mr. Murphy has informed this court by letter that after a careful review of the record he has reached the conclusion there is no meritorious ground of appeal and that he will file no brief. He also has informed us that he visited appellant, Edwards, and explained his views to appellant and that appellant has stated to him that he agrees that there is no legal merit to the appeal and that he (appellant) will file no brief in support of his appeal.

We have, however, examined the record and will briefly summarize the evidence. Two law enforcement officers located a 1951 Chevrolet station wagon parked in the rear of Azevedo's Market in the city of Patterson about 2:30 a. m. of June 24, 1957. No one was in the vehicle, but one officer who inspected the vehicle saw ropes, a tool box, and a dolly in it. The officers then proceeded to check the building. One of them found a door with some fresh pry marks near the lock area. By the door were two metal bars which were described as wrecking bars. One of the officers grasped the door knob in order to enter the building, and a knife which had been lodged in the inside of the door fell to the floor and the door was opened. Two other knives were found outside the door. The officers entered the market and found appellant and Charles Brasher standing near the corner of a walk-in ice box with their gloved hands in the air. Appellant, in response to a question, said that he found the door open and walked in. The meat storage compartment was found open and meat was lying on the floor. A sledge and a hatchet were found underneath a sink in the locker room. A safe which was located in the market was found to have been opened. The door was closed when the safe was observed but the handle was not in the locked position. The inner door of the safe appeared to have been sprung by prying—there were pry marks in the left hand upper corner of the safe. The cash register had also been tampered with.

Mrs. Azevedo testified that she had closed the market about 6:00 p. m. the previous evening. She locked the storerooms, back door and the front door. The back door was locked by wedging three knives in it. She removed the day's receipts from the cash register and placed them in the safe and locked both the inside and outside of the safe. No meat was on the floor of the walk-in box when she locked up the store. She had never seen the tools which were found beneath the sink.

Brasher, Edwards' accomplice, testified that he and Edwards had left San Francisco in Edwards' Chevrolet station wagon about 8:45 p. m. on June 23, 1957. While driving, Edwards said he knew "where we could make some easy money." He later pointed out the market and said the money should be in there. Later they drove behind the market where Edwards got out to go to a restroom, and after five or ten minutes he called Brasher over to the restroom and they then entered the store. Brasher testified that the door was open when they entered. After they were in the store a few minutes Brasher saw the police who entered shortly thereafter.

Edwards claimed that he entered the store, which he thought was a motel office, to obtain a room for the night. There were some cabins in the rear which could be rented. He denied any intent to commit any crime.

[1, 2] It is clear that the jury could infer that an entry had been made in the market for the purpose of committing a larceny, even without the testimony of the accomplice. Edwards was found inside a market after closing hours. There was evidence that a door had been forced to gain access. The safe was not locked and there were indications that someone had attempted to pry open the inner door. Meat was found on the floor of the meat locker, indicating that someone had moved it. The intent to commit a theft could reasonably be inferred from the fact that the meat had been moved from its place of storage. People v. Fitch, 73 Cal.App.2d 825, 167 P.2d 211. Indeed, it could be inferred from the evidence of unlawful and forcible entry alone.

We are satisfied that the appellant received a fair trial, that the jury was fully and correctly instructed, and that the evidence supports the judgment.

The judgment is affirmed.

VAN DYKE, P. J., and PEEK, J., concur.

159 Cal.App.2d 208

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Raymond Owen EDWARDS, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 2820.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

April 7, 1958.

Defendant was convicted of feloniously taking a trailer without consent of the owner and from a judgment of the Superior Court, Stanislaus County, H. L. Chamberlain, J., defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Schottky, J., held, inter alia, that where theory of prosecution was that theft of trailer was part of a larger scheme to burglarize a market and take safe therefrom in event accused could not open it, and that scheme was interrupted by apprehension of perpetrators in the market, evidence showing commission of burglary of the market including attempted opening of safe and possession of tools, was properly admitted as tending to prove motive for taking of trailer, and that the error in admitting evidence of a prior burglary did not require reversal where evidence was such that the error did not result in a miscarriage of justice.

Affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇐371(12)

If proof fairly and logically establishes a motive for crime charged, it is admissible though it also proves another crime by defendant.

2. Criminal Law ⇐371(12)

In prosecution for feloniously taking a trailer without consent of owner, wherein theory of prosecution was that theft of trailer was part of larger scheme to burglarize a market and take safe therefrom in event accused could not open it, and that scheme was interrupted by apprehension of perpetrators in the market, evidence showing commission of burglary of the market including attempted opening of safe and possession of tools, was properly admitted as tending to prove that motive for taking of trailer was its use in transporting safe in event it could not be opened inside the market.

3. Criminal Law ⇐369(2)

In prosecution for feloniously taking a trailer without consent of owner, wherein theory of prosecution was that theft of trailer was part of larger scheme to burglarize a market and take safe therefrom in event accused could not open it, evidence of burglary of the market was relevant as corroborating testimony of possible accomplice in the offense.

4. Criminal Law ⇐511(1)

In corroboration of accomplice's testimony, entire conduct of parties, the relationship, acts, and conduct during and after the crime, may be taken into consideration by jury in determining sufficiency of the corroboration.

5. Criminal Law ⇐374

While evidence of other similar crimes is admissible to show common plan or system of operation, evidence of defendant's guilt of such other crimes must be established by evidence which clearly connects defendant therewith.

6. Criminal Law ⇐369(2)

Defendant cannot be required to defend himself against any other crime than the one with which he is charged, but such rule does not exclude evidence of other crimes when it is relevant to establish defendant's guilt of crime for which he is being tried, notwithstanding fact that it tends to connect defendant with offense not included in the charge.

7. Criminal Law ⇐374

Evidence of other crimes should not be received unless defendant is clearly connected therewith.

8. Larceny ⇐64(1)

Possession of stolen goods is not of itself sufficient to justify conviction of larceny, although it is a circumstance to be considered in connection with other proven facts.

9. Criminal Law ⇐371(12), 372(5)

In prosecution for feloniously taking a trailer without consent of owner, wherein theory of prosecution was that theft of trailer was part of larger scheme to burglarize a market and take safe therefrom in event accused could not open it, evidence that accused's trailer had been found in another municipality with a safe in it on certain date following a burglary and prior to date of alleged crime charged, for purpose of showing a common scheme and plan and motives was inadmissible and error in admitting it was accentuated by instruction that evidence tending to show commission of other crimes was received for limited purpose of indicating whether defendant was innocent or guilty of crime charged.

10. Criminal Law ⇐1186(4)

Under constitutional provision providing for reversal where error results in "miscarriage of justice," "miscarriage of justice" should be declared only when the court, after examination of the entire cause, including the evidence, is of the opinion that it is reasonably probable that a result more favorable to appealing party would have been reached in absence of the error. West's Ann.Const. art. 6, § 4½.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Miscarriage of Justice".

11. Criminal Law ⇐1186(4)

In prosecution for feloniously taking a trailer without consent of owner, wherein theory of prosecution was that theft of trailer was part of larger scheme to burglarize a market and take safe therefrom in event accused could not open it, error in admission of evidence of a prior burglary wherein accused's trailer with a safe in it had been found, did not require reversal of judgment of conviction where evidence properly introduced was such that the error in admission of the evidence did not result in miscarriage of justice. West's Ann. Const. art. 6, § 4½.

Patrick R. Murphy, Sacramento, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SCHOTTKY, Justice.

Raymond Owen Edwards was found guilty by a jury of violating section 503 of the Vehicle Code. The information charged him with feloniously driving and taking a trailer belonging to Town and Country Rentals without the consent of the owner. He has appealed from the judgment entered upon the verdict.

Appellant does not question the sufficiency of the evidence to support the judgment, but urges as grounds for reversal that the court committed prejudicial error in the admission of certain testimony and that the District Attorney was guilty of prejudicial misconduct. Before discussing these contentions we shall give a brief summary of the evidence as shown by the record.

The evidence produced at the trial disclosed that a Selma trailer, the property of Town and Country Rentals, disappeared from King's Service Station, the Modesto agent of the trailer company, between the evening of June 23, 1957, and the morning of June 24, 1957. No one at the service station authorized anyone to take the trailer; no rental contract was made.

Appellant and one Charles Fred Brasher drove to Modesto late in the evening of June 23, 1957, in appellant's 1950 Chevrolet station wagon, arriving there about midnight. In passing through Patterson, a nearby town to Modesto, the appellant pointed out the Azevedo Market as a place where they could get easy money. In Modesto they stopped in front of a bar which Brasher entered to go to a restroom. When Brasher returned a few minutes later there was, for the first time that evening, a trailer attached to the automobile. The trailer was identified as the one which disappeared from the service station. The two men then drove to Patterson, detached the trailer from the station wagon, drove for a while and then drove behind the Azevedo Market and entered the market where they were apprehended. Brasher testified that the trailer was to be used to haul groceries or a safe.

Various tools, including crowbars, a sledge hammer and a hatchet, were found in the market by the officers. None of these tools belong to the owners of the store or were in the store when it closed the day before. The crowbars had previously been in appellant's station wagon. A dolly, some blankets, webbing and a large amount of rope, and a bolt cutter were found in the rear of appellant's station wagon. Appellant admitted that these tools belonged to him.

A member of the Patterson Police Department testified that about 1:30 a. m. he noticed a Chevrolet station wagon in which two men were riding, one of whom was wearing a cowboy hat (Brasher was wearing such a hat), and that the station wagon had a Town and Country trailer attached. Later, the trailer was found parked about one-half mile from the market. A tire imprint 2½ feet from the trailer matched the tread of the left rear tire of the Chevrolet station wagon. Appellant admitted that the station wagon was his automobile.

Appellant testified on his own behalf. On direct examination he denied taking the trailer and denied ever having it attached to his car. In rebuttal the district attorney was allowed to prove various details of the burglary of the market in Patterson and a burglary which had occurred on May 14, 1957, in Modesto. In the Modesto burglary a safe was found in a trailer which belonged to appellant, in the rear of the burglarized establishment.

Appellant's first contention is that the court erred in admitting testimony of the details of the burglary in the market at Patterson on June 24, 1957. The evidence of the burglary in Patterson came in by way of rebuttal. On direct examination appellant denied that he ever had the trailer attached to his car, testified that he never saw it before, and that his car was in Patterson and Modesto the evening in question. On cross-examination he testified that he was in Modesto about 12:45 a. m. for the purpose of getting a job in the fields; that he had to return to San Francisco about 8:00 a. m.; that he went to Patterson to seek a location for a flower shop. The district attorney then asked the following questions, among others:

"Isn't it true you went to Patterson to more or less look over the Azevedo Market for the purpose of burglarizing it?

"In fact, you were found inside the market, weren't you?

"What were you doing inside the grocery store?

"Did you attempt to open the safe?

"Was it your intention to remove the safe if you could not open it?

"You are certain you didn't intend to use this trailer, you and Mr. Brasher, to haul away the safe out of Azevedo's Market?

Appellant's objections to these questions were overruled, and appellant denied any intent or attempt to burglarize the Azevedo Market, and stated that he entered it thinking that it was a motel. The prosecution then was permitted, over the objection of appellant, to introduce evidence of the details of the burglary of the market.

Appellant contends that all of the evidence relating to the burglary of the Azevedo Market in Patterson was inadmissible and highly prejudicial and was introduced solely to show appellant's criminal inclination and to prejudice and inflame the jury against him.

Appellant cites from 18 Cal.Jur.2d, page 583, as follows:

"Subject to certain exceptions, evidence of the commission of other independent offenses by the accused, having no tendency to prove a material fact in connection with the particular crime charged, cannot be given by the prosecution, unless it is a part of the res gestae."

Appellant argues that there is no direct relationship in the instant case between the commission of a burglary and the theft of a motor vehicle, the crime with which appellant was charged.

Respondent in reply contends that evidence of the Patterson burglary was admissible as part of the res gestae and to show motive and establish intent. Respondent states that it was the theory of the prosecution that the theft of the trailer, the crime with which the appellant is charged, was part of a larger scheme to burglarize the Azevedo Market and take the safe from the premises in the event the appellant could not open it; that the scheme was interrupted by the apprehension of the perpetrators in the market so that the taking and use of the stolen vehicle was never completed; and that since the res gestae of the theft of the trailer included breaking into the market, the attempted taking of the safe and the intent to load the safe on the trailer, the proof of these acts became relevant to the principal offense.

[1, 2] We think that there was no error in the admission of evidence showing the commission of the burglary of the Azevedo Market on June 24, 1957. It is well settled that if the proof fairly and logically establishes a motive for the crime charged, it is admissible though it also proves another crime by the defendant. People v. Peete, 28 Cal.2d 306, 169 P.2d 924; People v. O'Brand, 92 Cal.App.2d 752, 207 P.2d 1083. The jury was properly instructed that this was one of the purposes for which they could consider the evidence. It is apparent that the evidence showing the breaking and entering of the market, the attempted opening of the safe and the possession of tools such as a bolt cutter, dolly, webbing and rope tended to prove that the motive for the taking of the trailer was its use in transporting the safe in the event it could not be opened inside the market. Since the evidence was relevant and therefore admissible, the trial judge properly overruled the objection of counsel.

[3, 4] The evidence of the burglary on June 24, 1957, was also relevant as corroborating the testimony of Brasher, a possible accomplice in the offense. The jury was correctly instructed as to the definition of an accomplice and the need of corroborating such testimony by other evidence as shall tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense. In corroboration of such testimony the entire conduct of the parties, their relationship, acts, and conduct during and after the crime, may be taken into consideration by the jury in determining the sufficiency of the corroboration. People v. Griffin, 98 Cal.App.2d 1, 219 P.2d 519.

Appellant next contends that the court committed prejudicial error in admitting over appellant's objection evidence of the crime of burglary committed in the city of Modesto, at the Modesto Livestock Company, on May 14, 1957, with the use of appellant's trailer.

At the trial, in rebuttal, Mr. Jack Avila testified that he had gone to the Modesto Livestock Company on old Crows landing Highway at 5:00 a. m. on May 14, 1957, and observed two men loading something on a trailer; that the car pulling the trailer was a "Chevvie" or Ford station wagon and was a light color; that after going to the office behind the sales yard he returned and saw the trailer, but the station wagon was gone; that there was a safe in the trailer.

Edward Bates, a criminal investigator for the county of Stanislaus, testified that he investigated a burglary early in the morning of May 14, 1957, at the Modesto Livestock Auction Yard and that a safe was found in the trailer identified in the testimony of Jack Avila. Appellant Edwards admitted that the trailer found in the yard of the Modesto Livestock Company on May 14, 1957, was his trailer. An investigation made by the sheriff's office of the county of Stanislaus showed that the trailer belonged to Edwards.

There was no evidence that appellant was in Modesto on May 14, 1957, and the only evidence tending to connect appellant with that burglary was evidence that appellant's trailer was found with the safe in it. The appellant on cross-examination testified that his trailer had been stolen from his home in San Francisco, and denied any connection with the Modesto burglary. It does not appear that appellant was ever charged with the May 14th burglary.

Respondent argues that evidence of the May 14th Modesto burglary was properly admissible to show "the identity in this very trial before the court, to show the modus operandi, to show a common scheme and plan." Respondent points out that the jury was instructed that evidence of such other offenses was not offered to prove distinct offenses or continual criminality and that they could only consider such evidence for the purpose of showing "First, the identity of the person who committed the alleged crime in question in this case, if it was committed; or, second, that the defendant had a motive for the commission of the offense charged against him in this action; or, third, that there existed in the mind of the defendant, a plan, scheme, system or design, into which fitted the commission of the offense for which he is now on trial."

[5–7] While it is true that evidence of other similar crimes is admissible to show a common plan or system of operation, it is also true that the evidence of defendant's guilt of such other crimes must be established by evidence which clearly connects defendant therewith. It is of course fundamental that a defendant in a criminal case cannot be required to defend himself against any other crime than the one with which he is charged. This rule does not exclude evidence of other crimes when it is relevant to establish a defendant's guilt of the crime for which he is being tried, notwithstanding the fact that it tends to connect the accused with an offense not included in the charge. Likewise, if the proof fairly and logically establishes a motive for the crime charged, it is admissible even though it proves another crime by defendant. People v. Peete, supra; People v. O'Brand, supra. But evidence of such other crimes should not be received unless the defendant is clearly connected therewith.

[8] Respondent apparently recognizes this, for throughout its argument respondent makes such statements as: "The evidence that appellant committed the May 14th burglary tended to show that there existed in the mind of the appellant a plan, scheme or design, into which fitted the commission of the offense for which he was on trial." "From the facts connecting the appellant with the events occurring on May 14th, it could be inferred * * *." "The fact that the appellant had used a trailer on May 14th to attempt to haul away a safe in the burglary of an establishment in the Modesto area again tended to show the motive for the theft of the trailer on June 24th." However, the weakness of respondent's position is that merely because the safe was found in a trailer belonging to appellant it cannot be assumed, as respondent assumes, that it has been established that appellant committed the Modesto burglary of May 14, 1957. The well established rule is that possession of stolen goods is not of itself sufficient to justify a conviction of larceny, although it is a circumstance to be considered in connection with other proven facts.

[9] We believe that the evidence of the Modesto burglary should not have been admitted. This error was accentuated by the following instruction given by the court:

> "Evidence was offered in this case tending to show that the defendant committed other crimes than the one of which he is accused and for which he is on trial in this action.
>
> "Such evidence was received for a limited purpose only; not to prove distinct offenses or continual criminality, but for the bearing, if any, as it might have on the question whether the defendant is innocent or guilty of the crime charged against him in this action in the information."

[10] Having concluded that it was error to admit the evidence of the Modesto burglary we must next determine whether such error requires a reversal of the judgment. By the mandate of section 4½ of Article VI of the Constitution of California we may not reverse a judgment "on the ground of misdirection of the jury, or of the improper admission or rejection of evidence, or for any error as to any matter of pleading, or for any error as to any matter of procedure, unless, after an examination of the entire cause, including the evidence, the court shall be of the opinion that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice." As stated in People v. Watson, 46 Cal.2d 818, at page 836, 299 P.2d 243, at page 254:

"Giving due consideration to the varying language heretofore employed in relating the constitutional amendment to the particular situations involved, it appears that the test generally applicable may be stated as follows: That a 'miscarriage of justice' should be declared only when the court, 'after an examination of the entire cause, including the evidence,' is of the 'opinion' that it is reasonably probable that a result more favorable to the appealing party would have been reached in the absence of the error."

[11] We have carefully examined the entire record and are satisfied that the evidence properly introduced was of such strength that the hereinbefore mentioned error in the admission of evidence did not result in a miscarriage of justice. Under such circumstances we would not be justified in reversing the judgment.

The judgment is affirmed.

VAN DYKE, P. J., and PEEK, J., concur.

158 Cal.App.2d 19

ESTATE of Mary ROHDE, Deceased.
Nellie Fust RUCKES, Contestant and Respondent,
v.
Howard MAGEE, as Executor and Legatee, Respondent and Appellant.
No. 17548.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Feb. 26, 1958.

Hearing Denied April 23, 1958.

Proceedings to set aside probate of will in which beneficiary was testatrix's attorney. The Superior Court, City & County of San Francisco, Edward Molkenbuhr, J., entered judgment revoking probate on ground of undue influence and proponent appealed. The District Court of Appeal, McMurray, J. pro tem., held that where trial judge searched for credible evidence and sufficient credible evidence to sustain verdict and where he considered proper weight to be accorded evidence, mere fact that trial judge expressed his dissatisfaction with rule that presumptions continue as evidence throughout case in California did not justify grant of new trial on theory that trial judge did not consider evidence which was introduced to overcome presumption of undue influence which arose from attorney-client relationship.

Affirmed.

1. New Trial ⇐72

The trial judge should not disregard a verdict or determine what result he would have reached if case had been tried before him, without a jury; instead, he should consider proper weight to be accorded to evidence and then decide whether there is sufficient credible evidence to support verdict in determining motion for new trial.

2. Evidence ⇐87

In California, a presumption is evidence to be weighed against adverse evidence.

3. New Trial ⇐157

Where trial judge searched for credible evidence and sufficient credible evidence to sustain verdict and where he considered proper weight to be accorded evidence, mere fact that trial judge expressed his dissatisfaction with rule that presumptions continue as evidence throughout case did not mean that trial judge did not perform his duty or did not consider evidence which was introduced to overcome presumption of undue influence which arose from an attorney-client relationship in denying motion for new trial.

4. Appeal and Error ⇐717

The opinion of the trial court, while of great assistance to an appellate court, is no part of record and decrees and orders are matters for consideration by an appellate court, not reasons for judicial decision.

5. Trial ⇐296(2)

In proceedings to set aside probate of will, where there was some direct evidence concerning undue influence, error in instruction to effect that direct evidence as to undue influence is rarely obtainable and hence jury must determine issue of undue influence by inferences drawn from all facts and circumstances was not prejudicial in view of further instructions.

6. Trial ⇐235(4)

In proceedings to set aside probate of will in which attorney was beneficiary, instruction to effect that jury could consider both direct and circumstantial evidence and that both were admissible and any fact in the case could be proved by either direct or circumstantial evidence or both was proper.

7. Trial ⇐252(18), 296(2)

In proceedings to set aside probate of a will, where there was no evidence of fraud, instruction to effect that although undue influence and fraud are not the same thing and one may exist without the other, yet undue influence may be exerted by means of fraud, was error; however in view of numerous instructions which were correctly given regarding jury's duty and law in case, error was not prejudicial.

8. Wills ⇐155(4)

Although kindness and attention alone would not constitute undue influence, they might, when combined with other factors, amount to such influence.

9. Trial ⇐260(5)

In proceedings to set aside probate of a will, failure to give requested instruction to effect that any degree of influence resulting from kindness and attention to testatrix could not constitute undue influence, did not amount to reversible error, where there were many and adequate instructions given on subject of undue influence and it was properly defined for jury.

Charles Reagh and Bert W. Hirschberg, San Francisco, for appellant.

Jacobsen & Tobin, San Francisco, for respondent.

McMURRAY, Justice pro tem.

The will of Mary Rohde was admitted to probate after her death in November, 1952; within the six months' period allowed for contest, the respondent instituted proceedings to set aside the will. The trial resulted in a jury verdict in favor of the contestant, based on two grounds:

(1) That the testatrix was mentally incompetent, and

(2) That the will was the product of undue influence.

A motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict was denied as to undue influence. The trial judge, however, held that the evidence as to mental incompetency was insufficient to support the verdict. A motion for a new trial was denied. This appeal is from the judgment revoking probate of the will.

Mary Rohde was 82 years old on October 16, 1951, when she executed the will, which is here concerned. She had no children, no relatives in the United States, and her husband had predeceased her by two years. There is much testimony in the record as to Mrs. Rohde's mental condition. This, however, is not involved in this appeal, and will not be here considered.

Several days before making the will, Mrs. Rohde called a friend and told her that she had made an appointment by phone with Mr. Magee. The friend had never before met Mr. Magee. Mrs. Rohde asked this friend to take her to Mr. Magee's office; this the friend did and upon arriving there Mrs. Rohde recognized Mr. Magee and introduced him to her friend. Mr. Magee then took Mrs. Rohde into his private office.

There is conflict in the testimony as to the purpose of Mrs. Rohde's visit at this time. Some of contestant's witnesses claim she went to the office for the purpose of obtaining legal assistance in cancelling the sale of her home. Mr. Magee stated that he knew nothing about the proposed sale of the home on the day the decedent visited his office. The real estate salesman, who had negotiated the sale, testified that Mr. Magee had telephoned him the morning the will was made, and stated that Mrs. Rohde was in his office, and that he read portions of the sale agreement to the real estate salesman. The salesman further testified that Mr. Magee told him that Mrs. Rohde came down to consult him about the selling of the property. Mr. Magee testified that Mrs. Rohde came to his office to prepare her will. After Mrs. Rohde went into Mr. Magee's office, his secretary came out to the car to see the friend, who had driven her down there, and stated that Mr. Magee wished to see her. Mr. Magee met her in an outer office, and told her that Mrs. Rohde was making a will, and decided to include her as a beneficiary, and he wished to get the proper spelling of her name.

Mrs. Rohde was alone with Mr. Magee for approximately fifteen minutes, according to the testimony of the proponent of the will. During that time the will was discussed and notes were taken, from which the will was prepared by Mr. Magee's secretary. The secretary was given these notes and proceeded to type a short will. It was estimated that this took from ten to twenty minutes. During that time Mrs. Rohde was alone with Mr. Magee. After the will was typed, Mr. Magee went next door to Mr. Devlin's office (Mr. Devlin is an attorney with offices located next to Mr. Magee's) and Mr. Devlin was asked to witness the will, but when told that Magee was the chief beneficiary requested that he be left alone in the office with Mrs. Rohde.

Mr. Devlin had never met Mrs. Rohde before this time. Mr. Magee told him that the will had been prepared in accordance with Mrs. Rohde's wishes. After Mr. Magee had left the room at Devlin's request, Devlin read the will word for word to Mrs. Rohde, asking her at the end of each clause if that was her will. To each clause she answered affirmatively that it was her will. Thereafter, Mr. Devlin called Mr. Magee back into the private office, and he and Mr. Magee's secretary attested the document. Mr. Magee was not present when it was executed. Thereafter, Mr. Devlin went back to his office, obtained two paper backs for the wills, and affixed them to the will. The will, therefore, appears to have been prepared by Mr. Devlin at his address, rather than by Mr. Magee at his address next door.

When Mrs. Rohde left Mr. Magee's office, he helped her into the automobile, in which her friend was, and handed the friend a five-dollar bill, remarking, "Mrs. Rohde wants you to have this $5." From this friend's testimony it appears that the entire transaction at Mr. Magee's office did not take more than an hour and possibly even less time. Mr. Magee's secretary, who was an attesting witness to the will, testified that she typed the will from a work sheet given her by Mr. Magee, that she had typed many wills during the ten years she had worked for Mr. Magee and knew how to type them from notes. The residuary clause of the will reads, "my good friend and attorney, Howard Magee." The secretary stated this wording was not on the work sheet given her by Mr. Magee, that she was not sure whether he had verbally told her to word it in that manner or whether she did so automatically. The secretary testified that after she witnessed the will she did not see Mrs. Rohde again except when she passed through the reception room on her way out.

Mr. Magee, the executor and chief beneficiary of this will, had never visited Mrs. Rohde at her house prior to October 16, 1951, the date of the making of the will, but had seen her at meetings of the Nelson A. Miles Auxiliary, U.S.W.V., where his mother and Mrs. Rohde were members.

Before drawing the will, Mr. Magee had acted as Mrs. Rohde's attorney on one prior occasion. After the death of her husband, Mrs. Rohde consulted him for assistance in filling out a claim form to receive a pension, as the widow of a Spanish-American War veteran. This was in April of 1949. Upon the death of her husband, she did not seek Mr. Magee's assistance in the transfer of bank accounts, the recording of the deed on the home or any other matters. The will made no mention of the contestant, who was the niece of Mrs. Rohde's predeceased husband, nor did the will make any mention of her closest friends.

The trial judge filed a memorandum opinion, denying the motion for new trial, which reads as follows: "Memo on Order Denying New Trial.

[1] "It is my opinion that a trial Judge should not disregard a verdict or determine what result he would have reached if the case had been tried before him, without a jury; instead, he should consider the proper weight to be accorded to the evidence and then decide whether there is sufficient credible evidence to support it.

"In this case we have the presumption, which is evidence, running through the entire case; it is substantial and credible and cannot be disbelieved (if such an act is possible). This shows the effect of the irrational rule in California that a presumption is evidence and is not dispelled by rebutting evidence. How then could I conscientiously say, if I were to grant a new trial on the ground of insufficient evidence, that there was insufficient credible evidence to sustain the verdict of the jury? A trial Judge does not act as a thirteenth juror. It is the duty of the trial Judge to see that the jury intelligently and justly performs its duty and in the exercise of proper legal discretion to determine whether there is sufficient credible evidence to sustain the verdict.

"Motion for new trial is hereby denied."

[2, 3] The appellant argues that by the language of this memorandum it appears affirmatively that the trial judge did not properly perform his duty, since from the language it appears that the court did not consider the evidence which was introduced to overcome the presumption of undue influence, which arose from the attorney-client relationship here involved. The first paragraph of the memorandum of opinion is certainly a proper statement of the trial judge's duty in passing upon a motion for a new trial. It is in the second paragraph, where he expresses some displeasure with the California rule regarding presumptions, which gives rise to the question of his performance of his duties. However, despite the fact that the trial judge expressed dissatisfaction with the California rule, it does not appear that he did not properly perform his duty. There is no affirmative showing that he did not weigh the evidence contrary to the presumption and find that the presumption was the better evidence. His expression of dissatisfaction may well be taken to be more academic and philosophical than actual. Furthermore, the language relative to the duty of the trial judge, "to see that the jury intelligently and justly performs its duty * * ," shows that the trial judge did in fact consider the justice of the verdict and properly so. In the case of People v. Robarge, 41 Cal.2d 628, 634, 262 P.2d 14, 17, it appears affirmatively that the trial judge did not perform his duty, as he stated: " * * that it was mindful of 'the rule that the jury are the sole judges of the credibility of the witness. It adheres to that rule to the extent that even though the Court disbelieves what the witnesses may have said, if there is sufficient evidence upon which the jury may base their decision, even though the Court sits as a thirteenth juror, it is not in a position to upset the verdict of the jury.'" There is no such affirmative showing in the language used here. It should not be assumed that a trial judge, who shows the awareness of his duties evidenced by the memorandum here written, which in fact contains verbatim many of the phrases contained in People v. Robarge, supra, would be so well acquainted with his duty and then ignore that duty. The passage in the memorandum opinion here under consideration relative to the rule on presumptions as continuing evidence throughout the case is no doubt a reference to the rule in California that a presumption is evidence to be weighed against adverse evidence. The trial judge's dissatisfaction with this rule is not unique. It has been expressed many places. However it is the law of this state, and when it is considered that this same trial judge fully and correctly instructed the jury as to the role of presumptions in relation to other evidence in California, it should not be assumed that, upon the motion for a new trial, he neglected to apply these same rules.

[4] It has often been said that the opinion of the trial court, while of great assistance to an appellate court, is really no part of a record and that the decrees and orders are the matters for consideration by an appellate court, not the reasons for the judicial decision. In re Estate of Finkler, 7 Cal.2d 97, 103, 59 P.2d 801; Broadfoot v. Leather Supply Co., 69 Cal.App.2d 729, 735, 160 P.2d 59; Fechtner v. Costa, 16 Cal. App.2d 691, 697, 61 P.2d 473. Appellant urges strongly that the trial judge's memorandum shows conclusively that he merely looked to see if there was any evidence to support the jury's finding. A reading of that opinion shows by its very language that the trial judge searched for credible evidence and sufficient credible evidence to sustain the verdict, and that he considered the proper weight to be accorded to the evidence. He nowhere says that he did not consider appellant's evidence.

[5, 6] The appellant urges that the trial court committed error in giving and refusing certain instructions.

The jury was correctly instructed that it could consider both direct and circumstantial evidence and that both are admissible and any fact in the case may be proven by either direct or circumstantial evidence or both. Appellant argues that they were then incorrectly told as follows: "You are instructed that direct evidence as to undue influence is rarely obtainable and hence you must determine the issue of undue influence by inferences drawn from all the facts and circumstances. Circumstantial evidence may be sufficient to support a finding of undue influence. Taken singly the facts or circumstances may be of little weight, but taken collectively they acquire their proper weight." [Italics added.] Appellant argues that this instruction told the jury to disregard certain direct testimony, that of Mr. Devlin, where he testified that he went over Mrs. Rohde's will with her phrase by phrase, asking her if those were her wishes and that she had replied affirmatively as to each phrase. Assuredly, this first instruction complained of by using the word "must," which is here emphasized in the first quoted instruction, was an incorrect statement of the law in conjunction with the evidence before the jury in this case. However, by reading the very numerous instructions, which were given to the jury, it becomes evident that by placing undue emphasis on this one word an incorrect interpretation of the instructions as a whole would result. The jury was also instructed: "You are instructed that the presumption of undue influence may be explained and rebutted by testimony of persons present at the time the instrument was executed, by proof that the testatrix gave instructions for the preparation of the instrument, and by evidence that the testatrix subsequently affirmed or expressed approval of its provisions. Whether it has been rebutted is a question of fact for you as jurors to determine." The proper approach in viewing such an inconsistency between instructions is stated in Soda v. Marriott, 118 Cal.App. 635, at pages 642–643, 5 P.2d 675, at page 678, where, it is stated: "It is true that some of the incorrect principles announced in the foregoing challenged instructions were elsewhere correctly stated to the jury in other instructions which were given. It is also true that the instructions which were given must be construed as a whole, in determining whether they contain reversible error. If a single instruction omits an essential element of the cause, but is a correct declaration of the law so far as it goes, and the omitted element is correctly given in another instruction, the omission will ordinarily be cured thereby. If, however, an essential principle of law is stated to the jury materially incorrect, this prejudicial error will not ordinarily be cured by a correct declaration of the same principle in another instruction. The giving of instructions which are contradictory in essential elements may warrant the reversal of a judgment, for the reason that it is impossible to determine which charge controlled the determination of the jury." The instruction complained of is general in nature. Another general instruction told the jury they could consider both direct and circumstantial evidence on all issues involved and a specific instruction, in effect, told them they could consider the testimony of Mr. Devlin. The error in the instruction relative to the circumstantial evidence was not prejudicial in view of the other instructions here given.

[7] The second instruction complained of is as follows: "You are instructed that although undue influence and fraud are not the same thing, and one may exist without the other, yet undue influence may be exerted by means of fraud. Confidence or influence may be used to obtain an unfair advantage over another party in a variety of ways." [Italics added.] Appellants argue that this instruction is error, in that there was no evidence of the existence of fraud and that by the mention of fraud the jury was lead to believe that the judge believed that fraud might have entered into the case. This instruction was under the facts of this case error. However, the passage heretofore quoted from in Soda v. Marriott, supra, 118 Cal.App. 635, 5 P.2d 675, would again seem to be controlling, and in view of the numerous instructions regarding the jury's duty and the law in the case, which were correctly given, it does not appear to have been prejudicial particularly when it is remembered that no evidence of fraud appears in the record. As is said in Erickson v. Water Land Truck Lines, 119 Cal.App.2d 210, 212, 259 P.2d 484, 486, "It would credit jurors with less than average understanding to assume that they were confused or misled by the challenged instruction. The instructions as a whole were clear, correct and comprehensive, although it is true that some part of the particular instruction might have been modified.

" 'It is elementary that a judgment will not be reversed for error which can be found only by detaching a portion or portions of a charge from the context, when such charge in its entirety fairly and correctly states the law.' "

[8, 9] The trial court also refused to give a requested instruction, which was submitted by appellant, which read as follows: "Any decree of influence resulting from kindness and attention to the testatrix can never constitute undue influence within the meaning of the law. Mere acts of kindness and solicitude performed with honest motives without regard for monetary gain should not be regarded by you as undue influence." The instruction might well have been given, but would have required modification, since the first sentence of the requested instruction is not a true statement of the law as it is too broad, since although kindness and attention alone would not constitute undue influence, they might, when combined with other factors, amount to such influence. There were many and adequate instructions given on the subject of undue influence, and it was properly defined for the jury. The fact that they were not given the requested instruction would not, in our opinion, amount to reversible error when the facts of this case are considered.

BRAY, Acting P. J., and FRED B. WOOD, J., concur.

159 Cal.App.2d 281

BETA SIGMA TAU, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

SHRINE CIVIC AUDITORIUM, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 22864.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

April 9, 1958.

Rehearing Denied April 30, 1958.

Action to recover for breach of a contract. Judgment for plaintiff by the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Stanley Mosk, J., and the defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that where in conversations allegedly constituting an oral agreement for lease of an auditorium, it was understood that it was necessary to sign a written lease, and at the same time to pay $200 to apply on the rental and it did not appear that lessee ever agreed to pay the balance at any certain time or at all and no consideration passed from the lessee to the lessor, no valid agreeement was entered into.

Judgment reversed.

1. Contracts ⇐32

Where the parties have agreed upon all essential facts, there is a binding contract notwithstanding that a more formal contract is to be prepared and signed later.

2. Landlord and Tenant ⇐22(1)

Where in conversations allegedly constituting an oral agreement for lease of an auditorium, it was understood that it was necessary to sign a written lease and at same time to pay $200 to apply on rental and it did not appear that lessee ever agreed to pay balance at any certain time or at all, and no consideration passed from lessee to lessor, no valid agreement was entered into and alleged lessor was not liable for losses sustained by alleged lessee. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 1586, 1622.

3. Appeal and Error ⇐1010(1)
Contracts ⇐14

Whether an oral contract is made depends upon intention of the parties and is determined by the surrounding circumstances and is a question to be determined by the trial court and if there is any substantial evidence in support of its decision an appellate court cannot reweigh the evidence.

A. G. Ritter, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Herbert W. Simmons, Jr., Los Angeles, for respondent.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

Defendant Shrine Civic Auditorium appeals from the judgment in favor of the plaintiff, Beta Sigma Tau, a college fraternity and non-profit corporation, for $2,695 and costs, in plaintiff's action for damages for breach of contract.

Appellant urges that the judgment should be reversed for the following reasons: (1) that there is no evidence to sustain the finding that a contract was made; (2) that there is no evidence of any breach of contract by defendant; and (3) that there is no evidence to sustain the finding that plaintiff was damaged by any act of defendant.

The following is a fair summary of the evidence tending to support the finding that a contract was made. We have ignored all denials and conflicts, as we must.

Benjamin W. Alston, a student at the University of California at Los Angeles, was on July 15, 1954, the president of the undergraduate chapter and chairman of the board of directors of the plaintiff. He was authorized by plaintiff to secure the rental of an auditorium in which to stage a jazz concert for the benefit of the "Mark Rashmir" fund. On or about July 15, 1954, he called the Shrine Auditorium on the telephone and talked with someone who said he was Mr. McMeekin, the manager. He requested and received information as to the availability of the auditorium for certain tentative dates and asked Mr. McMeekin if he would "place a hold on his books for the date of August 20th". Mr. McMeekin "said that this could be done" and for the witness to come in and talk to him about it as soon as he had his arrangements made. "At the first contact", he "did not enter into a complete arrangement with them"; he "entered into a tentative arrangement with them". The witness believes he talked with Mr. McMeekin a second time on the telephone before he saw him. In that second telephone conversation Mr. McMeekin said "he would change the hold from the 20th to the 27th", and "when it was convenient to come in and we could iron out the details".

About July 29, 1954, Mr. Alston went to the Shrine Auditorium to talk about the matter and Mr. McMeekin "made the oral contract". That was the first time he had been "in the Shrine Auditorium to talk about this matter". At that time, he "had already made arrangements or commitments" for some of the performers, for tickets and publicity. He made those commitments before he had any conversation with Mr. McMeekin in person about leasing the auditorium, but after he "had Mr. McMeekin's assurance over the telephone that the auditorium would be held" for him on August 27th. He had been told by Mr. McMeekin over the telephone the amount of rental for the auditorium was $800 "which was agreeable" to him and to their purposes, and he had Mr. McMeekin's assurance that he would hold it for them until they came in to make the arrangements, and Mr. McMeekin had told him to come in at the earliest possible opportunity to get the details ironed out. Mr. McMeekin told him that at the time the written lease was executed there would be a deposit of $200, one-fourth of the rental fee, "which could have been any time up to the 27th of August". Mr. Alston further testified as follows:

"Q. Well, why did you enter into these contracts with these other agencies when you knew that a written contract was necessary with the Shrine before this lease would be— A. Because Mr. McMeekin had assured me that I would have the auditorium available to me on that night. I took his word as a business man—as an honest business man.

"Q. You knew, did you not, that it was necessary to enter into some kind of a lease agreement? A. I considered this nothing more than a formality."

* * * * * *

"Q. And he told you that all those things would have to be straightened out and also the payment made before there would be any agreement with you, didn't he, and the lease signed? A. No, sir, he told us we could be assured that the house would be ours on the evening of August 27th and therefore I took the writing or the executing of the lease to be nothing more than a formality".

Also, referring to the conversation of July 29, 1954, Mr. Alston testified as follows:

"Q. By Mr. Simmons (Plaintiff's Attorney): Will you relate to the Court at this time just what was said during the course of this conversation? A. Well, I informed Mr. McMeekin I had secured some tentative arrangements with some performers for the date of the 27th, and inquired if that date were open, if the auditorium would be available at that time.

"He informed me it would be available. I then discussed with him what the terms were of renting the auditorium, all of the necessary details to make arrangements to rent the auditorium for that date.

"Q. What did he say and what did you say in respect to the exact rental of the auditorium at that time? A. He told me the total rental fee would be $800.00. That he would reserve the auditorium for us for that evening, and that he would request a down payment of one fourth of that amount at the time we signed the written agreement.

"He told me that this price would include everything with the exception, I believe, of the use of the spotlights and an operator for the spotlights. The fee would include a stage manager, as I recall. It would not include the services of the ushers or guards, that is, we would have to provide these for ourselves or secure the services of these for ourselves.

"That we could either pay cash right then or we could pay it, as I say, later on at such time as we went into a written agreement. The only occasion he would call on us for the cash would be if someone else came in with cash in his pocket and was interested in that date; but otherwise the auditorium was ours—and in this event we would be given the opportunity of putting our cash first down.

"Q. Was there any discussion about reserving the auditorium? A. Yes, he definitely said it was reserved to us for that date.

"Q. What date was that? A. August 27th.

"Q. You testified to the fact that there was no request for cash at that time, is that right? A. No, there was not.

"Q. Did you have any discussion about your making arrangements and contracts with the artists to perform? A. I told him the reason I wanted the date is that I had tentative arrangements with some of the performers for that date.

"Q. What was said, if anything, about your going ahead and making actual contracts? A. I told him if I could be assured of the date, I could take up the options I had received with these groups to perform on that night.

"Q. What was his statement as to that? A. He said, 'You're all set', or something of that nature."

Mr. Alston next heard from Mr. McMeekin on or about the 7th or 9th day of August, at which time Mr. McMeekin telephoned and told him "I'm sorry but the arrangements are off"—"the arrangements for the leasing of the auditorium for that evening had been cancelled". Mr. Alston went to the auditorium to see Mr. McMeekin and was again told that the "arrangements were discontinued—that the auditorium was no longer available". Later, on the 11th or 14th of August, he "offered to pay Mr. McMeekin the entire $800.00 to complete the contract". Mr. McMeekin said: "Sorry, it was too late—".

All contracts may be oral, except such as are especially required by statute to be in writing. Civil Code, sec. 1622. There is no claim in the instant action that a contract for the leasing of the auditorium was required to be in writing.

[1] In respondent's brief, the decision in Toms v. Hellman, 115 Cal.App. 74, 78, 1 P.2d 31, 33, is cited, and the following language quoted therefrom: "* * * (W)here the parties have agreed upon all essential facts there is a binding contract, notwithstanding the fact that a more formal contract is to be prepared and signed later". In Toms v. Hellman, supra, an objection was sustained on the ground that the complaint did not state a cause of action and judgment of dismissal was entered. That judgment was affirmed on appeal for the reason that (115 Cal.App. at page 83, 1 P. 2d at page 35) "the acceptance of the offer failed to make a contract, because the offer by its terms clearly contemplated that the complete contract should be embodied in a written contract to be subsequently executed."

Respondent continues, in its brief, with the following statements: "A contract to make or execute a written agreement, when in all respects the terms thereof are mutually understood and agreed upon, is as valid and obligatory where no statutory objection interposes, as the written contract would be if executed." Citing Kreling v. Walsh, 77 Cal.App.2d 821, 176 P.2d 965, and Church v. Wade, 80 Cal.App.2d 412, 182 P.2d 212.

In Kreling v. Walsh, supra, this court affirmed judgments for defendants upon their affirmative defense that prior to the trial said actions had been settled and compromised by oral agreement entered into in the court corridor while awaiting trial, the general terms of which had been stated by the respective counsel to the court in which the matter was put over for four or five days to allow the preparation of the stipulation to release moneys under attachment. Appellant's argument that the oral agreement was purely tentative and preliminary and should not be enforced was disposed of by the statement, 77 Cal.App.2d at page 832, 176 P.2d at page 972, that "There was substantial evidence to support the court's finding that not only did appellant enter into an oral agreement of compromise and settlement, but that he later signed a contract embodying the terms of such oral agreement. Furthermore, the agreement was performed in full by appellant and respondents, save and except that the former did not withdraw his own money * * *."

In Church v. Wade, supra, judgment for defendants in an action to set aside a conveyance which had been made to them in consideration of their oral agreement to give the grantor a home, support and medical care for life was affirmed by this court. After quoting, 80 Cal.App.2d at page 419, 182 P.2d at page 217, a portion of the Kreling decision, this court said:

"The evidence sustains the view of the trial court that there existed an oral agreement between decedent and defendants which was fully performed by both parties thereto. There is no evidence to support a finding that decedent and defendants contemplated a reduction to writing of their agreement before it was to be considered as complete. The full performance by both parties to the oral agreement negatives any such finding."

[2] In the instant action, all witnesses agree that in each of the conversations found to constitute the oral agreement it was expressed and understood that it was necessary to sign a written lease and at the same time to pay $200 to apply upon the rental. In the entire record there is no evidence as to when, if ever, the remainder of the $800 rental was to be paid. Nor does it appear that respondent ever agreed to pay the $800 at any certain time, or at all. No consideration of any kind passed from respondent to appellant.

[3] The Toms, Kreling and Church cases, supra, are not authority for the decision in the instant action that an oral agreement was made. Whether such contract was made depends upon the intention of the parties and is to be determined by the surrounding facts and circumstances in the particular case. It is a question to be determined by the trial court, and if there is any substantial evidence in support of the decision an appellate court is not authorized to reweigh the evidence. Johnston v. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corp., 82 Cal.App.2d 796, 820–821, 187 P.2d 474; Thompson v. Schurman, 65 Cal.App.2d 432, 440, 150 P.2d 509.

Considering the evidence in the instant action, with all inferences favorable to respondents, we have been able to find only an offer or proposal by appellant that a written agreement be signed and deposit paid for the leasing of its auditorium on August 27th. An offer can be accepted only in accordance with its terms. A proposal may be revoked at any time before its acceptance is communicated to the proposer. Civil Code, sec. 1586. According to Alston's own testimony, he made no offer to sign a lease and his only offer to pay any money was at least two days after appellant's withdrawal of its offer.

This court is sympathetic with respondent in its losses, but finds no basis in the record for the judgment against appellant. There being no oral agreement, there could be no breach thereof, and no liability on the part of appellant for respondent's losses. Respondent's losses were caused by its erroneous assumption that it could, without binding itself to pay the rental or perform the other obligations of the lessee, secure all the benefits which could have been obtained by the signing of the lease and payment of the rental.

The judgment is reversed.

FOURT and LILLIE, JJ., concur.

159 Cal.App.2d 136

Ruby Cloma Richards McELHATTEN, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

James Albert McELHATTEN, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 22391.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

April 3, 1958.

Action for annulment of marriage. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Arnold Praeger, J., denied annulment and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that husband's testimony that he "attempted" to get a divorce from first wife in Mexico, being there only two days without intention of living there, did not warrant refusal to annul second marriage in absence of other evidence of Mexican divorce from first wife.

Reversed with directions.

Parker Wood, J., dissented.

1. Marriage ⇐60(7)

Husband's testimony that he "attempted" to get a divorce from first wife in Mexico, being there only two days without intention of living there, did not warrant refusal to annul second marriage in absence of other evidence of Mexican divorce from first wife.

2. Marriage ⇐60(7)

In action to annul second marriage, whether defendant's first wife had remarried after attempted Mexican divorce from defendant was irrelevant.

Lawrence R. Horton, Van Nuys, for appellant.

No appearance for respondent.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff appeals from an adverse judgment in her action for annulment of her marriage to defendant, James Albert McElhatten. She alleged in her complaint that she participated in a ceremony of marriage with defendant on December 4, 1951 in Tijuana, Mexico, a year later in another ceremony of marriage in Glendale, California, and at the times of said purported marriages and each of them defendant had another wife living by virtue of a marriage which was then and continued to remain in full force and effect. Defendant having been duly served with process and having defaulted, plaintiff submitted her evidence, following which the court entered a judgment which recited "The Court finds that the allegations of the complaint are not true, and that plaintiff is not entitled to an annulment of marriage from defendant"; whereupon it was decreed that an annulment of the marriage was denied. Although the finding negatives each and every allegation of the complaint, such could not have been the intention of the court. If given literal effect, the finding would be contrary to the established facts as to the ceremonies of marriages in which defendant participated.

Defendant was called as a witness on behalf of plaintiff and testified that he married Barbara June Gamble August 15, 1947. He also testified that on or about December 4, 1952, he participated in a marriage ceremony with plaintiff Ruby Cloma Johnson McElhatten. Certified copies of the certificates of each marriage were received in evidence. Plaintiff testified further that at all times subsequent to August 15, 1947, he had lived and been continuously employed in California; also that Barbara June Gamble McElhatten is living and a resident of California. He further testified that he had never instituted an action for divorce in the United States and had never been served with process in an action for divorce brought by Barbara; that he "attempted" to get a divorce in Mexico "December 4 1951"; he was in Mexico but two days; he had no intention of living in Mexico or in any place other than California, and he immediately returned to California. This evidence was received November 15, 1956 and the cause was submitted.

There were further proceedings December 12, 1956. Apparently, due to press of other business, some of the facts developed had escaped the minds of the court and counsel. It was stated: "The Court is denying the decree of annulment on the ground that the plaintiff in this action is not in a position to collaterally attack the Mexican decree of divorce which it was testified the defendant obtained in Tijuana on December 2, 1951; that the other party to the marriage which resulted in the Mexican divorce is a party interested in the matter and is not a party to this action.

"If I remember correctly, the evidence showed that Barbara June Gamble had remarried; is that correct?

"Mr. Horton: I believe that was the testimony, your Honor.

"The Court: There is no showing that the jurisdiction of the Mexican Court was not contested in the Mexican divorce proceeding. Therefore the decree of annulment is denied."

[1, 2] There was no evidence that defendant had procured a divorce in Mexico December 2, 1951, or at any other time. Neither was there any evidence that Barbara June Gamble had remarried, although that question was irrelevant to any issue in the case.

The only tenable conclusion from the evidence was that defendant's marriage to Barbara was in force at the time of his purported marriage to plaintiff. The clear inference from defendant's testimony was that he did not obtain even a purported decree of divorce during the two days he was in Tijuana or at any other time, and there was no evidence that he ever brought suit. Moreover, a resident of California cannot step across the international boundary into Mexico as a casual visitor and bring back a signed paper which is entitled to any consideration as a decree of divorce. The mere assertion that a marriage can be dissolved in that manner deserves from a California court nothing but ridicule and reproach. The evidence which was elicited from defendant that he and his former wife were residents of California, that he had never sued for divorce there nor been sued, dispelled any presumption that their marriage had ever been dissolved in any jurisdiction. The record discloses no ground upon which a decree of annulment could be properly refused.

The judgment is reversed with directions to enter a decree in accordance with the prayer of the complaint.

VALLÉE, J., concurs.

PARKER WOOD, Justice.

I dissent. The burden of proving that defendant's marriage to Barbara (his first wife) had not been dissolved by judicial decree was upon plaintiff. Whether plaintiff met that burden was a question of fact to be decided by the trial judge. The defendant was the only witness. The questions as to the weight and credibility of his testimony were exclusively for the trial judge to decide. The trial judge was not required to decide that, as a matter of law, the marriage of plaintiff and defendant was invalid. There is a presumption that the marriage of plaintiff and defendant was valid. The basis for this presumption is that it is presumed that defendant is innocent of crime and he did not commit bigamy when he married plaintiff. That presumption is evidence. If, in the opinion of the trial judge, that presumption was not rebutted or overcome by other evidence, the trial judge was required to deny a decree of annulment.

At the hearing upon the default herein, plaintiff called defendant as a witness under the provisions of section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Defendant testified that he married Barbara June Gamble on August 15, 1947, and that thereafter he lived continuously in California (the certificate of that marriage was received in evidence); he had not instituted an action for divorce in the United States against Barbara, and he had never been served in a divorce action commenced by her; on December 4, 1951, he attempted to get a divorce in Mexico; he went to Mexico on December 1 or 2, 1951, for the purpose of attempting to get a divorce; he was in Mexico two days; at the time he went to Mexico he did not have any intention of living in Mexico or any place other than California; he returned to California and has lived in California since that time; on December 4, 1952, he participated in a marriage ceremony with the plaintiff herein, Ruby Cloma Johnson McElhatten (the certificate of that marriage was received in evidence); after December 4, 1952, he has seen Barbara June Gamble McElhatten alive, and she is a resident of California at this time. (Time of the trial was November 15, 1956.)

The testimony of defendant with respect to attempting to get a decree in Mexico was as follows:

"Q. [by attorney for plaintiff] Did you ever attempt to get a divorce elsewhere? A. Yes.

"Q. Where was that? A. Mexico.

"Q. When was that? A. December the 4th.

"The Court: Louder, please.

"The Witness: December 4th, '51.

"Q. By Mr. Horton [attorney for plaintiff]: When did you go to Mexico? Did you go to Mexico for that purpose? A. Yes."

No copy or purported copy of a Mexico decree of divorce was offered or received in evidence. It thus appears that there was no evidence that there was a Mexico decree of divorce. Also, there was no evidence that there was not a Mexico decree of divorce.

"It is well established that when a person has entered into two successive marriages, a presumption arises in favor of the validity of the second marriage, and the burden is upon the party attacking the validity of the second marriage to prove that the first marriage had not been dissolved by the death of a spouse or by divorce or had not been annulled at the time of the second marriage." In re Estate of Smith, 33 Cal.2d 279, 281, 201 P.2d 539, 540. In Hamrick v. Hamrick, 119 Cal.App.2d 839, at page 848, 260 P.2d 188, at page 193, it was said (in quoting from another case): "'* * * the burden is cast upon the party asserting guilt or immorality to prove the negative,—that the first marriage had not ended before the second marriage.'"

In the present case there was testimony by defendant that his first wife was living at the time of his second marriage. As above stated, whether plaintiff met the burden of proving that the first marriage had not been dissolved by judicial decree was a question of fact to be decided by the trial judge. As above stated, there was no evidence that there was not a Mexico decree of divorce as to the first marriage. The only evidence with respect to the nonexistence of a divorce decree in the United States (as to the first marriage) was that defendant testified that he had not instituted an action for divorce in the United States against his first wife (Barbara), and he had never been served in a divorce action commenced by her. His testimony that he had not been served in a divorce action by his first wife was a legal conclusion. The trial judge was not required to infer or conclude from such testimony (regarding nonservice) that defendant's first wife had not obtained a divorce. In Re Estate of Borneman, 35 Cal.App.2d 455, 96 P.2d 182, Mrs. Borneman, who sought to prove that her marriage had not been dissolved by judicial decree, testified that she had not commenced a divorce action and had never been served with papers in a divorce action commenced by her husband. She also introduced evidence that there was no record of such action in San Francisco (where her husband had resided in 1912). There was no evidence therein showing the husband's place of residence from 1912 to 1938, the date of his death. The court said at page 460 of 35 Cal.App.2d, at page 184 of 96 P.2d: "That proof was insufficient to rebut the presumption of innocence. [Citations.] The burden rested on Mrs. Borneman to introduce such evidence as would convince the mind of the trial court that the first marriage had not been dissolved. [Citation.] This apparently she did not do. The most she did was to create a conflict in the evidence but a mere conflict in the evidence will not warrant a reversal." It thus appears that it has been held that testimony that a spouse had not been served with process is not adequate proof that the other spouse had not obtained a divorce. In Re Estate of Smith, supra, 33 Cal.2d 279, at page 283, 201 P.2d 539, at page 541, it was said: "In order to show that no divorce or annulment had been obtained it is not necessary to prove that an examination was made of the public records of jurisdictions other than those in which the parties to the marriage were domiciled." In the present case there was testimony by defendant that his first wife was a resident of California "at this time." The reporter's transcript shows as follows: "Q. Is she [Barbara, first wife] a resident of California at this time? A. Yes." There was no evidence as to the domicile of the first wife from 1947, when she married defendant, to the time of trial (on November 15, 1956). Defendant testified that he had lived in California since the marriage in 1947. There was no evidence as to when he and his first wife (Barbara) separated. Even if it be assumed that her domicile was in Los Angeles County, there was no evidence that an examination was made of the public records of Los Angeles County to ascertain whether the first wife had obtained a decree of divorce.

In Maslow v. Maslow, 117 Cal.App.2d 237, at page 243, 255 P.2d 65, at page 69, which was an action for annulment of marriage, the court said: "Where the evidence will support different inferences, the choice of inferences is for the trial court; and its finding, based on the inferences drawn, cannot be disturbed on appeal. [Citation.] The trier of fact is the exclusive judge of the credibility of the witnesses. [Citations.] The trial court is free to disbelieve and reject the testimony of witnesses even though they are uncontradicted and unimpeached. [Citations.] These rules apply with particular emphasis to an action for annulment since the the state is a silent but active third party to every action to dissolve a marriage. The state is interested in seeing to it that no marriage is declared void as a result of fraud or collusion, and that the statutory grounds on which the annulment is sought actually do exist. [Citation.]"

The court found that the allegations of the complaint are not true. One of those allegations was in substance that (at the times of the two marriage ceremonies with plaintiff) the marriage of defendant to Barbara June Gamble (the first wife) was and still is in force. The effect of that finding is that plaintiff did not overcome the presumption of validity of her marriage to defendant, and did not meet the burden of proving that the marriage of defendant to Barbara (the first wife) had not been dissolved by judicial decree.

Under the evidence here the trial judge was not required to conclude that appellant had met the burden of proving that the first marriage had not been dissolved by judicial decree when the second marriage occurred.

The trial judge stated, at the time of submitting the matter for decision, that under the decision in Mumma v. Mumma, 86 Cal.App.2d 133, 194 P.2d 24, he did not believe that the plaintiff could attack the Mexican decree collaterally, and that plaintiff was not injuriously affected by that decree at the time of its rendition. The judge also stated, about a month later when he rendered his oral decision in open court, that an annulment was denied on the ground that plaintiff herein was not in a position to collaterally attack the Mexican decree of divorce which it was testified the defendant obtained in Tijuana on December 2 (4), 1951, and that the other party to the marriage which resulted in the Mexican divorce is a party interested in the matter and is not a party to this action. The judge said further: "If I remember correctly, the evidence showed that Barbara June Gamble [McElhatten] had remarried; is that correct?" The attorney for plaintiff herein replied: "I believe that was the testimony, your Honor." The judge said: "There is no showing that the jurisdiction of the Mexican Court was not contested in the Mexican divorce proceeding. Therefore the decree of annulment is denied." It is apparent that the judge was of the belief that there was evidence that a decree of divorce had been rendered in Mexico. According to the reporter's transcript, however, defendant did not testify that he obtained a decree in Mexico. His testimony was that he attempted to get a divorce in Mexico. The reporter's transcript does not show that there was testimony with reference to the remarriage of the first wife. The reference, however, to such purported testimony indicates the importance of requiring adequate proof herein of nonexistence of a judicial decree dissolving the first marriage.

In my opinion the judgment should be affirmed.

Brookee KUBON, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Walter KUBON, Defendant and Respondent.*

Civ. 17727.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

March 27, 1958.

Hearing Granted May 21, 1958.

Former wife's action to recover on Nevada money judgment against former husband based on his delinquency in support payments ordered in divorce decree previously entered by Nevada court. The Superior Court, County of Marin, Thomas F. Keating, J., entered judgment denying recovery and former wife appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Brazil, J., pro tem., held that where Nevada court had jurisdiction over the parties in divorce proceedings in which it ordered support payments, Nevada court had jurisdiction over husband, a resident of California, to enter judgment for delinquent payments upon notice served on him by registered mail with return receipt requested.

Reversed with directions.

* Opinion vacated 331 P.2d 636.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐544(2)

Where appeal is on the judgment roll together with certain exhibits of documentary nature which were requested in the notice of appeal, scope of appellate court's inquiry could not be widened by an attempt to supplement record through reference in the briefs to the evidence. West's Ann. Rules on Appeal, rule 5(a).

2. Appeal and Error ⇐907(3)

Where appeal is on judgment roll together with certain exhibits of documentary nature which were requested in notice of appeal, appellate court must presume that in the oral proceedings there was substantial evidence to support the findings. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rule 5(a).

3. Appeal and Error ⇐544(2)

Where appeal was on the judgment roll together with certain exhibits of documentary nature which were requested in notice of appeal, evidence was not before appellate court which was confined to a determination of questions as to whether complaint stated a cause of action, whether findings were within the issue, whether judgment was supported by finding, and whether reversible error appeared upon the face of the record.

4. Guardian and Ward ⇐8

Infants ⇐18

Where Nevada court, having jurisdiction of the parties entered divorce decree giving custody of children to wife, a Nevada resident, and subsequently decree was modified so as to give husband, a California resident, custody of children during summer, and while children were in California during summer and in husband's physical custody husband filed verified petition for guardianship of their person, he was legally authorized to do so since the children were at that time temporarily domiciled with him in the county, and upon filing of petition, courts of California and Nevada had concurrent jurisdiction over custody of children. West's Ann.Probate Code, §§ 1440, 1442.

5. Judgment ⇐822(1)

If Nevada court had jurisdiction to enter money judgment against defendant, a California resident, judgment of the Nevada court was entitled to full faith and credit, and was res judicata of the rights of the parties as of the date of the judgment, and California court could not go behind the Nevada decree.

6. Divorce ⇐311

Where Nevada court had jurisdiction over the parties in divorce proceedings in which it ordered husband to make certain support payments, Nevada court had jurisdiction over husband, a resident of California, to enter money judgment for delinquent support payments upon notice served on husband by registered mail with return receipt requested.

7. Divorce ⇐403(8)

Where Nevada court having jurisdiction over the parties in divorce proceeding ordered support payments by husband, a California resident, and wife brought action in Nevada court to reduce delinquency to a money judgment and service was had upon husband by registered mail but he never personally appeared, and Nevada court then entered money judgment against him for the amount of delinquency, even if it were a defense to Nevada action that wife had failed to comply with decree respecting husband's visitation rights, such defense was not available to husband in wife's action in California court to recover on money judgment which was res judicata. Laws Nev.1954–1955, c. 128.

8. Judgment ⇐713(2)

If matter was within scope of action, related to subject matter and relevant to the issues so that it could have been raised judgment is conclusive despite fact that it was not in fact expressly pleaded or otherwise urged, since a prior judgment is res judicata on matters which were raised or could have been raised on matters litigated or litigable.

9. Contempt ⇐80

Where wife brought action in California court to recover on money judgment entered in Nevada court against husband and based upon delinquencies in support payments ordered by Nevada court in divorce decree, fact that wife was in contempt of California court on another matter, had no probative value in determining who was entitled to a judgment after husband had submitted to a complete trial involving all the issues presented by the pleadings, without any attempt to preclude matter from being heard on ground that wife was in contempt.

Robert W. Corlett, San Rafael, for appellant.

Bruce B. Bales, San Rafael, for respondent.

BRAZIL, Justice pro tem.

[1–3] The plaintiff wife appeals from a judgment denying her recovery on a Nevada money judgment which was based on orders in a divorce decree requiring defendant husband to pay support for two minor children. The appeal is on the judgment roll and certain exhibits of a documentary nature which were requested in the notice of appeal as is provided in Rule 5a, Rules on Appeal. The respondent, and the appellant to a lesser degree, attempt to supplement the record by reference in their briefs to the evidence. The scope of inquiry by this court cannot be widened by such a method. Hunt v. Plavsa, 103 Cal.App.2d 222, 229 P.2d 482. On an appeal such as we have here, we must presume that in the oral proceedings there was substantial evidence to support the findings.

" 'The evidence is not before this court, we are confined to a determination of the questions as to whether the complaint states a cause of action; [or the affirmative defenses in the answer constitute a defense], whether the findings are within the issues; whether the judgment is supported by the findings and whether reversible error appears upon the face of the record' ". In re Estate of Larson, 92 Cal.App.2d 267, 268, 206 P.2d 852, 853.

From the reviewable record that is before this court, the following facts are ascertainable. On March 27, 1952, the parties were divorced in the District Court of Clark County, Nevada, which court, all agree, had personal jurisdiction of the parties. In conformity with an agreement between them, the property rights were settled, legal custody of the two minor children was given to both, the physical custody was awarded to the mother and the father was ordered to pay $100 per month for their support. The court specifically reserved "jurisdiction to make such other and further orders with respect to the care, custody, support and maintenance of the said minor children * * * as * * * may be proper."

Appellant and respondent again appeared in the Nevada court on a motion to change custody, and on August 27, 1953, the order for physical custody was modified in respondent's favor to allow him the physical custody of the children during the summer vacations. The next time both parties appeared personally in the Nevada court was in October 1954, when in a contested hearing on a motion, the decree and previous order modifying it were modified to take away the respondent's summer time custody, and award full custody of the children to the mother, with right of reasonable visitation in Nevada to the father. The order for monthly support was continued in the last order of modification in the same amount per month.

Support payments for September 1954 to June 1955, both inclusive, admittedly were not paid. Pursuant to Chapter 128 of the Statutes of Nevada, appellant thereafter made a motion to reduce the delinquent support payments to a formal judgment. The court ordered service of that notice of motion on respondent by registered mail, return receipt requested. On this last motion, respondent made no personal appearance; and judgment was entered against him for $1,000, $250 attorney's fees and $10 costs.

On September 18, 1955, appellant filed her complaint in Marin County to establish the Nevada judgment as a judgment of this state. Respondent filed an answer in which he admitted submitting himself to the jurisdiction of the Nevada court in all proceedings except the last one, vis., the motion for judgment. He admitted the nonpayment of, and his ability to pay, the support during the ten month period involved in the judgment. He then sets up three affirmative defenses, each of which was the subject of a motion to strike, the motions being denied.

The affirmative defenses in substance are: (1) the Nevada court had no jurisdiction to enter the judgment sued upon because respondent was not given notice in accordance with the court's order directing that the notice of motion for judgment and accompanying papers be served upon him "by registered mail, return receipt requested," (2) that appellant denied respondent the right of reasonable visitation, and (3) it is against public policy to enforce this judgment in California because appellant does not come into court with "clean hands," she being in contempt of the very court whose aid she seeks, in that she violated a temporary custody order and a restraining order issued in a guardianship proceeding pending in Marin County.

[4] While the children were in Marin County during summer vacation and in respondent's physical custody, in accordance with the provisions of the Nevada decree then in effect, the respondent filed a verified petition for guardianship of their persons. This he was legally authorized to do by Section 1440 of the Probate Code, as the children at that time were temporarily domiciled with him in Marin County. Upon the filing of that petition, the courts of California and Nevada had concurrent jurisdiction over the custody of the children. Sampsell v. Superior Court, 32 Cal. 2d 763, 197 P.2d 739. The hearing on the petition for guardianship was set for August 30, 1954, notice thereof being given to appellant by registered mail directed to her at her address in Las Vegas. Concurrently, with the filing of the petition, petitioner obtained an ex parte order, upon the authority of Probate Code section 1442, giving him exclusive temporary physical custody of the children pending the hearing on the petition. The order also restrained appellant from taking the children from respondent's custody before hearing of the petition.

The trial court found that in "willful violation, defiance and contempt of said restraining order, plaintiff kidnapped said children from their San Rafael home on August 20, 1954, carried them across the California border and until the Nevada court hearing of October 20, 1954 * * * concealed said children * * *" In finding the allegations of paragraph III of the complaint to be true, the court found that after the abduction on August 20, 1954, and on or about October 21, 1954, in a hearing in which the Nevada court had jurisdiction of the parties, the respondent was deprived of his summer vacation physical custody and he was required to pay $100 a month child support.

It may be helpful to determine what this case does not involve, in view of the extensive discussions in the briefs on related matters which cannot affect this appeal. The action is not to establish the Nevada divorce decree as a continuing judgment in California, nor an action to modify a decree of another state, nor an action for future support payments, nor is it an action involving custody of minor children and it is not a proceeding to punish the appellant for contempt of court because she took the children out of California in violation of a restraining order. It is only an action on a final judgment of a sister state based upon a support order which that court had jurisdiction to make. We are in no way concerned with retroactively modifiable support orders because here there is a final judgment not subject to modification.

[5] The first thing to determine is whether or not the Nevada court had jurisdiction of the respondent to enter the judgment. If it had jurisdiction, the judgment of the Nevada court is entitled to full faith and credit and is res judicata of the rights of the parties as of the date of the judgment. The court cannot go behind the Nevada decree. That decree is just as binding on this court as if it had been rendered by a court in this state. In re Bauman, 82 Cal.App.2d 359, 361, 186 P.2d 154. The trial court made this finding: "That on April 15, 1955, the Nevada District Court in which plaintiff secured the alleged judgment marked 'Exhibit A' and made a part of said complaint made and entered an order directing that plaintiff's Notice of Motion for Judgment, together with the motion, affidavit and court order, be served upon this defendant Walter J. Kubon 'by registered mail, returned receipt requested;' that said prescribed manner of service was not followed prior to the rendition of judgment or at all; that no return receipt bearing defendant's signature has ever been presented to or filed with said Nevada District Court; and because of the foregoing said court never acquired jurisdiction to render said judgment."

[6] The recitation that "said court never acquired jurisdiction" is but a conclusion of law, not supported by the findings of fact contained in the same paragraph. It is apparent that the conclusion referred to is based upon the finding that "no return receipt bearing defendant's signature has ever been presented." However, the order fixing the kind of notice to be given did not require a return receipt signed by the addressee only. The registered return receipt has been included in the record on appeal and it shows that it was signed in this manner—"Walter J. Kubon by Charlotte G. Kubon." The defendant having personally appeared in the Nevada divorce action, and having by that decree been ordered to support his children, that court had jurisdiction over him to enter a judgment for delinquent payments upon a notice served upon him in the manner directed by the court.

[7] Assuming, without deciding, that it is a defense in Nevada in an action to collect child support, to establish the wife's failure to comply with the decree permitting the husband reasonable visitation, such a defense is not now available to the husband because it is res judicata. Issues already tried and determined may not be relitigated in a second action.

[8] "If the matter was within the scope of the action, related to the subject-matter and relevant to the issues, so that it could have been raised, the judgment is conclusive on it despite the fact that it was not in fact expressly pleaded or otherwise urged. The reason for this rule is manifest. A party cannot by negligence or design withhold issues and litigate them in consecutive actions. Hence the rule is that the prior judgment is res judicata on matters which were raised or could have been raised, on matters litigated or litigable." Sutphin v. Speik, 15 Cal.2d 195, 202, 99 P.2d 652, 655, 101 P.2d 497.

The third affirmative defense is based on the rule that "a party to an action cannot, with right or reason, ask the aid and assistance of a court in hearing his demands while he stands in an attitude of contempt to legal orders and processes." MacPherson v. MacPherson, 13 Cal.2d 271, 277, 89 P.2d 382, 385. The rule as stated is the basis for the refusal of a court to act on an application for relief from one who stands in an attitude of contempt in the following cases cited by the respondent: Weiner v. Weiner, Sup., 149 N.Y.S.2d 474; White v. White, 71 Cal.App.2d 390, 163 P.2d 89; Knoob v. Knoob, 192 Cal. 95, 218 P. 568; Weeks v. Superior Court, 187 Cal. 620, 203 P. 93; Williams v. Williams, 103 Cal.App. 2d 276, 229 P.2d 830 and Pearson v. Superior Court, 32 Cal.App.2d 87, 89 P.2d 162. Three later cases, not cited, which use the same rule as a basis for dismissal of an appeal are: Kottemann v. Kottemann, 150 Cal.App.2d 483, 310 P.2d 49; In re Estate of Scott, 150 Cal.App.2d 590, 310 P.2d 46; and Rude v. Rude, 153 Cal. App.2d 243, 247, 314 P.2d 226, 229.

In all the foregoing cases, except In re Estate of Scott, the contempt was in the very proceeding in which the party in contempt sought relief. The rule so often stated, if literally applied, is wide enough to justify a court in refusing to act on behalf of the person who is in contempt in a separate proceeding. However, research discloses only the In re Estate of Scott as applying the rule to authorize a dismissal of an appeal by one who was in contempt of court in an unrelated proceeding. In the Scott case, the appeal from an order appointing a trustee of the estate of a missing person was dismissed on respondent's motion, where it was shown that L. Ewing Scott, the appellant, was a fugitive from justice, and was in contempt of court in a criminal action. He stood charged in the criminal case with unlawful activities involving his missing wife's property. No petition for hearing in the Supreme Court was filed.

[9] We need not here decide whether the rule of the MacPherson case would or would not justify a trial court in refusing to hear an application for relief by one who admittedly stands in an attitude of contempt in another proceeding, for reflection reveals that such a situation is not involved. There was no attempt by the respondent in either the trial court or appellate court, by motion or application for writ or otherwise to preclude the matter from being heard. There was an actual trial, evidence was introduced, rulings were made, the case was argued, trial briefs were filed, and in all respects there was a trial on the merits. The finding of fact that appellant was in contempt of court before the trial started, while it might have justified the trial court in not hearing the case at all until plaintiff was purged of contempt, does not have a probative value in determining who is entitled to a judgment after a complete trial involving all issues presented by the pleadings. The plaintiff's motion to strike from the answer the last discussed affirmative defense should have been granted.

Judgment reversed with directions to enter judgment consistent with this opinion.

DOOLING, Acting P. J., and DRAPER, J., concur.

159 Cal.App.2d 257

OAKLAND BANK OF COMMERCE, a California Banking Corporation, Executor of the Last Will and Testament of John James Moffett, Deceased, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Eleanor Jane HAYES, formerly known as Eleanor Jane Moffett, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 17640.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

April 9, 1958.

As Corrected on Denial of Rehearing May 9, 1958.

Action to quiet title and to declare certain deeds void for nondelivery. The Superior Court, County of Alameda, S. Victor Wagler, J., entered judgment for defendant and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held that evidence was sufficient to sustain findings that there was a valid delivery of recorded deed from husband and wife, owners of land in joint tenancy, to husband, wife and daughter as grantees, but there was no valid delivery of the simultaneously executed and unrecorded three deeds of gift by which each one of the grantees conveyed the same land to the other two.

Affirmed.

1. Deeds ⇐56(2)

A lack of manual delivery is not fatal to delivery of deed, and delivery is sufficient and complete if from any or all of the circumstances the grantor has irrevocably made known his intention to part with his dominion and control over instrument to end that it may presently vest title in another.

2. Deeds ⇐208(1, 4)

In action to quiet title to land and to cancel four deeds on ground that they were invalid because of lack of delivery, evidence sustained findings that there was valid delivery of recorded deed from husband and wife, owners of land in joint tenancy, to husband, wife and daughter as grantees, but there was no valid delivery as to the simultaneously executed and unrecorded three deeds of gift by which each of the grantees conveyed land to the other two.

3. Deeds ⇐56(2)

To constitute a valid effective delivery of a deed, it must be shown that grantor intended to divest himself of title by a deed that should become presently operative as such and should presently pass title.

4. Appeal and Error ⇐171(1)

Plaintiff on appeal may not reverse position he took in his complaint and throughout trial in lower court.

Wallace B. Colthurst, Oakland, Orlando J. Bowman, Oakland, for appellant.

Hagar, Crosby & Rosson, Paul L. May, Oakland, for respondent.

BRAY, Justice.

Plaintiff appeals from an adverse judgment in an action brought (1) to quiet title; (2) to declare void for non-delivery the four deeds hereafter mentioned.

Questions Presented.

1. Was there evidence of delivery of the joint tenancy deed?

2. Are the findings sufficient?

Evidence.[1]

Plaintiff and his wife Mary Eleanor Moffett (the wife died subsequently to the signing of the deeds and prior to the institution of this action), at the time of the making of the deeds hereafter mentioned, held certain Oakland property in joint tenancy.

The four deeds in question are: 1. Joint tenancy deed dated October 12, 1950, acknowledged the same date before a notary public, and recorded October 13, in which plaintiff and his wife are grantors, and plaintiff, his wife and defendant daughter are grantees. It was "Recorded at Request of Grantee" and was to be returned to Mr. and Mrs. John J. Moffett. 2. Deed of gift dated and acknowledged October 14, wherein plaintiff is grantor and his wife and defendant are grantees. 3. Deed of gift dated and acknowledged October 14, wherein defendant is grantor and plaintiff and his wife are grantees. 4. Deed of gift dated and acknowledged October 14, wherein Mrs. Moffett is grantor and plaintiff and defendant are grantees. All deeds are of the property which plaintiff and wife held in joint tenancy. None of the three deeds of gift was recorded in Mrs. Moffett's lifetime, but two days after her death plaintiff recorded deed No. 4 (Mrs. Moffett as grantor, plaintiff and defendant as grantees) with directions that it be returned to him.

Plaintiff testified that at 6:30 p. m. on October 12, 1950, at their home, his wife told him that she had consulted an attorney about their property and had been advised that the three members of the family should make deeds of gift to each other to save making wills. He stated that as the property was already in joint tenancy the survivor would get it. The wife replied that under her plan, if he and she died at the same time, the defendant would get the property without having to go to court; that she had had the papers drawn and that after signing they would be kept in the safe deposit box, being of no value until recorded. His wife presented two deeds to him and requested that he sign. The deed of gift from him to his wife and the defendant was on top. After signing it, his wife twisted it up and he signed another deed which he thought was also a deed of gift. He did not see or read the joint tenancy deed until after his wife's death. At no time did he authorize his wife to record the joint tenancy deed. His only intention was to convey title if he and his wife died at the same time. He understood that title would not pass unless the deed was recorded.

The day after his wife's death he found in their joint tenancy safe deposit box an envelope. On the face of it was written in his wife's handwriting "Deeds of Gift from us, to be recorded in the event of the death of either of us. Record the Deed of Gift of the decedent only." In the envelope were the four deeds above mentioned. He took the deed of gift from his wife to him and defendant, and recorded it. At no time after the joint tenancy deed was signed until after Mrs. Moffett's death did defendant claim any ownership in the property, nor pay any of its taxes, insurance or improvements. He first discovered that the property was in defendant's name when an attorney told him so in the presence of defendant. Plaintiff stated that was ridiculous and requested defendant to make a deed of gift to him. She said nothing but the attorney refused for her. Plaintiff found in his wife's personal records after her death a $10 check to the notary public[2] dated October 13, 1950, and a receipt from the recorder of the same date.

Defendant testified that the subject of the property was discussed at dinner time

1. Subsequent to judgment plaintiff John James Moffett died, and the Oakland Bank of Commerce as executor was substituted for him. Plaintiff, as used herein, refers to Moffett.

2. Plaintiff testified that he never saw the notary public who acknowledged the deeds. Defendant testified that she could not recall having seen him.

on October 12, 1950. Her mother, in the father's presence, said that the three of them were to be on the deed so that if anything happened to one the interest would be vested in the others. Her mother told defendant that she would have to make out a deed and that the parents were also making out deeds. The property was to be put in the three names and the deeds of gift would be put into the safe deposit box. After dinner her father called to her and requested her to sign the deed as he wanted to go bowling. She had intended to sign it later. She went into her parents' bedroom and signed the deed of gift on the dresser. Both parents were present. On the dresser the other three deeds were laid out so as to allow the ink to dry. Hers was the last one signed. She did not see her father sign and does not know when he did. At that time there was no discussion other than that her father told her to sign the deed of gift, so that her mother could record the joint tenancy deed the next day and put the other three in the safe deposit box. The understanding was that only the joint tenancy deed was to be recorded. Plaintiff denied defendant's version of the evening's happenings. Defendant could not remember any specific other time wherein she discussed the title with her father but discussed it with her mother on other occasions. One was when her mother said that she had put some stock in the three names and that the real property was in the three names. Defendant testified that when the attorney told plaintiff that she and he owned the property plaintiff did not express any surprise.

Plaintiff's sister-in-law, Irene Moffett, testified that in January, 1954, defendant told her that she had not known that the property was in her name and that she was going to make it tough for plaintiff since he recorded the gift deed. Defendant denied this. Also in 1952 defendant asked Irene's husband's advice as to whether she should loan money to her parents for the purchase of a new home. Upon being told that it was not a good idea, defendant stated that she had everything fixed so that she would be taken care of and that her parents would not be able to do anything without her knowledge.

Plaintiff's brother, William, testified that he requested defendant to return the property to her father and that she said she would after she got everything belonging to her out of the house. In another conversation defendant said she knew the property belonged to her father, that she never put anything in to it, and would give it back when she got everything she wanted out of it. At that time defendant had some personal property in the home.

Defendant admitted that she told William that she was going to give the property to her father when she got her things out of it, and that she had paid nothing into the property, but she testified that she had further stated that her name was on the deed. As to the conversation in regard to loaning money to her parents, she explained that she meant that if her name was on the present house and would be on the next one, she would like to contribute some money if it were needed for the new house.

The court found that Mrs. Moffett did not make the representations which plaintiff claimed that she made and further found that by reason of said joint tenancy deed plaintiff, his wife and defendant became and are the owners of the real property involved; that there was a valid delivery of the joint tenancy deed and no valid delivery of any of the three deeds of gift and that each of said three deeds are null and void. It then quieted title by virtue of the joint tenancy deed in plaintiff, his wife and defendant.

1. The Joint Tenancy Deed Was Delivered.

[1] There is a direct conflict between the testimony of plaintiff and that of defendant as to the circumstances under which plaintiff signed the deeds. This conflict the trial court resolved in favor of defendant. Defendant's testimony, if believed (and it was believed by the trial court), amply supports the finding of delivery. Her testimony shows that the three parties understood, at the time of the signing of the deeds, that the joint tenancy deed was to be recorded by the mother, for the purpose of getting title in all three in joint tenancy. There is no evidence of manual delivery, in the strict sense of the grantors' handing the deed to themselves and defendant as grantees. A lack of such manual delivery is not fatal to a delivery. It was said in Moore v. Trott, 1912, 162 Cal. 268, 274, 122 P. 462, 465: "It has long, if not always, been the rule that the delivery of an instrument is a question of intent, and that to a complete delivery no precise form of words and no particular character of act is necessary. The delivery is sufficient and complete if from any of all of the circumstances the grantor has made known his intention irrevocably to part with his dominion and control over the instrument, to the end that it may presently vest title in another. 'The delivery,' says Touchstone, 'is either actual, i.e., by doing something and saying nothing; or else, verbal, i.e., by saying something and doing nothing, or it may be both; and either of these may make a good delivery and a perfect deed.'"

[2] The evidence shows a clear distinction between the intent of the parties as to the passing of title under the joint tenancy deed and under the three deeds of gift. The latter were only to take effect upon death of one of the parties. Plaintiff contends that it was the intention that the deed of gift from defendant to plaintiff and wife was to pass immediate title to the grantees. However, his own testimony, as well as that of defendant, refutes such contention. Nor does the fact that the joint tenancy deed after recordation was returned to plaintiff and his wife and kept thereafter in their safe deposit box necessarily refute an intention to pass title under that deed immediately. Plaintiff and his wife as well as defendant were grantees therein. The fact that they were also grantors does not negative the inference of delivery. The deed was recorded at the request of "grantees" and a logical place for the deed to be kept was in the safe deposit box which was in the names of the father and mother.

Marshall v. Marshall, 140 Cal.App.2d 475, 295 P.2d 131, cited by plaintiff, answers some of plaintiff's contentions. There a grandmother signed a grant deed conveying property to her five granddaughters, reserving a life estate in herself. She instructed her attorney to record it but did not tell the grantees of its execution. After recordation the deed was returned to her attorney, who, later, at the grandmother's request, returned it to her. She stated to her attorney and her son that she wanted the grandchildren to have the property and wanted to avoid the trouble and expense of probate. Two of the grandchildren "learned of the execution and recordation of the deed but neither rejected the grant made to them by it." (140 Cal. App.2d at page 477, 295 P.2d at page 132.) The court held that the foregoing circumstances substantially supported the finding of delivery, saying that "the plaintiff had by words manifested her intent to vest title in the grantees and had directed the recording of the instrument. * * *" (140 Cal.App. 2d at page 479, 295 P.2d at page 133) and that "At least two of the grantees learned of the grant prior to the time plaintiff sought to revoke it and did not reject the gift made by it. This constituted acceptance by them, and as the grant was beneficial to all the grantees, the acceptance by the other three may be presumed." (140 Cal.App.2d at page 479, 295 P.2d at page 133.)

[3] Plaintiff cites a number of cases in which it was held that under the particular circumstances of the respective case no delivery of a deed took place. For extmple, Stone v. Walsworth, 1953, 115 Cal.App.2d 369, 252 P.2d 39, deed from parents to daughter. They all uphold the principle that to constitute a valid, effective delivery, it must be shown that the grantor intended to divest himself of title, that the deed should become presently operative as such, and should presently pass title. The difference between those cases and the instant one is that there the evidence failed to show the requisite intention of the particular grantor while here it showed the intention of the grantors that title presently pass under the joint tenancy deed.

[4] Plaintiff contends that as all the deeds were signed the same day, they must be construed together. The evidence shows that the joint tenancy deed was delivered unconditionally, the other three conditionally. Plaintiff takes a rather inconsistent position. In his complaint he alleged that all three deeds were void for nondelivery and requested that they be cancelled. At the trial he contended that they were void for the same reason. The court so found. He now contends that the deed from defendant to himself and wife was a valid one conveying presently any interest defendant might have received from the joint tenancy deed. If this were so, then the deed from himself and wife to defendant and the one from the wife to defendant and plaintiff were valid ones and likewise conveyed present titles. However, plaintiff on appeal may not reverse the position he took in his complaint and throughout the trial in the lower court. See 4 Cal.Jur.2d 420, and cases cited.

2. Findings.

Plaintiff contends that finding IX is inconsistent with finding I. The latter relates to the means by which plaintiff and his wife originally acquired the property in joint tenancy. Finding IX, following findings concerning the execution of the joint tenancy deed from plaintiff and wife to plaintiff, his wife and defendant, finds that by said last mentioned deed all three became the owners in joint tenancy of the property. There is no inconsistency in these findings.

Plaintiff contends that the finding in finding IV that the joint tenancy deed was executed and delivered to the grantees named in it is a mere conclusion of law and does not find that the grantors intended to convey a present interest. Taking the findings as a whole, including the finding that the present ownership of the property is evidenced by the joint tenancy deed, that the gift deeds are null and void, that the recorded gift deed should be expunged from the record, and that plaintiff is not entitled to a decree quieting his sole title to the property or adjudging that defendant has no interest therein, the finding of delivery is that of the ultimate fact which includes delivery with intent to vest present title.

The judgment is affirmed.

PETERS, P. J., and FRED B. WOOD, J., concur.

159 Cal.App.2d 242

Ted MARKOWITZ, Individually, doing business under the firm name and style of Artem Trust & Investment Co., Plaintiff, Cross-Defendant and Respondent,

v.

Ed I. IKEMOTO, Defendant, Cross-Complainant and Appellant.

Civ. 9338.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

April 8, 1958.

Action by landlord against tenant to recover rent and damages for breach of covenant to keep premises in good repair. Tenant cross-complained for cancellation of lease and a promissory note. The Superior Court, Sacramento County, Malcolm Glenn, J., ordered lease and note be cancelled, but awarded landlord damages for breach of covenant and tenant appealed. The Third District Court of Appeal, Schottky, J., held that evidence was sufficient to support conclusion that damage which was found when premises were surrendered, such as broken windows, was not result of nomal wear and tear and that tenant breached provision of lease requiring him to keep premises and improvements in good repair.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Trial ⇐404(1)

All of trial court's findings must be read together and any uncertainty or ambiguity in findings must, if possible, be construed in support of judgment.

2. Landlord and Tenant ⇐154(3)

Under covenant to keep premises in good repair, landlord had burden of proving claimed damages by reason of breach of covenant.

3. Landlord and Tenant ⇐160(4)

In order for landlord to recover for breach of a covenant to surrender premises in good repair, condition of premises at beginning and termination of lease must be shown and if he does not so show, landlord may not recover; however, where premises have been surrendered in damaged condition, landlord has proved a prima facie case, and it is then incumbent upon tenant, if he would avoid liability, to prove damage was due to an excepted cause.

4. Landlord and Tenant ⇐154(3), 160(4)

In action by landlord against tenant to recover damages for breach of covenant to keep premises in good repair, and to surrender premises in as good condition as reasonable wear would permit, evidence was sufficient to support conclusion that damage which was found when premises was surrendered, such as broken windows, was not result of normal wear and tear and that tenant breached provision of lease.

Colley & Sakuna, Sacramento, for appellant.

Seymour Berger, Sacramento, for respondent.

SCHOTTKY, Justice.

In 1951, appellant purchased the leasehold interest in certain premises known as the Alaska Hotel in the city of Sacramento. A new lease was executed between appellant and respondent which provided, in part:

> "The lessee shall personally occupy said demised premises and shall keep the same in good repair, including all improvements which may hereafter be added, damage by the elements excepted, and shall not make alterations thereon without the written consent of the lessor and shall not commit or suffer to be permitted any waste on said premises.
>
> * * * * * *
>
> "At the expiration of said term or the sooner determination thereof, the lessee shall peacefully quit and surrender possession of said premises in as good condition as reasonable use and wear thereof will permit."

In 1955, appellant moved out of the premises and delivered a notice of rescission to respondent. Respondent thereafter commenced an action against appellant, seeking to recover rent, attorney's fees and damages for breach of the covenant to repair. Appellant filed a cross-complaint seeking a cancellation of the lease and a promissory note executed contemporaneously therewith. The trial court held that appellant had surrendered up possession of the leased premises and that respondent had accepted possession, and ordered that the lease and note be cancelled. The court, however, awarded respondent damages in the sum of $1,376.30 for breach of the covenant to repair. Appellant has appealed from the part of the judgment awarding damages against him.

[1] Appellant's major contention is that the judgment must be reversed because of a finding of the trial court that "during the trial it became necessary to determine the condition of the premises when defendant went into possession, and the Court finds that no one was able to do so." However, the rule is well settled that all of the findings must be read together and that any uncertainty or ambiguity in the findings must, if possible, be construed in support of the judgment. 28 Cal.Jur.2d, page 729. The court made the further finding that "during the course of the trial it became necessary to take an accounting of the necessary items of repairs, material and work done, furnished and performed in order to arrive at the amount of damages suffered by the plaintiff by reason of the failure of the defendant to perform the conditions imposed upon the defendant during his occupancy thereof." The court then proceeded in its findings to detail the various items of repair made to the premises by respondent, amounting to $3,120, and segregated the items and amounts that the court determined were shown by the evidence to have been made necessary by appellant's breach of the covenant to repair. Specifically the court allowed damages in the amount of $440.32 for plumbing supplies and repairs, $506.71 for plaster and paint paid to the plumbing contractor, $158.20 for new locks; $9.36 for new light bulbs, $40 for new electric sockets, and $221.71 for new window glass and replacement of glass in a skylight plus repairs to the skylight. These items totaled $1,376.30. Judgment was rendered in the amount of $1,376.30.

Appellant argues that since respondent had the burden of proving damages and since he could not show the condition of the leased premises at the beginning of the lease, he was not entitled to damages. However, the question that we must determine is whether or not there is evidence in the record upon which the court could base its finding of damages against appellant. It is true that respondent could not state the exact condition of the premises at the beginning of the lease, but we are satisfied that there was ample evidence that it was in fairly good condition at that time. Mr. Markowitz testified that in 1946 he remodeled and repaired the whole building, with complete new wiring, plumbing, painting and other repairs; that in 1948 he inspected the premises and found them in excellent condition, and during the years 1949, 1950, and in 1951 prior to appellant's taking possession he visited the premises, and while he made no inspection of the premises, so far as he could observe they were in good condition. Appellant applied for a permit to occupy the leased premises, and the inspector reported to the health officer that he had made a careful inspection of the premises and recommended that the permit be issued. It is hardly likely that the inspector would have made such a recommendation if the premises were in anything remotely approaching the condition that the evidence showed they were in when appellant vacated the premises. Appellant's own testimony was that he had owned, leased and operated hotels for years and that he examined the premises carefully prior to purchasing the leasehold interest and personal property for $9,000 and agreeing to pay a rental of $350 per month. As stated by the trial judge in his memorandum opinion:

> "The defendant had been in possession approximately four years. It stands to reason that he would not have taken possession of the premises, and to have agreed to keep them in good repair, if the premises had been in such a condition as they were in when he moved out."

Mr. Markowitz testified to what he found as the condition of the premises in August, 1955, after lessee vacated the premises, and Mr. Quillici, an inspector for the Sacramento Health Department, testified to what condition the premises were in after lessee vacated the premises.

Markowitz, whose testimony was corroborated by Quillici, testified that the premises were in very poor condition. He stated:

> "Well, they were in very poor condition. All the plumbing throughout, there were sinks and basins throughout where the bottom of the basin was broken, taped together, handles tore off the basins and sinks were dripping and in very poor condition as though not so much from just normal wear and tear but from real abuse. In one particular, that is, there was one sink completely missing, gone right off the wall. The bannisters and rails coming up the stairs, they were loose and torn away in a couple of places. Lathes and plaster was out. There were various rooms had holes in the walls that had been done just sort of pushed or kicked or cut. The paper was all torn and the floor coverings were all broken and there was broken windows. The windows, no shades or curtains, no light globes in the place. It was just pretty much of a mess. * * * All the windows, many of the glasses were completely broken out and there was glass on the floors and none of the windows would work. None were in working condition. There wasn't a shade in the place, occasionally a curtain."

He also testified in detail to other damage.

Appellant offered the testimony of himself, his daughter, and several other persons who testified that the premises were improved by appellant during his occupancy. This testimony merely created a conflict in the evidence, and evidently failed to impress the trial judge who stated in his memorandum opinion: "The testimony of Ikemoto and daughter was not clear or satisfactory."

[2, 3] While it is true that the burden of proving damages by reason of appellant's breach of the covenant to keep the premises in good repair was upon respondent, we believe that the evidence supports the court's findings that respondent was damaged to the extent of $1,376.30. Appellant relies upon the contention that since respondent could not testify positively and minutely as to the exact condition of the premises at the time of the commencement of the term of the lease, no damages can be awarded. It is true that the rule has been enunciated that in order for a lessor to recover for breach of a covenant to repair, the condition of the premises at the beginning and termination of the lease must be shown and if he does not do so he may not recover. Goodyear Fabric Corporation v. Hirss, 1 Cir., 169 F.2d 115; Zoslow v. National Savings & Trust Co., 91 U.S.App.D.C. 391, 201 F.2d 208. However, it has also been held that where the premises have been surrendered in a damaged condition the plaintiff has proved a prima facie case, and it is incumbent on the lessee, if he would avoid liability, to prove the damage was due to the excepted cause. Rustad v. Lampert, 149 Minn. 363, 183 N.W. 843.

[4] In the instant case we believe the evidence hereinbefore set forth was sufficient to support the conclusion that the damage which was found when the premises were surrendered, such as broken windows, damaged plumbing fixtures, and other items hereinbefore mentioned, was not the result of normal wear and tear and that appellant breached the provision of the lease requiring him to keep the premises and improvements in good repair. The memorandum opinion and the detailed findings show that the trial court weighed the evidence carefully and segregated from the total expenditure of $3,120 by respondent in the repair of the premises the items totaling the sum of $1,376.30 as the amount of damages suffered by respondent because of appellant's breach of the covenant to repair.

The judgment is affirmed.

VAN DYKE, P. J., and PEEK, J., concur.

CALIFORNIA BEVERAGE & SUPPLY CO., a corporation, Plaintiff, Respondent and Cross-Appellant,

v.

DISTILLERS DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION, a corporation, Defendant, Appellant and Cross-Respondent.

Civ. 22419.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

March 27, 1958.

Rehearing Denied April 21, 1958.

Hearing Denied May 21, 1958.

Action by wholesaler against liquor manufacturer. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Frederick F. Houser, J., rendered judgment on directed verdict in defendant's favor, and the plaintiff appealed from that portion of the judgment. The plaintiff cross-appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, P. J., held that evidence raised question for jury as to whether manufacturer, through its employees, was guilty of unlawful interference with wholesaler's business relationships by diverting retailers' purchases from wholesaler during the last month of the one year period during which wholesaler, by contract, could distribute manufacturer's products.

Reversed and remanded with directions.

1. Contracts ⇐217

Contract permitting wholesaler to distribute liquor manufacturer's products for one year and requiring wholesaler, if it wished to renew, to apply for renewal not less than 30 days before the expiration of the year did not give wholesaler an option to renew the contract and manufacturer could refuse to renew it if he so desired.

2. Contracts ⇐215(1)

Where contract for distribution by wholesaler of liquor manufacturer's products for one year required wholesaler, if it wished to renew, to apply for renewal not less than 30 days before the expiration of the year, and wholesaler's notice of desire to renew was sent less than 30 days before the expiration of the year, the contract was not renewed and by its terms expired at the end of the year.

3. Contracts ⇐202(1)

Contract appointing wholesaler "as a distributor" of liquor manufacturer's products contained no implied provision that manufacturer would not appoint another distributor.

4. Contracts ⇐247

In wholesaler's action against liquor manufacturer for breach of contract permitting wholesaler to distribute manufacturer's products, evidence failed to establish executed oral amendment prohibiting an additional distributor of manufacturer's products.

5. Contracts ⇐323(1)

In wholesaler's action against liquor manufacturer for breach of one year distributorship contract permitting wholesaler to have a 45-day inventory on hand at end of year and allowing wholesaler to sell manufacturer's products for 30 days after end of year, evidence raised question for jury as to whether manufacturer breached contract by refusing to fill orders placed by wholesaler during last month of year.

6. Damages ⇐120(7)

If liquor manufacturer breached distributorship contract with wholesaler by failing to deliver liquor ordered by wholesaler during last month of the year at the end of which the contract terminated, the measure of wholesaler's damages was the net profit, if any, which wholesaler reasonably could have anticipated; the wholesaler could not recover damage for loss of good will in connection with the liquor which the manufacturer may have failed to deliver. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, § 14100.

7. Contracts ⇐215(1)

Where liquor manufacturer's one-year distributorship contract with wholesaler permitted wholesaler to have a 45-day inventory on hand at end of year and allowed wholesaler to sell manufacturer's products for 30 days after the end of the year, manufacturer was not required to fill wholesaler's orders for delivery in months subsequent to the end of the year, even though such orders were placed prior to the end of the year.

8. Monopolies ⇐17(2.5)

Liquor manufacturer's refusal to renew distributorship contract with wholesaler because wholesaler was taking on the products of one of the manufacturer's principal competitors was not a violation of the anti-trust laws.

9. Monopolies ⇐28(1.4)

In the absence of injury to a plaintiff, a violation of the anti-trust statute is not actionable by a private party.

10. Torts ⇐28

In wholesaler's action against liquor manufacturer, evidence raised question for jury as to whether manufacturer, through its employees, was guilty of unlawful interference with wholesaler's business relationships by diverting retailers' purchases from wholesaler during last month of the one-year period during which wholesaler, by contract, could distribute manufacturer's products.

11. Torts ⇐10(1), 12

The unjustifiable inducement of a third person not to enter into or continue a business relationship with another, or the wrongful interference with the formation of a contract, is an actionable tort in California.

12. Torts ⇐10(3)

Where wholesaler's distributorship of liquor manufacturer's products expired on February 28, manufacturer could thereafter encourage retailers to purchase their supplies of manufacturer's products from its then distributors, and such conduct would not be tortious conduct on part of manufacturer, even though wholesaler still had a quantity of manufacturer's products on hand.

Lawler, Felix & Hall, John M. Hall, Los Angeles, for appellant and cross-respondent.

J. Albert Hutchinson, San Francisco, for respondent and cross-appellant.

FOX, Presiding Justice.

This litigation grows out of a contractual relationship between plaintiff and defendant concerning the distribution of Calvert distilled spirits. Plaintiff was awarded damages for two asserted breaches of the contract. As to these issues defendant has appealed. Plaintiff also sought damages for other alleged breaches of contract and for certain tortious conduct, including unfair competition, conspiracy and restraint of trade. The trial court directed a verdict in defendant's favor upon all these issues. Plaintiff has appealed from this portion of the judgment.

This case is the companion of A.B.C. Distributing Co. v. Distillers Distributing Corp., 154 Cal.App.2d 175, 316 P.2d 71, recently decided by this court. The issues in the two cases are substantially the same,[1] and that decision is controlling on many of the issues raised herein.

1. Plaintiff's initial brief in this case, filed prior to the A.B.C. opinion, stated that "plaintiff's appeal herein presents the same issues as are now pending before the Court in the [A.B.C. case], in which the defendants are identical, the plaintiffs are similarly situated and counsel are common to both cases." The brief states further: "Since no material differences in the issues, proof and disposition of the withheld issues exist as between the two cases, plaintiff deems it inappropriate to repeat at length the outline of the facts, applicable statutes and rules of decision set forth in the briefs on file in the A.B.C. case and takes the liberty of referring the Court to the presentation in the latter as equally applicable to the same points of discussion in this appeal in behalf of the plaintiff.

"Plaintiff shall, in consequence, note only the distinctions between the two cases, and, unless otherwise indicated, the Court may assume that the arguments, statements of position and of the facts of this case are materially identical to those set forth in the A.B.C. written submission.

"The relationship of the parties and the contractual instruments asserted in the two cases, the industry background and merchandising and distribution practices, and controlling statutes are identical."

Plaintiff is a wholesale distributor of alcoholic beverages. It purchases from manufacturers and other distributors and resells to retail dealers. Defendant is, by virtue of successive mergers, the successor to Calvert Distillers Corporation. It manufactures Calvert products and sells them to distributors. Prior to June, 1951, plaintiff had been a distributor of Calvert products in Los Angeles and Orange counties pursuant to a verbal agreement with Calvert. There were also several other Calvert distributors active in those areas over the years, but by 1951 only three were active: plaintiff, Simon Levi, and A.B.C. During the period prior to June, 1951, each of the three distributors had been at liberty to sell Calvert products in competition with the others to any retail liquor licensee anywhere within those areas. After June, 1951, Calvert restricted Simon Levi, A.B.C. and plaintiff each to an assigned territory. Since the territory assigned to each of the distributors was different, the result was that each distributor had an exclusive area for the sale of Calvert products. As of March 1, 1952, plaintiff and the other two distributors contracted in writing with Calvert. Each of the contracts covered a period of one year. At the termination of the first contract plaintiff entered into a second written contract with Calvert, effective March 1, 1953. This is the contract involved in the present litigation. The contract appointed plaintiff "as a distributor" of Calvert products. The territorial restrictions were essentially the same as before.

In June, 1953, the distributors were notified by Calvert that there would be an "opening up" of the territory—i.e., the distributors would no longer be confined to assigned territories; instead, each would be permitted to sell anywhere in the entire territory. The distributors were happy about the new arrangement and readily agreed to its adoption. In effect the written contracts were modified by an executed oral agreement concerning territorial restrictions.

In October, 1953, Calvert appointed the Don W. Snyder Company as a Calvert distributor for a territory which included Los Angeles and Orange counties. Plaintiff protested this appointment but continued its dealings with Calvert just as before.

On February 2, 1954, Mr. Froelich, a representative of Calvert, called on the president of plaintiff, Mr. Hillinger, and asked him if it was true that plaintiff was planning to "take on" a competing line of distilled spirits. Mr. Hillinger indicated that plaintiff was considering the matter but had made no definite decision. The next day Mr. Froelich told Mr. Hillinger over the telephone that plaintiff's contract would not be renewed. A letter dated February 1, 1954, from Hillinger to Calvert stated: "Please be advised that we are desirous of renewing our contract at the expiration of our agreement." Mr. Froelich replied by letter on February 4, stating: "As I advised you previously * * * we do not intend to renew your contract."

Thereafter, plaintiff commenced distributing the competing line. It continued to order Calvert products in March, 1954, but these orders were not filled. Plaintiff commenced this action on November 1, 1954.

[1, 2] Before discussing the points raised by defendant's appeal, we must consider the question of the renewal of the written contract between plaintiff and Calvert. The contract in this respect is exactly the same as the one before this court in the A.B.C. case, and we there held that the provision in question did not give the distributor an option to renew and that Calvert could refuse to renew the contract if it so desired. 154 Cal.App.2d at pages 183, 184, 316 P.2d at pages 76–77. Furthermore, the contract states that a distributor wishing to renew must "apply for renewal not less than 30 days before March 1, 1954." Plaintiff's notice of desire to renew the contract was sent less than 30 days before March 1, 1954. It is therefore clear that the contract between plaintiff and Calvert was not renewed in 1954. By its terms this contract expired at the end of February, 1954.

Defendant's appeal concerns the two asserted breaches of contract found by the trial court. The trial court ruled as a matter of law that the appointment of Snyder as an additional Calvert distributor was a breach of contract. The court also ruled as a matter of law that Calvert breached the contract by failing to deliver 162 cases of liquor during February 1954. The court submitted to the jury only the question of damages arising from these two breaches of contract.

[3] Defendant contends that the court erred in ruling as a matter of law that the appointment of the Snyder Company as an additional distributor in the fall of 1953 was a breach of an implied provision in the contract. Defendant's contention is correct. The trial court should have ruled as a matter of law that there was no such implied provision in the contract. The situation in the instant case is substantially the same as in the A.B.C. case, and we there held that as a matter of law there was no such implied provision and hence no breach of contract (154 Cal.App.2d at page 187, 316 P.2d at pages 78–79). Our opinion in the A.B.C. case fully discusses the law on this subject, so it need not be repeated here. It is there pointed out that the law is clearly against plaintiff's proposition that the contract impliedly prohibited the appointment of Snyder as an additional distributor.

[4] Nor may the trial court's ruling be sustained on the basis of an "executed oral amendment" to the 1953 contract. Plaintiff seeks to fortify its position on this point by certain testimony of Mr. Hecht, who was president of the A.B.C. Distributing Company, to the effect that when the matter of opening up the restricted territory was discussed with him in the latter part of May, 1953, Mr. Taub, who represented Calvert, stated that each of the distributors (California Beverage & Supply Company, Simon Levi and A.B.C.) would service the whole territory and nothing was said about Calvert considering the addition of a new distributor. This evidence does not establish any oral agreement prohibiting an additional distributor. Moreover, it must be borne in mind that this conversation was not had with a representative of plaintiff and is not the conversation upon which plaintiff must rely as the basis for an oral amendment prohibiting the addition of another Calvert distributor. The only conversation upon which plaintiff may rely took place in June between Mr. Hillinger, plaintiff's president, and Mr. Taub, representing defendant. Mr. Hillinger testified that during that conversation "nothing was mentioned" about the addition of any new or different distributors in the territory. There was no other reference to that subject matter. It is thus apparent that there is no substantial basis for finding "an executed oral amendment" between plaintiff and Calvert to the effect that no additional distributor would be appointed for the territory. The only purpose of the conversations mentioned above was to inform the respective distributors that the territorial restrictions of each distributor were being removed and that each distributor would be free to service the entire territory. The judgment must therefore be reversed as to the Snyder issue.

[5] Defendant's next contention is that the trial court erred in ruling as a matter of law that Calvert failed to deliver 162 cases of liquor in February, 1954, thus causing a breach of the contract. The evidence sustains this contention. The trial court construed paragraph 12 [2] of the contract as allowing plaintiff 30 days after March 1, 1954, to sell Calvert's products, even though the contract terminated on February 28. The court then construed

2. Paragraph 12 reads as follows:
"In the event that this contract is not renewed, Distributor agrees that within 30 days after March 1, 1954, it will return to Calvert at its invoice price all of the Calvert merchandise remaining in its inventory."

paragraph 5 [3] as permitting plaintiff to have at least a 45-day inventory (if Calvert had supplies available to fill plaintiff's orders) on hand at the end of February, 1954. The court concluded that the difference between the amount of this 45-day inventory (1,584 cases) and the amount which plaintiff actually had on hand at the beginning of March (1,422 cases) represented the number of cases which Calvert should have delivered to plaintiff to avoid being in breach of the contract. Although we agree with the court's interpretation of the two paragraphs in question, we cannot accept the court's directing a verdict for plaintiff. It seems perfectly clear that under the contract defendant was under no obligation to deliver to plaintiff during February, 1954, more cases of Calvert products than plaintiff ordered. Plaintiff was entitled to make such orders during the month of February, 1954, as would enable it to maintain a 45-day inventory; but defendant may not be penalized for plaintiff's failure to order the maximum during that month. In deciding that Calvert failed to deliver 162 cases of liquor, the trial court apparently assumed that such cases were ordered and the order was not filled. This was a question of fact which should have been submitted to the jury if there was a substantial conflict in the evidence. United Air Services, Ltd. v. Sampson, 30 Cal.App.2d 135, 86 P.2d 366. There was evidence in the record of sufficient substantiality to entitle the jury to conclude that Calvert filled all the orders which paintiff placed during February, 1954. The exhibits and testimony of plaintiff's own witnesses showed that plaintiff placed written orders during February for 1,440 cases, and that such orders were all filled by Calvert. In prior years plaintiff ordered only 500 or 600 cases in February. Plaintiff's final February order, placed on Friday, February 26, 1954, was accompanied by a letter in which the following statement appeared: "We are enclosing an order for 320 cases of Calvert which is needed to complete the orders that we have now on hand." The only evidence which would support the conclusion that plaintiff placed orders during February which Calvert failed to fill is testimony by Mr. Hillinger. He testified that plaintiff placed certain orders by telephone which Calvert refused to ship. These orders were not confirmed in writing. Nor was there substantial evidence as to the total amount of such orders. But this testimony, if believed by the jury, would tend to establish a breach of contract by Calvert in this regard. It is thus clear that the evidence was conflicting and that the jury should have been permitted to decide how many, if any, cases of Calvert products were ordered by plaintiff and not delivered by Calvert. The judgment must be reversed and the cause remanded for a new trial on this issue. It should be noted that the maximum for which Calvert may be held liable is the net profit on 162 cases of Calvert. The reason for this is that paragraph 5 of the contract gave Calvert the right to refuse to fill orders when it would result in plaintiff's having more than a 45-day inventory on hand; and the difference between that 45-day inventory and the number of cases actually on hand at the beginning of March, 1954, was 162 cases.

[6] Since there must be a new trial on the question of breach of contract for failure to deliver liquor ordered for February delivery, it is appropriate for us to comment on the issue of good will. The trial court permitted the jury to award plaintiff damages for loss of good will in connection with the 162 cases which Calvert allegedly failed to deliver. This was error. The only question involved was breach of contract; good will had nothing to do with it. "Good will" is defined as the expectation of continued public patronage. Business and Professions Code, sec. 14100. It is obvious that plaintiff could have no expectation of continued public patronage in connection with Calvert products since it would no longer be a distributor of Calvert commencing March 1, 1954. The only damage which plaintiff could suffer by reason of Calvert's failure to deliver liquor which it had ordered is the net profit which it would derive from the sale of such products. Therefore, if Calvert is found to have been in breach of contract upon retrial, the measure of plaintiff's damages is the net profit, if any, which plaintiff reasonably could have anticipated.

3. Paragraph 5 reads as follows:
"Calvert agrees to supply its products to Distributor to the best of Calvert's ability, but it is understood and agreed that all or some products may not always be available to fill all orders and Calvert shall have the right to allocate to Distributor such proportion of the available supplies of its products as Calvert shall decide in its sole discretion. Calvert reserves the right not to ship any orders received where such orders would result in an inventory in the hands of Distributor greater than a 45-day inventory, based on the rate of sales of Calvert products by Distributor for the six months prior to the date of this contract."

[7] In connection with the question of the February orders we should also consider plaintiff's contention that Calvert's failure to deliver 2,500 cases of liquor, which were ordered on January 25, 1954, was a breach of contract. The 2,500 cases represent two separate orders, one for 1,500 cases and the other for 1,000. The former order called for delivery after March 1, 1954, and the latter order scheduled delivery during the week of March 29, 1954. Defendant contends that Calvert was not required to fill these orders since they called for delivery subsequent to the termination of the contract. The trial court ruled in defendant's favor as a matter of law, and we are convinced that the court's conclusion was correct. While it is clear that plaintiff was entitled to maintain a 45-day inventory during the period the contract was in effect, it is implicit in the agreement that plaintiff was not entitled to maintain such 45-day inventory once the contract terminated. Paragraph 12 of the contract (see footnote 2) merely gave plaintiff a maximum of 30 days after the termination of the contract to dispose of the supply it had on hand at that time. Within such 30 days plaintiff was obligated to return all the unsold Calvert merchandise. To apply plaintiff's interpretation would render paragraphs 11 [4] and 12 of the contract meaningless. Plaintiff could cause the contract to continue indefinitely, even beyond its February 28 termination date, simply by placing orders in January and February for delivery in March, April, May and so forth. Plaintiff could thus obtain a substantial number of cases each month even though the contract had terminated. The only reasonable interpretation of the contract, therefore, is that Calvert was not required to fill orders for delivery in months subsequent to the termination of the contract, regardless of when such orders were placed.

[8, 9] We turn now to the questions raised by plaintiff's cross-appeal which have not already been discussed. These involve the various allegations of tortious conduct by Calvert. With one exception the material allegations and facts proved in this regard are substantially the same as those in the A.B.C. case. See 154 Cal. App.2d at pages 178–183, 316 P.2d at pages 73–76. We there answered the same contentions which plaintiff makes in the instant case. 154 Cal.App.2d at pages 187–193, 316 P.2d at pages 79–82. We pointed out that Calvert's refusal to renew the contract because A.B.C. was taking on the line of one of Calvert's principal competitors did not provide a sufficient basis for finding an antitrust law violation. We found no substantial evidence of any conspiracy, restraint of trade or other unfair competition. And we found that plaintiff suffered no injury by reason of the provisions in the contract which it alleges are illegal. Our conclusions in the instant case are the same, and it is unnecessary here to duplicate our discussion in the A.B.C. case of the pertinent authorities.[5] It will suffice to consider the additional recent cases upon which plaintiff now relies. One of these is Black v. Magnolia Liquor Co., 355 U.S. 24, 78 S.Ct. 106, 2 L.Ed.2d 5, in which the United States Supreme Court held that a wholesaler of alcoholic beverages who made tie-in sales (i. e., compelling a retailer to buy certain brands which he did not desire in order to obtain other brands which he did desire) violated section 5 of the Alcohol Administration Act, 27 U.S.C.A. § 205, and that the suspension of the wholesaler's license was therefore proper. The Black case has no application to the one at bar. There is no evidence of any tie-in sales in the instant case. Moreover, the Black case deals with a license suspension by an administrative agency; the question of the right of a private party to seek damages was not involved. One of the aims of the Alcohol Administration Act is to prohibit practices which are analogous to those prohibited by the antitrust law (Black v. Magnolia Liquor Co., supra), and we held in the A.B.C. case that a violation of an antitrust statute is not actionable by a private party in the absence of any injury to him. 154 Cal.App.2d at page 191, 316 P.2d at page 81. Since plaintiff has failed to establish the fact that it suffered any injury because of Calvert's alleged violations of the above act or any of the antitrust laws, it may not maintain an action based upon such alleged violations.

4. Paragraph 11 provides:
"This contract shall be effective for a period of 1 year * * * from March 1, 1953 * * *."

Plaintiff also relies upon the recent case of Flintkote Co. v. Lysfjord, 9 Cir., 246 F.2d 368. That case deals with an unlawful conspiracy to restrain trade among contractors in the acoustical tile industry. It is not in point because there is not sufficient evidence in the instant case to establish any unlawful conspiracy to restrain trade. The court in the Flintkote case even recognized that "one engaged in private enterprise may select his own customers, and in the absence of an illegal agreement, may sell or refuse to sell to a customer for good cause, or for no cause whatever." Flintkote Co. v. Lysfjord, supra, at page 376.

Plaintiff also relies upon two California cases decided subsequent to the A.B.C. decision. They are Garmon v. San Diego Bldg. Trades Council, 49 Cal.2d 595, 320 P.2d 473, and Biakanja v. Irving, 49 Cal.2d 647, 320 P.2d 16. Neither of these cases has any relevancy to the issues before us.

[10–12] There is one particular which makes the instant case sigificantly different from the A.B.C. case. One Donald Richardson, who was employed by plaintiff at the time of the trial, testified that he was working for Calvert during the latter part of 1953 and the first few months of 1954. His job was to cooperate with the Calvert distributors, check their inventories and aid them in securing orders for Calvert products from retailers. Mr. Richardson would sometimes take an order and telephone it in to one of the distributors. Early in February he was told that California Beverage & Supply Company was no longer to be a distributor and he was instructed to confine his operations to the other distributors. He testified that he thereafter instructed retailers that plaintiff was no longer a distributor and he sent their orders to one of the other distributors. He stated that on certain occasions during February, 1954, he diverted from plaintiff to other distributors purchases by retailers who had regularly purchased their Calvert products from plaintiff. This testimony, if believed by the jury, would lend support to a finding that Calvert, through its employee, committed acts constituting unlawful interference with a business relationship during February, 1954. The unjustifiable inducement of a third person not to enter into or continue a business relationship with another, or the wrongful interference with the formation of a contract, is an actionable tort in California. Guillory v. Godfrey, 134 Cal.App. 2d 628, 632, 286 P.2d 474; Masoni v. Board of Trade of San Francisco, 119 Cal.App.2d 738, 741, 260 P.2d 205. "Whether an intentional interference by a third party is unjustifiable and actionable depends on a balancing of the importance, social and private, of the objective advanced by the interference against the importance of the interest interfered with, considering all circumstances, among which the methods and means used and the relation of the parties are important." Masoni v. Board of Trade of San Francisco, supra, 119 Cal.App.2d at page 742, 260 P.2d at page 208. The aforementioned testimony raised a question of fact—namely, whether or not Calvert was guilty of unlawful interference with plaintiff's business relationships by diverting purchases from plaintiff during February, 1954. It was error for the trial court to rule as a matter of law that the admitted conduct of Calvert's employee, Richardson, was not wrongful. The jury should have been permitted to determine this question and pass upon the credibility of Richardson. Therefore, there must be a new trial upon this issue. In the event that it is determined upon a retrial that Calvert was guilty of a tort in this connection, it should be noted that plaintiff's recovery should be limited to the damage it suffered during February, 1954. Richardson's conduct after March 1, 1954, cannot be considered wrongful in view of the fact that plaintiff's distributorship expired on February 28. Even though plaintiff still had a quantity of Calvert products on hand, Calvert was at liberty to encourage retailers to purchase their supplies of its products from its then distributors.

5. The recent case of Milton v. Hudson Sales Corp., 152 Cal.App.2d 418, 313 P. 2d 936, supports our conclusion in connection with plaintiff's allegations of unlawful refusal to deal on the part of Calvert. In that case the appellate court reversed the trial court and ordered judgment for defendants upon a cause of action alleging an unlawful agreement to eliminate the plaintiff as a dealer of Hudson automobiles. The court held (152 Cal.App.2d at pages 439–447, 313 P.2d at pages 949–954) that the allegations and proof of defendants' refusal to deal with plaintiff did not establish a cause of action under the Cartwright Act, Bus. & Prof.Code, § 16700 et seq. See, also, Packard Motor Car Co. v. Webster Motor Car Co., 100 U.S.App. D.C. 161, 243 F.2d 418, certiorari denied, Webster Motor Car Co. v. Packard Motor Car Co., 355 U.S. 822, 78 S.Ct. 29, 2 L.Ed.2d 38; Schwing Motor Co. v. Hudson Sales Corp., D.C., 138 F.Supp. 899, affirmed, 4 Cir., 239 F.2d 176, certiorari denied, 355 U.S. 823, 78 S.Ct. 30, 2 L.Ed.2d 38, both of which are relied upon in the Milton case.

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded for a new trial on the two issues specified herein, and the trial court is directed thereafter to enter a new judgment not inconsistent with this opinion. Each party shall bear its own costs on this appeal.

ASHBURN, J., and KINCAID, J. pro tem., concur.

Hearing denied; CARTER, J., dissenting.

159 Cal.App.2d 4

Cecil WETSEL and Lillian Wetsel, Plaintiffs and Respondents,

v.

Theresa GARIBALDI, Henry J. Garibaldi and Mary O. Garibaldi, Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 9112.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

March 28, 1958.

Proceeding to confirm award of arbitrators. The Superior Court, Amador County, Jay L. Henry, J., entered order confirming award and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Van Dyke, P. J., held that under contract providing that in the event of any disagreement or dispute on any point arising under contract or in carrying out same matter in difference should be determined by arbitration, arbitrators' construction of provisions of contract as to which error was assigned and the factual determinations, were beyond scope of review accorded by statutes.

Affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐81
Arbitration and Award ⇐73

Order to arbitrate was not appealable, but propriety of order to arbitrate could be reviewed on appeal from order confirming arbitrators' award.

2. Contracts ⇐292½

Where there was nothing in contract provision respecting arbitration which justified holding that arbitrators were given power to pass on arbitrability of dispute, it would be assumed that parties to proceeding for order to compel arbitration expected court determination of arbitrability.

3. Contracts ⇐292½

Where contract provided for arbitration of any disagreement or dispute, and a dispute arose but one of the parties denied right of arbitration on ground that other party, by its alleged breach of contract, had forfeited all rights under contract including right to arbitration, by their action in petitioning for order compelling arbitration parties initially submitted to the court question of whether agreement to arbitrate had been unilaterally terminated by breach of contract. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1282.

4. Contracts ⇐292½

Where contract provided that all disputes should be submitted to arbitration but one party refused to arbitrate on grounds that plaintiffs, by allegedly material breaches of contract, had forfeited rights thereunder including right to arbitration, and plaintiffs petitioned for order compelling arbitration, even though trial court in ordering arbitration made no specific finding as to whether contract had been terminated for cause or remained in all its parts in full force and effect, it impliedly decided that issue in favor of plaintiffs since it otherwise would not have ordered arbitration. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1282.

5. Arbitration and Award ⇐73

Where plaintiffs brought proceeding to compel arbitration of differences in accordance with contract provision and defendants claimed that plaintiffs had forfeited their rights under contract including right to arbitration because of material breaches of contract, on appeal from order confirming arbitration award in absence of transcript of all proceedings, District Court of Appeal must affirm trial court's order directing parties to arbitrate.

6. Arbitration and Award ⇐73

Where plaintiffs brought proceeding to compel arbitration of dispute in accordance with contract provision and defendants claimed that plaintiffs had forfeited rights under contract including right to arbitrate because of material breaches of contract, but order of trial court compelled arbitration and then defendants joined with plaintiffs in submitting difference to arbitrators but still opposed arbitration based on claim of unilateral termination of contract by plaintiffs, defendants effectively reserved right to review arbitration order on appeal from order confirming award.

7. Appeal and Error ⇐907(2)

Where plaintiffs brought proceeding to compel arbitration of disputes arising under contract providing for arbitration but defendants claimed that plaintiffs had forfeited rights under contract because of their unilateral termination thereof, but there was no record of oral proceedings before trial court which resulted in order compelling arbitration, District Court of Appeal would assume that trial court on proper facts decided that there had been no unilateral termination.

8. Arbitration and Award ⇐73

On appeal from order confirming arbitration award, appellate court cannot go into the merits of the arbitrated disputes between the parties if such matters are not subject to judicial review.

9. Contracts ⇐290

Where plaintiffs brought proceedings to compel arbitration of disputes under contract providing for arbitration and secured order compelling arbitration proceedings which were then had, after arbitrators had made their award the institution of lawsuit for injunctive relief on matters connected with contract did not constitute a waiver by plaintiff of right to arbitrate.

10. Arbitration and Award ⇐72

If parties accept and abide by an award of arbitrators there is no need for further judicial procedure, and ordinarily proceeding to confirm award is not initiated unless one of the parties refuses to abide by the award or unless it be the desire of a party that an official record of the confirmation and judgment be made. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1287.

11. Arbitration and Award ⇐66, 73

Every intendment will be indulged in to give effect to arbitration proceedings, and to justify setting aside of an award on account of error it must be shown that rights of one of the parties is prejudiced by the award.

12. Arbitration and Award ⇐73

On appeal from order confirming arbitration award, appellate court cannot review merits of award of arbitrators who are empowered to determine issues of law as well as of fact.

13. Arbitration and Award ⇐72

In proceeding to confirm award of arbitrators made under contract providing that in the event of any disagreement or dispute on any point arising under contract, or in carrying out same, matter in difference should be determined by arbitration, arbitrators' construction of provisions of contract as to which error was assigned and their factual determinations were beyond the scope of review accorded by statute. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1282, 1287.

Adon V. Panattoni, Sacramento, for appellants.

Geo. Gard Chisholm, Jackson, and J. A. Montgomery, Jr., Sacramento, for respondents.

VAN DYKE, Presiding Justice.

Appellants, hereinafter called Garibaldi, appeal from an order confirming an award of arbitrators and from the judgment entered thereon. Respondents, hereinafter called Wetsel, on June 27, 1940, entered into a written agreement with Garibaldi for the purchase by Wetsel of growing timber with the right to cut and remove the same from Garibaldi lands. The contract contained numerous provisions as to what trees might be cut and removed, as to the conditions of such cutting and removal and as to the price to be paid. The contract also contained a paragraph, numbered 27, reading as follows: "In the event of any disagreement or dispute on any point arising under this contract, or in carrying same out, the matter in difference shall be determined by arbitration, * * *."

The contract also contained a paragraph, No. 31, which provided that if Wetsel defaulted under the contract and did not cure such default within 30 days after receiving notice to do so Garibaldi might reenter the premises and exclude Wetsel therefrom, and at their option terminate the agreement, retaining all moneys paid.

At various times the parties executed amendments to the contract, affecting such matters as price, addition of lands to the lands covered by the agreement and conditions governing the cutting and removal of trees. During this time Wetsel exercised their rights. After the execution of the last amendatory agreement disputes arose and on April 24, 1950 Wetsel made written demand upon Garibaldi for the appointment of an arbitrator to determine a dispute concerning Wetsel's right to cut and remove timber from a specific parcel of land. Garibaldi notified Wetsel that an arbitrator had been appointed, but that there were additional disputes to arbitrate. They proposed that the arbitrators consider 19 items of dispute and that the arbitrators also consider Garibaldi's claim that Wetsel had forfeited all of their rights under the contract, including the right to arbitration, by having committed material breaches thereof, for which Garibaldi had exercised their option to end the agreement and terminate all rights of Wetsel. A dispute arose as to the matters to be covered by the proposed arbitration and Garibaldi notified Wetsel that they withdrew from arbitration and would resort to other remedies for the preservation of their rights. Thereupon Wetsel petitioned the Superior Court for an order compelling arbitration. The court issued an order to show cause why arbitration should not be ordered and in response thereto Garibaldi moved that the arbitration proceedings be dismissed, asserting their contentions that the right to arbitrate was gone. The court heard the matter and ordered that the controversies between the parties be submitted to arbitration on all matters arising under the contract. The court denied the motion to dismiss the proceeding. No specific findings were made on the issue of contract termination.

Arbitrators were appointed and those appointed selected a third. The arbitrators made an award disposing of the various disputes. Wetsel applied to the court to confirm the award and for the entry of judgment thereon. Garibaldi opposed and moved to vacate the award. The court set the award aside, deeming that on certain issues submitted the arbitrators had not made a complete determination. It ordered the arbitrators to take further action. This they did. A new award was made. Petition for confirmation and judgment was filed. Garibaldi renewed their opposition, but the court ordered confirmation of the award and thereupon entered judgment. The appeal followed.

Appellants Garibaldi contend that there were major controversies existing between the parties which were outside of the arbitration clause and therefore not arbitrable, and that even assuming such controversies were arbitrable, still there existed no right of arbitration at all because, acting under paragraph 31 of the principal contract and by reason of substantial breaches of the contract by Wetsel, Garibaldi had elected to terminate, and had terminated, the entire contract, with the result that there no longer existed an agreement to arbitrate. The question of the existence of an agreement to arbitrate and of the scope of the arbitration permissible under that agreement are issues which, in the first instance, the code refers to judicial action. Section 1282 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides:

"A party aggrieved by the failure, neglect or refusal of another to perform under an agreement in writing providing for arbitration may petition any superior court of the county or city and county where either party resides, for an order directing that such arbitration proceed in the manner provided for in such agreement. * * * The court shall hear the parties, and upon being satisfied that the making of the agreement or such failure to comply therewith is not in issue, shall make an order directing the parties to proceed to arbitration in accordance with the terms of the agreement. If the making of the agreement or the default be in issue an order shall be made directing a summary trial thereof. * * If no jury trial be demanded said court shall hear and determine such issue. If the finding be that no agreement in writing providing for arbitration was made, or that there is no default in proceeding thereunder, the proceeding shall be dismissed. If the finding be that a written provision for arbitration was made and there is a default in proceeding thereunder, an order shall be made summarily directing the parties to proceed with the arbitration in accordance with the terms thereof."

[1–3] The order to arbitrate is not appealable. Corbett v. Petroleum Maintenance Co., 119 Cal.App.2d 21, 258 P.2d 1077; Sjoberg v. Hastorf, 33 Cal.2d 116, 199 P.2d 668; Jardine Matheson & Co., Ltd. v. Pacific Orient Co., 100 Cal.App. 572, 280 P. 697. But the propriety of the order to arbitrate, including any order delineating the issues to be arbitrated may be reviewed on appeal from the final order confirming the arbitrators' award or from the judgment entered thereon. No contention is advanced herein that the parties have, as they might have done, agreed that the arbitrators themselves might pass upon the arbitrability of disputes. McCarroll v. Los Angeles, etc., Carpenters, 49 Cal.2d 45, at page 65, 315 P.2d 322, at pages 333, 334. Certainly there is nothing in the broad and simple language of the arbitration clause in the principal contract justifying a holding as a matter of law that the arbitrators were given such powers and the assumption, therefore, is that the parties expected a court determination of arbitrability. McCarroll v. Los Angeles, etc., Carpenters, supra, 49 Cal.2d at page 45, 315 P.2d at page 334. The parties therefore in the proceedings under Section 1282 of the Code of Civil Procedure submitted to the court initially the question of the existence of an agreement to arbitrate, concededly having once been made but challenged as to continuing validity by Garibaldi's contention that the contract had for breach been terminated by their unilateral action. They rely upon Hanes v. Coffee, 212 Cal. 777, 300 P. 963; Abraham Lehr, Inc., v. Cortez, 57 Cal.App.2d 973, 135 P.2d 684, and Friedlander v. Stanley Productions, 24 Cal.App.2d 677, 76 P.2d 145.

[4] Although the trial court made no specific finding as to whether the contract had been terminated for cause, as contended by Garibaldi, or remained in all its parts in full force and effect, as contended by Wetsel, it impliedly decided that issue in favor of Wetsel since otherwise it would not have ordered arbitration.

[5] The record here does not disclose the proceedings before the trial court except to present to us the order that it made and its preparatory recitals that the matter had been heard and submitted for decision. In trying out the issue of unilateral termination the parties would be entitled to present evidence to the court concerning such matters as whether in fact Wetsel had breached the agreement, how serious the breaches were as either justifying or not justifying unilateral termination, whether or not breaches, if committed, had been cured or waived. In the absence of a transcript of oral proceedings, we have something in the nature of a judgment roll appeal from the court's order impliedly ruling that unilateral termination had not occurred; that, therefore, the parties had an existing agreement to arbitrate; that there was a refusal to arbitrate existing disputes by Garibaldi; and that these disputes arose out of the contract or its performance and were, consequently, arbitrable. We must, therefore, affirm the trial court's order directing the parties to arbitrate. We may say here that there is a claim by Wetsel that Garibaldi, notwithstanding their contentions advanced in their opposition to the order to arbitrate that the contract had been terminated, nevertheless submitted the issue of unilateral termination to the arbitrators. This, of course, they could have done, and had they done so they would be bound by the arbitrators' determination of that issue. We think, however, it would be unfair on this record to say that Garibaldi had in this manner waived or deprived themselves of the right to object to arbitration on the ground under discussion, and to have judicial determination of that issue.

[6] Having been ordered to arbitrate, Garibaldi joined with Wetsel in submitting to the arbitrators a number of differences that had arisen and some of these included the same alleged breaches of contract which furnished in part a foundation for their claim of unilateral termination. In doing so, however, they recited the fact of their opposition to arbitration based on their claim of unilateral termination. We think they effectively reserved their right to review the arbitration order on appeal, though, perforce, accepting the arbitration order involving the same disputes in so far as the arbitrators might award damages or other remedies for any breaches found by the arbitrators to have been committed by Wetsel. The arbitrators did find in a number of instances that Wetsel had breached the agreement, and as a remedy therefor the arbitrators directed Wetsel to take steps to repair the injuries their acts had caused. Thus the arbitrators ordered Wetsel to restore fences wrongfully removed, and to clear springs wrongfully choked with logging debris, within designated time limits, with damage awards as alternatives if they failed to remedy the injuries they had caused. It also appears that Wetsel in designating disputes to be arbitrated referred to the issue of unilateral termination, in terms asserting that the superior court had ruled upon that matter and it appears further that the arbitrators considered that the issue had been ruled upon by the court adversely to Garibaldi. The arbitrators, therefore, made no determination of that issue.

[7] In the absence of a record disclosing the oral proceedings before the trial court upon the issue of unilateral termination, we find that the record before us would not warrant us in holding that, as a matter of law, the arbitration order was erroneous. We must assume the court, on proper facts, decided there had been no unilateral termination. This being so, then the arbitration clause was sufficiently broad to make arbitrable every other controversy arbitrated.

[8] We think it unnecessary to relate the several issues, numbering seventeen, which were arbitrated. We cannot sustain Garibaldi's contention that some were not arbitrable. They say that, while some defaults, such as damage to fences, water springs, etc., are by the terms of the contract such that arbitration would probably follow, other alleged breaches, such as the wrongful relogging of land already cut over, and the removal of trees and logs reserved to appellants, are not arbitrable. We do not so construe the arbitration agreement. We have noted its broad language, broad enough, indeed, to have even covered the subject of unilateral termination as a dispute arising out of the contract had not Garibaldi elected, as they did, to demand judicial determination of that issue. The arbitrators summarily stated the issues arbitrated. They were claims by Garibaldi that Wetsel had cut timber on property not included within their contract; that Wetsel had cut timber that was undersized; that the contract's specifications as to size must be determined as of the date of the execution of the contract and not as of the time of cutting, which occurred years later; that Wetsel had no right to cut dead timber and had done so; that they had cut unmerchantable timber, thus violating the reserve rights of Garibaldi; that they had cut timber closer to buildings than was permitted; that they had wrongfully cut trees marked as being reserved to Garibaldi; that they had constructed unnecessary and unwarranted access roads on the property; that they had damaged reserve timber by careless logging; that they had logged closer to springs than permitted and had damaged some and destroyed others; that they had relogged areas contrary to their rights; that they had interfered with mining operations by Garibaldi; that they had damaged fences; that they had failed to continuously log as required by the contract. It is apparent that the arbitrators were required to determine many issues, both of fact and of law, but that is necessary in most arbitrations. It is permitted by the statute and was within the agreement of the parties. Of course we cannot on appeal go into the merits of the arbitrated disputes between the parties. Such matters are not subject to judicial review. O'Malley v. Petroleum Maintenance Co., 48 Cal.2d 107, 111, 308 P.2d 9; Myers v. Richfield Oil Corp., 98 Cal.App.2d 667, 671, 220 P.2d 973. It appears that the arbitrators in this case diligently and intelligently acted upon every issue submitted. It is indicated by their award that they made many field investigations and obtained the services of men fitted by training to inspect the timber lands and testify as to conditions found. The arbitrators must have spent a great deal of time and appear to have done a thorough job.

[9, 10] It is contended by Garibaldi that Wetsel waived their right to arbitrate by filing a separate lawsuit for injunctive relief on a matter connected with the principal contract. Reference is to a suit filed by Wetsel whereby they sought to enjoin Garibaldi from interfering with their logging operations on a specified tract. This suit was brought on May 2, 1952, about two months after Wetsel had petitioned the court for an order confirming the award of the arbitrators and about six months after the arbitrators had rendered their award. Impliedly the trial court resolved this issue of waiver against Garibaldi in the proceedings to confirm the award and for the entry of judgment thereon. The arbitrators having made their award, the arbitration proceeding was at an end. Whether or not there would be any application to a court for confirmation pursuant to Section 1287 of the Code of Civil Procedure would depend upon the conduct and desires of the parties. If parties accept and abide by an award there is no need for further judicial procedure. And ordinarily such procedure is not initiated unless one of the parties refuses to abide by the award or unless it be the desire of a party that an official record of confirmation and judgment be made. The complaint in the action filed by Wetsel recited that Wetsel had the right to cut timber on a tract known as the Stevenson place; that on the 1st of May, 1952 Garibaldi had prevented Wetsel from entering for the purpose of cutting and removing timber greatly to the damage of Wetsel and they prayed that Garibaldi be enjoined from thus interfering with the exercise of their rights. The right of Wetsel to cut timber from the Stevenson place was one of the matters that had been submitted to the arbitration and the arbitrators had ruled that Wetsel had such right. The right relied upon by Wetsel, therefore, in the injunction suit was one which the arbitrators had determined Wetsel possessed and their action in requesting injunctive relief against such actions could not legally constitute a waiver of the already exercised and completed right to arbitrate. The court was amply authorized to hold, as it impliedly did, that there had been no waiver.

[11, 12] Finally, Garibaldi contends that the arbitrators exceeded their powers and that, therefore, the trial court erred in confirming the award. It should be observed here that every intendment will be indulged to give effect to arbitration proceedings and that to justify the setting aside of an award on account of error it must be shown that the rights of one of the parties is prejudiced by the award. Popcorn Equipment Co. v. Page, 92 Cal.App.2d 448, 207 P.2d 647. Under this assignment Garibaldi contends that the arbitrators exceeded their powers in the determination of several issues. They assert that the arbitrators erroneously interpreted various parts of the principal contract and then applied their interpretations to the resolution of issues which would have been otherwise determined had the arbitrators correctly construed the agreement; that the arbitrators, as to another issue, reached an agreement that dead timber was not sold to Wetsel and yet made no award in spite of the fact, as shown by a minority report, that quantities of timber had been obtained from dead trees; that the arbitrators had assessed money damages for various breaches they found that Wetsel had committed and that on occasion they had accepted the estimates of third persons in assessing damages. As we have said, we cannot review the merits of the arbitrators' award. They are empowered to determine issues of law as well as of fact. As said in Sapp v. Barenfeld, 34 Cal.2d 515, 523, 212 P.2d 233, 239:

> "Even though a party expressly asserts a lawful claim in the submission or raises it by the presentation of evidence to the arbitrators, the law does not guarantee that the claim will be allowed. Arbitrators, unless specifically required to act in conformity with rules of law, may base their decision upon broad principles of justice and equity, and in doing so may expressly or impliedly reject a claim that a party might successfully have asserted in a judicial action."

Said the court in Crofoot v. Blair Holdings Corp., 119 Cal.App.2d 156, 186, 260 P.2d 156, 172:

> "* * * [I]t must be held that in the absence of some limiting clause in the arbitration agreement, the merits of the award, either on questions of fact or of law, may not be reviewed except as provided in the statute."

[13] Under the broad provisions of the arbitration clause in the principal contract we have before us we hold that the arbitrators' construction of the provisions of the contract as to which error is assigned and their factual determinations are beyond the scope of the review accorded by the statutes.

The order and the judgment appealed from are affirmed.

SCHOTTKY and PEEK, JJ., concur.

159 Cal.App.2d 172

Longino ROLLO, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

CALIFORNIA STATE AUTOMOBILE ASS'N et al., Defendants,

Truck Insurance Exchange, an Inter-Insurance exchange, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 17577.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

April 4, 1958.

Rehearing Denied May 2, 1958.

Hearing Denied May 27, 1958.

Employee's action against employer's automobile liability insurer. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Milton D. Sapiro, J., rendered judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peters, P. J., held that the financial responsibility laws do not require, expressly or impliedly, that employer must have liability policy covering injuries for which employer is liable, and only liable, under workmen's compensation laws, and held that automobile liability policy, extending coverage to anyone driving vehicle with permission of owner but specifically excluding as additional insured any fellow employee of employee injured in course of his employment by named insured while automobile was being operated in business of employer, excluding coverage for bodily injuries suffered by employee of named insured while engaged in employ of insured, and excluding coverage where benefits were payable under workmen's compensation law to injured employee or where employer could be held liable under workmen's compensation law, was not invalid as contravening provisions of financial responsibility law.

Affirmed.

1. Insurance ⇐435.19

Employer's automobile liability policy, containing omnibus clause extending coverage to anyone driving vehicle with permission of owner but specifically excluding as an additional insured a fellow employee of injured employee of same employer injured in course of his employment by named insured while automobile was being operated in business of employer, afforded no coverage for injuries sustained by employee when employer's automobile was negligently driven into collision by a fellow employee.

2. Automobiles ⇐55

An unsatisfied judgment against person whose registration privileges are involved is a condition precedent to suspension of registration privileges under Vehicle Code sections providing for suspension of license of owner of vehicle unless he files affidavit stating that he was insured on date of accident giving rise to judgment for personal injuries. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, §§ 410 to 418.5, 420.

3. Automobiles ⇐43

Vehicle Code section, providing that where employee is driving his employer's automobile with consent, and has accident, employer, unless insured, must deposit security sufficient to satisfy expected judgment, has no application where employer could not be held liable for negligence of driver and where no judgment has or can be secured against employer because of provisions of Workmen's Compensation Act. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, §§ 410 to 418.5, 420.

4. Automobiles ⇐43

The financial responsibility laws do not require, expressly or impliedly, that employer must have liability policy covering injuries for which employer is liable, and only liable, under workmen's compensation laws; and automobile liability policy, extending coverage to anyone driving vehicle with permission of owner but specifically excluding as an additional insured any fellow employee of employee injured in course of his employment by named insured while automobile was being operated in business of employer, excluding coverage for bodily injuries suffered by employee of named insured while engaged in employ of insured, and excluding coverage where benefits were payable under workmen's compensation law to injured employee or where employer could be held liable under workmen's compensation law, was not invalid as contravening provisions of financial responsibility law. West's Ann.Labor Code, §§ 3600, 3601, 3706; West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 415.

Hoberg & Finger, San Francisco, for appellant.

Clark, Heafey & Martin, Oakland, for respondent.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

On May 26, 1952, Norman, Lawrence and Charles Nurrisso were a partnership doing business as the Broadway Plumbing Company. Appellant, Longino Rollo, and one Valentino Vanelli, were, on that date, employees of Broadway Plumbing Company, and both were acting in the course and scope of their employment during all of the events here involved. Vanelli was driving Broadway's automobile and Rollo was riding in the car as a passenger. Vanelli drove negligently, an accident ensued, and Rollo was injured. Rollo received compensation benefits from the workmen's compensation insurance carrier of Broadway. Subsequently, Rollo sued Vanelli and recovered a $25,000 judgment against him, which is final, and which is unsatisfied.

On May 26, 1952, the date of the accident, Broadway had a liability policy issued by the respondent, Truck Insurance Exchange. This policy admittedly covered the operation and use of the automobile here involved. An omnibus clause extended coverage to anyone driving the car with the permission and consent of Broadway, but specifically excluded as an additional insured, a fellow employee of the injured employee of the same employer, injured in the course of his employment while the automobile was being operated in the business of the employer. The policy also excluded coverage for bodily injury suffered by an employee of the assured while engaged in the employ of the assured, and it further excluded coverage where benefits were payable under a workmen's compensation law to the injured employee, or where the employer could be held liable under a workmen's compensation law.

Appellant brought this action against the Truck Insurance Exchange on the policy issued to Broadway, claiming that the policy covered Vanelli as an additional insured, and that the insurance company is therefore liable for the amount of the judgment secured against Vanelli. The trial court found that Vanelli was not an insured within the meaning of the policy, and that under the exclusions here involved bodily injury to appellant was not a risk covered, but, in fact, specifically excluded from coverage. The court also held that the exclusions in the policy were not contrary to the public policy of California as expressed in the financial responsibility laws, nor are they inconsistent or contrary to the provisions of Vehicle Code, section 415. Thus, the Truck Insurance Exchange was held not to be liable to appellant on its policy. Judgment was entered accordingly. Rollo appeals.

[1] The first contention of appellant is that Vanelli was an "insured" within the meaning of the policy, and that the injury to appellant was one of the risks covered. Appellant correctly points out that appellant was not an employee of Vanelli and was not, therefore, an "employee of the insured" referred to in the exclusion provisions.

There can be no doubt that Vanelli, as to certain risks, was an insured within the meaning of the policy. Clause III of the policy defines "Insured," in part, as follows: "The unqualified word 'insured' includes the named insured and also includes (1) under coverages A and B any partner, executive officer, * * * and (2) under coverages A and B, any person while using an owned automobile * * *, provided the actual use of the automobile is by the named insured or with his permission." Vanelli was, of course, using the automobile with the permission of the named insured, Broadway Plumbing Company. He was, therefore, an "insured" within the meaning of the above clause. But the same clause then continues as follows:

> "The insurance with respect to any person or organization other than the named insured does not apply under division (2) of this insuring agreement: * * *
>
> "(c) to any employee with respect to injury to or sickness, disease or death of another employee of the same employer injured in the course of such employment in an accident arising out of the maintenance or use of an automobile in the business of such employer; * * *
>
> "Exclusions
>
> "This policy does not apply: * * *
>
> "(d) under coverage A, except with respect to liability assumed under contract covered by this policy, to bodily injury to or sickness, disease or death of any employee of the insured while engaged in the employment of the insured, other than a domestic employee for whose injury benefits are not payable or required to be provided under any workmen's compensation law; or to any obligation for which the insured or any company as his insurer may be held liable under any workmen's compensation law."

It is quite apparent that, under these provisions, and particularly under "(c)" supra, the policy expressly excludes the very risk here involved. It is there expressly provided that the policy should not include as an insured one using the car with the permission of the owner (Vanelli) for injury to another employee (Rollo) of the same employer (the named insured, Broadway) who is injured by the use of the automobile in the business of the employer while such employee (Rollo) is in the course of such employment. This language is too clear to require interpretation. It clearly provides that it was not the intent of the insurance company or of Broadway to provide coverage for an employee of Broadway who injures another employee of Broadway when both are within the course of their employment.

Appellant relies on the case of Pleasant Valley Lima Bean Growers and Warehouse Ass'n v. Cal-Farm Ins. Co., 142 Cal.App.2d 126, 298 P.2d 109. In that case one Nungaray, employed by Brucker, was injured by a vehicle belonging to his employer while that vehicle was being used by one Croker, an employee of Pleasant Valley. Nungaray sued Croker and Pleasant Valley. The latter sought declaratory relief to compel Cal-Farm, Brucker's liability carrier, to assume liability. The court decided that the policy issued to Brucker covered Pleasant Valley and Croker for the injury to Nungaray. The policy there excluded liability for bodily injury to "any employee of the insured." 142 Cal.App.2d at page 129, 298 P.2d at page 113. The court properly held that, since Croker and Pleasant Valley were additional insured entities within the terms of policy, and, since neither was the employer of Nungaray, the exclusion had no application.

But the policy involved in that case did not involve a clause comparable to "(c)" above quoted. If it were not for clause "(c)", supra, the rule of the Pleasant Valley case would require us to hold that since Rollo was not the employee of Vanelli, both being employees of Broadway, and since Vanelli is an insured within the meaning of the clause first above quoted, the policy of respondent covered Vanelli even though Broadway, the named insured, was not liable. But the policy here involved does contain clause "(c)". That clause clearly and without ambiguity excludes this very risk.

At the oral argument appellant conceded that the Pleasant Valley case was distinguishable from the instant case and placed his reliance for a reversal on the claim that, admitting the policy expressly excludes liability in cases like the instant one, such exclusions are invalid because they contravene the provisions or the intent of the so-called financial responsibility laws of California. This contention is predicated on the premise that Vanelli was an additional assured under the policy in question and upon the argument that the attempt to exclude his liability when he injured another employee is necessarily in violation of the financial responsibility laws. Respondent replies that the exclusion here involved applies only to an employee of the named insured who injures another employee and the employer is liable to the injured employee for compensation benefits. In other words, under the omnibus clause Vanelli was an additional insured as to the whole world, except that, under clause "(c)" above quoted, there was excepted from the whole world an injured fellow employee injured by Vanelli when both were acting in the course of their employment with the named insured. The named insured, Broadway, of course, paid for the liability policy that made Vanelli an additional insured with this one exception. Broadway also paid for the compensation policy that covered the injured employee. The exception involved simply excluded liability where the employer also was liable under the compensation laws. Thus, the exclusion simply provided that the employer was not required to pay for two policies to cover the same injury. This would not seem to violate the spirit or intent of the financial responsibility laws.

[2] Appellant makes a most involved argument in reference to these laws. He places considerable reliance on the unpaid judgment provisions of the act—sections 410 to 418.5 of the Vehicle Code. These sections provide that where there is an unpaid judgment for personal injuries, the license of the owner of the vehicle will be suspended unless he files an affidavit stating that he was insured on the date of the accident. Appellant urges that unless Broadway files such an affidavit, including an averment that Vanelli was covered, Broadway must suffer a suspension of its registration privileges. But it will be noted that no judgment has been secured against Broadway. A reading of the sections clearly indicates that an unsatisfied judgment against the person or company whose registration privileges are involved is a condition precedent to suspension of the registration privileges. The case of Continental Casualty Co. v. Phoenix Construction Co., 46 Cal.2d 423, 296 P.2d 801, 57 A.L.R.2d 914, cited by appellant, does not hold to the contrary, because in that case the injured person had an unpaid judgment against both the employer and the negligent employee. Thus, these sections in no way affect the validity of the exclusion here involved.

[3] Appellant next calls attention to Vehicle Code, section 420. That section, among other things, provides that where an employee is driving his employer's automobile with consent, and has an accident, the employer, unless insured, must deposit security sufficient to satisfy the expected judgment. It is argued that unless Broadway was protected by its liability policy, it is required to post the security required by the section. But, obviously, the section has no application where the named insured could not be held liable for the negligence of the driver, and where no judgment has or can be secured against such employer because of the provisions of the workmen's compensation acts.

Appellant refers to several cases in which the courts have referred to the financial responsibility laws as a reason for interpreting a policy as covering a particular risk. Thus, in Oil Base, Inc., v. Transport Indem. Co., 143 Cal.App.2d 453, 299 P.2d 952, it was held that one Scherer, as agent of a company, was covered by a policy which while it did not contain an omnibus clause did contain a reference to coverage under the financial responsibility laws. The court cited and relied upon Continental Casualty Co. v. Phoenix Construction Co., 46 Cal.2d 423, 296 P.2d 801, 57 A.L.R.2d 914. In that case the employer had a policy with Transport Indemnity Company. The policy contained no omnibus clause, but did provide coverage as an insured to any managing employee of the named insured. Mason, a truck driver, was negligent. The court first held that Mason was a managing employee of the named insured and so an insured under the policy. As an alternative ground it also held that Mason was covered because under the financial responsibility laws the employer was required to cover all drivers operating the truck for the employer.

In Wildman v. Government Employees' Ins. Co., 48 Cal.2d 31, 307 P.2d 359, the Supreme Court properly held that an automobile insurance company cannot limit its coverage by excluding coverage when the automobile is used by someone other than the insured with the insured's permission in view of the financial responsibility laws. The court, in this connection, stated (48 Cal.2d at page 39, 307 P.2d at page 364):

> "It appears that section 415 must be made a part of every policy of insurance issued by an insurer since the public policy of this state is to make owners of motor vehicles financially responsible to those injured by them in the operation of such vehicles. Section 402 of the Vehicle Code provides that 'every owner of a motor vehicle is liable and responsible for the death of or injury to person or property resulting from negligence in the operation of such motor vehicle, in the business of such owner or otherwise, by any person using or operating the same with the permission, express or implied, of such owner, and the negligence of such person shall be imputed to the owner for all purposes of civil damages.' We are of the opinion that for an insurer to issue a policy of insurance which does not cover an accident which occurs when a person, other than the insured, is driving with the permission and consent of the insured is a violation of the public policy of this state as set forth in sections 402 and 415 of the Vehicle Code."

[4] Respondent has no quarrel with these cases. They apply only where the employer is liable in a negligence action for the negligence of the employee driving the car. In the instant case the exclusions of the policy present no conflict at all with the financial responsibility laws. That is so because such responsibility statutes do not require, expressly or impliedly, that the employer must have a liability policy covering injuries for which the employer is liable, and only liable, under the workmen's compensation laws.

Section 3600 of the Labor Code provides the conditions under which compensation benefits are payable. The injury to Rollo is included within this section, and, in fact, Rollo has recovered compensation benefits under it. Section 3601 of the Labor Code provides: "Where the conditions of compensation exist, the right to recover such compensation, pursuant to the provisions of this division is, except as provided in section 3706, the exclusive remedy against the employer for the injury or death." Section 415 of the Vehicle Code, a key section of the financial responsibility laws, provides, in part: "Any liability policy issued hereunder need not cover any liability for injury to the assured or any liability of the assured assumed by or imposed upon said assured under any workmen's compensation law nor any liability for damage to property in charge of the assured or the assured's employees or agents."

Thus, both the workmen's compensation law and the financial responsibility law eliminate liability of an employer to an injured employee while acting in the course of his employment other than liability under workmen's compensation statutes. Thus, appellant's position that the exclusions are contrary to the financial responsibility law are untenable.[1] The parties intended to exclude coverage in the situation here presented and such exclusions are not contrary to the financial responsibility law or to the public policy of this state.

The judgment is affirmed.

BRAY and FRED B. WOOD, JJ., concur.

Hearing denied; CARTER, J., dissenting.

159 Cal.App.2d 54

PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Morris Harris GOODMAN, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 6079, 6080.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

March 31, 1958.

Prosecution for grand theft, attempted extortion and burglary. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Clement D. Nye, J., entered judgments of conviction and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that evidence sustained convictions and where defendant entered victim's dwelling with intent to commit felony and while in dwelling stole and carried away property with intent to deprive victim thereof, defendant was guilty of offense of grand theft, a divisible transaction from burglary.

Affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇐1159(2)

On appeal from criminal conviction, test is whether there is substantial evidence to support conclusion of trier of fact, not whether guilt has been established beyond a reasonable doubt.

2. Burglary ⇐41(1)
Extortion ⇐15
Larceny ⇐65

Evidence sustained conviction of burglary, grand theft and attempted extortion. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 487, subd. 1, 459, 524.

3. Burglary ⇐41(1)

Where record showed that entry into dwelling was made on January 27, at about 7:30 p. m., and there was evidence that one of the defendant's associates was armed and that defendant struck victim, evidence supported finding that burglary was of the first degree. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 460.

4. Criminal Law ⇐29

Under statute providing that an act or omission punishable by different provisions of Code may be punished under either of such provisions, question is whether transaction is divisible or indivisible, and if a course of conduct results in more than one offense, each of which can be committed without committing any other, applicability of statute will depend on whether a separate and distinct act can be established as basis of each conviction, but if a single act violates more than one statute and only a single act is charged as basis of multiple convictions then only one conviction can be affirmed, notwithstanding that offenses are not necessarily included offenses. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 654.

5. Extortion ⇐1

"Extortion" is the obtaining of property from another, with his consent, induced by a wrongful use of force or fear, or under a color of official right, and "fear" such as will constitute extortion may be induced by threat to do an unlawful injury to person threatened, to accuse him of any crime, or to expose or to impute to

1. This is the rule of the only other state where the precise question has arisen. In Arceneaux v. London Guarantee & Accident Company, La.App., 87 So.2d 343, the policy exclusions were identical with the instant exclusions. The factual situation was identical with that in the instant case. The court held that the exclusions applied and were not contrary to the public policy or laws of Louisiana.

him any disgrace or crime. West's Ann. Pen.Code, §§ 518, 519, 524.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Extortion" and "Fear".

6. Extortion ⇐4

To constitute extortion, the victim must consent, albeit it is a coerced and unwilling consent, to surrender of his property and wrongful use of force or fear must be the operating or controlling cause compelling victim's consent to surrender the thing to extortionist. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 518, 519, 524.

7. Extortion ⇐1

"Attempted extortion" consists of a specific intent to commit the crime and a direct, ineffectual act toward its commission.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Attempted Extortion".

8. Embezzlement ⇐1
False Pretenses ⇐1
Larceny ⇐1

"Theft" is ordinarily the felonious taking of property of another without his consent with intent to deprive him thereof, and includes larceny, embezzlement, obtaining money by false pretenses and kindred offenses. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 484, 490a.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Theft".

9. Burglary ⇐2

Where defendant entered victim's home with intent to commit a felony, offense of burglary was complete when he entered. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 459, 461.

10. Burglary ⇐2
Extortion ⇐1
Larceny ⇐23

Where evidence showed that defendant entered victim's home with intent to commit a felony, and after entering the same stole and carried away a camera and its accessories with intent to deprive victim thereof, and also attempted to extract money from victim while posing as a police officer and threatening to charge victim with a crime, defendant committed separate and distinct acts rendering him guilty of burglary, grand theft, and attempted extortion, all of which comprised divisible transactions punishable under the various statutes. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 459, 461, 484, 524.

11. Criminal Law ⇐1169(3)

In prosecution for burglary, grand theft and attempted extortion, where testimony showed that defendant had a certain woman associate, action of trial court in admitting a lady's purse which had been found by police in motel room, the key to which was taken from defendant after his arrest, did not constitute prejudicial error in view of defendant's admission that woman had been in room on night on which various offenses were allegedly committed.

12. Criminal Law ⇐386

Where identity of party against whom a telephone conversation is sought to be admitted has been established by some evidence, either direct or circumstantial, conversation may be shown in the same manner, and with like effect, as in conversations between individuals face to face.

13. Criminal Law ⇐386

In prosecution for attempted extortion, testimony of police officer who had been listening in on telephone extension to conversations between defendant and victim was admissible where victim had already testified as to conversations to which officer had listened and officer had testified that defendant's voice was similar to the one he heard on the telephone. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 524.

14. Criminal Law ⇐406(1), 412(1)

Extrajudicial declaration or admission of an accused may be proved against him to show his guilt and such declaration or admission is not hearsay.

15. Criminal Law ⇐412(1)

In prosecution for attempted extortion, testimony of officer, who had listened on telephone extension to conversation between defendant and victim, as to conversation, was not inadmissible as hearsay.

Claude Vibart Worrell, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Norman H. Sokolow and John A. Vander Lans, Deputy Attys. Gen., for respondent.

VALLÉE, Justice.

Appeals in two cases, numbers 6079 and 6080. In number 6079 defendant was charged by information in Count I with grand theft[1] in that he took personal property of Maurice Bailey valued at more than $200, in Count II with attempted extortion[2] in that he attempted by wrongful use of force and fear to obtain $5,000 from Maurice Bailey by posing as a law enforcement officer and without legal justification accusing Bailey of a crime and threatening to arrest him unless $5,000 was given him, and in Count III with burglary[3] in that he entered the apartment occupied by Bailey with the intent to commit theft. It was alleged the offenses were committed on January 27, 1957. It was further alleged that on April 6, 1955 defendant was convicted in the superior court for the county of Los Angeles of violating section 337a of the Penal Code.

In number 6080 defendant in 1955 pleaded guilty to a violation of section 337a, proceedings were suspended, and he was granted probation for three years.

In number 6079 defendant admitted the prior conviction. The cause was tried before a jury. Defendant was found guilty on all counts, and as to Count III the jury found the offense to be burglary of the first degree. On conviction in the present action the order granting probation in the 1955 action for violation of section 337a was revoked and defendant was sentenced to state prison for that offense. In number 6079 judgment was pronounced and defendant sentenced to state prison, the sentences as to Counts I and II to run consecutively, the sentence as to Count III to run concurrently with the sentences as to Counts I and II, and the sentences as to Counts I, II, and III to run consecutively to the sentence in number 6080. Defendant appealed from the judgments and orders denying a new trial in both actions.

The specifications of error in number 6079 are: 1. The evidence is insufficient to support the verdicts. 2. The court erred in admitting a purse and its contents in evidence. 3. The court erred in admitting evidence of a telephone conversation. 4. The court erred in refusing to instruct the jury with respect to the burglary count.

On January 27, 1957 Maurice Bailey, a furniture designer, lived at 968 North La Cienega, Los Angeles. Arminio Lozzi, who worked for Bailey, was in Bailey's home working. Bailey used the lower part of the building as an exhibition place for his work and lived in the upper part. He was working on a model of an office building. About 3 o'clock in the afternoon Ev and Marilyn Jackson, husband and wife, arrived at the house. Lloyd Crane arrived shortly thereafter. Bailey had met the Jacksons through Crane about six weeks earlier.

Shortly after the Jacksons arrived Ev made a phone call, then left for about 2½ hours, returning about 5:30 or 6 p. m. About 7:30 p. m. Bailey was in the hallway when he first noticed that three unknown and uninvited men, one of whom was defendant, were in the house. One of the three unidentified men had a badge in his hand and a gun in a holster on his hip. The third man had a pair of handcuffs in his hand. The man with the badge showed it to Crane and stated he was a policeman. The badge had the word "Patrolman" on it. Defendant told Bailey he was the sergeant in charge and he was there on a marijuana "rap." In the meantime defendant told the other two men to "shake" the apartment down.

1. Penal Code, § 487, subd. 1.

2. Penal Code, § 524.

3. Penal Code, § 459.

Lozzi and Crane were ordered to empty the contents of their wallets, which they did. One of the men told Bailey, Lozzi, and Crane to go into the bedroom. When they entered the bedroom Marilyn was lying upon the bed nude. Bailey, Lozzi, and Crane were each forced to be photographed with Marilyn. Crane at first refused to sit upon the bed with Marilyn and was struck on the jaw by defendant.

After Bailey had been photographed with Marilyn defendant told him to go to the kitchen, that he had a very young girl in there in a very compromising position, and "it was going to really be rough," if he took Bailey in and booked him it would take $50,000 bail to get him out, and it would cost Bailey at least $5,000. Bailey said he did not have that amount of money. Defendant said "How much can you raise tonight?" Bailey said he could not raise anything, that possibly in the morning he could raise part of it. Defendant asked Bailey if he had a checking account; Bailey said he did; defendant asked where the checks were; Bailey told him they were downstairs in the studio. Defendant told Bailey he would have to clear the matter through his superiors; he would have to split, so a small amount would not do any good because he would not get all of it. Defendant and Bailey went downstairs where defendant told him to write five checks for $1,000 each payable to cash. Bailey wrote the checks. He did not have that much money in his checking account. He told defendant he possibly had $700 to $900 in the account and that the checks would be worthless. Defendant asked Bailey if he could raise some money the next day to cover the checks. Bailey said he probably could get part of it. Defendant told him he would give him until 11 o'clock the next morning to raise the money and make the checks good. Defendant told Bailey the two men upstairs were not to be told of the transaction. Bailey handed defendant the five checks and asked him what his name was. Defendant said, "When I call you, I'll—it will be George." Bailey gave defendant the number of his private, unlisted telephone.

Defendant and Bailey went back upstairs. Defendant said to the two unidentified men, "We have got enough. Come on." One of them said, "Well, I'm still looking," to which defendant replied, "Never mind, come on, we have got enough." Defendant, the two unidentified men, and Ev and Marilyn Jackson left the place together. At defendant's direction one of the men took Bailey's motion picture camera, lens, case, and some film, all of a value in excess of $200, with him.

The next day Bailey contacted the police. He returned to his apartment at 5 p. m. accompanied by two police officers. Shortly after his return his private phone rang. He picked up the receiver, as did one of the officers on an extension. Defendant, who was calling, said, "This is George," and asked Bailey where he was at 11 o'clock that morning. Bailey said he had been out all day trying to raise the money; he had raised $3,500; and asked if defendant had his camera. Defendant said when Bailey raised the difference between 3,500 and 5,000 he could get the camera, said he would call back, and hung up. Some time later defendant called Bailey and said, "This is George again." The officer was on the extension. Defendant told Bailey to meet him in five minutes, to walk up to a bowling alley a block away, to walk back to the rear to the telephone booths, to walk into the rear booth, wait until he arrived, and bring the money with him. Bailey went to the bowling alley. An officer had preceded him and had placed defendant under arrest.

One of the officers took a key to room 9 in a motel from defendant's pocket. A few days before January 27 defendant had gone to the motel with a woman, had registered as John and Mary Wayne, and had paid the rent for room 9. Ev and Marilyn Jackson occupied room 9 on the 27th.

[1, 2] The argument with respect to the contention that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdicts is that the testimony of Bailey and Crane is inherently improbable, confusing, and inconsistent; that Bailey's hands are not clean since "he admitted prior contributions to 'Marilyn's' delinquency"; Ev and Marilyn were not produced as witnesses; neither the check book nor the check stubs were produced; no stolen property was introduced in evidence; and no unlawful entry was proved. These were all matters for the consideration of the jury, not this court. The test on review is whether there is substantial evidence to support the conclusion of the trier of fact; it is not whether guilt has been established beyond a reasonable doubt. People v. Daugherty, 40 Cal. 2d 876, 885, 256 P.2d 911; People v. Cahan, 141 Cal.App.2d 891, 897, 297 P.2d 715. Manifestly there was substantial evidence to support the conclusions of the jury with respect to the three offenses charged. People v. Case, 49 Cal.2d 24, 313 P.2d 840; People v. Jones, 25 Cal.App.2d 517, 519–522, 77 P.2d 897; People v. De Nava, 119 Cal.App.2d 82, 83–84, 258 P.2d 1073.

[3] It is argued the entry was before sundown and consequently the burglary was of the second, and not of the first, degree. The point is without merit. The entry was on January 27. Bailey testified it was about 7:30 p. m. when the three men entered the apartment and that it was dark. Further, there was evidence that one of defendant's associates was armed and that defendant struck Crane on the jaw. Every burglary committed in the daytime or nighttime by a person armed with a deadly weapon, or who while in the commission of such burglary assaults any person, is burglary of the first degree. Pen.Code, § 460. The evidence supports the finding that the burglary was of the first degree.

Defendant asserts the three offenses charged constitute a single individual act and that the conviction of one offense only may be sustained. Section 654 of the Penal Code provides:

"An act or omission which is made punishable in different ways by different provisions of this Code may be punished under either of such provisions, but in no case can it be punished under more than one; an acquittal or conviction and sentence under either one bars a prosecution for the same act or omission under any other. * * *"

[4] The rules applicable to the determination of the question are stated in the recent case of People v. Brown, 49 Cal.2d 577, at page 591, 320 P.2d 5, at page 14, in which the court stated:

"Section 654 has been applied not only where there was but one 'act' in the ordinary sense * * * but also where a course of conduct violated more than one statute and the problem was whether it comprised a divisible transaction which could be punished under more than one statute within the meaning of section 654. Where the question is whether a transaction is divisible or indivisible, each case must be resolved on its facts. * * * 'If a course of criminal conduct causes the commission of more than one offense, each of which can be committed without committing any other, the applicability of section 654 will depend upon whether a separate and distinct act can be established as the basis of each conviction, or whether a single act has been committed so that more than one statute has been violated. If only a single act is charged as the basis of the multiple convictions, only one conviction can be affirmed, notwithstanding that the offenses are not necessarily included offenses. * * *

"[49 Cal.2d 593, 320 P.2d at page 14.] [S]ection 654 comes into application where a defendant by one act commits more than one offense."

In People v. Guarino, 132 Cal.App.2d 554, 282 P.2d 538, the defendant was convicted of grand theft and burglary. He had entered a store and therein had taken a large amount of jewelry. It was contended the theft was not a separate offense from the burglary. This court held the point to be without merit, saying (132 Cal. App.2d at page 559, 282 P.2d at page 541):

> "The crime of burglary is complete on the entering of the building with intent to commit a felony, though the intended felony be not committed. Larceny is a separate act and involves the unlawful asportation of the personal property of another, with intent to deprive him thereof; and if a larceny is actually perpetrated after the burglarious entry a second crime is committed."

[5] Extortion is the obtaining of property from another, with his consent, induced by a wrongful use of force or fear, or under color of official right. Pen.Code, § 518. Fear, such as will constitute extortion, may be induced by a threat either to do an unlawful injury to the person of the individual threatened, or to accuse him of any crime, or to expose or to impute to him any disgrace or crime. Pen.Code, § 519. Every person who attempts, by means of any threat, such as is specified in section 519, to extort money or other property from another is guilty of a public offense. Pen.Code, § 524.

[6–8] Extortion and theft are not the same offense. To constitute extortion the victim must consent, albeit it is a coerced and unwilling consent, to surrender of his property; the wrongful use of force or fear must be the operating or controlling cause compelling the victim's consent to surrender the thing to the extortionist. 21 Cal.Jur.2d 595, §§ 4, 8. There are two elements to the crime of attempted extortion—specific intent to commit the crime, and a direct ineffectual act toward its commission. People v. Franquelin, 109 Cal. App.2d 777, 783, 241 P.2d 651. Ordinarily theft is the felonious taking of the property of another without his consent with intent to deprive him thereof. Pen.Code, § 484; People v. Cannon, 77 Cal.App.2d 678, 692, 176 P.2d 409. In this state theft includes larceny, embezzlement, obtaining money by false pretenses and kindred offenses, but the elements of the offenses have not been changed. Pen.Code, §§ 484, 490a; People v. Jones, 36 Cal.2d 373, 376–377, 224 P.2d 353. In the present case the theft was larceny.

[9, 10] The course of conduct shown by the evidence violated more than one statute. Defendant entered Bailey's home with intent to commit a felony. The offense of burglary was complete when he entered. It was punishable under sections 459 and 461 of the Penal Code. After entering Bailey's home defendant feloniously stole and carried away the camera and its accessories with intent to deprive Bailey thereof. This offense of grand theft comprised a divisible transaction punishable under section 487 of the Penal Code. Separately from the burglary and the grand theft, defendant committed the divisible offense of attempted extortion. Defendant did not by one act commit more than one offense. He committed separate and distinct acts and each act was established as the basis of each conviction.

We hold that each offense of which defendant was convicted was separate and distinct from each of the others.

[11] After placing defendant under arrest and taking the key to room 9 of the motel from his pocket, the officers went to the motel and had a conversation with the manager. They then entered room 9 and searched it. They found a lady's purse on the floor, which they took with them when they left. The purse and its contents were admitted in evidence over defendant's objection. He asserts error. He says the motel was a long way from the place where the arrest was made, which it was, and that the search cannot be predicated on the arrest. Assuming, without deciding, that the court erred, we think defendant was not prejudiced and that no miscarriage of justice resulted. Defendant does not say how he was prejudiced. In view of defendant's admission that Marilyn Jackson was in room 9 on January 27 it is not reasonably probable that a result more favorable to him would have been reached in the absence of the error, if there was error. People v. Watson, 46 Cal.2d 818, 836, 299 P.2d 243.

[12–15] The court, over defendant's objection, permitted the officer who listened on the telephone extension in Bailey's home to testify to the conversations between defendant and Bailey. Defendant claims the testimony was hearsay and inadmissible. Bailey testified the telephone conversations to which the officer listened were with defendant. The officer testified defendant's voice was similar to the one he heard on the telephone. When the identity of the party against whom a telephone conversation is sought to be admitted has been established by some evidence, either direct or circumstantial, the conversation may be shown in the same manner, and with like effect, as conversations had between individuals face to face. People v. Lorraine, 28 Cal.App.2d 50, 54, 81 P.2d 1004. The telephone conversations between defendant and Bailey were not hearsay. An extrajudicial declaration or admission of an accused may be proved against him to show his guilt. Such a declaration or admission is not hearsay. 19 Cal.Jur.2d 133, § 397.

After the People rested defendant requested the court to direct a verdict in his favor on the burglary count. The court stated that in its opinion there was sufficient evidence of burglary to allow the matter to go to the jury and declined to give the instruction. Defendant claims error. There was no error. As stated earlier, there was substantial evidence of the commission of burglary. People v. De Nava, 119 Cal.App.2d 82, 258 P.2d 1073.

Defendant does not press the appeal from the judgment rendered on the violation of section 337a of the Penal Code.

The judgments and orders appealed from are affirmed.

SHINN, P. J., and PARKER WOOD, J., concur.

158 Cal.App.2d 804

COUNTY OF LOS ANGELES, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Carroll W. C. LORBEER et al., Defendants.

Carroll W. C. Lorbeer and Adeline Herrick, Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 22639.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

March 28, 1958.

Eminent domain proceeding. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Leon T. David, J., entered an order obligating condemner to pay certain interest on the award, and it appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J., held that a 45-day delay in payment of an award in a condemnation case was not such a substantial interference with owner's property rights as to constitute the taking or damaging of same without just compensation, and therefore, owner was not entitled to interest on damage award for such period of time on theory of constitutional right to just compensation.

Order reversed with directions.

1. Eminent Domain ⇐246(2)

During statutory 30 days afforded a condemner for contemplation of award of damages, and the advisability of paying that amount for the property or of abandoning the project, there is no cognizable right or duty resting upon it, and the award cannot be collected in any manner, nor can the condemner be compelled to take or pay for the property. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1251, 1255a.

2. Eminent Domain ⇐247(2)

An award of damages in a condemnation proceeding does not draw interest from date of judgment, but could draw interest from the date marking lapse of 30 days from date of judgment afforded the condemner by statute, for contemplation of award and advisability of paying that amount for the property or of abandoning the project. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1251, 1255a, 1264.7.

3. Eminent Domain ⇐90

Owner of condemned property is not entitled to compensation for an interference with his property rights which is not substantial in its nature.

4. Eminent Domain ⇐247(2)

A 45-day delay in payment of an award in a condemnation case was not such a substantial interference with owner's property rights as to constitute the taking or damaging of same without just compensation, and therefore, owner was not entitled to interest on damage award for such period of time on theory of constitutional right to just compensation. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1251, 1255a, 1264.7.

5. Appeal and Error ⇐878(4)

A respondent may assert error only in aid of affirmance.

Clyde E. Holley and Milnor E. Gleaves, Los Angeles, for appellants.

Harold W. Kennedy, County Counsel, Richard A. Del Guercio and A. R. Early, Deputy County Counsel, Los Angeles, for respondent.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Walter S. Rountree, Asst. Atty. Gen., Lester Ziffren and Henry K. Workman, Deputy Attys. Gen., amicus curiae on behalf of respondent.

ASHBURN, Justice.

Appellants were awarded $97,700 as compensation for taking their property in this eminent domain proceeding. The interlocutory judgment was entered on January 11, 1957, and payment of the award was made 45 days later, without interest. Appellants claim they were and are entitled to interest at seven per cent from the entry of the judgment to the date of payment, a sum of $843.30. A motion was made to that end; the plaintiff County opposed it, taking the position that appellants were entitled to interest for only the last 15 days of the period of delay in making payment. The trial judge ruled with plaintiff, holding that it is liable for no interest for the first 30 days after entry of the interlocutory but is obligated to pay interest for the succeeding 15 days, and the county was ordered to pay same in the sum of $281.10. The parties have raised no objection to the procedure adopted in the lower court and there is no occasion to inquire into its sufficiency.

The defendant owners have appealed from said order, arguing that error inheres in that portion determining that "plaintiff is not liable for the payment of any interest on said interlocutory judgment in condemnation for the first thirty days after the entry thereof." Counsel for both sides agree that the propriety of that ruling presents the only question for review.

Appellants argue that an interlocutory decree of condemnation has all the qualities of an ordinary money judgment and hence interest begins to run at once, regardless of any statutory or other stay of execution. Respondent takes the position that an award in eminent domain is not an adjudication which is presently enforceable, but is a conditional pronouncement which gives the condemner 30 days within which to decide whether the price set by the court is too high and whether it will pay that price or abandon the proceeding; that until that decision has been made or the time therefor has elapsed, there is no money due the landowner, no enforceable obligation resting upon the condemner and no withholding of money from the defendant, hence no legal basis for an award of interest. Respondent concedes that where, as here, there has been no abandonment and no payment of the damages within 30 days, an obligation becomes fixed and carries interest thenceforth.

This case is not complicated by any question arising out of the taking of possession by the condemner or by any showing that defendants' continued possession yielded any rents or profits, or by any delay due to an appeal or by any affidavit for extension of time for payment pursuant to § 1251,

Code of Civil Procedure.[1] An award was made; it was not paid for 45 days. Does it draw interest from date of judgment or from the date marking the lapse of 30 days after judgment? That is the question propounded by both sides. However, this statement of the problem involves an oversight concerning the time allowed the condemner for payment or abandonment, as will appear from the following discussion.

The immediately pertinent sections of the code contain the following provisions: Sec. 1251. "The plaintiff must, within thirty days after final judgment, pay the sum of money assessed. * * *" Sec. 1255a. "Plaintiff may abandon the proceedings at any time after filing the complaint and before the expiration of thirty days after final judgment, * * *." Sec. 1264.7. "The term 'judgment' as used in this title means the judgment determining the right to condemn and fixing the amount of compensation to be paid by the plaintiff. The term 'final judgment' as used in this title means such judgment when all possibility of direct attack thereon by way of appeal, motion for a new trial, or motion to vacate the judgment has been exhausted." It is now established that the last quoted section refers to the interlocutory decree, and that: "The term 'final judgment' as used in section 1255a of the Code of Civil Procedure means a judgment when all possibility of direct attack thereon by way of (1) appeal, (2) motion for a new trial, or (3) motion to vacate the judgment, has been exhausted. (Code Civ.Proc. § 1264.7.)" Southern Public Utility District v. Silva, 47 Cal.2d 163, 165, 301 P.2d 841, 842. It was also held in that case that the filing of an affidavit under § 1251 declaring the issuance of bonds to be necessary to provide money for payment of the award, although it extends the time for payment to include a full year, does not affect the limitation upon the right to abandon, which is 30 days after final judgment as defined in § 1264.7; that an attempted abandonment made more than 30 days after the lapse of time to review the judgment was abortive because too late. Normally the condemner has 60 days (Rule 2(a) of Rules on Appeal) plus 30 days prescribed by § 1251, within which to pay the award, that period being enlarged in case of intervention of a motion for new trial (Rule 3). In the absence of an appeal or a bond affidavit under § 1251, the time for payment and that for abandonment are coincident. If an abandonment is not made within the period prescribed, payment of the award becomes immediately due (absent appeal or the like) and the judgment takes on all the qualities of an ordinary money judgment; the obligation to take the property and to pay the adjudged value has become fixed and is no longer subject to any condition. The condemner's "obligation to pay is fixed and is not subject to diminution or modification by the lapse of time." Southern Public Utility District v. Silva, supra, 47 Cal.2d at page 166, 301 P.2d at page 843. Prior to the expiration of 30 days computed according to § 1264.7 there is no withholding of money legally due to the owners, but after that time there is a retention which starts interest to running under generally recognized legal principles. In the instant case the time for appeal had not expired before payment and hence interest had not started to accrue upon the award.

[1] While the general rule seems to be that a condemnation award draws interest, either as part of just compensation or as

1. Code Civ.Proc. § 1251: "* * * In case the plaintiff is the State of California, or is a public corporation, and it appears by affidavit that bonds of said State or of any agency thereof, or of said public corporation must be issued and sold in order to provide the money necessary to pay the sum assessed, then such sum may be paid at any time within one year from the date of such judgment; provided further, that if the sale of any such bonds cannot be had by reason of litigation affecting the validity thereof, then the time during which such litigation is pending shall not be considered a part of the one year's time in which such payment must be made."

All section references point to the Code of Civil Procedure.

an incident to withholding of the damages after their adjudication (see, Annotation in 36 A.L.R.2d at page 413 et seq.), the California law has not evolved into a dogmatic rule that interest immediately follows the making of the award. During the 30 days afforded the condemner (§§ 1251 and 1255a) for contemplation of the award and the advisability of paying that amount for the property or of abandoning the project, there is no cognizable right or duty resting upon it; the award cannot be collected in any manner, nor can the plaintiff be compelled to take or pay for the property.

The Supreme Court of the United States in Danforth v. United States, 308 U.S. 271, 60 S.Ct. 231, 84 L.Ed. 240, considered the question of interest upon damages fixed in an eminent domain proceeding which was controlled by a Federal statute. At page 286 of 308 U.S., at page 237 of 60 S. Ct. it said: "Where the condemnation is free from statutory direction, as here, there would be no interest before the taking." And at page 284 of 308 U.S., at page 236 of 60 S.Ct.: "No interest is due upon the award. Until taking, the condemnor may discontinue or abandon his effort. The determination of the award is an offer subject to acceptance by the condemnor and thus gives to the user of the sovereign power of eminent domain an opportunity to determine whether the valuations leave the cost of completion within his resources. Condemnation is a means by which the sovereign may find out what any piece of property will cost. 'The owner is protected by the rule that title does not pass until compensation has been ascertained and paid, * * *.'"

The same concept is expressed in City of Los Angeles v. Aitken, 32 Cal.App.2d 524, 90 P.2d 377, 94 P.2d 1045. While the facts of that case occurred prior to enactment of § 1264.7 and the court did not discuss that section, the reasoning upon the fundamental principles is not affected thereby; if the 30 days prescribed by § 1264.7 is substituted for 30 days after entry of interlocutory (which was deemed the period for payment or abandonment prior to enactment of § 1264.7), the Aitken case, supra, is fully applicable to current condemnation; nor was this case disapproved in Southern Public Utility District v. Silva, supra, 47 Cal.2d 163, 165, 301 P.2d 841, except as to its statement that the 30-day period runs from date of entry of interlocutory. The question under consideration was stated in Aitken, supra, 32 Cal.App.2d at page 526, 90 P.2d at page 378, as follows: "The sole question to be decided upon this appeal is whether or not interest at the legal rate should be allowed upon the compensation fixed in an interloctuory decree of condemnation during the pendency of an appeal from said decree, by the condemnor, where the condemnee, during such time, has remained in possession." At page 528 of 32 Cal.App.2d at page 379 of 90 P.2d City of Los Angeles v. Deacon, 3 Cal.2d 641, 46 P.2d 165, was quoted and discussed, the court saying: "'When an interlocutory decree of condemnation is entered, the condemnor, in the absence of an appeal by the condemnee, knows how much the improvement will cost. If it decides not to abandon, but decides to appeal, it may do so. If the appeal by the condemnor is unsuccessful, the condemnor has lost its right to abandon, and must pay. This rule is fair and just to all concerned.' From this it must necessarily follow that although the appeal had the effect of staying the execution, nevertheless when the time limitation mentioned in section 1255a expired, the judgment became a direct and fixed obligation, but subject to modification or reversal on appeal, as any other action. It then had the same force and effect as any other judgment for the payment of money, and the general rule with respect to the payment of interest thereon is applicable." It is further said in that opinion: "The only matter in which defendants were interested was the recovery of the amount of the judgment. Their right to enforce this judgment was stayed by the appeal, just as, in any ordinary damage action, execution may be stayed upon appeal. In the eyes of the law, the money was due when the thirty-day period provided in section 1255a, supra, expired. The mere fact that respondents were deprived of the right, during appeal, to enforce such judgment, cannot affect its legal implications and consequences, so far as interest is concerned. The plaintiffs elected to waive the right to abandon, and decided to rely upon appeal. By thus failing to abandon, within the statutory time, they in effect, conclusively bound themselves to pay the judgment in the event that no reversible error was found on appeal." 32 Cal.App.2d at page 529, 90 P.2d at page 380. "We therefore conclude that an interlocutory judgment in condemnation, where there has been no abandonment of the proceedings by the condemnor, is not merely an adjudication of a conditional liability, but becomes a 'judgment' within the meaning of section 22, article XX, of the Constitution, and that pending an appeal by the condemnor, such judgment bears interest at the legal rate from the expiration of thirty days after its entry until paid. As we have stated, this is the precise situation which is found in any ordinary action for the recovery of a money judgment, and we see no valid reason why interest upon the judgment here should not be recovered as it is recovered in other cases." 32 Cal.App. 2d at page 531, 90 P.2d at page 381. "Under the laws and Constitution of this state respondents were entitled to interest upon their judgment, at the legal rate, from and after the expiration of the thirty days from the entry thereof, as a portion of the just compensation for the taking. Such interest could, however, be offset by proof that the possession, pending appeal, was profitable to respondents." 32 Cal.App.2d at pages 534–535, 90 P.2d at page 382.

Colusa & H. R. Co. v. Superior Court, 31 Cal.App. 746, 750, 161 P. 1011, 1013: "Moreover, it is not proper to say that the judgment under consideration is one directing the payment of money. It is rather an adjudication that upon payment of a certain sum plaintiff may acquire the property. It did not vest the title to the money in defendant nor the real property in plaintiff. It is rather a conditional award to plaintiff upon the payment of a certain price for the land. It cannot be fairly construed as creating or evidencing a present and unqualified obligation to pay any sum of money. When said judgment was rendered, plaintiff had the right to decline to take the land at the price fixed. No doubt, the payment was purposely made contingent in view of the further proceedings that were open to the parties. Thus it is provided in section 1255a that: 'Plaintiff may abandon the proceedings at any time after filing the complaint and before the expiration of thirty days after final judgment, by serving on defendant and filing in court a written notice of such abandonment.' It is therefore plain that plaintiff was not 'required to perform the directions of the judgment' at the time it was rendered. It could not, therefore, be enforced by a writ of execution, and it has been held that said section 942 applies only to a judgment which directs the payment of a specific amount of money and which can be directly enforced by a writ of execution."

Cases which seem to hold that an interlocutory decree in eminent domain is on an exact parity with an ordinary money judgment are not actually opposed to the views just quoted (with the possible exception of People v. Superior Court, 145 Cal.App. 2d 683, 303 P.2d 628, later discussed herein), for the specific question was not before the court and was not under discussion.

Vallejo & N. R. Co. v. Reed Orchard Co., 177 Cal. 249, 170 P. 426, is an outstanding example. In that instance the amount of the award was paid into court within 30 days, the court required deposit of an additional $25,000 to cover further damages and costs and made an order authorizing plaintiff to take possession. Defendant refused the award as inadequate and appealed from the judgment. After it was affirmed defendant sought an order for payment to it of the amount deposited, together with interest from the date of the order for possession; the court denied the claim for interest and defendant appealed from that order. At page 251 of 177 Cal., at page 427 of 170 P. the court said: "[T]he sole question thus squarely presented is whether a condemnor who, after judgment of condemnation and after paying into court for the landowner the full amount of the compensation awarded, and who upon an order of court receives possession of the property condemned, must thereafter pay interest on the money so paid pending an unsuccessful appeal from the judgment prosecuted by the landowner who refuses to accept the award." It was in this connection that the opinion used the following language: "In such proceedings the award constitutes a judgment in favor of defendant and against the plaintiff for the amount thereof, payment of which, unless the proceeding within the time be abandoned by plaintiff as provided in section 1255a, of the Code of Civil Procedure, shall be made within thirty days after final judgment (section 1251 Code Civ.Proc.), and in the absence of such payment of the money awarded or deposit thereof made in court, defendant may have execution to enforce the judgment as in civil cases (section 1252 Code Civ.Proc.). In this respect the rights of defendant are substantially identical with those of a plaintiff recovering a money judgment against a defendant in a civil action. In the instant case the money was paid into court for the benefit of defendant as a judgment creditor, pursuant to the provisions of section 1254 of the Code of Civil Procedure. A deposit so made for the benefit of one entitled thereto pursuant to a statute is at least equivalent to a tender thereof. Lewis on Eminent Domain, 579, and cases cited. By section 1504 of the Civil Code, the Legislature has declared that: 'An offer of payment * * * duly made * * * stops the running of interest on the obligation, and has the same effect upon all its incidents as a performance thereof.' The deposit made constituted a tender of payment, acceptance of which, however, under the provisions of section 1254, did not bar an appeal based upon the ground of inadequacy of compensation. In the absence of some special statute applicable to the case, the effect of the tender was * * * to 'stop the running of interest on the obligation,' pending the unsuccessful appeal." 177 Cal. at pages 251–252, 170 P. at page 426. The ultimate holding is stated in syllabus 2: "The contention that sections 1249 and 1254 of the Code of Civil Procedure provide a special rule under which a defendant in condemnation proceedings may refuse to accept the tender of an award made by deposit in court for his benefit, appeal from the judgment, and, upon affirmance thereof, insist upon the payment of interest on the amount pending such appeal, is without merit." 177 Cal. at page 249, 170 P. at page 606. The observation of City of Pasadena v. Stimson, 91 Cal. 238, 250, 27 P. 604, 606, is immediately pertinent: "[I]t is a familiar rule that expressions used in judicial opinions are always to be construed and limited by reference to the matters under consideration, and that they cannot be safely applied in their largest and most universal sense to dissimilar cases." The Vallejo decision is in keeping with the general rule stated in 36 A.L.R.2d at page 421: "Thus, it has been held that interest will be denied where the delay in payment of the award is due to some fault of the owner."

Cases involving possession under order of court are not controlling. Metropolitan Water Dist. of Southern California v. Adams, 16 Cal.2d 676, 107 P.2d 618, is such an one. It is there held that interest is not recoverable for mere delay in payment of compensation (16 Cal.2d at pages 678–679, 107 P.2d at pages 619–620), but that it does accrue from date of possession (16 Cal.2d at pages 680–682, 107 P.2d at pages 620–621) as part of the owner's just compensation.

Heimann v. City of Los Angeles, 30 Cal. 2d 746, 185 P.2d 597. An inverse condemnation case in which it was claimed that injury to the property was inflicted prior to any suit. Held that, as costs are part of just compensation (30 Cal.2d at page 752, 185 P.2d at page 600), interest is allowable upon the same theory (30 Cal.2d at page 758, 185 P.2d at page 604), and the right is not dependent upon any statute (30 Cal.2d at pages 758–759, 185 P.2d at pages 604–605), but that the interest starts with the date of infliction of injury and not merely from the time of entry of judgment. The value of this case at bar is impaired by the fact that it was not a condemnation action and its discussion related to interest as a part of the compensation for actual possession or its equivalent, the infliction of substantial physical injury.[2]

[2] As above indicated we consider that the authorities support the conclusion that interest begins to run from the date when the right to abandon expires and the obligation to take becomes absolute. Formerly it was thought that the right to abandon expired and hence the right to receive interest accrued 30 days after entry of interlocutory (City of Los Angeles v. Deacon, 3 Cal.2d 641, 648, 46 P.2d 165, and City of Los Angeles v. Aitken, supra, 32 Cal.App.2d 524, 528, 90 P.2d 377), but these cases were disapproved in that one respect by Southern Public Utility District v. Silva, supra, 47 Cal.2d 163, 165, 301 P. 2d 841, which establishes that § 1264.7 governs the computation of the 30-day period.

The ruling in People v. Superior Court, supra, 145 Cal.App.2d 683, 303 P.2d 628, is not opposed to these views, although some of its language is not consistent therewith.[3] In that case the question was whether the owner was entitled to collect interest during the pendency of an appeal taken by the condemner and it was answered in the affirmative. The date for starting of interest is not disclosed by the opinion, doubtless due to the fact that there was no dispute between the parties in that respect. The original record shows that both parties took the position that interest, if any, dated from 30 days after entry of interlocutory judgment. There was no occasion for the court to discuss that point. It held that interest does accrue during appeal and did not attempt to fix the starting date. The point which we must decide, and the only one we dispose of, is that 45 days after the entry of the interlocutory falls short of the end of the period afforded the condemner for cogitation and therefore interest had not started to run at the time of payment of the award in the case before us.

The foregoing discussion seems to dispose of this case except for the constitutional argument that the right to just compensation includes within it the recovery of interest upon the award during any delay in payment. Logically, the contention could go back to the date of commencement of the action, as that is the date for fixing the damages in the ordinary case (§ 1249). But the rules relating to eminent domain are not governed by pure logic, unaffected by practical considerations. "Not every depreciation in the value of the property not taken can be made the basis of an award of damages." People v. Ricciardi, 23 Cal.2d 390, 395, 144 P.2d 799, 802, "On the other hand, the construction of the public improvement may involve many non-compensable factors. Generally it has been said: 'The damage for which compensation is to be made is a

2. Other cases holding that taking possession prior to trial gives right to interest beginning with that event are: Los Angeles County Flood Control Dist. v. Hansen, 48 Cal.App.2d 314, 317, 119 P. 2d 734, and City of San Rafael v. Wood, 144 Cal.App.2d 604, 607, 301 P.2d 421.

3. On page 687, of 145 Cal.App.2d, on page 630 of 303 P.2d appears this statement: "There is no doubt that petitioner is correct in its contention that the time within which it might pay the judgment did not expire until thirty days after the filing of the remittitur affirming the judgment, and that it is also correct in its contention that it might abandon the proceeding at any time prior to the expiration of thirty days from the filing of the remittitur." The citation of Southern Public Utility District v. Silva, supra, in support of that statement seems to be an inadvertence for the case holds the contrary.

damage to the property itself, and does not include a mere infringement of the owner's personal pleasure or enjoyment. Merely rendering private property less desirable for certain purposes, or even causing personal annoyance or discomfort in its use, will not constitute the damage contemplated by the constitution * * *.'" Heimann v. City of Los Angeles, supra, 30 Cal. 2d 746, 756, 185 P.2d 597, 603.

Necessary attorney fees seem to be as clearly a part of just compensation as the relatively insignificant taxable court costs which must be awarded the owner as part of his compensation. See, Heimann v. City of Los Angeles, supra, 30 Cal.2d at page 750, 185 P.2d at page 599. But the holdings are to the contrary. Prior to enactment of § 1255a in 1911 the property owner was remediless in case of abandonment; he could recover neither his attorney fee nor the expenses of preparation for trial other than statutory costs. (17 So.Cal.Law Rev. 407.) Under the present section attorney fees and expenses of preparing for trial are recoverable in case of abandonment less than 40 days prior to date set for trial, but not otherwise. Although a condemnation suit may not be brought to trial for eight or ten months and the value of the property may have increased substantially during that period, the statute requires it to be valued as of the date of the issuance of summons. The opinion in People v. Superior Court, supra, 145 Cal.App.2d 683, 691, 303 P.2d 628, 633, contains these pertinent observations: "While the entry of the judgment did not, in and of itself, operate to vest title in petitioner or give it the right to immediate entry, it effectually took from the Bank many elements which gave value to the land. After the entry of the judgment the Bank could not rent or sell the land except subject to the right of petitioner to take it at will; it could not improve it without in effect dedicating the improvement made to petitioner. The result is that payment being delayed, the Bank had neither use of the money to which it was entitled nor full use of the property which petitioner, under the judgment, had the right to take." Yet it was held in Los Angeles v. Gager, 10 Cal.App. 378, 102 P. 17, that no interest is recoverable for the delays prior to judgment and that the statute (§ 1249) is not rendered unconstitutional by that fact. See, also, City of Los Angeles v. Tower, 90 Cal. App.2d 869, 872–874, 204 P.2d 395, as to the constitutionality of said statute. If it is lawful to withhold interest for ten months of delay in reaching trial, even upon a rising real estate market, it would seem that a delay for 90 (or perhaps 120) days after judgment in making payment would not be a withholding of substantial compensation because of denial of interest on the award; that it would constitute one of the "many non-compensable factors" mentioned in the Heimann case, supra.

Another example of the same sort is found in the application of § 1255a to specific cases. It provides that upon abandonment the defendants may recover their costs and disbursements, which shall include all necessary expenses incurred in preparing for trial and reasonable attorney fees, which fees must be fixed by the court. The amount allowed by the judge, based upon the opinion of himself and others, may be only a fraction of what defendant actually and in good faith paid or agreed to pay his lawyer. But the commencement and abandonment of the condemnation leaves him out of pocket to the extent of one-half or one-third of what he paid his attorney and he is remediless in that regard.

Again, the "costs and disbursements shall not include expenses incurred in preparing for trial where the said action is dismissed forty days prior to the time set for the trial of the said action." Though the case be one involving large holdings and intricate valuation, the owner must do all his preparation within the last 40 days before trial or he loses part or all of those expenses in case of an abandonment made 40 days before the trial date. In this he is remediless, as in the other instances above cited. If the case does not go to judgment or formal abandonment but is dismissed under § 583 for want of prosecution, no attorney fees or expenses (other than formal costs) are recoverable. City of Bell v. American States Water Service Co., 10 Cal.App.2d 604, 607, 52 P.2d 503.

[3] The justification for these rulings, so far as explained, is that they are procedural (City of Los Angeles v. Tower, supra, 90 Cal.App.2d 869, 873–874, 204 P. 2d 395; County of Los Angeles v. Hoe, 138 Cal.App.2d 74, 80, 291 P.2d 98; City of Pasadena v. Porter, 201 Cal. 381, 390, 257 P. 526, 53 A.L.R. 679; California Southern R. Co. v. Kimball, 61 Cal. 90, 91), but they seem to flow from the more fundamental principle that the owner is not entitled to compensation for an interference with his property rights which is not substantial in its nature (cf. City of Los Angeles v. Pomeroy, 124 Cal. 597, 644, 57 P. 585).

[4] We apprehend that, as these lesser burdens inflicted upon the landowner incident to an eminent domain proceeding fall short of a cognizable taking, a delay of 45 days in paying a condemnation award falls within the same category. We conclude that the 45-day delay in payment of the award here under consideration was not such a substantial interference with the property rights as to constitute the taking or damaging of same.

[5] Although it appears to us that appellants were entitled to no interest whatever upon the instant award, respondent's brief concedes a right thereto for the last 15 days of the delay and seeks affirmance of the order under appeal. It was also conceded by respondent's counsel upon oral argument that the order should be affirmed. Of course, a respondent may assert error only in aid of affirmance. City of Glendale v. Crescenta, etc., Water Co., 135 Cal.App.2d 784, 798, 288 P.2d 105. The attorney general, appearing as amicus curiae, argues that appellants are entitled to nothing; but he has no status in this litigation except that of friend of the court. We acknowledge valuable assistance afforded us by his brief herein, but he has no rights which are or can be invaded by the order in question. In the circumstances I would affirm the lower court's order.

Both of my associates, however, insist that the order must be reversed. Their reasons are stated in the concurring opinion of Mr. Presiding Justice FOX. Therefore, the order is reversed with directions to enter an order denying interest in its entirety.

FOX, Presiding Justice.

I fully concur in Mr. Justice ASHBURN'S reasoning and conclusion that under the law and the facts in this case appellants are not entitled to any interest. The trial court's order allowing interest on the award for 15 days (amounting to $281.10) is obviously wrong. Therefore it ought not be affirmed but should be reversed so that a proper order may be entered. It is neither good public policy nor proper administration of justice to affirm an order that misapplies the law because it has been misconceived by both counsel and the trial court. Where the prevailing party, through an erroneous interpretation of the law, seeks affirmance of an order which places a greater burden upon him than he is legally required to bear, the court should intervene of its own accord. It is the duty of the court to determine where justice lies under the law and the facts. This objective may be achieved in the instant case only by reversing the order herein and directing the entry of a new order denying interest in its entirety. Otherwise, appellants would receive from the public treasury $281.10 to which they are not entitled under the law.

KINCAID, Justice pro tem., concurs.

159 Cal.App.2d 114

The PASTIME CAFE, Inc., et al., Petitioner and Appellant,

v.

DEPARTMENT OF ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGE CONTROL, State of California, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 22812.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

April 3, 1958.

Proceeding on petition for writ of mandate to review decision of Alcoholic Beverage Control Appeals Board which affirmed the decision and order of Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control suspending liquor license for violation of statute forbidding sale of alcoholic beverages to a minor. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Bayard Rhone, J., entered judgment of dismissal and licensee appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, P. J., held that birth certificate was not documentary evidence of majority and identity within meaning of statute providing that in any proceeding for violation of statute respecting sale of liquor to minors proof that licensee or his agent demanded and received bona fide documentary evidence of age is a defense.

Affirmed.

Intoxicating Liquors ⇐108(1)

Birth certificate is not bona fide documentary evidence of majority and identity within meaning of statute providing that in any proceeding for violation of statute respecting sale of alcoholic beverages to minor proof that licensee or his agent demanded and received bona fide documentary evidence of age and identity is a defense. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 25658(a, b), 25660.

Berk & Bise, Los Angeles, and Edward J. Skelly, North Hollywood, for appellants.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Edward M. Belasco, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

FOX, Presiding Justice.

An accusation was filed with respondent charging appellant, as the holder of a general on-sale liquor license, with violations of subdivisions (a) and (b) of section 25658, Business and Professions Code, in that it did sell an alcoholic beverage to a minor 19 years of age and permitted said minor to consume the same upon the licensed premises. A hearing officer found both charges to be true and also found that appellant did not establish a defense under the provisions of section 25660[1] of the Business and Professions Code. The officer therefore recommended that the license be suspended for 15 days. The department adopted his decision and accordingly suspended the license. Appellant thereupon appealed to the Alcoholic Beverage Control Appeals Board, which affirmed the decision and order of the department.

Appellant then petitioned the superior court for a writ of mandate. Respondent's demurrer to appellant's amended petition was sustained without leave to amend. A judgment of dismissal followed, from which appellant licensee has appealed.

The evidence shows that Margaret Lochhead, a young woman 19 years of age, entered appellant's premises on March 7, 1956,

1. Section 25660, Business and Professions Code, reads as follows:

"In any criminal prosecution or proceeding for the suspension or revocation of any license based upon violation of Section 25658, proof that the defendant licensee, or his agent or employee, demanded and was shown, immediately prior to furnishing any alcoholic beverage to a person under 21 years of age, bona fide documentary evidence of majority and identity of the person issued by a federal, state, county, or municipal government, or subdivision or agency thereof, including, but not limited to, a motor vehicle operator's license, a registration certificate issued under the Federal Selective Service Act, or an identification card issued to a member of the armed forces, is a defense to the prosecution or proceeding for the suspension or revocation of any license."

with her escort and occupied a booth with two other couples. When orders for drinks were being taken appellant's waitress asked Miss Lochhead for identification. She handed the waitress a birth certificate issued by the Health Department of Canton, Ohio, which was, however, the birth certificate of her sister, Roberta Janet, who was born on September 30, 1934. The waitress looked at the document, handed it back to Margaret, and took her order for a Tom Collins, which was later served and partially consumed by Margaret.

The only issue here is whether appellant established a defense under the provisions of section 25660, Business and Professions Code (quoted in the footnote)—i. e., was appellant's waitress shown "bona fide documentary evidence of majority and identity" of Margaret?

The Alcoholic Beverage Control Appeals Board, in affirming the decision of the department that a defense under section 25660 was not established, took the position that the birth certificate was not evidence of identity. We think the position of the department and appeals board is sound and that the trial court properly sustained, without leave to amend, the respondent's demurrer to appellants' amended petition.

Section 25660 demands documentary evidence of majority and identity which is intrinsically bona fide (5501 Hollywood, Inc. v. Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control, 155 Cal.App 2d 748 318 P.2d 820) and the mere production of a birth certificate does not establish a defense. The only question here involved is identity. The purpose of requiring documentary evidence as proof thereof is that the licensee or his agent may, by comparing the picture, description, or signature appearing upon such documents with the appearance or handwriting of the person presenting them, have a reasonable basis for concluding that the person in question is the individual depicted in the documents, and has reached his majority as indicated by the information therein. If the document presented does not contain sufficient information to enable the licensee or his agent reasonably to conclude that the holder is the person described therein, it does not meet the requirements of this section. A birth certificate basically contains genealogical data. The descriptive information which appears therein, such as the sex, height, weight, color of eyes and hair of the newborn infant, does not provide sufficient data to enable a licensee 18 or 20 years later to identify the holder of such a certificate as the person described therein. Nor does a birth certificate contain a signature which may be compared with the handwriting of the holder. It is thus apparent that a birth certificate alone does not contain information sufficient to establish the "identity" required by section 25660.

The judgment is affirmed.

ASHBURN and HERNDON, JJ., concur.

158 Cal.App.2d 795

Laura FAVA, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

John C. PFAHNL, Elizabeth G. Pfahnl, et al., Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 17402.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

March 28, 1958.

Action for injuries sustained in an automobile collision. From a judgment of the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Edward Molkenbuhr, J., in favor of defendants, the plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, McMurray, J. pro tem, held, inter alia, that in action for injuries to wife in husband's automobile which, in effort to avoid collision with defendant's preceding automobile which had made an effort to enter husband's lane of traffic on multi-lane highway, swerved across two lanes to the right and landed on shoulder of highway, evidence including showing that defendant in addition to looking in his rear vision mirror looked to his right rear window before commencing his lane changing movement, that only the right front wheel and fender ever impinged upon husband's lane of traffic, that defendant did immediately pull back into his lane, and that defendant did not slacken his speed, was sufficient for jury on issue of defendant's negligence, and also that the evidence was sufficient for jury on issue of husband's contributory negligence which was imputable to wife.

Affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐930(1)

On plaintiff's appeal from judgment for defendant pursuant to jury verdict, appellate court must view the evidence with all intendments in favor of defendant.

2. Appeal and Error ⇐930(1), 1001(1)

Where appellant urges that evidence is insufficient to justify verdict, reviewing court must review the evidence by resolving all conflicts in favor of prevailing party at trial and must indulge all legitimate and reasonable inferences to support the verdict, but if verdict is not supported by substantial evidence the judgment must be reversed.

3. Evidence ⇐265(2)

The fact that at scene of automobile accident defendant assumed blame for the accident, was not conclusive upon him and at trial such admission might be explained away or contradicted, and it was for jury to judge effect and value of such admission.

4. Automobiles ⇐245(15)

In action for injuries to wife in husband's automobile which, in effort to avoid collision with defendant's preceding automobile which had made an effort to enter husband's lane of traffic on multi-lane highway, swerved across two lanes to the right and landed on shoulder of highway, evidence including showing that defendant in addition to looking in his rear vision mirror looked to his right rear window before commencing his lane changing movement, that only the right front wheel and fender ever impinged upon husband's lane of traffic, that defendant immediately pulled back into his lane and that defendant did not slacken his speed, was sufficient for jury on issue of defendant's negligence.

5. Automobiles ⇐201(1)

Where there is testimony that one negligently failed to ascertain whether an overtaking vehicle was in the blank area of vision present in many automobiles, nevertheless, a threatened lane change, which only slightly impinged on overtaking vehicle's traffic lane and was a mere momentary swerve unaccompanied by deceleration might, in absence of impact, be found to lack element of proximate cause essential to imposing liability for negligence.

6. Automobiles ⇐245(81)
Negligence ⇐136(30)

In action for injuries to wife in husband's automobile which, in effort to avoid collision with defendant's preceding automobile, swerved to the right across two lanes of highway and landed on shoulder of highway, evidence including showing that defendant had not slackened his speed and that distances between the two automobiles remained roughly relative to each other at all times, was sufficient for jury on issue of husband's contributory negligence which could be imputed to the wife.

7. Automobiles ⇐246(58)

In action for injuries to wife in husband's automobile which, in effort to avoid collision with defendant's preceding automobile, turned across two highway lanes and landed on shoulder of highway, evidence warranted instructions on contributory negligence of husband.

8. Appeal and Error ⇐1066
Trial ⇐252(8)

In action for injuries to wife in husband's automobile which, in effort to avoid collision with defendant's preceding automobile, turned to the right and landed on shoulder of highway, wherein there was no evidence of wife's negligence, instruction that jury might consider whether wife was contributorily negligent should not have been given, but its giving was not prejudicial to the wife under the circumstances.

9. Trial ⇐191(6), 296(4)

An instruction on contributory negligence was not erroneous as assuming such negligence, where portion of instruction complained of was more or less introductory and required a precise concentration to construe it as prejudicial and, read in conjunction with other proper instructions given, no error appeared.

10. Trial ⇐217

Instructions dealing with jury's duty to disregard rulings on objections and evidence rejected by court and a general instruction as to status of statements of counsel, might well have been given, but, in view of numerous instructions which were given as to jury's duties and place and function of evidence, no error was committed in not giving them.

11. Trial ⇐252(7)

Where there was no mention of unavoidable accident in trial of case, failure to instruct on subject of unavoidable accident was not error especially where such instruction would have been of questionable validity had it been given.

12. Evidence ⇐558(4)

Trial court did not err in allegedly permitting improper and irrelevant cross-examination of a witness on plaintiff's behalf, where cross-examination though thorough was relevant, in that it dealt with a physician's direct testimony that plaintiff's physical complaints were result of accident and with items of physician's bill for services.

Jack H. Werchick, San Francisco, for appellant.

Bronson, Bronson & McKinnon, San Francisco, B. E. Atkisson, San Francisco, Daren T. Johnson, Los Angeles, for respondent.

McMURRAY, Justice pro tem.

Plaintiff sued defendant for injuries sustained by her while riding in a car her husband was driving. The jury returned a verdict in favor of defendant and this appeal is from the judgment upon such verdict.

[1] Viewing the evidence, as we must, with all intendments in favor of respondent, it appears that respondent was proceeding northbound in the fast lane of a divided highway with four lanes northbound at 50 miles per hour; appellant's husband was driving the car in which she was riding in the lane immediately to the right of respondent and was travelling "behind" respondent for "quite a ways" (300–400 yards) at approximately the same speed as respondent's car, and at a distance of about one car length between appellant's car's front bumper and respondent's rear bumper. Traffic ahead of respondent slowed up; he looked back and to the right and saw no traffic, and began a lane change; the front right fender portion of his car went into appellant's lane; no part of the back of the car got into it; respondent heard squealing of brakes and saw the hood of appellant's car simultaneously and, at that moment, he swung back into his original lane; appellant's husband blew his horn, stepped on the brake, turned his car to the right and finally stopped on the shoulder at the extreme right-hand lane of the four northbound lanes, having crossed two other northbound lanes to his right before stopping. Respondent stopped; appellant was on the floor of the car when her husband stopped, having got there during this right turn. In the conversation which ensued between appellant's husband and respondent, respondent stated that it was his fault and that the appellant's car had been in the blind spot between the rear vision afforded by his mirror and the rear vision apparent to him when he looked to the right rear through the right-hand windows in his car.

[2] The appellant urges that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict. When such ground is urged for a reversal, it is a familiar rule that a reviewing court must review the evidence by resolving all conflicts in favor of the prevailing party at the trial and must indulge all legitimate and reasonable inferences to support the verdict. Moran v. State Board of Medical Examiners, 32 Cal.2d 301, 308, 196 P.2d 20; In re Estate of Bristol, 23 Cal.2d 221, 223, 143 P.2d 689. But if the verdict is not supported by substantial evidence the judgment must be reversed. In re Estate of Teed, 112 Cal. App.2d 638, 247 P.2d 54.

Appellant contends that the negligence of respondent was established as a matter of law by his testimony that he knew there was a blind spot in his field of rear vision but, nevertheless, failed to move his body to correct that defect before commencing his lane changing movement and by the fact that he admitted that the accident was his fault. Appellant also urges in this regard that the record is utterly devoid of any evidence of contributory negligence on the part of, or chargeable to, appellant.

[3, 4] Examining the evidence in the light most favorable to respondent, it would appear that the jury could have found that respondent was not chargeably negligent, his actions being reasonable under the circumstances since he testified that in addition to looking into his rear vision mirror, he did look through his right rear window before commencing his lane changing movement, that only the right front wheel and fender ever impinged upon appellant's lane of traffic, that he immediately pulled back into his lane upon seeing the car in which appellant was riding, and that he did not slacken his speed. The fact that at the scene respondent assumed blame for the accident is not conclusive upon him and at trial such admission may be explained away or contradicted. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Porter, 9 Cir., 186 F.2d 834, 52 A.L.R.2d 515. It is for the jury to judge the effect and value of such admission. Tieman v. Red Top Cab Co., 117 Cal.App. 40, 45, 3 P.2d 381.

[5] It would appear that where there is testimony that one negligently failed to ascertain whether an overtaking vehicle was in the blank area of vision present in many cars, nevertheless, a threatened lane change which only slightly impinged on the overtaking vehicle's traffic lane and was a mere momentary swerve unaccompanied by deceleration might, in the absence of impact, be found to lack the element of proximate cause essential to imposing liability for negligence.

Appellant urges that under the facts here adduced her husband could not as a matter of law have been guilty of contributory negligence and, in this respect, states that the time element here was such that there could be no contributory negligence. In support of this contention, she cites the cases of Ramos v. Linggi, 125 Cal.App.2d 632, 270 P.2d 857, and Flannery v. Koch, 103 Cal.App.2d 55, 228 P.2d 580.

Ramos v. Linggi, supra, was a case where a truck skidded across the center line of a two lane highway and struck a car coming in the opposite direction. The time from the commencement of the skid and the impact was almost instantaneous and the holding therein is restricted to the facts there contained; the opinion also contains language which requires that a driver does no positive act which contributed to the accident. The defense of contributory negligence may become a question of law rather than fact under such circumstances.

In Flannery v. Koch, supra, 103 Cal. App.2d 55, 228 P.2d 580, the holding was that there was no question of contributory negligence where the time available to act was a fraction of a second. Carr v. Holtslander, 112 Cal.App.2d 589, at page 591, 246 P.2d 678, at page 680, is a case where a defendant made a left turn directly in front of the plaintiff and the court said: "The demands of the law are not so extreme as to require one to anticipate such suicidal conduct." Gray v. Brinkerhoff, 41 Cal.2d 180, 258 P.2d 834, is also cited to the effect that one may assume that another will obey the law.

[6] None of these cases, it seems to us, apply to the facts here. While appellant makes much of the fact that the car in which she was riding was only a car length behind and a lane to the right of respondent's car, she does not explain the somewhat drastic action of her husband in driving clear across two traffic lanes to the right upon seeing the respondent's car commence to enter the same traffic lane. She overlooks the fact that there is testimony that respondent did not slack his speed and that the distances between the two cars could therefore be assumed as having remained roughly relative to each other at all times. Under such circumstances, we believe that there was sufficient evidence to justify submitting the question of contributory negligence to the jury. The jury could well have found that appellant's husband's attempt to avoid an accident was so strenuous and unreasonable under the circumstances as to amount to contributory negligence and was a positive act which might be negligent; this negligence could be imputed to appellant.

The appellant cites several cases relating to proximate cause as affected by an intervening act of a third party which are not here in point.

Appellant complains of instructions given by the trial court.

[7] The instructions given on contributory negligence are attacked as erroneous because there was no evidence before the court to justify instructing on this defense. What has been said above negates this contention.

[8] However, attack is made upon a portion of a given instruction on the ground that the jury were told that, besides the imputation of contributory negligence therein contained, the jury might consider whether the appellant herself was contributorily negligent. Admittedly, there is no evidence of any conduct on her part that could be negligent. That portion of the instruction should not have been given, but it does not appear how it was prejudicial to the appellant.

[9] Instructions given on the subject of damages are attacked as erroneous and certain words singled out as implying some secret meaning which is not apparent when all of the instructions on the record are read. Likewise, appellant contends that an instruction given on contributory negligence assumed such negligence. The portion of the instruction complained of is more or less introductory and requires a precise concentration to construe it as prejudicial to appellant. Read in conjunction with the other proper instructions given, no error appears.

[10] Appellant also contends that the court erred in not giving two instructions submitted by her. These instructions dealt with the jury's duty to disregard rulings on objections and evidence rejected by the court and a general instruction as to the status of statements of counsel. Either or both might well have been given, but, in view of the numerous instructions which were given as to the jury's duties and the place and function of evidence, no error was committed.

[11] Appellant complains that the court erred in failing to instruct on the subject of unavoidable accident, contending that this issue was injected into the case by defendant in argument. A reading of the record before us fails to reveal any mention of unavoidable accident and, in any event, such an instruction would have been of questionable validity had it been given. Butigan v. Yellow Cab Co., 49 Cal.2d 652, 320 P.2d 500.

[12] Appellant also contends that the trial court erred in permitting certain allegedly improper and irrelevant cross-examination of a witness on her behalf. The cross-examination was thorough but was relevant; it dealt with a physician's direct testimony that appellant's physical complaints were the result of the accident and with items of the physician's bill for services. Appellant also states that collateral matters were permitted and that impeachment was allowed without proper prior foundation. These statements are not supported by the record.

Neither are charges by appellant that respondent's counsel was guilty of prejudicial misconduct supported by the record

Only by a supersensitive interpretation could the matters complained of be misconduct. Attorneys in a trial should not be hypersensitive and usually are not.

Appellant groundlessly alleges that the trial court was guilty of prejudicial error in some of his comments and examinations of witnesses. The record before us is devoid of any remark of the trial judge that lends respectability to this allegation.

The judgment is affirmed.

PETERS, P. J., and FRED B. WOOD, J., concur.

159 Cal.App.2d 69

Fred KARP, Anna Karp, Aaron Karp, Plaintiffs, Respondents and Appellants,

v.

Harry MARGOLIS, Ann Margolis, Defendants, Appellants and Respondents.

Civ. 17720.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

April 1, 1958.

Action for forcible entry and detainer. The Superior Court, San Mateo County, Edmund Scott, J., entered judgment in favor of plaintiffs for restitution of the premises, and for nominal damages of one dollar trebled to equal three dollars, and both plaintiffs and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Brazil, J. pro tem., held that where owners of certain premises following foreclosure of a deed of trust entered such premises which were in possession of plaintiffs, without legal process with the help of a locksmith, while plaintiffs were not physically in the building, and thereafter retained physical possession of the building, they were guilty of forcible entry, even though building was a commercial building, and even though there was no violence or circumstances of terror.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Forcible Entry and Detainer ⇐4

Where owners of certain premises following foreclosure of a deed of trust entered such premises, which were in possession of plaintiffs, without legal process with the help of a locksmith, while plaintiffs were not physically in the building, and thereafter retained physical possession of the building, they were guilty of forcible entry, even though building was a commercial building, and even though there was no violence or circumstances of terror. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1159, subd.1.

2. Forcible Entry and Detainer ⇐4

Forcible entry is not confined to cases where a fight takes place, or physical force or restraint is used, or there are threats of physical harm, and no flat breach of the peace is necessary, the forcible entry statute having been enacted to obviate such incidents of self-help. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1159.

3. Forcible Entry and Detainer ⇐3

Where defendants in a forcible entry and detainer action were given permission to enter premises by provision in a deed of trust in event of default in payment of note, following foreclosure after default deed of trust no longer existed, and therefore such deed did not justify defendant's forcible entry. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1159

4. Forcible Entry and Detainer ⇐12(2)

Where defendants in forcible entry and detainer action acquired plaintiffs' title to property by a trustee's deed, they could not use plaintiffs' possession which they sought to disrupt as a basis of one year's quiet possession as a defense for their action of forcible entry. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1159, 1172.

5. Forcible Entry and Detainer ⇐30(1)

Plaintiff in a forcible entry action in addition to being put back in possession is not entitled to substantial damages without proof thereof. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1172.

6. Forcible Entry and Detainer ⇐29(3)

In forcible entry and detainer action, evidence of title and ownership in defendants was admissible as bearing on question of how much damages plaintiffs suffered as natural proximate consequence of the forcible entry and detainer, and such evidence was also admissible for purpose of assisting court in exercising its discretion to treble damages found to be due. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1159, 1174.

7. Forcible Entry and Detainer ⇐30(3)

In order to find out value of premises to plaintiffs who were dispossessed of possession by defendants' forcible entry and detainer there would have to be subtracted from the gross value whatever they would have been required to pay to defendants, who owned the premises, as rent.

8. Forcible Entry and Detainer ⇐30(2)

Where plaintiffs in forcible entry and detainer action claimed only damages for restitution of premises and loss of use and occupancy, trial court did not err in not allowing plaintiffs damages for defendants' retention of their equipment or personal property.

9. Forcible Entry and Detainer ⇐30(3)

In a case of forcible detainer by an owner from one who is entitled to possession, reasonable rental value alone is not a measure of plaintiffs' actual damages.

10. Forcible Entry and Detainer ⇐30(5)

In forcible entry and detainer action, where plaintiffs established forcible entry and detainer, but failed to establish actual damages, court could only award plaintiffs nominal damages and treble such amount. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 3360; West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. § 1174.

Jerome L. Schiller, San Francisco, for plaintiffs and appellants.

Harry Margolis in pro. per.

BRAZIL, Justice pro tem.

Both sides being displeased with the judgment, each has filed a separate appeal. To avoid confusion, reference to the parties will be that of plaintiffs and defendants as they appeared in the trial court, rather than as appellants and respondents.

In March 1953, plaintiffs borrowed $6,000 from defendants, which loan was secured by a deed of trust on a dry cleaning plant plaintiffs had built and were operating in Daly City. The plaintiffs, having failed to make payments on the note as required, the trust deed was foreclosed and on September 1, 1954, the defendants bought the property on trustee's sale and received a deed therefor. The plaintiffs were then operating the cleaning plant and were in actual possession of the premises until dispossessed by the defendants.

On Sunday afternoon, October 10, 1954, Mr. Margolis, his wife, three daughters, two friends and a couple of locksmiths took possession of the place without benefit of legal process. This was done in the absence of the plaintiffs and without previous notice of intention being given to them. The defendants did, however, notify the Daly City police, in advance, of what they were going to and did do. The place was entered with the help of a locksmith, who was brought along for that purpose, the defendants not having any keys to the building. The actual entry was made without any actual force, threats, intimidation, violence or injury, physical or mental, to any or the plaintiffs for none of them was there when it happened. The first plaintiffs knew what happened was about one o'clock the next morning when Mr. Karp telephoned the plant and found Mr. Margolis there. The defendants changed the locks, the combination of the safe, installed the burglar alarms, put a sign in the window, "No one is to be admitted to these premises without the permission of the owner, Harry Margolis," and with the aid of two or three guards effectively let the plaintiffs know that defendants were in possession to stay. The guards were kept on the premises for a week or ten days, working in shifts. Before the entry, the defendants started to get the plaintiffs out in a legal manner by filing a complaint in unlawful detainer, which they apparently abandoned when a demurrer to the complaint in the municipal court was sustained. The trial court found that the Karps had not abandoned the property on October 10, 1954, and that defendants' entry was made at a time when plaintiffs were in peaceable possession.

Three days after the ouster, plaintiffs filed this action for forcible entry and detainer, seeking restoration of the place and damages. No claim is made in the complaint about damaging or taking any personal property which may have been in the building when it was taken over. Reasonable rental value is alleged to be $1,000 per month, and that is the amount the court found it to be, in line with a stipulation of the parties. After filing three memorandum opinions and correcting its original finding, judgment was entered in favor of plaintiffs for restitution of the premises, and nominal damages of $1 trebled to equal $3. The court impliedly found that the defendants owned the property during the period of detention and that plaintiffs were entitled to possession during the period of forcible detainer.

Defendants' Appeal

Section 1159 of the Code of Civil Procedure defines forcible entry as follows:

"Every person is guilty of a forcible entry who either:

"1. By breaking open doors, windows, or other parts of a house, or by any kind of violence or circumstances of terror enters upon or into any real property; or

"2. Who, after entering peaceably upon any real property, turns out by force, threats, or menacing conduct, the party in possession."

The judgment is in no way concerned with Subdivision 2 of Section 1159, sometimes referred to as dealing with "scrambling possession," for the plaintiffs were not present when defendants gained entry; and they made no physical attempt to get back in.

[1, 2] Defendants break Subdivision 1 of Section 1159 into two parts, reading it as if it applied to two kinds of structures, the first to a house, and the second to any other kind of building. They liken the word "house" to home, and say as the place entered is admittedly a commercial building, there was no forcible entry because there was no "breaking open doors, windows, or other parts of a house." The argument is not without some logical basis, and may be a reasonable interpretation of the section. However, courts have always before now read this section as a whole without making any division of affected subjects as suggested by defendants. In each of the following cases there was no "breaking open doors, windows, or other parts," each involved a commercial building and forcible entry was found to exist in each instance. San Francisco & Suburban Home Bldg. Soc. v. Leonard, 17 Cal. App. 254, 119 P. 405 (business office); Rutledge v. Barger, 82 Cal.App. 356, 255 P. 537 (store building); Pacific States Auxiliary Corp. v. Farris, 118 Cal.App. 522, 5 P.2d 452 (apartment house); Calidino Hotel Co. of San Bernardino v. Bank of America, etc., 31 Cal.App.2d 295, 87 P.2d 923 (hotel) and Pickens v. Johnson, 107 Cal.App.2d 778, 238 P.2d 40 (tavern).

Defendants also say there can be no forcible entry here because they got possession in the absence of plaintiffs and so there was no violence or circumstances of terror. Forcible entry is not confined to cases where a fight takes place, or physical force or restraint is used, or there are threats of physical harm. In Pickens v. Johnson and Rutledge v. Barger, supra, entry was made by breaking locks, without any other show of force, threat or intimidation. Many more cases of like import could readily be cited. No flat breach of the peace is necessary (Pacific States Auxiliary Corp. v. Farris, 118 Cal.App. at page 524, 5 P.2d at page 453, supra) the statute being enacted to obviate such incidents of self help as occurred here.

[3] Defendants next assert there is no forcible entry as they were given permission to enter the place by a provision in the deed of trust in the event there was a default in payment of the note. The ready answer to this contention (and it is not the only one) is that the deed of trust no longer existed after the foreclosure sale; it had served its purpose before defendants broke the lock and took possession.

[4] Finally defendants seek to avail themselves of the defense provisions of Code of Civil Procedure 1172 that "* * * [t]he defendant may show in his defense that he or his ancestors, or those whose interest in such premises he claims, have been in the quiet possession thereof for the space of one whole year * * *." In this, they confuse title with possession. Defendants acquired plaintiffs' title to the property by the trustee's deed, but they could not use the very possession they seek to disrupt as a basis of one year's quiet possession under the section as a defense for their actions.

The evidence supports the findings that there was no abandonment, no consent to the entry and that all necessary elements to establish a forcible entry and detainer were present.

Plaintiffs' Appeal

Plaintiffs' complaint with the judgment is their dissatisfaction with the amount of damages awarded. As is said in Code of Civil Procedure Section 1172, "* * * the plaintiff shall only be required to show, in addition to the forcible entry or forcible detainer complained of, that he was peaceably in the actual possession at the time of the forcible entry, or was entitled to the possession at the time of the forcible detainer. * * *" They claim error in the receipt of evidence, over objection, of title and ownership of the property by the defendants at the time of the entry and during the period of forcible detainer. Plaintiffs cite many cases to the effect that a defendant may not show title or ownership in himself to justify a forcible entry or a forcible detainer. The trial court, however, did find in plaintiffs' favor on these two issues, despite the admission of evidence of title and ownership. It determined first that there was a forcible entry and second that there was a forcible detainer.

[5] Because section 1172 requires that plaintiff "shall only be required to show, in addition to the forcible entry or forcible detainer complained of, that he was peaceably in the actual possession at the time of the forcible entry, or was entitled to the possession at the time of the forcible detainer" does not mean that in addition to being put back in possession he is actually entitled to substantial damages without any further proof.

"It will not, of course, be denied that the plaintiff was entitled to show, if it could, under a complaint sufficient for that purpose, any damages occasioned to it by the forcible or unlawful detainer complained of (section 1174, Code Civ.Proc.)—that is to say, it was entitled to recover, if it could prove it, under appropriate averments of its complaint, any damage that was the natural and proximate consequence of the alleged forcible or unlawful detainer. [Citations.] If, therefore, plaintiff could show that it had suffered the loss of rents through the acts complained of against defendants or had necessarily been put to expense in protecting its property while the defendants wrongfully and forcibly detained the same and by reason thereof or that it had sustained loss by the cessation of the prosecution of its business during the period of the wrongful detention and by reason thereof, then all such facts would disclose proper items of damages * * *." San Francisco & Suburban Home Bldg. Soc. v. Leonard, 17 Cal.App. 254, 266, 119 P. 405, 410.

[6] The trial court admitted the evidence of title and ownership in the defendants, not to disprove plaintiffs' right to a judgment, but as evidence bearing on the question of how much damages plaintiffs suffered as the natural and proximate consequence of the forcible entry and the forcible detainer. It would also be admissible, in any case, for the limited purpose of assisting the court in exercising its discretion to treble the damages found to be due, as is provided in Section 1174 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[7] Stockton Morris Plan Co. v. Carpenter, 18 Cal.App.2d 205, 63 P.2d 859; Haig v. Hogan, 82 Cal.App.2d 876, 187 P.2d 426, and many others cited by the plaintiffs to establish that "the reasonable rental value is the proper measure of damages" do not in any instance involve a factual situation like the one we have here. In each case the plaintiff would have been entitled to the rent of the premises, and not as in this case where the plaintiffs would have to pay rent for the place to the owner as part of the cost of doing business. The right to possession belonged to plaintiffs until they were lawfully evicted and its worth (the loss of which would be compensable) was its value in use to them, which of course could exceed the reasonable rental value. However, in order to find out its value in use to them, there would have to be subtracted from the gross value whatever they would in any case be required to pay as rent. If this were not so, an evicted plaintiff would receive a windfall, and the owner, who acted illegally, would be penalized the amount of the rent in addition to the penalty of treble damages already allowed in Code of Civil Procedure Section 1174. It would likewise make no difference whether the person forcibly kept from possession were an owner or a tenant, and it is obvious that the actual damages of such persons are not the same. The plaintiffs' contention on their measure of damages is not in harmony with Civil Code Section 3333 which provides "For the breach of an obligation not arising from contract, the measure of damages, except where otherwise expressly provided by this Code, is the amount which will compensate for all the detriment proximately caused thereby, whether it could have been anticipated or not."

In the case of Roff v. Duane, 1865, 27 Cal. 565, 569, the court does say in laying down a general rule: "The inquiry is, Had the plaintiff the actual and peaceable possession at the time of the forcible entry complained of? And if that issue and the unlawful detainer are found for the plaintiff the law awards to him the monthly value of the rents and profits during the time of the detention without regard to his right or title in the premises." The Roff case has not ever been cited in California to support a rule that, as between an evicted plaintiff and a defendant owner, plaintiff is entitled to collect the rent from the owner by merely proving reasonable rental value of the premises. The factual situation in the Roff case so far as ascertainable from the opinion are not similar to those found to exist in this case.

[8, 9] The plaintiffs' further complaint that they were not allowed any damages for retention of their equipment or personal property is met with the simple answer that they never asked the trial court for such an award. A finding thereof would have found no support in the pleadings, nor did they ever ask leave of court to amend the pleadings in this regard. The only things they claimed by way of damages in the complaint upon which they went to trial were restitution of the premises and loss of use and occupancy. The only proof offered for such loss was establishing the reasonable rental value of the premises. As this is not a case of unlawful detainer and it is only a case of forcible detainer by an owner from one who was entitled to possession, reasonable rental value alone is not a measure of plaintiffs' actual damages.

[10] Damages are usually classified as actual, exemplary or nominal. Lacking proof of actual damages, the most the court could do was to award nominal damages. Pacific States Auxiliary Corp. v. Farris, 118 Cal.App. 522, 524, 5 P.2d 452. "When a breach of duty has caused no appreciable detriment to the party affected, he may yet recover nominal damages." Civ.

Code, § 3360. The court, in its discretion, was authorized by Section 1174 of the Code of Civil Procedure to treble the amount which it found to be due.

Costs on appeal are not allowed to either party.

Judgment affirmed.

KAUFMAN, P. J., and DOOLING, J., concur.

158 Cal.App.2d 738

Helen G. MAKOVSKY, Plaintiff, Cross-Defendant, and Appellant,

v.

Leon T. MAKOVSKY, also known as Leon T. Mack, also known as Leon T. Tasem, Defendant, Cross-Complainant, and Respondent.

Civ. 17437.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

March 27, 1958.

Wife brought suit for divorce. The Superior Court, County of Alameda, Marvin Sherwin, J., entered judgment awarding wife a divorce and dividing property, and the wife appealed from the portion of the judgment awarding business to husband as his separate property. The District Court of Appeal, McMurray, J. pro tem., held that where trial court's nunc pro tunc order correcting findings theretofore filed was based on amended pleading, which was improperly allowed, and therefore was not an order made to show what actually occurred at the time of trial, order was the correction of a "judicial error" rather than of a "clerical error," and the order was prejudicially erroneous.

Portion of judgment appealed from reversed, and cause remanded for further trial.

1. Trial ⇐400(1)

In order to establish that trial court was without jurisdiction to make nunc pro tunc order correcting findings theretofore filed, it was necessary to show that order was in fact the correction of a judicial error rather than a correction of a clerical error. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

2. Appeal and Error ⇐440

Nunc pro tunc order of trial court correcting findings theretofore filed was not objectionable merely because order was signed after filing of notice of appeal. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

3. Courts ⇐114

Trial court may correct its own clerical mistakes on its own motion nunc pro tunc in order to make record state what actually occurred. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. § 473.

4. Pleading ⇐236(5)

Discretion of trial court to allow amendment of pleadings to conform to facts proved must be exercised in such manner as to avoid any disadvantage to opposing party.

5. Pleading ⇐236(7)

Where proof adduced is in conformity with pleadings, there is no room for trial court to exercise its discretion and allow amendment of pleading to change an admission therein to a denial.

6. Pleading ⇐377

Generally, facts not controverted by answer are not in issue, and no evidence need be offered to prove their existence.

7. Pleading ⇐236(4)

Where proof at a trial is consonant with admitted facts, it is an abuse of discretion for trial court, after submission of case, to allow amendment of pleadings to the prejudice of opposing party.

8. Pleading ⇐420(2)

The basic reason that a party cannot ordinarily object to amendment of pleadings to conform to the proof is that at the trial, without objection, such party permitted the issue to be tried, so that he is estopped from challenging the amendment, but the estoppel must be based on the failure to assert a right he should have asserted.

9. Pleading ⇐420(2)

Where proof adduced at trial of divorce suit relative to business of husband might well have been admissible under the pleadings on file at time of trial, and such evidence might have been regarded by wife as evidence of value of community interest rather than evidence of status of business as separate property of husband, and it might have been a factor for consideration in any division made of the business, failure of wife to object to separate property evidence concerning such business did not create an estoppel which would prevent wife from challenging subsequent amendment of husband's pleading to conform to facts allegedly proved.

10. Appeal and Error ⇐1071(1)
Trial ⇐400(1)

Where trial court's nunc pro tunc order correcting findings theretofore filed was based on amended pleading, which was improperly allowed, and therefore was not an order made to show what actually occurred at the time of the trial, order was the correction of a "judicial error" rather than of a "clerical error," and the order was prejudicially erroneous. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. § 473.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Clerical Error" and "Judicial Error".

Golden & Stefan, Oakland, J. Bruce Fratis, San Francisco, for appellant.

Harris, Darter & Older, Oakland, Cyril Viadro, San Francisco, of counsel, for respondent.

McMURRAY, Justice pro tem.

Appellant Helen G. Makovsky was granted an interlocutory decree of divorce from respondent Leon T. Makovsky on the grounds of extreme cruelty and was awarded certain of the community property of the parties together with counsel fees and permanent alimony. This decree also awarded respondent a business known as "Plaza Jewelry and Loan Office" as his separate property.

This appeal is directed against the trial court's action in awarding the business to respondent as his separate property.

After a nonjury trial, the trial judge filed a "Memorandum Decision" which reads as follows:

> "Interlocutory decree of divorce will be granted to plaintiff on the ground of extreme cruelty. No provision will be made for support of children because they are both self-supporting. Order will be made requiring defendant to pay to plaintiff for her support the sum of $225.00 per month, payable on same dates as temporary order. Defendant is ordered to pay to counsel for plaintiff for additional attorney's fees the sum of $600.00.
>
> "The community property is found to consist of an unimproved lot in Piedmont, a dwelling house at 3217 Ardley, flats at 3209 Ardley, an Oldsmobile, a Hudson, and stock in uranium corporation. In addition to the above, the defendant owns a promissory note and a business which are his separate property by reason of an inheritance.
>
> "The community property will be divided by awarding to plaintiff the Hudson automobile, 50 shares of Federal Uranium Company, the household furniture and furnishings, the dwelling house, and the unimproved lot, subject to its balance. Defendant will be awarded the Oldsmobile, 50 shares of Federal Uranium Company, and the flats at 3209 Ardley.
>
> "Defendant is authorized to amend pleadings to conform to proof and allege that the business is separate property of defendant."

Thereafter respondent filed an "Amended and Supplemental Answer * * * to Conform to Proof." Appellant's counsel prepared and submitted proposed Findings of Fact on April 20, 1956, which were signed by the judge on May 11, 1956. In these findings appellant's counsel included findings to the effect that the business, together with two similar prior businesses operated by respondent during the marriage, had increased in value by reason of respondent's personal services and efforts in connection with their operation, and that to the extent that this increment in value was due to respondent's personal efforts and services it was community property.

On May 17, 1956, after service on respondent's counsel, Notice of Entry of Judgment was filed. On June 11, 1956, appellant filed Notice of Appeal from that portion of the judgment awarding the business to respondent as his separate property.

Fifteen days after the Notice of Appeal and on June 26, 1956, the trial judge, upon his own motion and without prior notice to the parties, filed an "Order Correcting and Clarifying Findings of Fact" which read:

"Whereas, the above entitled Court on May 11, 1956 signed its findings of fact and conclusions of law and interlocutory decree of divorce in the above entitled action; and

"Whereas, said findings of fact and conclusions of law and judgment were prepared by counsel pursuant to instructions of the Court contained in a written memorandum of decision theretofore rendered, which memorandum did not include matters hereinafter quoted from said findings, and said findings of fact included the phrase, Paragraph XII at Page 4, Line 22:

"'* * * it is true that the increase in value of the interest of defendant is said business resulted, in part, from his personal services and effort in connection with the operation of said business; it is true that to the extent that this increment in value was due to the personal efforts and services of defendant, it was community property;' and

"Whereas, said findings also included, Paragraph XIII at Page 5, Lines 3 to 9:

"'It is true that the increase in value of the interest of defendant and cross-complainant in said business from $6,886.22 in 1947 to $22,500.00 on July 10, 1952 resulted, in part, from defendant's personal service and effort in connection with the operation of said business; it is true that to the extent this increment in value was due to the personal efforts and services of defendant, it was community property;' and

"Whereas, said findings also included, Paragraph XV at Page 6, Lines 3 to 9:

"'It is true that the increase in value of the interest of defendant and cross-complainant in said business from $46,336.99 on July 15, 1952 to the sum of $54,071.34 on May 14, 1954 resulted in part from defendant's business; it is true that to the extent this increment in value was due to the personal efforts and services of defendant, it was community property;' and

"Whereas, this Court inadvertently failed to notice said quoted portions thereof at the time of signing the same; and

"Whereas, this Court in determining that the business referred to in Paragraph XVII of said findings was the separate property of defendant so concluded by reason of the Court's determination that the preponderance of evidence and inferences therefrom established that the value of said business was less than the cost thereof, and its value, if any, in excess of the amount of separate funds invested by defendant therein was not in excess of the fair and usual increase in value normally derived by or reasonably to be allocated to risk capital so invested; and that in fact defendant had withdrawn and expended for community purposes earnings in excess of a fair compensation for such services and such withdrawals included a portion of profits normally allocated and expected to be earned by risk capital so invested, and the Court did not intend to find that there was any increase in value of the separate property of defendant invested in the business in which defendant had last invested his separate funds, or that any such increase had been caused by or could be attributed to his personal efforts during the period of marriage, but, on the contrary, the Court believed that withdrawals therefrom made by him during such period exceeded any amount of increase of capital that could be attributed to his personal efforts;

"It is hereby ordered, adjudged and decreed that the findings of fact be corrected and clarified to correctly set forth the determination of this Court by striking therefrom each of the portions thereof above quoted, and that this order shall be retroactive and entered nunc pro tunc as of May 11, 1956."

[1] Appellant urges that the trial court was without jurisdiction to make its order correcting the findings theretofore filed, especially since such order was filed after the Notice of Appeal had been filed. In so urging, appellant is required to support the proposition that such order was in fact the correction of a judicial error rather than of a clerical one.

"The distinction between a clerical error and a judicial error does not depend so much on the person making it as on whether it was the deliberate result of judicial reasoning and determination." 29 Cal.Jur. 2d § 101. In George v. Bekins Van & Storage Co., 83 Cal.App.2d 478, at page 480–481, 189 P.2d 301, at page 303, it is said: "The term 'clerical error' covers all errors, mistakes, or omissions which are not the result of the exercise of the judicial function. If an error, mistake, or omission is the result of inadvertence, but for which a different judgment would have been rendered, the error is clerical and the judgment may be corrected to correspond with what it would have been but for the inadvertence. Kowalsky v. Nicholson, 23 Cal.App. 160, 162, 137 P. 607; Freeman on Judgments, 5th ed., vol. 1, p. 283, § 146. The court has inherent power to correct such errors. This power extends to striking out findings of fact and conclusions of law and a judgment and substituting wholly different findings of fact and conclusions of law and judgment." In Brashear v. Gerbracht, 128 Cal.App.2d 263, 274 P.2d 933, the fact that the trial judge wrote a memorandum decision was given weight by the court in determining the nature of an order nunc pro tunc, and this court in Nathanson v. Murphy, 147 Cal.App.2d 462, 305 P.2d 710, gave weight to an oral expression of a trial judge as set forth in an affidavit of counsel to determine that the order nunc pro tunc there involved was proper as the correction of a clerical rather than a judicial error.

[2] The order in the instant case recites that the original findings were signed inadvertently as to the findings relating to the status of respondent's businesses. The fact that such order was signed after the filing of the notice of appeal is not an objection. "The pendency of an appeal does not destroy the power of a court to make such correction [order correcting findings] of its record when the mistake is obvious from the other parts of the record and the proper correction can be made therefrom." Crawford v. Meadows, 55 Cal.App. 4, 11, 203 P. 428, 431.

[3] That a court may correct its own clerical mistakes on its own motion is explicitly stated in section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure; such corrections are properly made nunc pro tunc in order make the record of a court state what actually occurred. Crawford v. Meadows, supra.

Appellant also contends that the finding that the business was the separate property of respondent is not supported by the evidence, and that while the evidence supports the original findings it does not support the corrected findings.

This contention is inextricably interwoven with another of appellant's contentions to the effect that the trial court's authorization to respondent to amend his answer to conform to proof set forth in the "Memorandum Decision" resulted in denying appellant the opportunity to present evidence on a material issue to her prejudice.

The complaint of appellant alleged that the business here under consideration was community property worth $25,000. The answer at time of trial admitted this allegation, but alleged that the business was worth $12,500; the same allegation and value were pleaded in the respondent's cross-complaint.

[4] Respondent argues that, by participating in the trial to the extent of allowing a showing that some of the business was in the nature of separate property of respondent, appellant waived any objections to amendment of the pleadings to conform to the facts proved, and cities 2 Witkin, California Procedure, pages 1609–1610. Granting that a trial court has broad discretion in allowing amendments to conform to proof and also that such amendment may be made even after submission upon completion of trial (Feigin v. Kutchor, 105 Cal.App.2d 744, 234 P.2d 264), nevertheless, it appears that such discretion must be exercised in such manner as to avoid any disadvantage to the opposing party (LeCyr v. Dow, 30 Cal.App.2d 457, 461–463, 86 P.2d 900).

[5] In this case the proof adduced at the trial relative to the business might well have been admissible under the pleadings on file at the time of trial. Evidence of the method of acquisition of the business here under consideration was not necessarily beyond the scope of the pleadings before the trial court. Such evidence might have been regarded by appellant as evidence of the value of the community interest rather than evidence of its status as separate property of respondent and would also be a factor for consideration in any division made of the business, and it appears that appellant's attorney so assumed at the trial as is shown by his statement relative to the admissibility of such evidence: "* * * I have no objection * * * to it being permitted for historical reasons only." Under such circumstances, that is, where proof adduced is in conformity with the pleadings, there is no room for a court to exercise its discretion and allow amendment of the pleading to change an admission therein to a denial.

[6, 7] It is the general rule that facts not controverted by answer are not in issue and no evidence need be offered to prove their existence (Fuentes v. Tucker, 31 Cal. 2d 1, 4, 187 P.2d 752), and where proof at a trial is consonant with such admitted facts it is an abuse of discretion for a judge, after submission of the case, to allow amendment of the pleadings to the prejudice of a party.

[8, 9] The basic reason that a party cannot ordinarily object to such an amendment is that at the trial, without objection, that party permitted the issue to be tried. He is therefore estopped from challenging the amendment, but an estoppel must be based on the failure to assert a right he should have asserted. In the instant case, the failure to object to the separate property evidence does not create an estoppel for the reasons herein stated.

Had appellant been apprised of the fact that the trial court was considering the evidence relating to the business as determinative of its status as community or separate property, she might have adduced different evidence at the trial and states in her brief that she would have done so. By not being so apprised she was in effect deprived of a full and fair trial on this issue.

[10] The order nunc pro tunc, being based upon the amended pleading which was improperly allowed, is, therefore, not an order made to show what actually occurred at the time of trial and becomes an attempt to correct a judicial error rather than a clerical error.

The other contentions of appellant as to the evidentiary establishment of the value of the business need not be here discussed since, because of the prejudicial error above set forth, the judgment insofar as it determined that the business known as the "Plaza Jewelry and Loan Company" was the sole and separate property of respondent must be reversed. That portion of the judgment appealed from is reversed and remanded for further trial.

PETERS, P. J., and FRED B. WOOD, J., concur.

158 Cal.App.2d 818

John B. HILL, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

J. D. WRATHER, Jr. and Mazie Wrather, Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 22817.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

March 28, 1958.

Rehearing Denied April 21, 1958.

Hearing Denied May 21, 1958.

Action to recover on a promissory note wherein defendant filed a cross-complaint for alleged fraud of plaintiff in that defendants were induced to enter into a transaction for sale of stock in a television station based upon an alleged representation that plaintiff and another were not married to each other. From a judgment granting plaintiff's motion to strike the cross-complaint, granting plaintiff's motion to strike portions of the first amended answer and denying defendants' motion for a leave to join as a cross defendant a new party in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Burnett Wolfson, J., the defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Kincaid, J. pro tem., held that orders striking from the files, the cross-complaint, certain affirmative defenses, and counterclaims were not separately appealable, and that the cross-complaint failed to state a cause of action for fraud and that it failed to establish that defendants suffered any detriment as result thereof.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐78(3)

Orders striking cross-complaint, affirmative defenses in the amended answer, and counterclaims are interlocutory and are reviewable only on an appeal from the final judgment. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 963.

2. Appeal and Error ⇐78(2), 870(2)

An order denying defendants' motion to bring in a new party is interlocutory and not appealable and must be reviewed on the appeal from the final judgment.

3. Pleading ⇐364(2, 3)

Irrelevant and redundant matter inserted in a pleading may be stricken by the court. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 453.

4. Pleading ⇐360(1)

A motion to strike cannot be made to serve the purpose of a special demurrer.

5. Pleading ⇐354(16)

Where a motion to strike is so broad as to include relevant matters, motion should be denied in its entirety.

6. Fraud ⇐41

A pleading setting up fraud must show a false representation of fact made by the representor, knowledge or belief by the representor that the representation is false, and intention to induce representee to act or refrain from action in reliance thereon, reasonable reliance, and damage to the representee resulting therefrom.

7. Fraud ⇐47

In action to recover on a note evidencing obligation of defendant to pay final installment of purchase price for television stock, cross-complaint for fraud was insufficient where it failed to establish that defendants suffered any detriment as result of claimed fraud. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. §§ 389 and 453; West's Ann.Civ. Code, § 3343.

8. Fraud ⇐25

A false representation which cannot possibly affect the intrinsic merits of a business transaction is immaterial, since reliance upon it could not produce injury in the legal sense.

9. Fraud ⇐25

Deception which does not cause loss is not fraud in a legal sense.

10. Fraud ⇐59(1)

Actionable fraud in the sale of stock requires that the measure of damages be the so-called "out-of-pocket" loss rule. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 3343.

11. Conspiracy ⇐6

As respects right to recover for alleged fraud, fact that plaintiff alleged a conspiracy was immaterial, since damages to the plaintiff was no less essential and all elements of the basic tort must be established or the charge of conspiracy fails.

Kaplan, Livingston, Goodwin & Berkowitz, Monte E. Livingston, Bayard F. Berman, Beverly Hills, and Arthur L. Stashower, Long Beach, for appellants.

John W. Preston, Jr., and Robert P. Schifferman, Los Angeles, for respondent.

KINCAID, Justice pro tem.

Defendants-appellants appeal from the judgment rendered in favor of plaintiff-respondent, based upon a promissory note in the amount of $75,000, interest and attorney fees, on the grounds that the trial court committed prejudicial error in (1) granting plaintiff's motion to strike the cross-complaint; (2) in granting plaintiff's motion to strike portions of the first amended answer; and (3) in denying defendants' motion for leave to join as a cross-defendant the new party, Maria Helen Alvarez.

For convenience, the defendants-appellants will hereinafter be referred to as "defendants," or "the Wrathers," plaintiff-respondent as "plaintiff" or "Hill" and Maria Helen Alvarez as "Alvarez."

On September 4, 1956, plaintiff commenced his action in the court below to recover from defendants (and an additional defendant, General Television, Inc., as to which the suit was dismissed prior to judgment) the sum of $75,000, plus interest, allegedly due under a promissory note dated August 5, 1952. Defendants filed separate answers on September 21, 1956, and November 2, 1956. Thereafter, plaintiff moved to strike defendants' answers and for summary judgment, and defendants moved for leave to file a proposed cross-complaint and proposed amended answer and for an order joining as a cross-defendant the new party named in the proposed cross-complaint, Alvarez. These proceedings resulted in a minute order which denied plaintiff's motion to strike and for summary judgment, denied defendants' motion for an order joining Alvarez as a cross-defendant, and granted defendants' motion for leave to file their proposed cross-complaint and proposed amended answer. This order was entered on January 4, 1957. Defendants then filed their cross-complaint and first amended answer in the form of the proposed pleadings. Thereafter, plaintiff demurred to defendants' cross-complaint and amended answer and moved the court for an order striking these pleadings, for summary judgment and/or judgment on the pleadings. On February 6, 1957, an order was made which overruled plaintiff's demurrer to defendants' first amended answer, placed off calendar plaintiff's demurrer to the cross-complaint, denied plaintiff's motion for summary judgment and/or judgment on the pleadings, and granted plaintiff's motion to strike on the cross-complaint and the following portions of the first amended answer: Paragraphs X through XV of the first counterclaim, the second and third counterclaims in their entirety, and paragraph 2 of the prayer. This minute order was entered on February 8, 1957.

[1, 2] It is clear that the orders herein striking from the files the cross-complaint, certain of the affirmative defenses in the amended answer and the counterclaims are not separably appealable. Such orders are interlocutory in character and are not included among those scheduled in section 963, Code of Civil Procedure, from which appeal may be taken. Hence such orders are reviewable only on an appeal from the final judgment. Sjoberg v. Hastorf, 33 Cal.2d 116, 118, 199 P.2d 668; Couch v. McGregor, 19 Cal.App.2d 633, 634, 66 P.2d 159; Merchants Nat. Bank of Los Angeles v. Clark-Parker Co., 97 Cal.App. 757, 276 P. 387. The order denying defendants' motion to bring in the new party Alvarez is likewise not appealable and must be considered on the appeal from the final judgment. Evans v. Dabney, 37 Cal.2d 758, 760, 235 P.2d 604.

The material allegations of the cross-complaint are identical with those of the first and second counterclaims of defendants' amended answer. Section 442, Code of Civil Procedure, authorizes the filing of a cross-complaint whenever the defendant seeks affirmative relief relating to or depending upon the transaction upon which the action is brought. Prior to adoption of the 1957 amendment to section 442, if a new party named as a cross-defendant in a cross-complaint was necessary to a complete determination of the controversy then before the court, within the meaning of section 389, Code of Civil Procedure, the court was required to order him brought in as a party cross-defendant. Alpers v. Bliss, 145 Cal. 565, 79 P. 171.

The facts of the transactions as claimed by defendants are set forth in the cross-complaint generally as follows: About April 22, 1952, cross-defendants Hill and Alvarez each owned 150 shares of television company stock representing 15 per cent interest for each and were employed as the managers of station KOTV. The other 70 per cent of the stock was owned by George E. Cameron, Jr., who sold it to defendants. Defendants then went to Oklahoma and personally investigated the television company and station and met Hill and Alvarez. The latter agreed to continue to manage the station in consideration of an increase in their total ownership interest from 30 per cent to 50 per cent. Later Hill indicated his desire to sell his stock to defendants and in reliance upon claimed misrepresentations of material facts by Hill and Alvarez as hereinafter set forth, defendants agreed to purchase Hill's 150 shares for $400,000 and entered into an oral agreement with Alvarez to increase her ownership interest in the television station from 15 per cent to 50 per cent in consideration of her agreement to manage such station. Defendants thereafter caused capital stock of the television company to be issued to Alvarez to increase her holdings accordingly. The claimed misrepresentations of material facts and active concealment and suppression thereof by Hill and Alvarez consisted of behavior and acts on their part in an impersonal manner towards each other, referring to the other as if the other were a single unmarried person and as if he or she were engaging in a separate and individual deal with defendants and had no interest in the other's deal; each actively concealed and suppressed the fact that a long standing personal relationship existed with the other with each having a financial stake in the benefits and profits to be derived by the other; actively concealing and suppressing the fact that they were married to each other and/or lived together as husband and wife and behaving in such manner as to lead defendants to believe that each bore the same arm's length relationship to each other as to defendants. Hill and Alvarez made such representations to induce the Wrathers to execute and carry out the agreements of April 22, 1952, with Hill and with Alvarez and in reliance thereon and induced thereby the Wrathers bought Hill's interest for the price demanded and at the same time increased Alvarez's interest in the station by 35 per cent; that had they known the true facts the Wrathers would not have parted with this valuable property interest; that as a result of such deceitful conduct they were defrauded in the sum of $750,000, being the reasonable value of the 35 per cent ownership interest in station KOTV.

The foregoing allegations seek affirmative relief relating to or depending upon the note transaction upon which the action was brought. The court ordered the cross-complaint to be filed. Defendants argue that its allegations further indicate that Alvarez, the new party they sought to have joined as a party cross-defendant, was necessary to a complete determination of the controversy then before the court and the court was required by the provisions of section 389, Code of Civil Procedure, to order her brought in as such a party.

[3–5] Irrelevant and redundant matter inserted in a pleading may be stricken by the court. § 453, Code Civ.Proc. But a motion to strike cannot be made to serve the purpose of a special demurrer. Where a motion to strike is so broad as to include relevant matters, the motion should be denied in its entirety. Allerton v. King, 96

Cal.App. 230, 234, 274 P. 90; People ex rel. Department of Public Works v. Buellton Development Co., 58 Cal.App.2d 178, 185, 136 P.2d 793. Here the entire cross-complaint was ordered stricken and the demurrer thereto was ordered placed off calendar without any ruling thereon. Thus the cross-complainants were deprived of the right to amend if the pleading was faulty in any particular which could have been corrected by such an amendment. We now examine this pleading to ascertain whether it states a cause of action for fraud and, if it does not, whether under the facts herein alleged an amendment may correct any defects found therein.

[6, 7] A pleading setting up fraud must show a false representation of fact made by the representor; knowledge or belief on the part of the representor that the representation is false; an intention to induce the representee to act or to refrain from action in reliance upon the misrepresentation; reasonable reliance upon the misrepresentation on the part of the representee in taking action or refraining from it; damage to the representee resulting from such reliance. (See 23 Cal.Jur.2d 164, 165, § 66; Restatement of the Law, Torts, p. 59, § 525.) Measured by these rules the cross-complaint does not state a cause of action in that its allegations fail to establish that defendants have suffered any detriment as a result of the claimed fraud. It further appears from the facts pleaded that amendment could not serve to correct this defect.

The transaction as between Hill and the Wrathers was simply a sale of 150 shares of the capital stock of Cameron Television, Inc., for the sum of $400,000. The promissory note here sued upon evidenced the obligation of the Wrathers to pay the final installment of the purchase price which they agreed to pay for this stock.

The transaction as between Alvarez and the Wrathers resulted simply in an agreement whereby the former's interest in the television company was increased from 15 per cent to 50 per cent in consideration of her agreement to continue in the management of the television station.

The essence of the Wrathers' charge of fraud is that they were induced to enter into these two related transactions in reliance upon an alleged representation that Hill and Alvarez were not married to each other. It is asserted that by virtue of this false representation and the concealment of the intimate personal relationship which had existed between Hill and Alvarez, defendants thought they were dealing with two independent individuals whose relationship had been, and was at that time, a purely business one. Defendants further allege that had they known the true relationship between Hill and Alvarez they would not have agreed to pay Hill $400,000 for his stock; neither would they have agreed to give Alvarez an additional 35 per cent interest in the business in return for her agreement to manage it. Defendants allege that the damage they sustained as a proximate result of this alleged fraud was equal to the reasonable value of a 35 per cent interest in the television company, or $750,000.

[8] The allegedly concealed and misrepresented relationship between Hill and Alvarez must be regarded as wholly collateral and immaterial since it had no bearing upon the value of either the property or the services which defendants bargained for. There is no allegation in defendants' pleadings, nor any suggestion in their briefs, that the value of the stock which they acquired was less than they paid for it or that Alvarez failed in any respect to perform faithfully and competently the services that she was expected to perform in the management of the business. A false representation which cannot possibly affect the intrinsic merits of a business transaction must necessarily be immaterial because reliance upon it could not produce injury in a legal sense. 37 C.J.S. Fraud § 18, pp. 253, 254.

It is difficult to comprehend defendants' theory that the alleged fraud damaged them to the extent of 35 per cent of the value of the operating company. So far as the record reveals, they received all that they expected to receive. It is difficult to perceive how any assumed relationship between Hill and Alvarez could have had any adverse effect upon the latter's competence to perform the services she was expected to perform. Certainly her increased interest in the business gave her increased incentive to strive for its success.

[9] The case thus presented, therefore, invokes the rule that fraud without damage or injury is not remediable. Deception which does not cause loss is not a fraud in the legal sense. 37 C.J.S. Fraud § 40, p. 288; 23 Cal.Jur.2d 99, et seq., §§ 41, 42 and 43 and decisions cited.

As said in Barron Estate Co. v. Woodruff Co., 163 Cal. 561, 571, 126 P. 351, 355, 42 L.R.A.,N.S., 125, "It is fundamental, of course, that, no matter what the nature of the fraud or deceit, unless detriment has been occasioned thereby, plaintiff has no cause of action." See also Gutterman v. Gally, 131 Cal.App. 647, 650–651, 21 P.2d 1000; Tsang v. Kan, 78 Cal.App.2d 275, 281, 177 P.2d 630; Maynes v. Angeles Mesa Land Co., 10 Cal.2d 587, 76 P.2d 109. In Baker v. Littman, 138 Cal.App.2d 510, at pages 516–517, 292 P.2d 595, 599, this court quotes with approval from Woodson v. Winchester, 16 Cal.App. 472, 476, 117 P. 565, as follows: "It must be shown in the pleading that the damage claimed was sustained by reason of [the] fraud and should show the relation between the fraud and the damage alleged; that is, it must appear that the fraud and the damage sustain to each other the relation of cause and effect."

[10] Had there been actionable fraud in the sale of the stock, the measure of damages would have been that set forth in section 3343 of the Civil Code, the so-called "out-of-pocket" loss rule. Bagdasarian v. Gragnon, 31 Cal.2d 744, 762, 192 P.2d 935; Anderson v. Fay Improvement Co., 134 Cal.App.2d 738, 749, 286 P.2d 513; Oliver v. Benton, 92 Cal.App.2d 853, 855, 208 P.2d 375. There is no suggestion that defendants could plead or prove damage according to this rule. Indeed defendants' counsel state that their affirmative defense of fraud would have been "frustrated" by the application of this rule.

[11] The fact that the Wrathers alleged a conspiracy does not alter the case because the same alleged fraud was the gist of the conspiracy count. Damage to the complaining party is no less essential; all the elements of the basic tort must be established or the charge of conspiracy falls. Orloff v. Metropolitan Trust Co., 17 Cal.2d 484, 488, 110 P.2d 396; Barkett v. Brucato, 122 Cal.App.2d 264, 274, 264 P.2d 978; Gutterman v. Gally, supra.

By the pre-trial conference order in the case the stricken provisions of the amended answer from paragraph 10 to the end thereof were ordered reinstated for purposes of defense but not for purposes of counterclaim. At the trial defendants offered no evidence under the reinstated provisions of their amended answer, taking the position then as they do now that they do not assert the claimed misrepresentations as a defense to plaintiff's action on the note but for the purpose of asserting independent, although related, causes of action against plaintiff and Alvarez. That if these stricken pleadings had remained for the consideration of the trier of fact, and defendants had prevailed, plaintiff's claim on the note not only would have been entirely offset but defendants also would have been entitled to substantial additional damages. Defendants concede even if they had proved, by way of affirmative defense only, that they signed and delivered the note to plaintiff induced by and in reliance upon the misrepresentations made by plaintiff, the "out-of-pocket" loss measure of damages prescribed by section 3343, Civil Code (see Bagdasarian v. Gragnon, supra, 31 Cal.2d 744, 762, 192 P.2d 935), would have frustrated this defense. Defendants contend however that this measure of damages would have no application to their independent cause of action against plaintiff and Alvarez in tort for damages for fraud involving the grant of the additional 35 per cent interest to Alvarez. For the reasons stated we cannot agree with defendants in this regard.

The judgment is affirmed.

FOX, P. J., and HERNDON, J., concur.

158 Cal.App.2d 746

Maria K. GREGERS, as Executrix of the Estate of Christian Henning Gregers, deceased, substituted in the place of Christian Henning Gregers, and Maria K. Gregers, Plaintiffs, Cross-Defendants and Respondents,

v.

PETERSON ICE CREAM COMPANY, Inc., a corporation, Defendant,

Milk Producers Association of Central California, a cooperative association, Defendant, Cross-Complainant and Appellant.

No. 17612.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

March 27, 1958.

Action for declaratory relief. The Superior Court, Alameda County, A. T. Shine, J., rendered judgment for plaintiffs, and the cross-complaining defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held that evidence would sustain finding that defendant had agreed, upon purchasing producer's business, to assume producer's obligations, under exclusive distributorship contract binding producer to supply frozen dairy products to plaintiffs at fixed prices, and that plaintiffs had not waived their rights under such contract.

Affirmed.

1. Declaratory Judgment ⇐347

In action for declaratory relief, evidence would sustain finding that defendant had agreed, upon purchasing producer's business, to assume producer's obligations, under exclusive distributorship contract binding producer to supply frozen dairy products to plaintiffs at fixed prices, and that plaintiffs had not waived their rights under such contract.

2. Assignments ⇐109

As a general rule, mere assignments of rights and benefits under executory contract does not impose on assignee obligations of assignor unless assignee consents to assumption of obligations; and whether there has been an assumption of obligations is to be determined by intent of parties as indicated by their acts, their words and subject matter of contract. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1589.

3. Estoppel ⇐56

Estoppel requires a change of position relying upon representation by other party.

4. Assignments ⇐109

Successors in interest are bound by construction reasonably given contractual terms by original parties.

5. Declaratory Judgment ⇐347, 369

In distributor's action against producer's successor in interest for declaration that defendant had assumed producer's obligations, under exclusive distributorship contract binding producer to supply frozen dairy products at fixed prices, evidence would sustain finding that it had been necessary for plaintiffs to institute legal proceedings to determine rights and liabilities of parties under contract; and that finding would support award of attorneys' fees, pursuant to distributorship contract provision that reasonable attorneys' fees should be recoverable by successful party if it became necessary for either party to employ an attorney to enforce any of terms, covenants, or conditions in agreement.

Nathan B. McVay, Modesto, C. O. Thrasher, Jr., Modesto, of counsel, for appellant.

Wells, Murphey & Coffey, Oakland, for respondents.

BRAY, Justice.

In an action for declaratory relief plaintiffs obtained judgment against defendant Milk Producers Association of Central California for $1,196.32 and attorneys' fees of $1,500, and that said defendant take nothing by reason of its cross-complaint. Defendant Peterson Ice Cream Co., Inc., was awarded judgment that plaintiffs take nothing against it. Defendant Milk Producers[1] appeals.

Questions Presented.

1. Did defendant assume the obligations of the contract between plaintiffs and Peterson? If so, was another agreement substituted?

2. Is the amount of the judgment correct?

3. Are plaintiffs entitled to attorneys' fees?

1. Assumption of Contract.

[1–3] December 31, 1950, plaintiffs and defendant Peterson entered into a contract by which, for a period of five years, plaintiffs were granted certain territory in which to sell Peterson's frozen dairy products and in which plaintiffs agreed to buy and Peterson to supply to plaintiffs said products at fixed prices. A conditional sales contract for sale to plaintiffs of certain equipment was included. Plaintiffs paid in full the purchase price of the equipment and both parties had complied with the terms of the contract up to February 19, 1954. On that date Peterson entered into an agreement with defendant effective March 1 by which Peterson sold defendant "free from all liabilities and encumbrances" the ice cream and ice cream products business owned by it, including the good will of the business, all customer lists, merchandise, specified personal property, trade accounts receivable, inventory, and "all other personal property" (except certain moneys). A bill of sale was executed at the same time describing the business and property as in the agreement of sale with specific listing of equipment and fixtures. A clause stated that the seller represented that all of the property was free and clear of all liens and encumbrances except listed accounts payable and taxes. The Gregers' contract was not specifically mentioned. The agreement and bill of sale provided that Peterson would not engage in the ice cream business in Northern California. This restriction included the area given plaintiffs in their contract with Peterson. The controversy is whether Peterson and Milk Producers intended that the Gregers' contract be assigned to and its obligations accepted by Milk Producers. For the first month after the contract went into effect (March) plaintiffs were charged the contract price. Thereafter plaintiffs were billed at a new price. There is a conflict in the evidence as to whether the conduct of the parties thereafter constituted an acceptance by plaintiffs of the new prices or an insistence by plaintiffs that they were standing on their contract rights and were paying Milk Producers C.O.D. charges under protest in order to continue in business. Likewise there was a conflict in the evidence as to whether or not it was the intention of Peterson and Milk Producers that the Gregers' contract be assigned and its obligations accepted. The evidence, although not overwhelming, substantially supports the court's findings that it was not only the intention of the parties that the Gregers' contract was to be assigned to defendant but also that defendant agreed to perform its terms. We do not deem it necessary to detail the evidence. Suffice it to say that there was evidence that Milk Producers negotiated with Peterson to purchase its going business and to hold all its customers and accounts, and knew of the Gregers' contract; that Milk Producers performed a contract made between Peterson and the Veterans' Administration and also two other contracts which like the Gregers' contract were not specifically designated in the sale agreement; that Milk Producers performed the Gregers' contract for one month after the sale became effective; that prior to the sale plaintiffs when informed by Peterson and his office manager Ellis of the proposed sale referred to his contract and was told by Ellis that he was staying on as manager for Milk Producers and that everything would go on as usual. There was a clause in the agreement by which Peterson was concluded from thereafter competing with Milk Producers in the territory covered by the Gregers' contract, which made it impossible for Peterson thereafter to perform the Gregers' contract. Milk Producers purchased all of the assets of the Peterson business except the real property (this, of course, would include the Gregers' contract); both by the terms in the contract "all customer lists," "all other personal property," and by transfer of the good will of the business, the Gregers' contract was necessarily included. (See Pecarovich v. Becker, 113 Cal.App.2d 309, 311, 248 P.2d 123, holding that purchase of "all other assets" of a ball club included an unmentioned coaching contract.) Peterson testified that in his negotiations with the general manager of Milk Producers the Gregers' contract was discussed although not shown, that it was regarded as an important part of the good will and that the manager wanted the business kept intact; that Peterson did not specifically mention the assumption of the contract by Milk Producers since the manager was interested in taking over a going concern as a whole and was not particularly interested in going into the details of all contracts or any individual contract, but was impressed with the fact that the Gregers and the three other contractors were sewed up. Significant circumstances are that the Veterans' Administration contract assumed by defendant had fixed prices and that defendant claimed that it and the two other contracts assumed by it had been expressly assigned but the assignments were never produced. The agreement of sale provided "Seller, up to date of closing, will operate and maintain its business in regular course, and will not violate the terms of any contract connected with its business." (Emphasis added.) In Stevens v. Selma Fruit Co., Inc., 18 Cal.App. 242, 123 P. 212, there was a situation somewhat similar to that here. The contract by which the new corporation was to take over the business of the old corporation, as a "going business" (and the agreement of sale in our case provided that the business was to be sold to defendant "as a going concern"), contained a provision to the effect that the old corporation would operate the business until the new corporation could take it over. The court there said that this provision among other matters indicated that it was intended that the new corporation should not only take over all the properties of the old corporation but also assume its obligations and contracts. Here there was testimony which would have supported conclusions that Milk Producers did not know of or intend to accept the obligations of the Gregers' contract. It was the province of the trial court to, and it did, resolve this conflict in favor of plaintiffs.

1. As used herein, defendant "Milk Producers" refers to Milk Producers Association of Central California.

Here there was evidence from which it could be concluded that Milk Producers knew of the obligations of the Gregers' contract. In any event, the evidence clearly shows they should have known of them. They, at the very least, knew that Gregers were customers of Peterson and in purchasing Peterson's business they were obligated to make some inquiry, if they had not already been told, to learn the terms under which Gregers were on Peterson's list of customers. Actually, the price for the good will of the business was based upon certain prices per gallon of the Peterson sales for the preceding year, which sales defendant's auditor checked. Of course, it is the general rule that the mere assignment of rights and benefits under an executory contract does not impose on the assignee the obligations of the assignor unless the assignee consents to the assumption of the obligation. Griffin v. Williamson, 137 Cal.App.2d 308, 309, 315, 290 P.2d 361. However, whether there has been an assumption of the obligations is to be determined by the intent of the parties as indicated by their acts, the subject matter of the contract or their words. Jegen v. Berger, 77 Cal.App.2d 1, 6, 174 P. 2d 489. The circumstances here support the court's finding that defendant intended to and did assume the obligations of the Gregers' contract and then when it found that its rigid price schedule made it somewhat unprofitable, tried to keep plaintiffs as customers but at a higher price. Section 1589, Civil Code, provides: "A voluntary acceptance of the benefit of a transaction is equivalent to a consent to all the obligations arising from it, so far as the facts are known, or ought to be known, to the person accepting." While Armstrong Co. v. Shell Co. of Cal., 98 Cal.App. 769, 277 P. 887, held that that section only applied to a person who was a party to the original transaction, Weidner v. Zieglar, 218 Cal. 345, 23 P.2d 515, referred to the Armstrong case as distinguishable on its facts, referred to three cases in California holding that the application of the section was not limited to parties to the original transaction, and stated "We might multiply considerably the authorities to the same effect as the first three discussed, but no useful purpose would be served." (218 Cal. at page 351, 23 P.2d at page 517.) It then held liable the assignee, although not a party to the original obligation, because of his acceptance of the benefits of the contract. See also Bergin v. Van der Steen, 107 Cal.App.2d 8, 19, 236 P.2d 613, similarly applying section 1589, and Witkin, Summary of California Law, 6th ed., p. 180.

Defendant contends that assuming that it agreed to the obligations of the contract, a new agreement or agreements were made substituting the new prices demanded by defendant. As stated before, defendant for the first month after it took possession of the Peterson business billed plaintiffs at the contract rate. Defendant contends that it did so because it had not discovered that the Gregers' contract contained a rigid price schedule. The Gregers' contract was in the Peterson safe along with other documents and the safe and its contents were taken possession of by defendant on March 1 although there is no evidence that any employee of defendant except Ellis, who was Peterson's office manager until the transfer and then became defendant's saw it there. On April 1, plaintiffs were notified that from then on they would be billed at a changed rate. Plaintiffs protested that they had a contract and expected defendant to live up to it. From then on defendant billed plaintiffs at the changed rates. At the time of the transfer plaintiffs owed Peterson some $5,700. Defendant wanted this money paid. There is a conflict in the evidence as to whether plaintiffs agreed to pay a specific amount each week on this indebtedness or merely what they could. As plaintiffs were billed at the new rate they would figure out what the contract rate was and send a round sum to defendant which they intended to include the weekly bill and a payment on the old. On October 23, 1955, defendant wrote plaintiffs that thereafter, in order that they continue to supply plaintiffs, all products would be billed C.O.D. on defendant's price list and that all orders received by plaintiffs would be accepted on the basis of that list. Plaintiffs immediately replied to the effect that they would insist upon their rights under the contract and the price schedule provided therein but would pay under protest on the C.O.D. basis for the balance of the contract period and would hold Peterson, "its successors and assigns, responsible for any damages" plaintiffs suffered. These facts do not constitute the making of a new contract or contracts. Defendant had plaintiffs over the proverbial barrel. To keep in business plaintiffs had to have products and as defendant had required Peterson to keep out of the area in which plaintiffs were located, the logical place to get the products was from defendant, to pay defendant's prices under protest and through the courts to maintain plaintiffs' rights under the contract. As a practical matter plaintiffs were benefitting defendant by minimizing the damages defendant would be required to pay if the court should hold, as it did, that defendant was obligated under the contract. The evidence is clear that at all times plaintiffs were insisting upon their rights under the contract, continuing to dispute with defendant, and complied with defendant's terms, if at all, under protest. There never was any meeting of minds between the parties on any new contract or contracts. For the same reasons, there was never any agreed, executed, oral modification of the written contract. D. L. Godbey & Sons Const. Co. v. Deane, 39 Cal.2d 429, 246 P.2d 946 is not in point. There there was an orally agreed change of basis of computation entered into between the parties before performance was started, the court holding that substitution of new rights and duties based upon the new method of computation and the additional duty of the plaintiff to provide daily reports was adequate consideration for the relinquishment of the reciprocal rights under the written contract. In our case performance under the written contract had started and defendant did no more than it was required to do under the contract. Moreover, the evidence supports the conclusion that plaintiffs by accepting defendant's products and paying the invoice price, if they did pay it,[2] still did not agree to defendant's contentions. While defendant seemed to put the situation on a "do it my way or not at all" basis, plaintiffs always insisted upon their contract rights. Defendant contends that the language in the sale agreement that the seller shall sell "free from all liabilities and encumbrances (except as hereinafter provided)" and in the bill of sale, the seller's representation that all of the property "is free and clear of all liens and encumbrances, save and except the amounts payable hereinabove referred to" and taxes already a lien, necessarily excludes the Gregers' contract which was not specifically mentioned in either document. To hold that "liabilities and encumbrances" means the obligations in a reciprocal executory contract under the circumstances here would be a distortion of the English language. Moreover, defendant itself by its action in the Veterans' Administration contract matter as well as its first month's operation under the Gregers' contract did not so interpret the terms.

Defendant cites authorities on estoppel (Wilson v. Bailey, 8 Cal.2d 416, 65 P.2d 770, and others) and contends that plaintiffs accepted deliveries on its price schedule thereby creating an estoppel with each delivery, as stated in the cases cited. Estoppel requires a change of position relying upon a representation by the other party. At no time did plaintiffs represent that they would accept defendant's price schedule other than under protest and while insisting upon their rights under the contract. There was no estoppel.

2. Amount of the Judgment.

[4] The amount of the judgment in plaintiffs' favor and the refusal to award defendant any sums on its cross-complaint were based upon the figures supplied by plaintiffs. Defendant first contends that the bulk-ice cream price was not applicable to the Sealrite ½-gallon ice cream containers but that the package price should have been applied. Evidence was introduced to the effect that in the trade ½-gallon containers were generally considered as package ice cream and bore the package rate. However, the evidence also showed that at all times during the existence of the Gregers' contract prior to its assignment to defendant, plaintiffs and Peterson had interpreted

2. In defendant's exhibit B–2 (the new account which ran from May to December, 1955), it appears that while plaintiffs no longer, as theretofore, paid in round figures, plaintiffs based their payments on the contract rate, so that in the first two weeks of that account there was a difference of over $1000 between what plaintiffs paid and the charges made by defendant. At one time this difference rose as high as $2,632.20.

the rate applying to Sealrite ½-gallon containers (but not to other brands) to be the bulk rate and not the package rate. This was for the purpose of inducing plaintiffs to accept and sell the Sealrite product. "* * * successors in interest are bound by the construction reasonably given contractual terms by the original parties." See Doll v. Maravilas, 82 Cal.App.2d 943, 949, 187 P.2d 885, and 12 Cal.Jur.2d 328. For the first month after the transfer defendant gave the same construction to the contract.

Defendant contends that it was improper to correlate the ice cream prices with the prices of butter on the wholesale market in San Francisco. The contract so provides. While defendant objected to this correlation when the price of butter fell below 60 cents, it objected and thereby prevented plaintiffs from showing that while plaintiffs received the benefit of the effect of 60 cent butter, defendant actually received the benefit of the effect of butter going above 75 cents.

Defendant further contends that the payments made by plaintiffs after the first month constituted an executed oral agreement to take its products at the rate billed after the first month. We have heretofore disposed of that contention by showing that there never was such an agreement.

3. Counsel Fees.

[5] The Gregers' agreement provides that reasonable attorneys' fees are recoverable by the successful party "if it becomes necessary for either party hereto to employ an attorney to enforce any of the terms, covenants, or conditions in this agreement."[3] The court found that it was necessary for plaintiffs to institute legal proceedings to determine the rights and liabilities of the parties under the contract. Defendant states that it does not quarrel with this finding but contends that it is not a finding that the attorney was necessary to "enforce any of the terms * * * in this agreement." It is obvious that an action to declare defendant bound by the contract which it expressly repudiated is an action to enforce the contract. Moreover, plaintiffs were required to set up the contract as a defense to defendant's cross-complaint and in obtaining a judgment against defendant on it they were successful in enforcing the terms of the contract. The finding was sufficient and amply supported.

The judgment is affirmed.

PETERS, P. J., and FRED B. WOOD, J., concur.

158 Cal.App.2d 779

Lois L. PARSONS and William H. Spencer, Plaintiffs and Respondents,

v.

Pete KAZANGE and Maudie May Kazange, Defendants and Appellants.

No. 9298.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

March 27, 1958.

Action to quiet title to unpatented placer gold mining claims. The Superior Court, Sierra County, Raymond McIntosh, J., rendered judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Schottky, J., held that amended location notice, including additional names not on original, could be treated as an amended notice as to old locators, and as an original notice as to added names, so long as rights of others were not prejudiced thereby, and could correct original notice's defective description, which encompassed more acres than the 40 allowed and claimed by the notice.

Affirmed.

3. Defendant does not contend that the amount awarded was unreasonable.

1. Mines and Minerals ⇐38(15)

In action to quiet title to unpatented placer gold mining claims, fact question was presented with regard to whether plaintiffs' predecessors in title had properly posted location notices. West's Ann.Public Resources Code, § 2303.

2. Mines and Minerals ⇐19(2)

An amended location notice cannot add new ground. West's Ann.Public Resources Code, § 2303.

3. Mines and Minerals ⇐19(2)

Amended location notice, including additional names not on original, could be treated as an amended notice as to old locators, and as an original notice as to added names, so long as rights of others were not prejudiced thereby, and could correct original notice's defective description, which encompassed more acres than the 40 allowed and claimed by the notice. West's Ann.Public Resources Code, § 2303.

4. Mines and Minerals ⇐38(15)

In action to quiet title to unpatented placer gold mining claims, evidence would sustain finding that plaintiffs' predecessors in title had complied with Public Resources Code section requirement that locator perform at least one dollar's worth of work for each acre included in claim consisting of more than 20 acres. West's Ann.Public Resources Code, § 2305.

5. Mines and Minerals ⇐38(20)

Where services of nontechnical nature are relied upon to satisfy Public Resources Code section requirement, that locator perform at least one dollar's worth of work for each acre included in claim consisting of more than 20 acres, judge may fix value from description of services performed, bringing to bear his own general knowledge, and he is not necessarily bound by express evidence of value of services performed. West's Ann.Public Resources Code, § 2305.

6. Mines and Minerals ⇐38(20)

In action to quiet title to unpatented placer gold mining claims, testimony that discovery work on claims had been done by removing seven cubic yards from each in two working days was not unbelievable as a matter of law, notwithstanding defendant's contention that it was highly improbable that two men could do work in time it purportedly took.

7. Mines and Minerals ⇐17(1)

The term "discovery", as applied to placer gold mining claim, means acquirement of knowledge that claim is reasonably valuable for such mining.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Discovery".

8. Mines and Minerals ⇐38(17)

In action to quiet title to unpatented placer gold mining claims, evidence would sustain implied finding that discovery had been made by plaintiffs' predecessors in interest, who had excavated an open cut and removed seven cubic yards of material but had not panned actual dirt removed. West's Ann.Public Resources Code, § 2304(b).

9. Mines and Minerals ⇐17(2)

Discovery shaft or its equivalent should disclose mineral-bearing rock therein, but discovery may be made elsewhere within location and validate it. West's Ann.Public Resources Code, § 2304(b).

10. Alteration of Instruments ⇐10

A grantor may, before delivery, make such alterations on deed as he desires.

11. Mines and Minerals ⇐34

Deed to mining claim was not void, as far as third parties were concerned, even though one grantee's name appeared before words "parties of the first part" and even though a signature was blocked out, where it was clear that such grantee was intended to be grantee, or party of second part, and blocked out signature was on deed when it was delivered.

12. Mines and Minerals ⇐38(22)

In action to quiet title to unpatented placer gold mining claims, it was for trial judge to resolve conflicts in evidence.

13. Mines and Minerals ⇐38(15)

In action to quiet title to unpatented placer gold mining claims, evidence would support trial court's finding that there had been a substantial compliance with mining statutes by plaintiffs and their predecessors in interest.

Victor L. Huber, Marysville, for appellants.

Alan H. Thieler, Quincy, for respondents.

SCHOTTKY, Justice.

Defendants above named have appealed from a judgment quieting the title of plaintiffs to two unpatented placer gold mining claims known as Atlas No. 1 and Atlas No. 2.

The record shows that the claims were originally located in 1920. In 1942, a John Finlayson and his wife acquired an interest in the claims and thereafter performed the necessary assessment work through the mining year ending July 1, 1950. Both claims were open for location after July 1, 1951. On July 1, 1951, a Vernon Aaserude and Raymond Minners posted notices of location on both claims. The notice on Atlas No. 2 was posted in a berry box nailed to a tree. The notice on Atlas No. 1 was nailed to a tree in a similar fashion, though it may have been placed in a tobacco can. Both notices were faulty. The descriptions encompassed more land than was claimed. The notice as to Atlas No. 2 claimed only 40 acres but the description encompassed an area of 160 acres. On August 18, 1951, the locators and their wives posted amended notice of location as to Atlas No. 1. This time they claimed a total of 70 acres. The amended location notice as to Atlas No. 2 was signed by the locators and their wives and an Anna Berg and a Terry Morrill. The amount of land claimed was 105 acres. Aaserude testified that he and Minners performed the required discovery work on each claim by making a cut or digging a trench from each of which an estimated seven cubic yards of material were removed. Notice of the discovery work on each claim was recorded on September 22, 1951. Proof of performance of assessment work was made for the year ending July 1, 1953. In 1954 respondent Parsons performed the annual assessment work at Minners' request.

In September, 1954, both claims were quitclaimed to respondents herein. The deed to Atlas No. 1 is executed by Raymond E. Minners, Jacqueline Minners, S. Vernon Aaserude and Dorothy Aaserude; the deed to Atlas No. 2 by the same four persons plus Anna Berg and Terry Morrill. A name is blocked out in the deed to Atlas No. 2.

Appellant Pete Kazange and his wife testified that they located a claim in June, 1953, and performed the necessary discovery work. This claim occupies part of the territory occupied by Atlas No. 1 and Atlas No. 2. They also testified that they never saw Aaserude or Minners on the Atlas claim in 1951 nor did they ever see their location notices or any evidence of work done by them.

[1] Appellants contend that respondents' predecessors in title, Minners and Aaserude, did not make valid locations on the two claims. They first contend that the location notices were not properly posted. Public Resources Code, section 2303, requires that a placer claim location be made "(a) By posting thereon, upon a tree * * * a notice of location, containing the name of the claim, name of the locator or locators, date of location, number of feet or acreage claimed, and such a description of the claim * * * as will identify the claim located." Mr. Aaserude testified that the notices were posted. He testified that the notice for Atlas No. 2 was in a box nailed to a tree on the rim of the hydraulic pit and that the notice for Atlas No. 1 was posted in a similar manner. While appellants testified they never saw either notice this merely created a conflict for the trial judge to resolve.

[2, 3] Appellants next contend that the location notices were invalid because an excess amount of land was included therein. The original notices were faulty because the description encompassed more acres than the 40 allowed and claimed by the notice. Amended notices were filed within 90 days, and even if the original notice was defective the amended notice corrected the defect before appellants located their claim. Appellants, however, argue that since the amended notices included additional names not on the original the amendment could not correct the defect. While an amended notice cannot add new ground (Clarke v. Mallory, 22 Cal.App.2d 55, 70 P.2d 664), we think it may be treated as an amended notice as to the old locators and an original notice as to the added names as long as the rights of others are not prejudiced thereby (Thompson v. Spray, 72 Cal. 528, 14 P. 182), and as such could add land.

[4, 5] Appellants also contend that the locators did not comply with the provisions of section 2305 of the Public Resources Code which requires that where a claim consists of more than 20 acres a locator shall perform at least one dollar's worth of work for each acre included. There was evidence that a road approximately 100 feet long was constructed on the claims in the fall of 1951 and that it gave access to the claims. While the work was not done by the locators it was done with their consent and they received the benefit of it. The amount of land covered by the claims was approximately 175 acres, and while there was no precise evidence as to value of the road construction work we believe that the trial judge could reasonably conclude that it was in excess of $175. For as stated in Estate of Reinhertz, 82 Cal.App. 2d 156, at page 160, 185 P.2d 858, at page 860, 186 P.2d 755: "In the case of services of a non-technical nature, such as here involved, the judge may fix the value from a description of the services performed bringing to bear his own general knowledge and is not necessarily bound by express evidence of the value of the services performed. [Citing cases.]" And in Johnson v. Snyder, 99 Cal.App.2d 86, at page 90, 221 P.2d 164, at page 167, the court, in affirming a judgment allowing $400 for the removal of fixtures from leased premises, stated: "There is no express testimony of the cost of removing the fixtures but for services of a commonplace or nontechnical character the trial judge can call on his own general knowledge of their value."

[6] Appellants also claim that Aaserude's testimony that the discovery work on the claims was done by removing seven cubic yards from each in two working days is unbelievable because it is highly improbable that two men could do the work in the time it purportedly took. The trial court believed the witness and this court cannot hold that the evidence is unbelievable as a matter of law.

[7–9] Appellants also argue that the discovery work would not qualify as such even if it were done. The testimony of Aaserude was that they removed the dirt to get down to bedrock. The actual dirt removed was not panned. The term "discovery" as applied to a placer claim means the acquirement of knowledge that the claim is reasonably valuable for such mining. 58 C.J.S. Mines and Minerals § 42, p. 88. Mr. Aaserude had previously found evidence of gold on Atlas No. 1. There were indications of prior mining operations and it was his opinion that the property could be operated profitably. As to Atlas No. 2, he had panned over there, found colors and saw evidence of previous mining activities. This testimony was sufficient to sustain an implied finding that a discovery was made by respondents' predecessor in interest and the removal of 7 cubic yards of material could comply with the requirements of section 2304 of the Public Resources Code which provides: "(b) In lieu of the discovery work required by paragraph (a) of this section, the locator of a placer mining claim may, within ninety days of the date of location, excavate an open cut upon the claim, removing from the cut not less than seven cubic yards of material." Furthermore, it has been held that it is not necessary that discovery be made in the discovery shaft, and as stated in American Mining Law, Bulletin No. 123, at page 355: "The discovery shaft or its equivalent should disclose mineral-bearing rock therein but it has been held that discovery may be made elsewhere within the location and validate it."

[10, 11] The final attack of appellants is on the validity of the quitclaim deed to Atlas No. 2. Appellants claim that it is invalid because respondent Parsons' name appears as a grantor rather than a grantee and a signature was blocked out. An examination of the deed discloses that Parsons' name does appear before the words "parties of the first part." However, it is clear that she was intended to be a grantee or a party of the second part. As far as the blanked out signature is concerned it may not avail appellants. The deed was signed by all the grantors. The deed is not void as far as third parties are concerned. A grantor may make such alterations on a deed as he desires before delivery. The deed as delivered had the blanked out signature on it. The deed, therefore, would not be void and respondents could rely on it to prove their right to the mining claim. 4 Tiffany on Real Property (3rd Ed.), p. 85; Miller v. Williams, 27 Colo. 34, 59 P. 740.

It has frequently been proclaimed by both state and federal courts that mining statutes should be liberally construed and that every reasonable doubt will be resolved in favor of the validity of a mining claim as against the assertion of a forfeiture. MacDonald v. Midland Mining Co., 139 Cal.App.2d 304, 312, 293 P.2d 911.

[12, 13] As is not unusual in actions involving mining claims the evidence in the instant case was highly conflicting. The case was tried by an experienced trial judge in a county in which mining has always been one of the major activities, and it was for him to resolve the conflicts in the evidence. While the evidence might have been more specific as to certain issues, we believe that, taking the record as a whole, there is substantial evidence to support the conclusion of the trial court that there was a substantial compliance with the mining statutes by respondents and their predecessors in interest.

The judgment is affirmed.

VAN DYKE, P. J., and PEEK, J., concur.

159 Cal.App.2d 104

Louise SWINGLE, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Betty Ruth HOFFMAN et al., Defendants and Respondents.

Betty Ruth HOFFMAN et al., Plaintiffs, Cross-Defendants and Respondents,

v.

Claude Arthur MITCHELL and Helen Louise Mitchell, Defendants, Cross-Complainants and Appellants.

Civ. 5605, 5606.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

April 2, 1958.

Actions arising out of collision between southbound automobile and eastbound automobile at uncontrolled intersection. The Superior Court of Kern County, Warren Stockton, J., rendered the judgments challenged on appeal. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, J., held that evidence had not required finding as a matter of law that driver of southbound vehicle had negligently failed to see other vehicle when she entered intersection.

Affirmed.

1. Automobiles ⇐245(39)

In actions arising out of collision between southbound automobile and eastbound automobile at uncontrolled intersection, evidence did not require finding as a matter of law that driver of southbound vehicle negligently failed to see other vehicle when she entered intersection.

2. Trial ⇐260(1)

Court was not required to instruct jury in particular language requested when subject matter of requested instruction was fully covered by other instructions.

3. Trial ⇐253(1), 296(1)

A so-called "formula" instruction must contain all of elements essential to recovery, and absence of any one of such elements may not be compensated for or cured by reference thereto in other instructions correctly and fully stating law.

4. Trial ⇐295(1)

In determining whether jury was properly instructed as to law, instructions taken as a whole must be considered.

Robert E. McGurl, Los Angeles, for appellants.

Borton, Petrini, Conron & Brown, Bakersfield, for respondents.

MUSSELL, Justice.

These actions arose out of an automobile collision in the intersection of Seventeenth and K Streets in the city of Bakersfield. K Street runs north and south and Seventeenth Street runs east and west. At the time of the accident Betty Ruth Hoffman formerly Betty Ruth Simpson, accompanied by her daughter, Diane Louise, aged thirteen, and by Leona Johnson, also aged thirteen, was driving a 1947 Plymouth coupe southerly on K Street. Claude Arthur Mitchell, accompanied by his wife, his adult daughter, Louise Swingle, and a Mr. Fagan, was driving a Buick automobile easterly on Seventeenth Street. The two vehicles collided in the southwest quadrant of the intersection.

On July 22, 1955, a complaint for damages was filed in the Municipal Court in Bakersfield by Betty Ruth Simpson, individually, and as guardian ad litem of Diane Louise Simpson, and Margaret Johnson, individually, and as guardian ad litem of Kathleen Leona Johnson, against Claude Arthur Mitchell and Helen Louise Mitchell. In this action the Mitchells answered and cross-complained. The matter was then transferred to the Superior Court and the complaint was filed therein on August 31, 1955. It was amended to increase the prayer for general damages and to show that Betty Ruth Simpson had married and that her name was then Betty Ruth Hoffman.

On August 29, 1955, Louise Swingle filed in the Superior Court of Kern county an action for damages for personal injuries against Betty Ruth Hoffman arising out of the accident here involved. These two actions were consolidated for trial and a jury returned verdicts in the action filed by Betty Ruth Simpson in her favor in the sum of $3,072.64, in her favor as guardian of Diane Louise Simpson for $1,500, in favor of Margaret Johnson in the sum of $108.89, and in favor of Margaret Johnson, guardian ad litem of Kathleen Leona Johnson, for the sum of $1,500. The jury further found against the cross-complainants Claude A. Mitchell and his wife and in favor of the cross-defendant Betty Ruth Hoffman (formerly Simpson). At the same time the jury returned a verdict in the companion action in favor of Betty Ruth Hoffman and against plaintiff Louise Swingle. Claude A. Mitchell and Helen Mitchell appeal from the judgment in favor of plaintiff and cross-defendant Betty Ruth Hoffman and against the said defendants and cross-complainants Claude A. Mitchell and Helen Mitchell. Louise Swingle appeals from the judgment entered in favor of Betty Ruth Hoffman and against plaintiff Louise Swingle.

The collision between the two automobiles involved occurred at about 3:00 p. m. on June 23, 1955. There were no traffic signals or stop signs at the intersection. Both streets were approximately 50 feet in width and they were paved and level. There was a large garage-type building on the northwest corner of the intersection, obstructing the view from both cars. The weather was clear and dry. The two vehicles collided in the southwest quadrant of the intersection at a point 37 feet south of the north curb line of Seventeenth Street and 17 feet east of the west curb line of K Street. The force of the impact knocked the Plymouth coupe, being driven south on K Street by Betty Ruth Simpson, 36 feet easterly and turned it around. The Mitchell Buick traveled easterly 51 feet before coming to rest and while traveling this distance, struck an automobile which was parked on the south side of Seventeenth Street east of the intersection. This automobile was parked with the brakes set and was knocked a distance of 16 feet by the Buick. The Buick also climbed the curb and struck a tree in the parkway before it finally stopped.

Betty Ruth Hoffman testified that she was proceeding south on K Street in her Plymouth at approximately 20 miles per hour and her testimony in this connection was corroborated by that of her daughter, Diane Louise, and by Kathleen Leona Johnson, who looked at the speedometer. Kathleen testified that the Mitchell car was traveling considerably faster than they were but she was unable to estimate its speed. She observed the Mitchell car some 25 feet westerly from the intersection as the Plymouth coupe in which she was riding had already entered the intersection. Betty Ruth Hoffman did not see the Mitchell car until after she had reached approximately the center of the intersection and it was then to her right. She had looked both to the right and to the left before entering the intersection and had observed no approaching traffic. The first time she looked she was approximately 25 feet north of Seventeenth Street and she again looked to her right when she was at the north line of the crosswalk. At that time she could see down Seventeenth Street to her right about half a block and saw no car approaching from the west. She then proceeded on into the intersection and had traveled about half way into it when she saw the Mitchell car.

[1] Appellants Claude Arthur Mitchell and Helen Mitchell in their appeal contend that plaintiff Betty Ruth Hoffman was negligent as a matter of law in failing to see the Mitchell car when she entered the intersection and that the verdict entered in her favor cannot be upheld for that reason. We are not in accord with this contention.

In Ribble v. Cook, 111 Cal.App.2d 903, 907, 245 P.2d 593, 595, the court said:

> "While to look and not see what is plainly visible may, under some circumstances, be negligence as a matter of law, Huetter v. Andrews, 91 Cal.App. 2d 142, 204 P.2d 655, that question is usually one of fact for the jury, Leader v. Atkinson, 49 Cal.App.2d 265, 121 P.2d 759; Prato v. Snyder, 12 Cal.App.2d 88, 55 P.2d 255 * * *."

In the instant case Mitchell testified that the Plymouth was roughly two car lengths away when he first saw it and he was then six or eight feet into the intersection and driving at a speed of 15 to 20 miles per hour. This testimony merely created a conflict in the evidence and there was substantial testimony from which it could be inferred that his car was traveling at a considerably faster rate of speed. It traveled 51 feet after the impact, knocked a parked car a distance of 16 feet, climbed a curb and struck a tree before it was stopped. The view was obstructed by a building on the northwest corner of the intersection and it was a question of fact for the jury whether plaintiff Betty Ruth Hoffman was negligent in not observing the Buick before she entered the intersection. We cannot hold that she was negligent as a matter of law under the circumstances shown by the record.

Appellant Louise Swingle contends that the court erred in refusing to give the following instruction:

"You are instructed that as a matter of law that the status of Louise La Rue Swingle, the plaintiff, is a passenger. Therefore, there is no issue of contributory negligence applicable to her. If you find that there was any negligence on the part of Defendant Simpson, no matter how slight, that contributed in any degree in causing the collision and injury to Plaintiff Swingle, then and in that event you shall return a verdict in favor of Plaintiff Swingle, and against Defendant Simpson."

[2-4] Complete and correct instructions were given on contributory negligence and proximate cause and the issues in the causes were correctly stated. The court was not required to instruct the jury in the particular language requested when, as here, the subject matter of the requested instruction was fully covered by other instructions Temple v. De Mirjian, 51 Cal. App.2d 559, 565, 125 P.2d 544. The offered instruction omitted the issue of proximate cause. As is said in Douglas v. Southern Pacific Co., 203 Cal. 390, 393, 264 P. 237, 238, "The authorities are legion to the effect that a so-called 'formula' instruction must contain all the elements essential to a recovery, and the absence of any one of such elements may not be compensated for nor cured by a reference thereto in other instructions correctly and fully stating the law." In determining whether the jury was properly instructed as to the law, the instructions taken as a whole must be considered. Trelut v. Kazarian, 110 Cal. App.2d 506, 512, 243 P.2d 104. The jury by its verdict absolved Betty Ruth Hoffman of negligence and we find no reversible error in the refusal to give the offered instruction under the circumstances shown by the record.

Judgments affirmed.

BARNARD, P. J., and GRIFFIN, J., concur.

158 Cal.App.2d 776

Paul C. HELMICK, doing business as Paul C. Helmick Company, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

W. R. RITCHIE, Individually and doing business as Ritchie Logging Company, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 9175.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

March 27, 1958.

Action to recover possession of a tractor. From a judgment of the Superior Court, Humboldt County, Delos A. Mace, J., in favor of plaintiff, defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peek, J., held, inter alia, that where defendant claimed that a third party with whom defendant had a contract for logging operations was real purchaser and that defendant was "out of the deal", evidence sustained findings that tractor had been sold to defendant and not to third party.

Affirmed.

1. Sales ⇐87(3)

In action to recover possession of one of three tractors sold by plaintiff to defendant, wherein defendant claimed that a third party with whom defendant had a contract for logging operations was real purchaser and that defendant was "out of the deal", evidence sustained findings that tractor had been sold to defendant and not to third party.

2. Replevin ⇐108

Where, although plaintiff's complaint originally contained three causes of action, at trial he elected to stand on the cause for recovery of possession of a tractor, necessarily, in regard to element of damages, the plaintiff thereby placed himself within provisions of statute that in action to recover possession of personalty, judgment for plaintiff may be for possession or value thereof, in case delivery cannot be had, and damages for detention. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. § 667.

3. Replevin ⇐76

Since court in action to recover possession of tractor, on substantial evidence, found that defendant retained possession without plaintiff's consent, plaintiff was properly permitted to recover the tractor or its value, and additionally to recover value of use of the tractor where the amount thereof exceeded the interest on such value, inasmuch as latter measure did not furnish adequate compensation for wrongful detention. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 667.

Blaine McGowan, Eureka, Sidney Ainsworth, Ashland, Or., for appellant.

Edgar L. Martin, Sandy, Or., Stanley J. Mitchell, Oregon City, Or., for respondent.

PEEK, Justice.

Defendant appeals from an adverse judgment in an action to recover possession of a tractor which was one of three sold by the plaintiff to defendant. Defendant contends (1) that the equipment was in fact sold to the Magnolia Motor and Logging Company, Inc., and not to defendant, and (2) that the court applied the wrong measure of damages.

The defendant Ritchie, who was doing business as the Ritchie Logging Company, was interested in purchasing some heavy equipment for use in logging operations he was conducting near Pecwan in Humboldt County under a contract with Magnolia. In January of 1953 he discussed with the plaintiff the possible purchase of three tractors, two of which were located at Kettle Falls, Washington. The third was in the possession of the American Machinery Company in Spokane where it was undergoing repairs and is the only one with which we are concerned on this appeal. Following a series of negotiations, an agreement was reached between the parties relative to the acquisition of the three tractors by Ritchie. As a part of the agreement defendant delivered to the plaintiff Helmick a personal check in the sum of $10,000 drawn on his bank at Ashland, Oregon. Helmick in turn delivered this check to one Ryan, his agent, together with three bills of sale executed by Helmick and running to Ritchie. Thereafter Ryan and Ritchie returned to Ashland where defendant maintained and shared an office with Magnolia. A check was then drawn by one Lamb, president of Magnolia, in the sum of $46,750 payable to Helmick. A second check from Magnolia to Helmick in the sum of $10,000 was delivered to Ryan to cover the check previously issued by Ritchie which had been dishonored. Ryan thereupon delivered to Ritchie on behalf of Helmick, two bills of sale covering the two tractors completely paid for but retained the bill of sale for the third tractor on which there remained a balance of $5,000. The evidence showed that the third tractor was not to be removed or taken from the possession of the American Machinery Company at Spokane unless, within 90 days, the $5,000 balance was paid or a chattel mortgage executed. This balance was never paid and the mortgage never executed. But in August of 1953, several months thereafter, the tractor was found in the possession of defendant and being used by him in his logging operations at Pecwan.

Throughout the trial defendant insisted that he had abandoned his "sale transaction for the tractors" and that the Magnolia Motor and Logging Company "took over"; his position being, as stated by his counsel, that when he failed to finance the deals insofar as he was concerned the transaction was abandoned and Magnolia then entered into an arrangement with plaintiff; that all sums were paid by Magnolia and title was vested in the corporation and he was "out of the deal." Although there was testimony to the contrary, this merely raised a conflict in the evidence.

[1] The findings of the court pertinent to the appeal were that plaintiff was the owner and entitled to the possession of the tractor which had a value of $14,000 on February 15, 1953; that Ritchie had obtained possession without the consent of plaintiff and, although demand had been made for its return, defendant refused to deliver possession to plaintiff; that the reasonable rental value during the time defendant retained possession was the sum of $11,500; and that plaintiff had been damaged in that sum. The judgment which was in accordance with the findings was that plaintiff recover the tractor and the sum of $11,500 as damages for its use, and in the event the property could not be delivered forthwith to plaintiff, then plaintiff to have judgment for the further sum of $14,000.

Defendant's argument in support of his contention that Magnolia and not he was the purchaser of the tractor is but a reargument of the weight and effect of the evidence, particularly in regard to the checks given by Magnolia to plaintiff in Ashland Oregon. The rule pertaining to the review of evidence upon appeal is at least presumptively too well known to warrant citation of authority.

Upon the question of damages, defendant argues that plaintiff was entitled to no more than the balance due on the tractor, together with interest. This is so, he says, because the plaintiff conceded that the evidence showed he had only a vendor's lien for the balance of $5,000 and could recover only the value of such special interest. We find no such concession in the record.

[2] Although plaintiff's complaint originally contained three causes of action, at the trial he elected to stand on the first, for the recovery of possession of the tractor. Necessarily, therefore, in regard to the element of damages he thereby placed himself within the provisions of section 667 of the Code of Civil Procedure which provides in part:

> "In an action to recover the possession of personal property, judgment for the plaintiff may be for the possession or value thereof, in case delivery can not be had, and damages for the detention. * * *"

[3] Since the court on substantial evidence found that defendant retained possession of plaintiff's property without his consent, he properly was entitled to recover the property or its value and additionally to "recover the value of the use of his property where the amount thereof exceeds the interest on such value, inasmuch as the latter measure does not furnish adequate compensation for the wrongful detention." Guerin v. Kirst, 33 Cal.2d 402, 414, 202 P.2d 10, 17, 7 A.L.R.2d 922.

The judgment is affirmed.

VAN DYKE, P. J., and SCHOTTKY, J., concur.

159 Cal.App.2d Supp. 841

Mercedes ENTER, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Lee CRUTCHER, Defendant and Appellant.

C.A. 9458.

Appellate Department, Superior Court, Los Angeles County, California.

March 18, 1958.

Action on two accepted bills of exchange upon which defendant was both drawer and acceptor, directing plaintiff's assignor, upon acceptance, to charge the sums so due to defendant's account in accordance with advices of defendant. The Municipal Court of Los Angeles Judicial District, Lucius P. Green, J., denied defendant's motion for change of venue and defendant appealed. The Appellate Department of the Superior Court, David, J., held that plaintiff failed to prove any probative facts by which court could hold that plaintiff had overcome prima facie showing made by defendant in affidavit to effect that defendant's residence was not in county where action was brought.

Order denying motion for change of venue reversed with directions to enter order granting defendant's motion and to transfer cause to appropriate judicial district for further proceedings.

1. Evidence ⇐81

Where two bills of exchange were accepted in Costa Rica, and action was brought on the bills of exchange in California, in absence of a contrary showing, Appellate Department of Superior Court would presume that law of Costa Rica concerning government bills of exchange was same as that of California.

2. Venue ⇐21

Where by acceptance, two bills of exchange became chargeable by payee to account of drawer, in United States funds, drawer's indebtedness to payee was personal and where both bills and acceptances were made in Costa Rica but it was not alleged that suit on bills of exchange was brought where contract of payment was to be performed, for purposes of suit on bills venue would be residence of drawer. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 395.

3. Venue ⇐21

The general spirit and policy of venue provisions is to give defendant the right to have all personal actions against him tried in county of his residence. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 395.

4. Domicile ⇐1

A person has only one residence at a time.

5. Venue ⇐28

The term "residence" as used in statute relating to venue does not refer to "domicile" but is used in the sense of live, dwell, abide, sojourn, stay, remain or lodge. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 395.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Domicile" and "Residence".

6. Venue ⇐28

For purposes of determining venue, one who is merely stopping over at a place in a hotel, motel, rooming house, or who is vacationing is not a "resident." West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 395.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Resident".

7. Venue ⇐28

For purposes of venue, a residence is established by personal presence in a fixed and permanent abode with the intent of remaining there. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. § 395.

8. Venue ⇐28

For purposes of venue, the fundamental elements necessary to create a residence in a particular place are actual bodily presence in the place combined with a freely expressed intention of remaining there permanently or for an indefinite time, without any present intention to remove from the same. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 395.

9. Venue ⇐66

For purposes of determining venue, allegation of plaintiff's verified complaint as to defendant's residence would serve as an affidavit. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 395.

10. Venue ⇐66

Plaintiff's affidavit with respect to residence of defendant made on information and belief, when submitted for evidentiary purpose, was hearsay and was to be disregarded. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 395.

11. Venue ⇐28

For purposes of venue, an "address" is not always synonymous with "residence". West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 395.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Address".

12. Evidence ⇐5(2)

While "address" could be synonymous with "residence," the receipt of mail by persons at places other than their residences is so common that the Appellate Department of the Superior Court would take judicial notice that a post-office address may not be the same as a residence address. West's Ann.Code. Civ.Proc. § 395.

13. Venue ⇐70

In action on bills of exchange plaintiff failed to prove any probative facts which overcame prima facie showing made by defendant-drawer, by affidavit, indicating his residence was not in county where the action was brought. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. § 395.

14. Venue ⇐70

For purposes of venue there should be much more required in an affidavit made by a person other than defendant himself and the affidavit of a person, other than defendant, should, to be of any value as proof addressed to question of residence, state some fact or facts by which court would be aided in forming some conclusion of its own upon question of defendant's residence. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 395.

Myers, Martin & Leedy, Encinitas, for appellant.

Ray H. Enter, Los Angeles, for respondent.

DAVID, Judge.

This action is brought upon two accepted bills of exchange upon which the defendant was both drawer and acceptor, directing plaintiff's assignor, upon acceptance, to charge the sums so due to defendant's account, in accordance with the advices of the defendant. The acceptances were executed in the city of San Jose, Costa Rica. No place of presentment or payment was specified in the documents in question. The verified complaint alleges assignment of the documents to the plaintiff, that residence of plaintiff is in Los Angeles, Los Angeles County, California, and that "Defendant is also a resident of Los Angeles, California."

The defendant made a motion for change of venue to the appropriate Municipal Court of Oceanside Judicial District, San Diego County, and in his affidavit of merits, under oath, declared: "That he is not a resident of the County of Los Angeles, State of California as alleged in plaintiff's complaint and that he has not been a resident of said county for more than fifteen years past; that he is a resident of the County of San Diego, State of California, and has resided at Ramona in said latter county for more than one year last past; That he has not at any time entered into any contract, either oral or written, with the plaintiff herein or with the assignor of plaintiff herein in the County of Los Angeles, nor has he entered into any contract with plaintiff herein, or with the assignor of plaintiff herein, the performance of which was to be made and had in the County of Los Angeles, State of California; * * *" Reference is made to all the record.

The plaintiff countered with an affidavit, under oath, in which she states, "That she is the affiant herein. That upon the ground of information and belief affiant alleges that the real and true address of said defendant Lee Crutcher is 615 South Pasadena, California, in that he has mail sent there." Defendant's verified answer, filed prior to the hearing of the motion for change of venue, asserts, "Answering Paragraph I of plaintiff's first cause of action denies that defendant is a resident of the County of Los Angeles, State of California, and alleges that defendant is now and for more than one year last past has been a resident of the County of San Diego, State of California; * * *" and realleges the same in reference to plaintiff's second and third causes of action in the form of common counts, for indebtedness, and for work and labor, respectively, in the amount claimed.

[1–3] (1) On the record before us, we must presume in the absence of a contrary showing, that the law of Costa Rica governing bills of exchange is the same as our own. Christ v. Superior Court, 1931, 211 Cal. 593, 598, 296 P. 612; Louknitsky v. Louknitsky, 1954, 123 Cal.App.2d 406, 408, 266 P.2d 910. By acceptance the bills became chargeable by the payee to the account of the defendant in U. S. funds thirty days after sight and acceptance, September 1, 1955, in each case. It would appear, therefore, that defendant's indebtedness was personal to the assignor, charged on its books against him in United States funds. Since both bill and acceptance are in the Spanish language, it would appear that the acceptance was made likewise in Costa Rica. It is not alleged that the present suit is brought where such contract of payment was to be performed. Hence, the venue is the residence of the defendant. Code Civ.Proc. sec. 395; Hayutin v. Rudnick, 1952, 115 Cal.App.2d 138, 141, 251 P.2d 707; Dawson v. Goff, 1954, 43 Cal.2d 310, 273 P.2d 1. The general spirit and policy of the venue provisions is to give the defendant the right to have all personal actions against him tried in the county of his residence. Turlock Theatre Co. v. Laws, 1939, 12 Cal.2d 573, 86 P.2d 345, 120 A.L.R. 786; Hale v. Bohannon, 1952, 38 Cal.2d 458, 241 P.2d 4; Deas v. Lido Lumber Co., 1955, 132 Cal.App.2d 402, 282 P.2d 90; Credit Bureau of San Diego, Inc., v. Clark, 1950, 98 Cal.App.2d 479, 220 P.2d 596.

[4] A person has only one residence at a time. As stated in Stone v. Everts, 1928, 203 Cal. 197, 198, 263 P. 236, 237, if defendants are residents of Fresno County "it must necessarily follow that said defendants are not residents of the city and county of San Francisco."

[5] In Bohn v. Better Biscuits, Inc., 1938, 26 Cal.App.2d 61, 78 P.2d 1177, 80 P.2d 484, it is said that "residence" as used in C.C.P. sec. 395 does not refer to "domicile", but was used in the sense of live, dwell, abide, sojourn, stay, remain or lodge. Some of the lexicographers indicate that "residence" also requires an intention to abide continuously, to dwell permanently, or for a length of time, to have a fixed abode; that to be a "resident", one must be an actual dweller in a certain place, though there may be a legal domicile elsewhere. Leroux v. Industrial Accident Commission, 1934, 140 Cal.App. 569, 35 P.2d 624, 626; Fort Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. v. Monell, 1908, 50 Tex.Civ.App. 287, 110 S.W. 504, 506.

[6–8] One who is merely stopping over at a place in a hotel, motel, rooming house, or who is vacationing is not a resident. Oelkers v. Hulseberg, 1951, 200 Misc. 352, 107 N.Y.S.2d 144, 145. A residence is established by personal presence in a fixed and permanent abode, with the intent of remaining there. Spurlin v. Siebrasse, 1951, 74 S.D. 150, 49 N.W.2d 604, 605. The fundamental elements necessary to create a residence in a particular place are actual bodily presence in the place combined with a freely exercised intention of remaining there permanently or for an indefinite time, Johnston v. Benton, 1925, 73 Cal.App. 565, 239 P. 60; Bryant v. Bryant, Mo.App. 1950, 232 S.W.2d 199, 203, without any present intention to remove from the same. Prince v. Inman, Tex.Civ.App.1955, 280 S. W.2d 779, 781, 782; In re Lesker, 1954, 377 Pa. 411, 105 A.2d 376; cf. Smith v. Smith, 1955, 45 Cal.2d 235, 288 P.2d 497; Hughes v. Illinois Public Aid Commission, 1954, 2 Ill.2d 374, 118 N.E.2d 14, 17, 18, 43 A.L.R.2d 1421; Southeastern Greyhound Lines v. Conklin, 1946, 303 Ky. 87, 196 S.W. 2d 961, 962; Willingham v. Swift & Co., C.C.1908, 165 F. 223, 224; Routt v. Barrett, 1947, 396 Ill. 322, 71 N.E.2d 660, 671; Fowler v. Fowler, 1945, 156 Fla. 316, 22 So.2d 817.

[9] The allegations of plaintiff's verified complaint as to defendant's residence serve as an affidavit. Atwater v. Argonne Van & Storage Co., 1946, 74 Cal.App.2d 410, 412, 168 P.2d 776; East-West Dairymen's Ass'n v. Dias, 1943, 59 Cal.App.2d 437, 441–442, 138 P.2d 772; Carnation Co. v. El Rey Cheese Co., 1948, 88 Cal.App.2d 857, 858, 200 P.2d 19.

[10] (2) Apart from the verified complaint, plaintiff's affidavit filed in answer to defendant's affidavit is not sufficient. First, it is made on information and belief. An affidavit made on information and belief when submitted for an evidentiary purpose is hearsay, and is to be disregarded. Franklin v. Nat C. Goldstone Agency, 1949, 33 Cal.2d 628, 204 P.2d 37; 2 Cal.Jur.2d p. 629, par. 19; Jeffers v. Screen Extras Guild, Inc., 1955, 134 Cal. App.2d 622, 286 P.2d 30.

[11, 12] Secondly, it relates to the "address" of the defendant. An address is not always synonymous with "residence". Stewart v. City of Rio Vista, 1945, 72 Cal. App.2d 279, 164 P.2d 274, 275; Ridge v. Boulder Creek Union etc. School Dist., 1943, 60 Cal.App.2d 453, 140 P.2d 990, 992; Smith v. Whiting, 1910, 55 Or. 393, 106 P. 791, 794; Munson v. Bay State Dredging & Contracting Co., 1943, 314 Mass. 485, 50 N.E.2d 633, 636. While "address" may be synonymous with "residence" (San Diego Savings Bank v. Goodsell, 1902, 137 Cal. 420, 70 P. 299, 302), the receipt of mail by persons at places other than their residence is so common that we must take judicial notice that a post office address may not be the same as a residence address. People ex rel. Arfman v. Newell, 1911, 49 Colo. 349, 113 P. 643, 645; C.C.P. secs. 1875, 1963(28).

Thirdly, the address as given is "615 South Pasadena, California." Whether this relates to a street or a city is entirely speculative.

(3) Since this affidavit on information and belief has no probative value, plaintiff's opposition to defendant's motion for change of venue must rest entirely upon the statement in paragraph I of the verified complaint: "Defendant is also a resident of Los Angeles, California." This positive statement, sworn to by plaintiff, perhaps loses weight, when plaintiff's later affidavit as to defendant's residence is based only on information and belief that defendant receives mail at some point which inferentially plaintiff contends is in Los Angeles County. An allegation that a person is a "resident" involves mixed questions of fact, such as his presence in a place, his intention to remain there so as to constitute it more than a transitory presence, and the legal status arising therefrom. In an early case, it was held that an allegation that a person was a "resident", by whomever made, was a legal conclusion which was to be disregarded. Bernou v. Bernou, 1911, 15 Cal.App. 341, 346, 114 P. 1000. In matters respecting change of venue, a statement of residence was regarded to concern the ultimate fact which the court, rather than the witnesses, is to decide. The defendant's affidavit as to residence was rejected, in favor of plaintiff's, setting forth a multitude of circumstances from which the court could determine the ultimate fact.

[13] But in O'Brien v. O'Brien, 1911, 16 Cal.App. 103, 111, 116 P. 692, it was held that such an affidavit submitted by the defendant as to the fact of his residence made a prima facie case. His intention to remain is a matter particularly within his knowledge, and his affidavit as to his intention as to residence is presumed to be made with full knowledge of the legal import of the term. The burden imposed upon the plaintiff is greater. In the allegations of the complaint herein, the plaintiff has signally failed to plead any probative facts which a court could hold overcome the prima facie showing made by the defendant.

[14] As said in O'Brien v. O'Brien, supra, 16 Cal.App. at page 111, 116 P. at page 696: "there should be much more required in an affidavit made by a party other than the defendant himself, and used as a basis for a motion of the character of the one involved here than in an affidavit to be used for the same purpose, made by the defendant, whether the affidavit of such other party [sic, person] is for or against the defendant. The affidavit of a party [sic, person] other than the defendant himself should, to be of any value as proof addressed to the question of residence, on a motion of this kind, state some fact or facts by which the court may be aided in forming some conclusion of its own upon the question of defendant's residence. * * * With the circumstances by which such affiant has arrived at his conclusion the court should be made acquainted and itself thus afforded an opportunity to pass upon their weight and value as proof of the fact to be decided."

The rule of O'Brien v. O'Brien, supra, applies to this case. Johnston v. Benton, supra, 1925, 73 Cal.App. 565, 239 P. 60. The affidavit of the defendant as to his residence not having been overcome by any competent proof, it was the duty of the trial court to grant the motion for change of venue.

The order denying the motion for change of venue is reversed, with directions to enter an order granting defendant's motion and transferring the cause to the appropriate judicial district in San Diego County for further proceedings. Jurisdiction to pass upon defendant's demurrer having depended upon the ruling on the motion for change of venue, the order overruling the demurrer is vacated, with directions to mark the same "off calendar".

BISHOP, P. J., and SWAIN, J., concur.

159 Cal.App.2d Supp. 848

PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Julius H. SILBERSTEIN, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. A. 3762.

Appellate Department, Superior Court, Los Angeles County, California.

March 20, 1958.

Defendant was convicted of vagrancy. The Municipal Court of the Los Angeles Judicial District, Julian Beck, J., entered order by which proceedings were suspended without imposition of sentence and probation was granted. Defendant appealed. The Appellate Department of the Superior Court held that where police officer, the only witness for prosecution, refreshed his memory in courtroom, just before he took witness stand, by reading his police report, and on cross-examination the court denied the defendant the right to inspect the report and to cross-examine the officer as to its contents, there was prejudicial error.

Order granting probation reversed and cause remanded for new trial.

Bishop, P. J., dissented.

1. Criminal Law ⇐1023(12), 1081

Where defendant was convicted and proceedings were suspended without imposition of sentence and probation was granted and defendant appealed "from the judgment and sentence", there was no "judgment" because no sentence was pronounced, but since an order granting probation has been made appealable such notice of appeal would be treated as a notice of appeal from the order granting probation and the proceedings at the trial would be reviewed in like manner as on appeal from a judgment.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Judgment".

2. Criminal Law ⇐1170½(1)
Witnesses ⇐256

Where police officer, the only witness for prosecution, refreshed his memory in courtroom, just before he took witness stand, by reading his police report, and on cross-examination the court denied the defendant the right to inspect the report and to cross-examine the officer as to its contents, there was prejudicial error. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1102; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 2047.

3. Criminal Law ⇐726, 730(16)

Where defendant commented on prosecution's failure to call a police officer as a witness, prosecuting attorney's statement in reply that he deeply resented inference that he was keeping officer away because perhaps officer's testimony might weaken the case and that under no circumstances would he withhold evidence was in nature of personal testimony and was improper argument, and error was prejudicial in view of closeness of case and seriousness of charge of being lewd person or loitering in or about public toilets in public parks. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 647, subd. 5; West's Ann.Const. art. 6, § 4½.

Louis Licht and Paul P. Selvin, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Roger Arnebergh, City Atty., Philip E. Grey, Asst. City Atty., William E. Doran, Deputy City Atty., Los Angeles, for respondent.

Before BISHOP, P. J., and SWAIN and DAVID, JJ.

BY THE COURT.

[1] The defendant was convicted of violating Penal Code, sec. 647, subsec. 5. Proceedings were suspended without imposition of sentence and probation was granted. The defendant appeals "from the judgment and sentence". There was no "judgment" because no sentence was pronounced, but since an order granting probation has been made appealable it has been our practice to treat a notice of appeal such as the one before us as a notice of appeal from the order granting probation and to review the proceedings at the trial in like manner as on appeal from a judgment. People v. Minter, 1955, 135 Cal.App.2d Supp. 838, 287 P.2d 196.

[2] A police officer was the only witness for the prosecution. His testimony, although in sharp conflict with that of the defendant, would be sufficient to sustain the judgment were it not for two errors which require a reversal. The prosecution witness refreshed his memory in the court room, just before he took the witness stand, by reading his police report. On cross-examination of this witness, the court denied the defendant the right to inspect the report and to cross-examine the officer as to its contents. This error was prejudicial.

People v. Gallardo, 1953, 41 Cal.2d 57, at page 67, 257 P.2d 29, at page 35, holds that when a prosecution witness refers to a document before taking the stand, and the defense makes a showing that the document is in the possession of the People, that it was made by the witness, and is material, and that it contains inconsistent statements, the defendant is entitled to inspect it, whether or not it is to refresh his recollection. The opinion states (41 Cal.2d at page 67, 257 P.2d at page 36): "No such showing has been made in the present case." This rule paraphrases Gordon v. U. S., 344 U.S. 414, 73 S.Ct. 369, 97 L.Ed. 447. The Gordon case significantly has been reinterpreted by its parents in Jencks v. U. S., 1957, 353 U.S. 657, 77 S.Ct. 1007, 1 L.Ed.2d 1103, 1111. Code Civ.Proc. sec. 2047 reads in part: "A witness is allowed to refresh his memory respecting a fact, by anything written by himself, or under his direction, at the time when the fact occurred, or immediately thereafter, or at any other time when the fact was fresh in his memory, and he knew that the same was correctly stated in the writing. But in such case the writing must be produced, and may be seen by the adverse party, who may, if he choose, cross-examine the witness upon it, and may read it to the jury, * * *". Penal Code, sec. 1102 provides: "The rules of evidence in civil actions are applicable also to criminal actions, except as otherwise provided in this Code."

The Gallardo case does not deny the defendant inspection of the written statement made by a prosecution witness, whether used by that witness on or off the stand. People v. Riser, 1956, 47 Cal.2d 566, 305 P.2d 1, distinguishes the Gallardo case on the ground that the conditions of production held to be necessary had not been met by Gallardo's counsel. But People v. Riser radically revises, and in fact gives the coup de grace to the holding of what is necessary for inspection announced in the Gallardo case. First, People v. Riser, supra, 47 Cal. 2d at page 587, 305 P.2d at page 14: "In the present case the court denied production on the ground that the statements could not be used to impeach the witnesses. We are at a loss to understand how the court could have reached his conclusion without even seeing the statements. Whether they were in writing or signed by the witnesses the record does not show, and it is safe to say that no one but the prosecution knew. * * * Obviously a defendant cannot show conclusively that a document is admissible without seeing it, and yet in order to see it he is told that he must show that it is admissible. The proper test for determining whether production must be granted is not whether the evidence has been conclusively proved admissible, but whether * * * 'there is good reason to believe that the document, when produced, would be admissible in evidence for some purpose in the case * * *.'" Compare Powell v. Superior Court, 1957, 48 Cal.2d 704, 708–709, 312 P.2d 698; Walker v. Superior Court, 1957, 155 Cal.App.2d 134, 317 P.2d 130. The court then states that the chance that the document may turn out not to be available for impeachment should not "block production at the threshold." At page 588 of 47 Cal.2d, at page 14 of 305 P.2d: "As in the case before us, the court was faced with a record that showed no reason why the statements once produced could not be used for impeachment."

This is entirely consistent with C.C.P. sec. 2047, as written, which may be invoked when each of the elements set forth therein is established preliminary to the demand. The right of inspection does not rest alone on C.C.P. sec. 2047. Cf. Powell v. Superior Court, supra, 48 Cal.2d 704, 706–708, 312 P.2d 698.

It is appropriate to quote from People v. Riser, supra, 47 Cal.2d 566, at page 586, 305 P.2d 1, at page 13: "Absent some governmental requirement that information be kept confidential for the purposes of effective law enforcement, the state has no interest in denying the accused access to all evidence that can throw light on issues in the case, and in particular it has no interest in convicting on the testimony of witnesses who have not been as rigorously cross-examined and as thoroughly impeached as the evidence permits. To deny flatly any right of production on the ground that an imbalance would be created between the advantages of prosecution and defense would be to lose sight of the true purpose of a criminal trial, the ascertainment of the facts."

The right to inspect a document in the circumstances of this case is different from the right to introduce it in evidence and the right to inspect cannot be denied although its admission in evidence may be refused if inspection reveals that its contents are immaterial. In addition, it hardly seems proper and may have been prejudicial, for the prosecution, while withholding the document, to offer to release it if defendant would introduce it, and then to argue its contents before the jury when it was not in evidence at all.

[3] Another error was committed by the prosecuting attorney in his closing argument. Counsel for the defendant, in his argument asked the jury to draw inferences unfavorable to the prosecution from the fact that another police officer who was present at the trial and present at the time the crime was supposed to have been committed was not called as a prosecution witness. In reply the prosecuting attorney said: "* * * he infers that I am keeping an officer away because perhaps the officer's testimony might weaken the case. I deeply resent it. I would never—anyway, that is an opinion that you have to base your decision on. I can only assure you that under no circumstances would I withhold evidence which would be in conflict with what you have heard here." This was in the nature of personal testimony, and improper argument. People v. Beal, 1953, 116 Cal.App.2d 475, 477, 479, 254 P.2d 100.

The charge under Penal Code, sec. 647, subsec. 5 is serious, and the case was so close that the errors disclosed cannot be excused under Cal.Const. Art. VI sec. 4½.

The order granting probation is reversed, and the cause is remanded for a new trial.

BISHOP, Presiding Judge.

I dissent. Let us note clearly that which People v. Gallardo, 1953, 41 Cal.2d 57, 67, 257 P.2d 29, 35–36, does hold. The situation there presented was of a witness who, before she took the stand, had refreshed her memory by examining notes which she had made earlier. It was held, first of all, squarely, with a citation of authorities, that section 2047, C.C.P., does not apply to such a situation, but that it authorizes an inspection by an adverse party only if the writing is made use of by the witness while on the stand. One may wonder what real difference it makes where the witness sits while he reads his own writings, but our Supreme Court, fortified by authorities, said that it does, and its decision has been followed in People v. Williams, 1954, 123 Cal.App.2d 226, 230, 266 P.2d 599, 602; Smith v. Smith, 1955, 135 Cal.App.2d 100, 105, 286 P.2d 1009, 1012; and see People v. Humphries, 1954, 127 Cal.App.2d 131, 134–135, 273 P.2d 562, 564.

People v. Gallardo [41 Cal.2d 57, 257 P.2d 35] then recognized that an "exception has been made [to the rule just announced] in cases where a government witness refers to documents before taking the stand and the party demanding the right of inspection lays a foundation by showing that the documents * * * are contradictory of his present testimony as to relevant and important matters," but went on to hold that no such showing had been made in the case before it, and concluded that the trial court had properly denied the request for an inspection. The Gallardo case did, therefore, deny the defendant an inspection of the written statement of a prosecution witness.

I find in People v. Riser, 1956, 47 Cal.2d 566, 305 P.2d 1, nothing that casts even a doubt upon either of the holdings in the Gallardo case. Certainly the Riser case does not undermine the conclusion that section 2047 does not authorize an inspection under the facts of this case, for that section was not mentioned in it, and there was no suggestion that the witnesses, in People v. Riser, had used the writings, sought to be inspected, to refresh their memory, either on or off the witness stand. The Gallardo case is cited, in People v. Riser, 47 Cal.2d 566, 586, 305 P.2d 1, 13 as one of several cases in which it had been held that production of evidence in the possession of the prosecution was denied "because the requirements justifying production had not been met." No criticism is made of the holding, nor any doubt cast upon the fact that a showing justifying production is required. Indeed, in People v. Riser the court states what is, and what is not required. The requirement is not that the defendant show conclusively that the document sought would, if produced, be admissible in evidence. The word we have underscored was used three times in the discussion, once in this summation (47 Cal.2d 587, 305 P.2d 14): "The proper test for determining whether production must be granted is not whether the evidence has been conclusively proved admissible but whether, as stated in People v. Glaze, supra, 139 Cal. [154] at page 158, 72 P. [965] at page 967, 'there is good reason to believe that the document when produced would be admissible in evidence for some purpose in the case * * *.' There must be more than a mere possibility that the statements when produced will contain contradictory matter and be in such a form that they can be used to impeach * * *." The conclusion then reached was that the "defendant sustained the burden imposed on him" for he had shown that "it was probable" that the witnesses' written statements were inconsistent with their testimony. Where in this is there a death sentence to the holding in the Gallardo case that a writing is inadmissible if neither used by the witness while on the stand nor shown to be useful for impeachment?

The most that is claimed for the writing sought in the present case is that it fails to contain, in its page and a half, all of the details related by the officer-witness in a lengthy cross-examination. There is entirely lacking a showing of any probability that the officer's written report contained anything that was in conflict with his testimony, or anything that would warrant the defendant's use of it. The ruling was not error, certainly not of so prejudicial a nature that it warrants a reversal of the order granting probation. Nor do any of the other "errors" warrant a reversal. I would affirm it.

50 Cal.2d 182

The COUNTY OF PLACER, a Political Subdivision of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

AETNA CASUALTY AND SURETY COMPANY (a corporation), United Pacific Insurance Company (a corporation) and Leonard M. Layton, Defendants and Appellants.

Sac. 6894.

Supreme Court of California,
In Bank.
April 8, 1958.

Action by county against judge and sureties on his bond and clerk, based on clerk's alleged embezzlement of county funds. The Superior Court, Placer County, James Snell, J., entered judgment against defendants who appealed. The Supreme Court, Carter, J., held that judge was not absolutely liable without fault for clerk's embezzlement under statute providing that no officer of city or judicial district is liable for moneys stolen from official custody, unless loss was sustained because officer failed to exercise due care.

Reversed with directions.

Spence, J., dissented.

Opinion, 317 P.2d 639, vacated.

1. Officers ⇐129

The terms of statutes dealing with official bonds and fixing obligation of surety within penal sum specified, are read into bond and become a part of it.

2. Judges ⇐36

Where judicial district was created, and employment of clerk was authorized, by county board of supervisors which set the salary and gave judge right to hire the person concerned, person hired as clerk was a servant of the government, and judge was not responsible for her conduct unless he directed it, participated therein, or countenanced it.

3. Statutes ⇐223.2(1)

Statutes relating to the same subject matter are to be construed together and harmonized if possible.

4. Statutes ⇐223.4

Where terms of a later specific statute apply to a situation covered by an earlier general one, later specific statute controls.

5. Judges ⇐36

Where earlier statute imposed absolute liability for any and all breaches of conditions of official bond executed by any principal officer, his deputy or clerk, but subsequent statute imposed liability for moneys stolen from a judicial district officer's official custody only when officer failed to exercise due care, subsequent statute was applicable when court clerk embezzled funds belonging to judicial district. West's Ann.Gov.Code, §§ 1504, 1953.5.

6. Judges ⇐36

Under statute imposing liability for moneys stolen from judicial district officer's official custody only when public officer fails to exercise due care, and under Penal Code statute which provides that word "stolen" includes embezzlement, judge of judicial district was not liable for embezzlement of district funds by clerk thereof in absence of showing of lack of due care. West's Ann.Gov.Code, §§ 1504, 1953.5; West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 484, 490a.

Robinson & Robinson and D. R. Robinson, Auburn, for appellants.

Alexandria B. Broyer, Dist. Atty., Roseville, for respondent.

CARTER, Justice.

This is an appeal by defendants, Aetna Casualty and Surety Company, United Pacific Insurance Company, and Leonard M. Layton, from a judgment entered upon a verdict by a jury. The verdict was directed by the court in favor of the plaintiff.

The facts are not in dispute. Defendant Sherlie Bennett (who defaulted) was the Clerk of the Roseville Judicial District Court in Placer County and had been appointed to that position by defendant Leonard M. Layton, judge of said court. On January 1, 1952, the Roseville Justice's Court was consolidated with the Roseville City Court whereby the Roseville Judicial District Court came into being. Judge Layton had been judge of the Roseville Justice's Court for many years prior to the consolidation and thereafter became judge of the Roseville Judicial District Court. After the consolidation the Placer County Board of Supervisors authorized the employment of a clerk and Sherlie Bennett was hired to fill the position at that time. She served until her arrest in November, 1954. In 1951, defendant Aetna Casualty and Surety Company bonded Judge Layton, as principal, with itself as surety, in the sum of $1,000 for Judge Layton's four year term which began on January 8, 1951. Defendant United Pacific executed a similar suretyship bond in the sum of $5,000 for Judge Layton's term which began on January 5, 1953. Both of these bonds were executed by Judge Layton. The county of Placer purchased a blanket employees' bond which became effective on February 1, 1954, and which covered Sherlie Bennett. The total amount of money stolen by Sherlie Bennett was set at $11,807.75, of which the blanket employees' bond paid off all but $4,548.50 and the prayer of the complaint was amended to conform to that figure.

On July 1, 1953, the county's auditors found a shortage of $1,647.25 which was called to the attention of the Placer County auditor who called it to the attention of the chairman of the board of supervisors who was also the supervisor from the Roseville District. The shortage was formally called to the attention of the board of supervisors on November 16, 1953. Sherlie Bennett had been allowed to make up the shortage and the formal written audit filed on November 16, 1953, carried a notation that the deficit had been substantially made up.

When the county's auditors began their fiscal year audit in July, 1954, more shortages in the Roseville Court were discovered and a special audit was requested of the board of supervisors. The special audit, as heretofore noted, disclosed a total deficiency of $11,807.75.

The chairman of the board of supervisors testified that he called Judge Layton's attention to the $1,647.25 shortage indicated in the audit report of November 16, 1953. Judge Layton testified that he knew nothing about the $1,647.25 shortage until the day after Sherlie Bennett was arrested. The record shows that during the time of the 1953 audit Judge Layton, a man 70 years of age, was seriously ill in the hospital and did not sit on the bench during September and October while he was recuperating from his illness.

The record shows that Sherlie Bennett used many different methods in embezzling the funds turned over to her in her official capacity as clerk of the court. As examples, she would alter the official receipts by changing one from $250 to $2.50; she would void receipts or issue no receipts at all; she also obtained for her personal use official receipt books which she kept in her own possession and which were never turned in to the proper authorities. Other methods used by her are too detailed to repeat here and it is unnecessary to do so since the conclusion is inescapable that she was guilty of the crime of embezzlement.

The primary question involved here is whether Judge Layton is absolutely liable under section 1504 of the Government Code, or whether he is liable only if negligent as provided for in section 1953.5 of the same code.

Section 1504, which was enacted in 1872 (Pol.Code, §§ 959 and 960) and as it read prior to the 1955 amendment, provides: "Every official bond executed by any officer pursuant to law is in force and obligatory upon the principal and sureties therein for:

"(a) Any and all breaches of the conditions thereof committed during the time such officer continues to discharge any of the duties of or hold the office, and whether such breaches are committed or suffered by the principal officer, his deputy, or clerk.

"(b) The faithful discharge of all duties which may be required of such officer by any law enacted subsequently to the execution of the bond."

Section 1953.5 which was enacted in 1949, and amended in 1951, provides: "No officer of the State, or of any district, county, city and county, city, or judicial district, is liable for moneys stolen from his official custody unless the loss was sustained because the officer failed to exercise due care."

[1] It is defendants' position that the 1927 amendments to Penal Code, sections 484 and 490a brought embezzlement and larceny within the word "theft"; that the word "stolen" includes embezzlement. Section 490a of the Penal Code, as amended in 1927, provides: "Wherever any law or statute of this state refers to or mentions larceny, embezzlement, or stealing, said law or statute shall hereafter be read and interpreted as if the word 'theft' were substituted therefor." It is plaintiff's position that the elements of the various crimes remain the same despite the amendment (People v. Tullos, 57 Cal.App.2d 233, 237, 134 P.2d 280) and that section 1953.5 of the Government Code applies where larceny, and not embezzlement, is involved. Plaintiff also relies upon the case of Union Bank & Trust Co. v. Los Angeles County, 11 Cal.2d 675, 81 P.2d 919, decided by this court in 1938, where the county clerk was held absolutely liable for the embezzlement of a deputy county clerk under the bonds required by sections 958 and 959 of the Political Code (Govt.Code, §§ 1500, 1503 and 1504). Defendants argue that the "harsh rule" of the Union Bank case was changed by the Legislature when, in 1949, Government Code section 1953.5 was enacted. In the Union Bank case, the court said (11 Cal.2d at page 679, 81 P.2d at page 921): "'It may be conceded that in the absence of statute the modern view is opposed to making public officers civilly liable for torts of deputies, where the latter are themselves statutory officers and not under the superior's unrestricted control or right of hiring and discharging. See Michel v. Smith, 188 Cal. 199, 205 P. 113 [municipal police officer]; Van Vorce v. Thomas, 18 Cal.App.2d 723, 64 P.2d 772 [deputy marshal of municipal court]; Pavish v. Meyers, 129 Wash. 605, 225 P. 633, 34 A.L.R. 561 [police officer]; note, 43 Harv.L.Rev. 327. The other view is usually grounded upon the identity of the officer and his deputy or the unrestricted right of control. See Foley v. Martin, 142 Cal. 256, 71 P. 165, 75 P. 842, 100 Am.St.Rep. 123; City of Duluth v. Ross, 140 Minn. 161, 167 N.W. 485; City of New York v. Fox, 232 N.Y. 167, 133 N.E. 434. In the instant case the clerk's deputies are independent statutory officers within the rule of such cases as Michel v. Smith, supra, and Van Vorce v. Thomas, supra. But this does not dispose of our problem. We are satisfied that defendant Lampton and his sureties are not liable under common-law principles of tort or agency. But liability may exist by reason of the language of the statute and the surety bond. See Grays Harbor Const. Co. v. Paulk, 179 Wash. 300, 37 P.2d 584; City of Chicago v. Southern Surety Co., 239 Ill. App. 628, 640. And upon an examination of the statute and the bond, it becomes clear that defendants are liable under their terms. * * *'" (Emphasis added.) Section 1504 of the Government Code provides for breaches committed "by the principal officer, his deputy, or clerk." The bonds executed by Judge Layton make no mention of any deputy or clerk as did the bonds involved in the Union Bank case. While in the Union Bank case the court specifically noted that the deputy who embezzled the funds was an independent statutory officer, the county clerk was held liable because of the language of the statute and the bond. The case is very like the one before us except for the terms of the bonds involved and except that after the Union Bank case was decided the Legislature enacted section 1953.5 of the Government Code. Insofar as the failure of the bonds to include clerks and deputies in the case at bar is concerned, the matter is covered by the case of Hartford Accident & Indemnity Co. v. City of Tulare, 30 Cal. 2d 832, 837, 186 P.2d 121, 124, where we said that "The terms of a statute dealing with official bonds fixing the obligation of the surety within the penal sum specified are read into the bond and become a part of it."

The rule stated in Michel v. Smith, 188 Cal. 199, at pages 201, 202, 205 P. 113, at page 114, is that "A public officer is not responsible for the acts or omissions of subordinates properly employed by or under him, if such subordinates are not in his private service, but are themselves servants of the government, unless he has directed such acts to be done, or has personally co-operated therein. 23 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 382; Story on Agency, 319; Robertson v. Sichel, 127 U.S. 507–515, 8 S.Ct. 1286, 32 L.Ed. 203 [see, also, Rose's U.S. Notes]. See, also, note to 12 Ann. Cas. 184. In opposition to this principle of law we are cited to those instances in which a sheriff has been held responsible for the acts of his deputies, but the respondent loses sight of the distinction between the two situations, which is recognized in the decisions. A sheriff is responsible for the acts of his deputies, for they are acting in his private service and in his name and stead, and are only public officers through him. The deputy is not the agent or servant of the sheriff, but is his representative, and the sheriff is liable for his acts as if they had been done by himself. Foley v. Martin, 142 Cal. 256–260, 71 P. 165, 75 P. 842, 100 Am. St.Rep. 123. A different rule prevails in the case of the chief of a municipal police department. He may even be charged with the duty of selecting the members of the force, but he is not responsible for their acts, unless he has directed such acts to be done, or has personally co-operated in the offense, for each policeman is, like himself, a public servant. Casey v. Scott, 82 Ark. 362, 101 S.W. 1152, 118 Am.St.Rep. 80, 12 Ann.Cas. 184. The question was squarely presented and considered in this last case. An ordinance of the city of Texarkana provided for a dog tax and the manner of collecting the same. It contained a provision that the chief of police of the city should employ a dog catcher whose duty it should be to enforce the ordinance. The action was one brought against the chief of police, the dog catcher appointed by him, and the city for the negligence of the dog catcher. On an appeal by the chief of police from a verdict directed against him and the dog catcher, the court said that, in so far as the relation of the appellant to the action was concerned, the dog catcher was a public servant selected by the chief of police, just as a patrolman would be selected by him or a mayor, or other appointing power, and held 'there is no liability in such case, unless the appointing officer fails to exercise reasonable care in the selection of the appointee, a question not presented.' See, also, a case somewhat in point, Baisley v. Henry [55 Cal.App. 760], 204 P. 399." The rule announced in the Michel case, heretofore quoted, has been followed in Kangieser v. Zink, 134 Cal.App.2d 559, 560, 285 P. 2d 950; Sarafini v. City & County of San Francisco, 143 Cal.App.2d 570, 575, 300 P. 2d 44; Reed v. Molony, 38 Cal.App.2d 405, 410, 101 P.2d 175; People v. Standard Accident Ins. Co., 42 Cal.App.2d 409, 411, 108 P.2d 923. In the latter case which was decided in 1941 it was said that (42 Cal.App. 2d at page 411, 108 P.2d at page 925): "'The modern view adopted in this state is that public officers are not civilly liable for torts of deputies, when the latter are themselves statutory officers or not under the superior's unrestricted control or right of hiring and discharging. Michel v. Smith, 188 Cal. 199, 205 P. 113; Van Vorce v. Thomas, 18 Cal.App.2d 723, 64 P.2d 772; Union Bank & Trust Co. v. Los Angeles County, Cal., 74 P.2d 240. [A rehearing was granted in the Union Bank & Trust Company case and the opinion modified and reported in 11 Cal.2d 675, 81 P.2d 919.]'"

[2] In the case at bar the position of clerk of the Roseville Judicial District was created, and the employment of the clerk was authorized, by the Placer County Board of Supervisors. Judge Layton testified that "The office of Clerk was created and I was informed to that effect before the new court system went into effect, I think, in December." When asked who filled the office and how it was done, he replied: "I was informed by,—I don't remember whether it was by a letter from the Board of Supervisors or by one of the members of the Board personally, that I was allowed a Clerk, and just what wording was used I cannot remember but it was apparently left to me to find somebody to fill that position." The chairman of the board of supervisors testified that "The position was created by the Board of Supervisors and under the rule that we used in Placer County we created the position, set the salary and the department head hired his own help." Under the rules of the cases heretofore cited and discussed it appears that Sherlie Bennett was herself "a servant of the government." In such an event, Judge Layton is not responsible for her conduct unless he directed it, participated therein, or, as one of the cases brought out, "countenanced" it. The record shows, without conflict, that Judge Layton cannot be held liable for the embezzlement of Sherlie Bennett under the rule stated in Michel v. Smith, 188 Cal. 199, 205 P. 113, and the subsequent cases following the same rule, since he neither directed, participated in, nor countenanced the clerk's embezzlement of the moneys entrusted to his custody.

[3–6] It has long been the rule in this state that statutes relating to the same subject matter are to be construed together and harmonized if possible (In re Estate of Wedemeyer, 109 Cal.App.2d 67, 240 P.2d 8; In re Petraeus, 12 Cal.2d 579, 582, 86 P.2d 343; People v. Trieber, 28 Cal.2d 657, 661, 171 P.2d 1; Lucas v. City of Los Angeles, 10 Cal.2d 476, 483, 75 P.2d 599; Pierce v. Riley, 21 Cal.App.2d 513, 518, 70 P.2d 206). Section 1504 imposes absolute liability for "any and all breaches" of the conditions of the official bond executed by any principal officer, his deputy or clerk; section 1953.5 imposes liability for "moneys stolen" from a judicial district officer's official custody only when the public officer fails to exercise due care. Under the Penal Code statutes heretofore cited and quoted the term "moneys stolen" most certainly includes the crime of embezzlement even though the elements of the crime itself remain unchanged. While section 1504 covers the situation here involved in a general way, section 1953.5 refers specifically to a "judicial district" and the liability of an officer for "moneys stolen" from his official custody. Section 1953.5 was added to the Government Code in 1949 (Stats.1949, c. 1598, p. 2845, § 1) and amended in 1951 (Stats.1951, c. 1553, p. 3537, § 15) by substituting the words "judicial district" for the word "township." Where the terms of a later specific statute apply to a situation covered by an earlier general one, the later specific statute controls (People v. Haydon, 106 Cal.App.2d 105, 111, 234 P.2d 720). As we held in Rose v. State of California, 19 Cal.2d 713, 723, 724, 123 P.2d 505, 512: "It is well settled, also, that a general provision is controlled by one that is special, the latter being treated as an exception to the former. A specific provision relating to a particular subject will govern in respect to that subject, as against a general provision, although the latter, standing alone, would be broad enough to include the subject to which the more particular provision relates." (See, also, People v. Moroney, 24 Cal.2d 638, 644, 150 P.2d 888; Coker v. Superior Court, 70 Cal.App.2d 199, 201, 160 P.2d 885; Whittemore v. Seydel, 74 Cal.App.2d 109, 120, 168 P.2d 212.)

Inasmuch as the Union Bank case, supra, 11 Cal.2d 675, 81 P.2d 919, 921, was decided in 1938 and prior to the enactment in 1949 of section 1953.5 of the Government Code and its amendment in 1951, and since this court there specifically held that absolute liability existed because "of the language of the statute" it is not controlling here.

Defendants also complain that the trial court erred in directing a verdict and thus removing from the case the issue of whether or not Judge Layton exercised due care. This contention is meritorious because of our conclusion that section 1953.5 of the Government Code is controlling in the case at bar rather than section 1504 of the same code.

The judgment is reversed with directions to the trial court to retry the case on the issue of the exercise, or lack thereof, of due care on the part of Judge Layton.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, TRAYNOR, SCHAUER and McCOMB, JJ., concur.

SPENCE, Justice.

I dissent. For the reasons stated by the District Court of Appeal, Third Appellate District, when this cause was decided by that court (County of Placer v. Aetna Casualty and Surety Co., 317 P.2d 639), I would affirm the judgment.

50 Cal.2d 174

WOODS IRRIGATION COMPANY (a nonprofit corporation), Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

The DEPARTMENT OF EMPLOYMENT of the State of California, and James G. Bryant (Harry W. Stewart) as Director of the Department of Employment of the State of California, Defendants and Appellants.

Sac. 6748.

Supreme Court of California, In Bank.

April 8, 1958.

Action by corporation to recover unemployment insurance contributions assessed and paid under protest. The Superior Court, Sacramento County, Malcolm C. Glenn, J., rendered judgment for corporation, and Department of Employment and its director appealed. The Supreme Court, Spence, J., held that where nonprofit corporation engaged in furnishing irrigation and drainage services to land owned by its farmer shareholders, owned no land or water rights of its own but maintained its facilities on property of its shareholders from whom it received grants of easements in perpetuity, corporation's employees in tending ditches and maintaining irrigation and drainage system were doing work essentially agricultural in nature and their services constituted agricultural labor so as to exempt corporation from unemployment contributions.

Affirmed.

McComb, J., Gibson, C. J., and Traynor, J., dissented.

Opinion, 316 P.2d 1003, vacated.

1. Taxation ⇐111.22

Where nonprofit corporation engaged in furnishing irrigation and drainage services to land owned by its farmer shareholders, owned no land or water rights of its own but maintained its facilities on property of its shareholders from whom it received grants of easements in perpetuity, corporation's employees including skilled laborers, in tending ditches and maintaining irrigation and drainage system were doing work essentially agricultural in nature and their services constituted "agricultural labor" so as to exempt corporation from unemployment contributions. West's Ann.Unempl.Ins.Code, §§ 1 et seq., 625, 626, 627, 628.5.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Agricultural Labor".

2. Taxation ⇐111.22

Where nonprofit corporation's irrigation and drainage facilities were constructed on easements granted by farmer shareholders for purpose of irrigation and drainage of their farms, and fees underlying easements and land surrounding easements were farmlands, corporation's employees working on easements were working on "farms" within section of Unemployment Insurance Code requiring services to be performed on farm in order to exempt employer from unemployment contributions. West's Ann.Unempl.Ins.Code, §§ 1 et seq., 625, 626, 627, 628.5.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Farms".

3. Taxation ⇐111.22

Employee's services which are essentially agricultural because they are performed on a farm in connection with cultivation of soil constitute "agricultural labor" so as to exempt employer from unemployment contributions, regardless of who might be the employer. West's Ann. Unempl.Ins.Code, §§ 1 et seq., 625, 626, 627, 628.5.

4. Taxation ⇐111.22

Where nonprofit corporation was engaged only in furnishing irrigation and drainage services to land owned by farmer shareholders of corporation, fact that corporation articles permitted it to perform services for persons other than its farmer members did not change nature of essentially agricultural activities of its employees with respect to statute exempting employer of agricultural labor from unemployment contributions. West's Ann. Unempl.Ins.Code, §§ 1 et seq., 625, 626, 627, 628.5.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Irving H. Perluss, Asst. Atty. Gen., and William L. Shaw, Deputy Atty. Gen., for appellants.

Jones, Lane, Weaver & Daley, Stockton, and Neal W. McCrory, Santa Rosa, for respondent.

SPENCE, Justice.

Plaintiff sought to recover certain unemployment insurance contributions assessed and paid under protest pursuant to the Unemployment Insurance Act. Stats.1935, ch. 352, p. 1226, as amended; Deering's Gen. Laws 1937, Act 8780d, Unemployment Insurance Code, § 1 et seq. The assessments covered the period from January 1, 1946, through June 30, 1951. Plaintiff pursued all prescribed administrative remedies before bringing this action. Its claim of refund is based upon the ground that the irrigating and drainage services performed by its employees constitute "agricultural labor" and so are exempt from the coverage of the act. The court signed findings of fact and conclusions of law sustaining plaintiff's claims; and defendants appeal from the ensuing judgment entered in plaintiff's favor.

Plaintiff is a nonprofit California corporation, engaged in furnishing irrigating and drainage services to land owned by its farmer shareholders. It owns no land or water rights of its own but instead maintains its pumping stations, canals and coordinating irrigating and drainage facilities on the property of its shareholders, from whom it has received grants of easements in perpetuity. Although plaintiff's articles of incorporation also permit it to furnish its services to persons other than its shareholders, it has never done so.

It thus appears that plaintiff is not a mere water company supplying water to the public for general purposes but that it is an "irrigation company," engaged in performing irrigating and drainage services solely for its farmer stockholders and operating solely upon the farms of said farmer stockholders. In other words, the only services which it is performing are services in line with its purposes stated in its articles of incorporation "of constructing, operating and maintaining ditches for the irrigation of the lands of the stockholders" and "for the construction, operation and maintenance of ditches for the drainage of lands owned by the stockholders." Its agreement made with each individual stockholder, which agreement is to "run with the land," provides for the prorating of plaintiff's costs of operation on an acreage basis with the amount of water limited to the irrigation needs of the farm of the particular stockholders as such farm is described in the agreement. The trial court therefore found that "plaintiff's only activity has been to furnish irrigation water and drainage service to the farms of its stockholders on a non-profit basis."

Plaintiff's services follow a definite pattern. It pumps water from the Middle River of the San Joaquin River adjacent to the lands of its shareholders and distributes this water to its shareholders through its canals and control gates. At the request of the individual farmer shareholder, plain-tiff's ditch tenders release water through the distribution canals for the farmer's irrigation needs. Likewise, when necessary, seepage and other excess ground waters are drained into feeder or lateral ditches and thence into plaintiff's drainage canals, from where the waters are pumped into a stream known as the Burns cutoff and returned to the San Joaquin River. Plaintiff has installed a large number of electrically operated pumps and has built many miles of canals throughout the lands of its shareholders for the effective performance of both its irrigating and drainage services.

Plaintiff's employees maintain and operate all its facilities. Their services include the cleaning, servicing and repairing of plaintiff's irrigation canals as well as its drainage canals. They clean the ditches, ditch the banks, cut willows bordering the ditches, and do other similar general maintenance work. Their work is confined in the main to plaintiff's operating facilities, and they ordinarily are neither required to go, or do they go, on lands outside the area of plaintiff's easements. Each farmer digs his own irrigation furrows. When a farmer needs water, he notifies the superintendent of the land division within which his land is located; and the superintendent, in turn, orders the release from the central ditches of a sheet of water which flows through the farmer's land. The farmer takes such water as he may need by controlling the flow of water from the central ditches into his irrigation furrows. The flow of water from plaintiff's control gates, however, is regulated by plaintiff. There is some supply to the shareholders' lands of subirrigation water from plaintiff's main canals and from its lateral and sublateral canals.

"Agricultural labor" is excluded in express terms from the operation of the Unemployment Insurance Act. Unempl.Ins. Code, § 625, formerly § 7(a) of the Unempl. Ins.Act, Stats.1935, p. 1226. The administrative agency created by the act, under its power to adopt rules and regulations, promulgated a rule defining the term "agricultural labor" as including services performed on a farm in connection with the cultivation of the soil and the raising of crops, including the "irrigating" which "may be necessary and incident thereto." Cal.Admin.Code, Tit. 22, § 43; see Stivers v. Department of Employment, 42 Cal.2d 486, 489, 267 P.2d 792. Substantially, these same provisions were applicable during the tax period here involved. In 1951, the rule so promulgated and as amended was made subject of statute. Stats.1951, ch. 1758, § 1, p. 4185. It was later codified as section 626 of the Unemployment Insurance Code. The question to be determined is whether the trial court properly classified the services of plaintiff's employees as "agricultural labor" within the meaning of the statutory exemption.

[1] The activities of its employees, as plaintiff claims, are performed as a necessary incident to the growing of the crops and the preparation of the soil for such growth by drainage. The labor employed in such activities is as essentially "agricultural labor" as is labor employed in the activity of plowing the soil and planting the crops. This fundamental proposition was recognized in Irvine Co. v. California Employment Comm., 27 Cal.2d 570, 165 P.2d 908. There similar services of the employees of the owner of a farm were held to constitute an essential factor in the efficient cultivation of the land and crops thereon so as to come within the statutory exemption of "agricultural labor."

The parties have not cited nor has independent research disclosed any California case covering labor engaged in irrigating or drainage activities where the employees were employed by a third person rather than by the farmer. However, persuasive authority in support of plaintiff's position is found in Big Wood Canal Co. v. Unemployment Compensation Division of the Industrial Accident Board, 61 Idaho 247, 100 P.2d 49. There the claimant for a refund was a canal company organized and operated as a mutual nonprofit corporation. Its only function was to maintain and operate a system for the distribution of water for domestic and irrigation purposes to its members, who were assessed pro rata for the expense of such service. The Supreme Court of Idaho held that the employees of the canal company were performing "agricultural labor" and therefore were within the statutory exemption of that state. In so deciding, that court stated at page 50 of 100 P.2d: "Irrigating the land is as much 'agricultural labor' as is the plowing, grading, and cultivating the land. * * *" See, also, Big Wood Canal Co. v. Unemployment Compensation Division of the Industrial Accident Board, 63 Idaho 785, 126 P.2d 15. In passing, it should be noted that in the Big Wood Canal Co. case some of the services were performed on reservoirs and connecting canals many miles distant from the farms being irrigated. The court there relied upon the definition by Congress of "agricultural labor" as including labor "in connection with the operation or maintenance of ditches, canals, reservoirs, or waterways used exclusively for supplying and storing water for farming purposes." 100 P.2d 49, 51. It is unnecessary here, however, to consider the broader question of the classification of labor employed for such purposes at places other than on the farms, for here all the labor is performed on the farms of plaintiff's shareholders.

[2] Defendants seek to apply principles of property law in segregating plaintiff's easements from the farm lands of plaintiff's shareholders and so conclude that plaintiff's services are not performed "on a farm" as required by the former administrative rule defining "agricultural labor," which rule is now embodied in section 626 of the Unemployment Insurance Code. But this tenuous distinction cannot be deemed controlling. While plaintiff's irrigating and drainage facilities are constructed on easements, such easements are merely rights of way across the farms of the shareholders, granted for the purpose of the irrigation and drainage of those farms. The fees underlying the easements and the lands surrounding the easements are farm lands owned by the farmers whom plaintiff serves. In tending the ditches and maintaining the necessary irrigation and drainage systems for the farm lands, plaintiff's employees are doing work which is essentially agricultural in nature, as it is a necessary incident of the cultivation of the land and crops thereon. Though technically working on the easements overlying farm lands, plaintiff's employees are working on the farms within the meaning of the applicable administrative regulations.

[3] Nor does it matter that the labor here involved is done by employees of plaintiff, a corporate entity as distinguished from its farmer members. Services which are essentially agricultural under all circumstances because they are performed "on a farm, in connection with the cultivation of the soil, * * * constitute 'agricultural labor' regardless of who may be the employer of the person performing such services." California Employment Comm. v. Kovacevich, 27 Cal.2d 546, 552–553, 165 P.2d 917, 921. In classifying such labor employed in services performed on the farm as a necessary incident to the cultivation of the land and the crops up to and including the harvest, it is the nature of the work performed and its locale, not the status of the employer as a farmer, which determine that the labor so employed is within the meaning of the "agricultural labor" exemption. Latimer v. United States, D.C., 52 F.Supp. 228; Stuart v. Kleck, 9 Cir., 129 F.2d 400; Chester C. Fosgate Co. v. United States, 5 Cir., 125 F.2d 775.

There are other types of services, however, which are not essentially agricultural under all circumstances. These consist of post-harvest services rather than pre-harvest services "in connection with the cultivation of the soil" or the crops. Such post-harvest services may or may not be performed "on a farm" and may or may not be performed by employees of the farmer. In classifying the labor engaged in the post-harvest services such as in hay baling (Dias v. California Employment Stabilization Comm., 113 Cal.App.2d 374, 248 P.2d 427; Enos v. California Employment Stabilization Comm., 101 Cal.App.2d 606, 225 P.2d 641; People v. Giesbrecht, 90 Cal.App.2d 569, 203 P.2d 101; California Employment Comm. v. Rose, 67 Cal.App. 2d 864, 155 P.2d 702), in packing-houses (Stivers v. Department of Employment, supra, 42 Cal.2d 486, 267 P.2d 792), or in warehouses (California Employment Comm. v. Butte County, etc., Ass'n, 25 Cal.2d 624, 154 P.2d 892), it has been heretofore held that it is the "nature of the work, modified by the custom of doing it," which determines whether the labor so employed is to be classified as "agricultural or industrial." (California Employment Comm. v. Kovacevich, supra, 27 Cal.2d 546, 560, 165 P.2d 917, 925.)

Thus, under the cited authorities dealing with such post-harvest activities, if the employees were employed by the farmer himself rather than by a third person, and if their work was done as an incident of the employer's own farming operation, their labor was generally classified as "agricultural labor." But if the employees were employed by a third person conducting a commercial operation in such post-harvest activities, the labor of the employee was not classified as "agricultural labor." It is true that the recent amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Code have expanded the meaning of "agricultural labor" to include some post-harvest activities not theretofore held to fall within the exemption. Unempl.Ins.Code, §§ 626–627, Stats. 1953, ch. 728, § 1, p. 1992, amended by Stats. 1955, ch. 608, § 2, p. 1100; § 628.5, Stats. 1953, ch. 308, p. 1473, repealed by Stats. 1955, ch. 608, § 1, p. 1100. There is nothing, however, in these amendments which would indicate that labor performed on the farm, as a necessary incident to the cultivation of the lands and crops up to and including the harvest, should not continue to be classified as essentially agricultural regardless of who may be the employer of the persons performing such labor. It should be noted that the above cited amendments, enacted since the expiration of the assessment period here in question, specifically exempt as "agricultural labor" persons engaged in pre-harvest "service performed on a farm in the employ of any person"; and that this particular portion of the statutory amendments substantially adopted the rules which had previously been embodied in administrative regulations. (See California Employment Comm. v. Kovacevich, supra, 27 Cal.2d 546, 550–553, 165 P.2d 917; Stivers v. Department of Employment, supra, 42 Cal.2d 486, 489, 267 P.2d 792.)

[4] It therefore is of no avail to defendants to argue that while plaintiff, a nonprofit corporation, has never performed services for persons other than its farmer members, its articles of incorporation permit it to do so and thereby its business would have a "commercial aspect." Stivers v. Department of Employment, supra, 42 Cal.2d 486, 490, 267 P.2d 792. Such factor cannot change the nature of essentially agricultural activities here, which are performed on the farm and as a necessary incident to the cultivation of the lands, as contrasted with a post-harvest activity such as the packing-house enterprise involved in the Stivers case. (Id., 42 Cal.2d at page 492, 267 P.2d at page 796.)

Defendants seek to isolate plaintiff's employees from the overall activity in which they play a significant part, and argue that they are merely skilled laborers engaged in the repair, maintenance, and operation of plaintiff's pumps, canals, ditches, and allied facilities. However, it is not the particular trade or skill of plaintiff's employees that controls, but rather it is the work that they are doing and the circumstances under which they are doing it that determine whether it is exempt employment. Here the services in question, performed on farm lands as a necessary incident to the cultivation of the agricultural land and the crops produced thereon, must be classed as "agricultural labor," though somewhat similar services might not be so classed if performed under different circumstances. Irvine Co. v. California Employment Comm., supra, 27 Cal.2d 570, 582, 165 P.2d 908.

The judgment is affirmed.

SHENK, CARTER, and SCHAUER, JJ., concur.

McCOMB, Justice.

I dissent, for the reasons stated by Mr. Presiding Justice Van Dyke in the opinion prepared by him for the District Court of Appeal in Woods Irrigation Company v. Department of Employment, Cal.App. 316 P.2d 1003 [hearing granted].

GIBSON, C. J., and TRAYNOR, J., concur.

159 Cal.App.2d 216

In the Matter of the ESTATE OF Merrill Coburn CLANCY, etc., Deceased.

Frank CLANCY, Louise Clancy and Marion Atherton, Contestants and Appellants,

v.

Estelle W. CLANCY, Leslie M. Clancy and Donald Clancy, Petitioners and Respondents,

Security-First National Bank of Los Angeles and Frank B. Clancy, Co-Trustees and Respondents

Civ. 22627.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

April 8, 1958.

Rehearing Denied April 30, 1958.

Hearing Denied June 4, 1958.

Proceedings for order instructing testamentary trustees to distribute corpus of a trust. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Orlando H. Rhodes, J., entered judgment which permitted an adopted child of testator's son to take under provisions of trust and testator's natural children appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fourt, J., held that evidence established that adopted child was person intended by testator to take share of trust that would have gone to testator's son, had son survived, under trust instrument providing that in case of death of any of testator's children before time of final distribution, leaving lawful issue surviving, such issue shall take share of trust estate, which parent would have taken, if parent had survived.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Wills ⇐439

A holographic will executed by domiciliary of California is to be construed according to intention of testator. West's Ann.Prob.Code, § 101.

2. Wills ⇐489(1)

Where an Illinois court had construed the words "lawful issue," in an inter vivos trust created by testator in 1928 as not including individual who had been adopted by testator's son but that construction had not been made at time testator executed a California will, Illinois' construction could not be considered for purpose of ascertaining testator's intention with respect to the use of the words "lawful issue," in the California will. West's Ann.Prob.Code, § 101.

3. Executors and Administrators ⇐315(5)

Where decree of distribution repeats terminology used by decedent in his holographic will, it is duty of court, in construing decree, to look to will.

4. Wills ⇐440, 441

Where uncertainty arises upon face of a will, testator's intention is to be ascertained from words of will, taking into view circumstances under which will was made. West's Ann.Prob.Code, § 105.

5. Wills ⇐497(5)

In construing wills, there is a public policy to treat adopted children the same as blood children in absence of some indication by testator that an adopted child was to be excluded.

6. Wills ⇐497(5)

Uncertainty as to compliance with formalities required to effect a legal adoption did not preclude adopted child from taking share of adoptive father under testator's will.

7. Wills ⇐497(5)

In proceeding for an order instructing testamentary trustees to distribute corpus of a trust, evidence established that testator knew that adopted child of testator's son was not natural child of son, that testator was vitally interested and concerned about custody of child and was willing to make provision for him when his son was involved in divorce proceedings, that testator referred to adopted child as his grandson and treated him the same as natural children of his other children, and at all times up to testator's death an affectionate and close relationship existed between adopted child and testator.

8. Wills ⇐703

In proceedings for order instructing testamentary trustees to distribute corpus of trust, evidence supported finding that adopted child of testator's son was person intended by testator to take son's share of trust, had son survived, under will providing that upon death of any of testator's children before time of final distribution of trust, leaving lawful issue surviving, such issue shall take share of trust estate, which parent would have taken, if parent had survived. West's Ann.Prob.Code, §§ 101, 105.

Colvin & Schnider, Andrew E. Colvin, Jack Schnider, and F. Walter French, Santa Monica, for appellants.

Fogel, McInerny & Taft, Moe M. Fogel, Cornelius W. McInerny, Jr., and William J. Taft, Santa Monica, for respondent Donald Clancy.

FOURT, Justice.

This is an appeal from an order instructing the testamentary trustees to distribute the corpus of a trust to appellants Frank Clancy, Louise Clancy and Marion Atherton (hereinafter referred to as appellants), who are the surviving children of the trustor, Merrill Coburn Clancy, and to Donald Clancy, as the "lawful issue" of Leslie M. Clancy, a child of Merrill Coburn Clancy, who survived him but died prior to distribution of the trust.

The decedent Merrill Coburn Clancy died in 1949, and his holographic will dated January 9, 1947, contained the following provisions:

"Third: I give and bequeath to my grand children Marjorie, Sister, Bob, Don and my wife's grandchildren Jean and Peggy, each the sum of One Thousand ($1000.00) in cash or securities to be selected by my Executors." (Emphasis added.)

"Eighth: * * * C Upon the death of my said wife, said Trustees shall pay deliver and convey all of the remainder of said trust estate in equal parts to my children Leslie, Marion, Frank and Louise.

"D In case of the death of any of my said children before the time of final distribution of my said trust estate leaving lawful issue surviving, such issue shall take the share of my said trust estate, which the parent would have taken, if the parent had survived.

"E In case of the death of any of my said children before the time of final distribution of my said trust estate leaving no lawful issue surviving, the share which one of my children so dying would have received, if he or she had survived shall go to enhance and increase the shares of the survivors of my said children and the lawful issue if any of my said children who may have died leaving lawful issue surviving, in equal shares per stirpes and not per capita."

This will was admitted to probate and the decree of distribution establishing the trust which was to continue for the period of the natural life of Estelle W. Clancy, decedent's widow, was signed by Judge Stanley Mosk on April 22, 1952. The decree of distribution contained the following provisions:

"D. Upon the death of the said Estelle W. Clancy, the entire remainder of said trust estate shall be divided in four equal shares, one share each for Leslie M. Clancy, Marion C. Atherton, Frank Clancy and Louise Clancy, and said shares are to be conveyed and distributed to said persons.

"E. In the event that any of said persons shall be deceased at the time of said final distribution of said trust estate, leaving lawful issue surviving them, such issue shall take the share of said trust estate which the parent would have taken had the said parent survived.

"F. In the event of the death of any of the four named persons: Leslie M. Clancy, Marion C. Atherton, Frank Clancy and Louise Clancy, before the time of final distribution of said estate, and their leaving no lawful issue surviving them, then the share which said deceased person would have received if he or she had survived, shall go to enhance and increase the shares of the survivors of said persons, and the lawful issue of any of said persons, who may have died leaving lawful issues surviving, in equal shares per stirpes and not per capita."

Leslie M. Clancy died June 29, 1954, and Estelle W. Clancy died August 25, 1955.

The "Third and Final Account * * * Petition for Distribution of Trust Estate * * *," signed by Frank B. Clancy and The Security-First National Bank of Los Angeles, as Trustees, was filed January 20, 1956, and contained the following provisions:

"That Leslie M. Clancy predeceased the life tenant, Estelle W. Clancy, and that in accordance with the last Will and Testament of the decedent and the decree establishing the trust therein the share which he would have taken shall go to his lawful issue surviving him and otherwise it shall go to increase proportionately the shares of the said Frank B. Clancy, Louise Clancy and Marian C. Atherton; that petitioners are informed and believe and therefore allege that Leslie M. Clancy left no blood issue surviving him but that one Donald Clancy represents and claims to be the adopted son of the said Leslie M. Clancy and entitled to take and receive the distributive share of the said Leslie M. Clancy.

"That by reason of the claim of the said Donald Clancy to the share of the said Leslie M. Clancy a controversy has arisen between him and the other remaindermen and that petitioners are unable to determine to whom distribution of the share of Leslie M. Clancy should be made."

Donald Clancy, (hereinafter called respondent) filed an answer thereto, and also filed a petition on February 15, 1956, alleging as follows:

"VI

Your petitioner, Donald Clancy is the person designated by the said Will, Exhibit 'A' hereof, and the Decree of Distribution, Exhibit 'B' hereof, to receive the share of the trust estate which would have gone to Leslie M. Clancy, son of said decedent, had he survived Estelle W. Clancy."

Respondent prayed for distribution to him of one-fourth of the trust properties, together with one-fourth of the undistributed income, after payment of proper expenses and fees.

Appellants filed an answer to the affirmative statements in respondent's answer, and also filed an answer on April 25, 1956, to respondent's petition, which contained the following:

"I

"In answer to paragraph VI of said petition, these answering parties, deny that Donald Clancy is the person designated by the said Will or Decree of Distribution to receive the share of the trust estate which would have gone to Leslie M. Clancy, son of said decedent, had he survived Estelle W. Clancy.

"II

"Your petitioners further allege that upon the death of Leslie M. Clancy, he did not leave surviving him any 'lawful issue', that there is therefore no 'lawful issue' surviving Leslie M. Clancy to take the share which he would have taken under the Will of the late Merrill Coburn Clancy.

"III

"Your petitioners, Frank Clancy, Louise Clancy and Marion Atherton, named in the Will and Decree of Distribution of the estate of Merrill Coburn Clancy do in effect dispute and contest the right of Donald Clancy to take any portion of said trust estate."

The matter was heard, and the following findings of fact were made by the trial court:

"9. That said deceased Leslie M. Clancy left surviving him no natural children or other issue of his body.

"10. That Leslie M. Clancy left surviving him Donald Clancy whom Leslie M. Clancy believed to be his duly and lawfully adopted child. That Donald Clancy was reared by Leslie M. Clancy as his child and at all times said Leslie M. Clancy and Donald Clancy bore toward each other the relationship of father and son respectively.

"11. That said Merrill Coburn Clancy, deceased, in his lifetime and at the time of making his will, believed that Donald Clancy was the duly and lawfully adopted child of his son, Leslie M. Clancy.

"12. That said Merrill Coburn Clancy, at all times, showed the same love and affection towards said Donald Clancy as if he were the natural child of his son, Leslie M. Clancy, and said Merrill Coburn Clancy in his will designated said Donald Clancy as his grandchild.

"13. That Estelle W. Clancy died on or about the 25th day of August, 1955.

"14. That Donald Clancy is the person intended by said Merrill Coburn Clancy, and is the person who by the terms of the said will of said Merrill Coburn Clancy, deceased, was intended by said Merrill Coburn Clancy, to take the share of the trust estate of said Merrill Coburn Clancy that would have gone to Leslie M. Clancy, son of said Merrill Coburn Clancy, had said Leslie M. Clancy survived distribution of said trust.

"15. That said Donald Clancy is the person designated by the will of said Merrill Coburn Clancy, deceased, and the Order of Distribution in the estate of said deceased, as the lawful issue of Leslie M. Clancy, deceased.

"16. That at the date of death of said Estelle W. Clancy, the beneficiaries of the trust estate of Merrill Coburn Clancy, deceased, and their respective interests in said trust estate at said time were as follows:

"a. Frank B. Clancy	one-fourth (¼) interest
"b. Louise Clancy	one-fourth (¼) interest
"c. Marion C. Atherton	one-fourth (¼) interest
"d. Donald Clancy	one-fourth (¼) interest" and on January 4, 1957, an order was made for distribution of the trust estate, as follows:

"It is further ordered, adjudged and decreed that the life tenant having died on August 25, 1955, the said trust terminated and the net estate upon such termination vested as follows:

"One-fourth thereof to Frank B. Clancy;
"One-fourth thereof to Louise Clancy;
"One-fourth thereof to Marion C. Atherton; and "One-fourth thereof to Donald Clancy."

In this appeal it is contended that the decree of distribution and the will are clear and unambiguous; that it was error to permit extrinsic evidence to be introduced to disclose the intention of decedent; that the evidence was insufficient to support the findings of fact; and that respondent, in order to qualify under the will as the "lawful issue" of Leslie M. Clancy had the burden of proving every element of a formal adoption.

Appellants argue that "To reach the conclusion of the trial court that Merrill Coburn Clancy 'intended' and 'designated' Donald Clancy to take the share of the trust that would have gone to Leslie, it is necessary to impeach the decree of distribution which provides in plain language that a deceased 'parent's' share shall go to his or her 'lawful issue,' which under many decided cases would not have included an adopted child, if an adoption had been established."

[1, 2] This argument assumes, as appellants contend, that the words "lawful issue" are clear and unambiguous, and include only actual physical offspring. Appellants have also set forth in their reply brief that "lawful issue" was recently construed by an Illinois court in an inter vivos trust created in 1928 by the decedent Merrill Coburn Clancy as not to include respondent. Suffice it to say that a holographic will executed in California in 1947 by a domiciliary of California is to be construed according to the intention of the testator. Probate Code, § 101. Inasmuch as the determination of the Illinois court had not been made at the time the will in question was executed, it cannot be considered for the purpose of ascertaining his intention.

[3] The decree of distribution repeats the terminology used by decedent in his holographic will. Under such circumstances, it has been held to be the duty of the court, in construing the decree, to look to the will. See In re Estate of Lockhart, 21 Cal.App.2d 574, 579, 69 P.2d 1001, and cases cited thereat.

[4] It is fundamental in interpreting wills in California that when an uncertainty arises upon the face of a will, the testator's intention is to be ascertained from the words of the will, taking into view the circumstances under which it was made. Probate Code, § 105. That the use of the words "lawful issue" may create such an uncertainty was established in Re Estate of Pierce, 32 Cal.2d 265, 196 P.2d 1. It was stated therein (32 Cal.2d at page 273, 196 P.2d at page 6): "As a layman using the words 'lawful issue' in a holographic will he may have intended to distinguish legitimate from illegitimate children, adopted from natural children, legitimate children of the blood of the testator from adopted or illegitimate children, or he may have intended to include children of his legatees that they regard as their lawful issue. In view of the uncertainty appearing on the face of the will, it was proper for the trial court to admit evidence of the circumstances preceding the execution of the instrument to determine what the testator meant by 'children (lawful issue)' in the first provision quoted above, and by 'grandchildren being the lawful issue' in the second provision quoted above." In the same case, with reference to the inclusion of an adopted child within the meaning of "lawful issue," it was stated (32 Cal.2d at page 271, 196 P.2d at page 5), "Moreover, the meaning of the term has frequently been determined by the circumstances surrounding the execution of the will, such as the testator's knowledge of the adoption and his approval or disapproval thereof (citing cases and authorities), or the testator's knowledge of the inability of persons, whose 'issue' are provided for in the will to bear children."

[5] In considering whether adoption statutes may be considered in ascertaining whether "lawful issue" includes adopted children, and in deciding recently in Re Estate of Heard, 49 Cal.2d 514, 319 P.2d 637, that "issue" or "lawful issue" may include adopted children, the court stressed the public policy to treat adopted children the same as blood children in the absence of some indication by the testator that an adopted child was to be excluded. In this case, the court, speaking through Mr. Justice Carter, discussed the genetic theory and the theory that "natural inclinations and affection" derive from family experience and contact, and stated (49 Cal.2d at page 521, 319 P.2d at page 642), "On the family experience and contact theory, the relatives of the adoptive parents, lineal and collateral, become the relatives of the adopted child. Normally, they are the only grandparents, uncles, aunts, brothers, sisters and cousins he knows. His genetic grandparents, uncles, aunts, brothers, sisters and other relatives in a sizeable percentage of cases of illegitimate birth will not even have been aware of his existence; and in many other instances will have known him only very briefly prior to his surrender for adoption as a very young infant."

[6] In view of the uncertainty as to compliance by Leslie M. Clancy and Beatrice Clancy with the formalities required to effect a legal adoption of Donald Clancy, the problem of whether respondent could qualify for inclusion within the term "lawful issue" is simplified by the recent decision of the Supreme Court in Re Estate of Stanford, 49 Cal.2d 120, 315 P.2d 681.

In this case, speaking through Mr. Justice Carter, the Supreme Court stated (49 Cal.2d at page 135, 315 P.2d at page 689), "It has been the policy of this state, at least since the adoption of the Civil Code, to accord to adopted children the same status as natural children." The effect of compliance or non-compliance with the statutory formalities pertaining to adoption was also considered, the court stating (49 Cal.2d at page 142, 315 P.2d at page 694), "While there may have been some irregularities in the proceeding they are not of sufficient importance upon which to base a collateral attack. * * * The adoption has stood for many years, since 1924, without attack by anyone. See In re Estate of Smith, 86 Cal.App.2d 456, 195 P.2d 842. Standford University has not established that the adoption was void and it must be presumed to have been valid. In re Estate of Smith, supra, 86 Cal.App.2d 456, 195 P.2d 842. The effect of adoption under the New York law and construction of the will is not important. We are not here concerned with a question of inheritance but with the construction of a will, and whether 'child or children' includes adopted persons. The construction of the will is governed by California law (see Prob.Code, § 100; Rest., Conflicts, Sec. 308)." (Emphasis added.)

[7] The evidence presented in this case indicates that at all times decedent knew that respondent was not the natural child of his son Leslie M. Clancy; that decedent was vitally interested and concerned about the custody of the child and was willing to make provision for him in 1929 when his son Leslie M. Clancy and his then wife were involved in divorce proceedings; that decedent referred to respondent as his grandson and treated him the same as the natural children of his other children; and that at all times up to decedent's death an affectionate and close relationship existed between decedent and respondent.

[8] The trial court heard the testimony and made express findings as to what decedent intended. There is substantial evidence to support the findings.

The judgment is affirmed.

WHITE, P. J., and LILLIE, J., concur.

159 Cal.App.2d 294

DYNAMIC INDUSTRIES COMPANY, a corporation, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

CITY OF LONG BEACH, a municipal corporation, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 22507.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

April 9, 1958.

Rehearing Denied April 28, 1958.

Hearing Denied June 4, 1958.

Action against city for declaratory relief under a purported oil production agreement. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Charles T. Smith, J., entered judgment for city and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that where charter of City of Long Beach provided that city should not be bound by any contract unless in writing, by order of the council, and signed by the city manager and an alleged contract granting plaintiff right to drill for oil on certain tidelands owned by the city in trust was not signed by the city manager, such contract was not binding upon the city, notwithstanding fact that such contract was allegedly made by it as trustee.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Municipal Corporations ⇐244(2)

When a municipal charter contains an express limitation upon the mode in which the city may contract, the city is bound only by contracts executed in accordance with such charter provisions, and such rule applies equally to contracts made by the city in a governmental or proprietary function.

2. Estoppel ⇐62(6)
Municipal Corporations ⇐249

When a charter provision containing an express limitation upon the mode in which the city may contract has not been complied with, the city may not be held liable in quasi contract, and it will not be estopped to deny the validity of the contract.

3. Municipal Corporations ⇐243

Where charter of City of Long Beach provided that city should not be bound by any contract unless in writing, by order of the council, and signed by the city manager and an alleged contract granting plaintiff rights to drill for oil on certain tidelands owned by the city in trust was not signed by city manager, such contract was not binding upon the city, notwithstanding fact that such contract was allegedly made by it as trustee. St.1911, p. 1304; St.1925, p. 235 as amended by St.1935, p. 793; Submerged Lands Act, § 3(c), 43 U.S.C.A. § 1311(c); West's Ann.Const. art. 11, § 6.

4. Municipal Corporations ⇐243

Fact that a party expended a substantial sum in reliance upon action of city council in approving a contemplated contract with such party, was immaterial in determining whether a valid contract had been entered into by the city, in view of city charter limitation providing that contracts shall not be binding upon the city unless signed by the city manager.

5. Declaratory Judgment ⇐316

An action for declaratory relief does not lie when a complaint alleges no facts showing an enforcible, contractual right in the plaintiff and only a judgment for the defendant can be entered, notwithstanding fact general allegations of such complaint might state grounds for declaratory relief.

John W. Preston, Jr., Warner, Peracca & Cowan, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Walhfred Jacobson, City Atty., Joseph B. Lamb, Asst. City Atty., Long Beach, for respondent.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

The present action is against the City of Long Beach for declaratory relief under a purported oil production agreement. Plaintiff Dynamic Industries appeals from a judgment based upon an order sustaining, without leave to amend, a general demurrer to its amended complaint, hereinafter referred to as the complaint. The facts alleged therein are as follows: By a statute enacted in 1911, St.1911, p. 1304 and amended in 1925 and 1935, St.1925, p. 235, St.1935, p. 793, the State of California granted to defendant all the tidelands and submerged lands located within the municipal boundaries, subject to a public trust for the improvement of commerce, navigation and fisheries. At all times thereafter, defendant has been the owner in fee simple of its tidelands and submerged lands in trust for the purposes named in the statutes and the city has had the authority to lease said lands and to enter into contracts for the recovery of oil, gas and other hydrocarbons therefrom.

The complaint alleges that on June 9, 1941, plaintiff made a written offer to the city to recover the oil and gas from its tidelands over a period of 35 years; the offer was submitted in the form of a detailed agreement under which the company was to be engaged by defendant as an independent contractor. Upon communication of the offer to the city council, a resolution was adopted authorizing the employment of two independent consultants in geology and petroleum engineering to examine the proposal; their compensation, amounting to $1,200, was paid by the company at defendant's request. The report of the consultants was favorable and the council directed the municipal authorities to negotiate with plaintiff, using the offer as a basis. After conferring with representatives of the company, defendant's city attorney and city manager agreed upon the terms of a draft contract which the latter submitted to the council on March 16, 1942, with his recommendation that it be approved. The draft was verbally identical to the offer of the preceding June; each paragraph was typed on a separate sheet of paper to facilitate revision and many of the pages were left partially blank. An unexecuted copy, with space for the signatures of plaintiff's president and defendant's city manager, is attached to the complaint as an exhibit. The draft was read at a regular meeting of the Long Beach City Council held March 17th, and approved, paragraph by paragraph, as so read. The council adopted a resolution which reads in part: "Now, Therefore, Be It Resolved that the City of Long Beach accept said proposal and the City Attorney be, and he is hereby authorized and directed to prepare a proper form of contract conforming to the plan and methods proposed by Dynamic Industries Company for the development of said submerged lands. The City Attorney is further authorized and directed to prepare said contract and submit the same to the City Council as soon as possible after this adoption date of this resolution." Plaintiff alleges that "the directive given to the City Attorney, as set forth in the last quoted language, meant only that the City Attorney was required to have said contract re-typed so that there would be no blank spaces or parts of pages therein * * * the City Attorney was not thereby authorized to make any changes in the wording of said contract."

It is next alleged that the city attorney attempted to settle the exact boundaries of the lands to be developed under the contract, which he was directed to do by the city council. The city attorney reported to the council from time to time, and as late as August 1945, that he had been unable to solve the boundary questions submitted to him in 1942. And, in October 1945, the United States brought an original suit against the State of California in the Supreme Court of the United States, claiming paramount title to all tidelands underlying the state's Pacific boundaries. That action was determined in favor of the United States in 1947. [332 U.S. 19, 67 S.Ct. 1658, 91 L.Ed. 1889; 332 U.S. 804, 68 S.Ct. 20, 92 L.Ed. 382; 334 U.S. 855, 68 S.Ct. 1517, 92 L.Ed. 1776]. In 1950, Congress enacted the so-called "Submerged Lands Act," whereby the United States relinquished to the several states the ownership of their respective tidelands and submerged lands. One section of the statute provides: "The rights, powers, and titles hereby recognized, confirmed, established, and vested in and assigned to the respective States and their grantees are subject to each lease executed by a State, or its grantee, which was in force and effect on June 5, 1950, in accordance with its terms and provisions and the laws of the State issuing, or whose grantee issued, such lease * * *." 43 U.S.C.A. § 1311(c). The constitutionality of the act was challenged by the States of Alabama and Rhode Island and was upheld by the Supreme Court on April 26, 1954, State of Alabama v. State of Texas, 347 U.S. 272, 74 S.Ct. 481, 98 L.Ed. 689.

It is further alleged that defendant could not place the company in possession of its tidelands and submerged lands, as provided by the contract, until April 26, 1954, and that the company could not begin its drilling operations until that date, although it has been ready, willing and able to do so at all times since March 17, 1942. However, in reliance upon the council's resolution, plaintiff incurred and paid liabilities in the amount of $9,125 which, it alleges, were "incident and necessary to the performance of its duties and obligations in relation to the contract."

There follow allegations as to an actual controversy between the parties, to wit, that plaintiff claims it entered into a binding agreement with defendant, which defendant denies. The prayer is for a declaration that the alleged contract is valid and subsisting and that the city is obligated to place Dynamic Industries in possession of its tidelands and submerged lands so that it may construct its facilities and proceed with drilling operations pursuant to its contract.

The question for decision is whether the complaint states a cause of action on any theory.

In urging a reversal of the judgment, plaintiff contends that the city council accepted its offer by adopting the resolution of March 17, 1942, and that the offer and acceptance created a binding agreement. Defendant contends, on the other hand, that the proposed contract was never signed by the city manager, as its charter requires, hence the action taken by the council was not binding upon the city. We agree with defendant's contention.

Under Article XI, Section 6 of the California Constitution, as amended in 1914, chartered cities are empowered "to make and enforce all laws and regulations in respect to municipal affairs, subject only to the restrictions and limitations provided in their several charters, and in respect to other matters they shall be subject to and controlled by general laws."

Long Beach is a chartered city. Section 293 of its charter provides, in material part, as follows: "The City of Long Beach shall not be and is not bound by any contract, except as otherwise provided herein, unless the same is made in writing, by order of the City Council, and signed by the City Manager or by some person in behalf of the City authorized so to do by the City Manager; provided, that the approval of the form of the contract by the City Attorney shall be endorsed thereon before the same shall be signed on behalf of the City * * *."

An exception is provided in Section 294, which empowers the city manager, upon the submission of bids, to enter into contracts on behalf of the city or one of its departments with the lowest responsible bidder; where actual emergency work is required, the city council may authorize him, by majority vote, to enter into contracts for labor and materials either orally or in writing. It is not claimed that this exception applies to the present case.

[1, 2] The contract whose validity plaintiff seeks to establish was not signed by the city manager, as the charter requires. It could not have been signed since the area to be included was never defined nor approved by the city attorney or the council. It is well settled that when a municipal charter contains an express limitation upon the mode in which the city may contract, the city is bound only by contracts executed in accordance with the charter provisions; in other words, where the statute provides the only mode by which the power to contract shall be exercised, the mode is the measure of the power. Reams v. Cooley, 171 Cal. 150, 152 P. 293; Times Publishing Co. v. Weatherby, 139 Cal. 618, 73 P. 465. The rule applies equally to contracts made by the city in a governmental or a proprietary function. City of Pasadena v. Estrin, 212 Cal. 231, 298 P. 14. When the charter provision has not been complied with, the city may not be held liable in quasi contract, and it will not be estopped to deny the validity of the contract. Reams v. Cooley, supra, 171 Cal. 150, 153, 152 P. 293; Los Angeles Dredging Co. v. City of Long Beach, 210 Cal. 348, 353, 291 P. 839, 71 A.L.R. 161.

[3] Plaintiff makes the point that the city may enforce its own regulations only as to municipal affairs, and that the ownership of tidelands under a trust for the benefit of the people of the state is not a municipal affair, citing Mallon v. City of Long Beach, 44 Cal.2d 199, 282 P.2d 481. Therefore, it is argued, defendant's power to contract with respect to its tidelands is to be measured by the general law of contracts as enforced in the state, under which the council resolution was effective an an acceptance of plaintiff's offer. The argument cannot be maintained.

Defendant's charter does not distinguish between contracts made by the city in the ordinary course of business and contracts made by it as trustee. Whatever the subject matter of a municipal contract, it is manifest that the mode in which a city chooses to contract is a municipal affair, and we see no basis for reading into Section 293 an implied exception, or for disregarding its prohibitory language.

[4] The fact that plaintiff expended a substantial sum in reliance upon the 1942 resolution is immaterial in view of the charter limitation. As Chief Justice Field said in Zottman v. City and County of San Francisco, 20 Cal. 96, at pages 104–105, quoting from a New York decision: "It may sometimes seem a hardship upon a contractor that all compensation for work done, etc., should be denied him; but it should be remembered that he, no less than the officers of the corporation, when he deals in a matter expressly provided for in the charter, is bound to see to it that the charter is complied with. If he neglect this, or choose to take the hazard, he is a mere volunteer, and suffers only what he ought to have anticipated. If the statute forbids the contract which he has made, he knows it, or ought to know it, before he places his money or services at hazard."

[5] Plaintiff contends that the complaint stated grounds for a declaration of his rights. But the general allegations are controlled by the specific facts alleged as the basis of the rights sought to be established. An action for declaratory relief does not lie when a complaint alleges no facts showing an enforcible contractual right in the plaintiff and only a judgment for the defendant can be entered. International Brotherhood of Teamsters, etc., v. Bekins Van & Storage Co., 135 Cal.App.2d 692, 697, 288 P.2d 181; Gillies v. La Mesa, etc., Irr. Dist., 54 Cal.App.2d 756, 129 P.2d 941. Those facts would not have justified granting Dynamic Industries the relief sought, or any relief, and the complaint clearly could not have been further amended to state a cause of action for declaratory relief.

The demurrer was properly sustained without leave to amend.

The judgment is affirmed.

PARKER WOOD and VALLÉE, JJ., concur.

Hearing denied; CARTER and SCHAUER, JJ., dissenting.

159 Cal.App.2d 265

Alice C. ROCRAY, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

PASADENA CITY LINES, Inc., Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 22649.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

April 9, 1958.

Action for injuries sustained by the plaintiff while boarding a bus. From a judgment of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, and an order denying a motion for a new trial, Walter R. Evans, J., the defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Lillie, J., held that the order denying the motion for new trial was not appealable, that the evidence sustained findings as to bus driver's negligence and that plaintiff's injuries were a result of the accident and that alleged error in counsel's references to a casualty company claims manager as being connected with the bus company were not prejudicial.

Judgment affirmed and the attempted appeal from the order denying the motion for a new trial dismissed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐110

An order denying motion for new trial is not appealable. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. § 963.

2. Carriers ⇐280(1)

A bus company as a common carrier is not an insurer of absolute safety of its passengers but has duty to provide utmost care and diligence for their safe carriage, and must provide everything necessary for that purpose and exercise to that end a reasonable degree of skill. West's Ann.Civ. Code, § 2100.

3. Carriers ⇐318(8)

In action against bus company for injuries sustained by passenger from premature closing of bus doors while passenger was boarding bus, evidence of circumstances sustained finding that bus driver was negligent.

4. Appeal and Error ⇐930(1)

On appeal, evidence and reasonable inferences therefrom are construed most strongly in favor of the respondent.

5. Appeal and Error ⇐996

When two or more inferences can reasonably be deduced from facts, reviewing court may not substitute its deductions for those of jury or trial court.

6. Damages ⇐185(1)

In action against bus company for injuries sustained by passenger as result of premature closing of bus doors as she was boarding bus, evidence, although referring principally to left hand and left side of passenger's body, sustained finding that the accident was proximate cause of injuries to passenger's right hand and wrist.

7. Damages ⇐134(3)

$2,721.50 for injuries to woman in boarding bus which required medical treatment for a year and nine months and surgery on her right hand, with permanent impairment of earning capacity, was not excessive.

8. Trial ⇐133(6)

In action against bus company for injuries sustained by passenger, reference by plaintiff's counsel in opening statement and direct examination to a person, who was actually claims manager for a casualty company, as being connected with the bus company was not prejudicial, in view of trial court's instruction to disregard reference to such person and in view of absence of evidence that he was with the bus company.

9. Appeal and Error ⇐1170(6)

In action against bus company for injuries sustained by passenger, references by plaintiff's counsel to person who contacted plaintiff several days after accident and sent her to a doctor as being connected with the bus company, although he was actually connected with a casualty company, was not prejudicial error where record did not indicate that such references affected the final result. West's Ann.Const. art. 6, § 4½.

Ronald A. Burford, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Elmer Low and Lester V. Peterman, Pasadena, for respondent.

LILLIE, Justice.

Defendant Pasadena City Lines, Inc., appeals from a $2,721.50 judgment in favor of plaintiff in her action for damages arising out of a bus accident. It is alleged in the complaint that she was a passenger waiting to board the defendant's bus; that the driver negligently failed to operate the motor bus in a careful and prudent manner with due regard to her safety and welfare as she boarded the vehicle, by causing the doors to open and close several times striking her body; and that, as a proximate result of the defendant's negligence, she suffered injury to her right hand, wrist and arm. In addition to a general denial, defendant, in its answer, set out an affirmative defense, that plaintiff so negligently conducted herself while attempting to board the bus that the injuries, if any, she suffered were proximately caused by her own negligence.

The matter was tried before a jury, and based on its verdict, judgment was entered against the defendant in the sum of $2,721.50. The trial court subsequently denied defendant's motion for a new trial. From such judgment and the order denying its motion for new trial, defendant has appealed.

[1] Since the order denying the motion for new trial is not appealable (Code Civ. Proc. § 963; Pipoly v. Benson, 20 Cal.2d 366, 125 P.2d 482, 147 A.L.R. 515; Toshio Hamasaki v. Flotho, 39 Cal.2d 602, 248 P.2d 910) plaintiff's appeal therefrom must be dismissed.

On August 13, 1954, plaintiff, a prospective passenger, was waiting at a bus stop for defendant's motor bus. She testified that the bus stopped directly in front of her body with the doors facing her. The driver opened the doors and as five or six passengers alighted she took one step to the right to let them pass. As soon as they had descended she stepped back to the bus and faced the open doors. Standing directly in front of them, she reached out with her left hand to the partition on the left edge of the door to aid her in pulling herself onto the bus. As she stepped onto the first step and started to move her body into the bus the doors closed on her, striking the left side of her head and left arm. Immediately, the driver opened them and, as he did so, the folds of the door caught her left hand. She yelled, "My hand, my hand", and the driver, in order to release her hand, closed the door a second time, again striking the left side of her head. Quickly he opened the door and plaintiff's left hand was again caught in the door. A third time the driver closed the doors and reopened them, at which time plaintiff stepped into the bus. She said that it all happened so suddenly that she did not remember whether the doors had been in contact with the right side of her body. She does remember that her left hand was caught twice in the same place in the folds of the door, and that the edge of the door hit the left side of her head and arm. At the trial she testified that she did not remember too clearly about her right side or what she did with her right hand, but certain prior testimony by way of deposition was read to the jury, wherein she gave the following responses to the following questions:

"Q. Was your (left) hand caught in approximately the same position each time? A. Yes.

"Q. * * * Were any other parts of your body injured, other than your left hand and your head, where it was struck by the door? A. Yes.

"Q. What other parts of your body? A. My right arm, my right hand.

"Q. And what struck or injured your right hand? A. My right hand, trying to help my left hand; the only way I can figure it out."

Plaintiff testified that the closing and opening of the doors occurred very suddenly, and so quickly that her body was struck in approximately the same place each time. She was so stunned and nervous she could not recall going home. She further testified that when she reached her home she was suffering from shock and was so "shaky" that she had to go to bed.

Before the accident plaintiff had no trouble with her right wrist, hand, elbow or shoulder. Within one-half hour after the accident she noticed swelling and felt pain in her right hand. The next day she developed pain in the right wrist, elbow and shoulder. Seven days after the accident, Mr. Burt Strain called her and at his request she went to his office to talk with him about the accident. She explained how it had occurred, complained of the pain and swelling in the right hand, and showed him her right hand and wrist. Mr. Strain sent her to Dr. Charles W. Rasmussen, whom she consulted the next day. He treated her right wrist and hand and put a splint on it. After three weeks he removed the splint and placed her entire right hand and wrist in a cast extending to the elbow, which he left on the arm for eight weeks. Subsequently, he treated her right hand, wrist, elbow and shoulder with injections and heat for nearly a year, after which he sent her to his assistant, Dr. Adolph A. Erickson, who performed surgery on the right wrist.

Plaintiff's left hand sustained only a small scratch, for which she did not seek recovery, nor does she claim any injury to the left side of her head or body.

Dr. Erickson, an orthopedic specialist, testified that he saw plaintiff about a year after the accident; that from her history and his examination he diagnosed the condition of the right hand as epicondylitis, an irritation to the covering of the bone in the area where the extensor muscles of the hand and wrist originate; and traumatic neuritis; and that shortly after examining her he found a rupture of the extensor carpal sheaths of the right wrist and recommended surgical repair. On October 7, 1955, Dr. Erickson operated on plaintiff's right wrist. At the trial, he testified that it was his opinion that plaintiff sustained injuries to the lateral epicondylar region of the elbow, at the right elbow, and to the extensor tendon and sheaths at the dorsum of the right wrist, as a proximate result of traumatic force arising out of the accident. He further testified that no permanent disability would result from the epicondylitis, although he believed plaintiff would probably need more treatment. As to the back of the right hand, it was Dr. Erickson's opinion that the lack of sensation and pain would be permanent, impairing her future earning capacity.

Plaintiff, at the trial, complained of pain in the right elbow and a numbness through the back of the right hand and wrist. She testified to a loss of wages before trial, and the manner in which she is now disabled in her employment as a waitress.

Defendant at no time denied that the driver opened and closed the doors several times and that plaintiff's left hand was caught in the folds of the door. The driver, however, testified that when he stopped the bus, passengers alighted, and that although he looked through the open doors after the passengers had left, he did not observe the plaintiff. He shut the doors and prepared to leave, but looking up, he saw plaintiff approach. He then opened the door to allow her to enter. He did not remember seeing her run to the bus or hearing her knock on the closed door, although defendant's witness, Virginia Stapelton, who was seated on the bus, testified she heard plaintiff bang on the door.

Defendant, appellant herein, contends that the evidence was insufficient to justify the jury's finding of liability against it, and that the injuries complained of were the proximate result of the accident.

[2] At the outset, it is conceded by appellant that it is a common carrier operating busses for the transportation of paying passengers. Although as a common carrier appellant is not an insurer of the absolute safety of its passengers, by law it has the duty to provide the utmost care and diligence for the safe carriage of its passengers, must provide everything necessary for that purpose, and exercise to that end a reasonable degree of skill (Civil Code, sec. 2100).

[3] There is no evidence in the record that there existed any obstruction to the bus driver's view. Considering the entire record it was entirely reasonable for the jury to believe that the driver was negligent in not observing the presence of Mrs. Rocray as she was about to board the bus; or that he was negligent in closing the door on a portion of her body while she was not yet completely aboard or while she was outside standing on the first step with her hand up about to get on the bus; or that the driver was negligent in failing to observe her as she boarded the bus to see that she was safely aboard before the doors were closed; or if he did look in her direction he was negligently inattentive in not seeing her. From all of the circumstances surrounding the happening of the accident it was just as reasonable for the jury to have inferred negligence on the part of the defendant as it was for it to have inferred that through lack of ordinary care, the plaintiff alone proximately caused the injuries of which she complains.

[4, 5] This is a case in which the jury determined substantial questions of fact in favor of the plaintiff. It believed that the bus driver was negligent and there is ample evidence in the record to justify such a finding. On Appeal, evidence and the reasonable inferences therefrom should be construed most strongly in favor of the respondent. When two or more inferences can reasonably be deduced from the facts the reviewing court is without power to substitute its deductions for those of the jury or trial court. Monastero v. Los Angeles Transit Co., 131 Cal.App.2d 156, 280 P.2d 187.

[6] The same must be said concerning the issue of proximate cause and damages. Although plaintiff has no clear memory of the door coming in contact with her right side, the evidence shows that the incident occurred suddenly and within a very short period of time. It is reasonable to believe that in the excitement of trying to free her left hand, the plaintiff did not clearly remember what she did with her right hand, which she thinks she used to aid her in freeing the left one. This most certainly would have been a normal reaction. If she used her right hand in such a manner, then it may be inferred that her right hand was either near the door when it closed or in the folds of the door when it opened, which explains the manner in which the right hand received the injury which in Dr. Erickson's opinion was the probable result of traumatic force caused by the accident.

[7] Having found from the record that the jury might reasonably infer from all of the evidence that the injuries to her right hand, wrist, arm and elbow, and the medical treatment rendered therefor were the proximate result of the accident, it can hardly be said that a judgment for $2,721.50 was excessive. Taking into account the evidence relating to plaintiff's pain and suffering, her extensive medical treatment for approximately a year and nine months, surgery on her right hand, her loss of wages, the injuries to her right hand, wrist, arm and elbow, and the permanent impairment of her earning capacity, it appears that the sum awarded by the jury was not only moderate but wholly justified.

[8] Appellant's next contention arises out of counsel's reference to one Burt Strain in both direct examination and argument. It complains that the mention of Mr. Strain by counsel for plaintiff constituted misconduct prejudicial to the rights of appellant. Because appellant cites instances throughout the trial, we have carefully examined the trial record in this regard.

Mr. Burt Strain was Claims Manager for the Pasadena office of the Transit Casualty Company. Shortly after the accident he contacted the plaintiff and asked her to come to see him. She went to his office and told him how the accident occurred, showed him the swelling in her right hand, and complained to him of pain in the right hand, wrist and arm. He sent her to Dr. Charles Rasmussen who treated her and subsequently sent her to his assistant, Dr. Adolph A. Erickson, for surgery. She remained under Dr. Rasmussen's care for a little over a year. Mr. Strain arranged for the casualty company to pay for Dr. Rasmussen's services. Dr. Rasmussen was not called as a witness at the trial. At all times Mrs. Rocray was under the impression that Mr. Strain was an agent of the defendant Pasadena City Lines, Inc. Her counsel also believed that he was an employee of the defendant until he had proceeded with his opening statement to the jury.

Reference to Mr. Strain related only to his observation of plaintiff's condition seven days after the accident, his recommendation to her that she see Dr. Rasmussen, plaintiff's visit to the doctor and subsequent treatment by him, and her failure to seek recovery for the charge made by Dr. Rasmussen for his services. At no time was Mr. Strain identified as having any connection with the Transit Casualty Company, and although he was present in the court room during the trial he was not called as a witness.

Appellant's chief complaint concerns counsel's references to Mr. Strain in his opening statement to the jury, during his direct examination of Mrs. Rocray, and in his closing argument.

In his opening statement, plaintiff's attorney advised the jury that within a short time after the accident Mr. Burt Strain "of Pasadena City Lines" got in touch with the plaintiff and asked her to come to his office; that she did so, and he told her to see Dr. Rasmussen; that she remained under Dr. Rasmussen's care for a little over a year; that during that period of time she had been in communication with Mr. Strain and did not obtain a lawyer until shortly before the one year statute of limitations had run. He further stated that payment for the services of Dr. Rasmussen were arranged and paid for by Mr. Strain, and that plaintiff was making no claim for medical expenses for services rendered by Dr. Rasmussen for that year. Objection to this statement was overruled by the court.

On direct examination, plaintiff's attorney asked her:

> "Q. Before you went to Dr. Rasmussen, did you see anybody from the Pasadena City Lines? A. Yes, I got a call to come to see Mr. Strain."

Defendant's motion to strike was denied and objection to the question was overruled. Plaintiff then testified that she saw Mr. Strain; had certain dealings with him, and received treatment for her right hand and arm for about a year from Dr. Rasmussen; and explained to the jury in detail the kind of treatment given by him, including the splint on her right hand and subsequent cast on the right hand and elbow.

Mr. Strain's name was thereafter mentioned on several occasions by plaintiff, but without further identification, and then only to point up time and other instances. Later Mr. Strain, who was seated in the court room, was asked by counsel for the plaintiff to stand for identification only, when counsel, on cross-examination asked defendant's witness, Virginia Stapelton if she had talked to him before testifying. No evidence was submitted by either side as to the status of Mr. Strain.

In his closing argument, plaintiff's attorney commented to the jury: "There is sitting in the court room a Mr. Strain of the bus company * * *." This statement was objected to and a motion to strike was made. In sustaining the objection and granting the motion, the trial court said: "I know of no evidence that Mr. Strain is with the bus company. The jury will be admonished to disregard it."

Appellant now complains that these references to Mr. Strain throughout the trial, together with other unrelated comments of counsel, were prejudicial to its rights and prevented it from having a fair trial.

The record discloses that at the time plaintiff's counsel first mentioned Mr. Strain in his opening statement to the jury, he believed that he was an employee and agent of the defendant and intended to prove it during the trial. He told the trial judge at the bench, outside the presence of the jury, that Mrs. Rocray had told him Mr. Strain was employed by the Pasadena City Lines. Counsel for the defendant told him this was not so and that he was actually an agent of the Transit Casualty Company.

However, in addition to giving plaintiff's counsel an opportunity during the trial to prove agency if he could, the trial court permitted reference to Mr. Strain in the opening statement on the theory that the jury had a right to an explanation of the reason she consulted Dr. Rasmussen, the complaints and symptons she gave him within a week of the accident and for a year thereafter, the treatment he gave her, and the reason she was claiming no recovery for medical expenses for his services.

It can not be denied that plaintiff's counsel hoped the jury would realize that the reason he was not calling Dr. Rasmussen as a witness was that he had been retained and paid by the adverse party. No mention or inference was made concerning insurance, or to Mr. Strain's connection with insurance, and when counsel was told that Mr. Strain was with the casualty company, he followed the court's admonition and did not call him to identify him as its agent.

Perhaps under the circumstances the several references to Mr. Strain as being with the Pasadena City Lines, Inc. were not only unwise but wholly unnecessary, but in consideration of the entire record it cannot be said that any actual prejudice resulted to the defendant, particularly in light of the substantial evidence pointing to the liability of the defendant, and in view of the court's admonition to the jury to disregard counsel's reference to Mr. Strain as being with the bus line, on the ground that there was no evidence in the record to that effect. This does not appear to be such an extreme case that the final admonition and instruction by the court did not sufficiently remove the prejudicial effect, if any, of counsel's reference.

[9] All of these matters were considered at length by the trial court on defendant's motion for a new trial, which it denied after a hearing. In addition, the record discloses that from plaintiff's opening statement through his closing argument to the jury, the matter regarding Mr. Strain was brought to the court's attention innumerable times, most of which resulted in extensive colloquy between counsel and the court outside of the hearing of the jury. At all times during the trial the judge was aware of the nature of these matters and the defendant's claim of prejudice. It is obvious from his rulings and several refusals to declare a mistrial, that the trial judge did not feel that any prejudice resulted. Nor can we say after an examination of the entire record that the result would have differed in any way had not Mr. Strain's purported connection with the defendant been mentioned. Calif.Constitution, Art. VI, sec. 4½.

The court in Music v. Southern Pacific Co., 91 Cal.App.2d 93, at page 98, 204 P.2d 422, 425, reiterated the general rule followed on review of these matters: "It is the well established rule that a trial judge, who has witnessed all of the circumstances surrounding the alleged misconduct, is in a better position than an appellate court to determine whether or not the jury was prejudicially influenced, and its verdict the result of the asserted misconduct of counsel, and 'his conclusion in the matter will not be disturbed unless, under all of the circumstances, it is plainly wrong.'"

In Brown v. McCuan, 56 Cal.App.2d 35, at page 41, 132 P.2d 838, 841, the court pointed out: "Whether counsel's references to compensation insurance, where the jury was admonished to disregard it each time, constituted prejudicial misconduct preventing a fair trial is a question of fact. The trial judge is in a much better position to know whether a miscarriage of justice has taken place and his opinion is entitled to great weight in the absence of a clearly erroneous decision. The trial judge's determination must also be considered to be an adjudication of counsel's good faith. * * * when the case comes to us after the trial judge has denied a new trial urged upon these grounds and has thus found that the claimed misconduct was not prejudicial, the judgment must be affirmed unless there is no reasonable basis for such finding."

Even conceding that counsel's references to Mr. Strain constituted misconduct, they still would not be cause for a reversal unless they had the effect of preventing the complaining party from having a fair trial. From the state of the evidence, we cannot say that they constituted such a situation during the trial as to materially affect the substantial rights of the party allegedly aggrieved.

The judgment is affirmed.

The attempted appeal from the order denying motion for a new trial is dismissed.

WHITE, P. J., and FOURT, J., concur.

159 Cal.App.2d 231

Hall HUGHEY and Yvonne Hughey, Husband and Wife, Plaintiffs and Respondents,

v.

Conte CANDOLI, Defendant and Appellant (two cases).

Civ. 22619.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

April 8, 1958.

Action by husband and wife arising out of collision of wife's left-turning automobile with defendant's approaching automobile, and action by husband and wife for wrongful death of their child, who lived only one day after delivery through Caesarean section. The verdict was for the defendant. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Wallace L. Ware, J., entered order granting new trial, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, Acting P. J., held that the new trial was properly awarded on ground of insufficiency of evidence.

Order affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐933(1)

On defendant's appeal from order granting new trial after verdict for defendant, District Court of Appeal accepted testimony and inferences favorable to plaintiffs.

2. New Trial ⇐70

In action arising out of collision of plaintiff's left-turning automobile with defendant's approaching automobile, evidence presented substantial question as to whether plaintiff was contributorily negligent and afforded proper basis for granting plaintiff new trial after verdict for defendant.

3. Death ⇐103(2)
New Trial ⇐70

In action by father and mother for wrongful death of child, who lived only one day after its delivery through Caesarean section, evidence presented substantial question as to whether injuries received by mother, who was eight months pregnant at time her automobile collided with defendant's automobile, were proximate cause of death of child who was delivered four to six weeks premature, on day after accident, and who died within 24 hours, and afforded proper basis for granting father and mother new trial after verdict for defendant.

Crider, Tilson & Ruppé, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Mabel Walker Willebrandt and W. Alan Thody, Los Angeles, for respondents.

ASHBURN, Acting Presiding Justice.

Defendant appeals from an order granting a new trial upon the ground of insufficiency of the evidence. The order applies to two actions growing out of an automobile collision.

Plaintiff Yvonne Hughey was eight months pregnant at the time of the accident. She and her husband brought one action to recover for personal injuries to her, the husband's loss of her services and damage to the automobile which she was driving at the time of the accident. Another action brought by both sought damages for wrongful death of the child, which lived only one day after its delivery through Caesarean section. The two cases were tried together and it was stipulated that a single verdict should be rendered for or against the plaintiffs. Verdict having gone for defendant, the court granted a new trial in due course. Counsel for both sides devote their arguments wholly to the question of the sufficiency of the evidence.

Appellant argues two points, (1) that plaintiff Yvonne Hughey was contributorily negligent as matter of law, and (2) that the death of the child was not proximately caused by negligence of the defendant.

The applicable rule of review is stated in Brown v. Guy, 144 Cal.App.2d 659, 661, 301 P.2d 413, 414: "Upon the consideration of a motion for a new trial the court must make an independent appraisal of the evidence, including all presumptions and reasonable inferences, and must judicially determine whether the judgment effects a miscarriage of justice. In considering such motion the trial court is not bound by a conflict in the evidence but may be governed by any substantial proof that would reasonably warrant a judgment for the moving party even though such evidence consists of nothing more than inferences from established facts. On appeal from the order it will not be reversed unless the reviewing court concludes that as a matter of law there is no substantial evidence to support a contrary judgment." Quoting from a Supreme Court case Thomas v. Moore, 146 Cal.App.2d 59, 61, 303 P.2d 624, 626, says: "'The trial court in considering a motion for new trial is not bound by a conflict in the evidence, and has not abused its discretion when there is any evidence which would support a judgment in favor of the moving party. [Citations.] The only conflict may be the opposing inferences deducible from uncontradicted probative facts. In such case the trial court may draw inferences opposed to those accepted by the jury and may thus resolve the conflicting inferences in favor of the moving party, for "It is only where it can be said as a matter of law that there is no substantial evidence to support a contrary judgment that an appellate court will reverse the order of the trial court." [Citations.]'"

[1, 2] The question of contributory negligence goes to liability in each case and will be first considered. The accident occurred on November 29, 1954, about 7:00 p. m., at the well-lighted intersection of Sunset Boulevard and Wilcox Avenue in Los Angeles. Sunset runs east and west and Wilcox north and south. On the northeast corner is the showroom of Mercedes-Benz automobile agency. Two impartial witnesses saw the accident from that vantage point. We accept for purposes of the following statement testimony and inferences favorable to plaintiffs, as we must do.

Mrs. Hughey was driving a white Jaguar convertible automobile in an easterly direction, and the top was down. As she came to Wilcox she stopped with the traffic, then moved into the intersection with the green light of the traffic signal in her favor. She gave a signal for a left turn, intending to go to her home which was to the north, but she had to stop again to let westbound cars pass in front of her. As she indicated this intention a westbound vehicle gave a left turn signal and started turning to the south. The driver of that car waved with his hand, indicating that she should go ahead with her turn. Each car was in a lane next to the double line, designated in the evidence as lane 1. Having looked to the east for westbound traffic, plaintiff saw that all was clear and gradually started her turn, proceeding very slowly, "literally crawling" as defendant expressed it, and continuing to make her left turn signal. When entering westbound lane 1 she looked again and all was clear. As she crossed lane 2 (the center one of the three westbound lanes) defendant's Cadillac appeared out of the nowhere and struck her Jaguar in the right side. According to Mr. Bruno Hahn, who was watching the Jaguar from the Mercedes-Benz showroom, that car "seemed to bounce, say, a matter of, oh, six inches or a foot and a half, somewhere within that distance. It gave a sort of a shudder. * * * it was pushed, as I said, somewhere between six inches to a foot or foot and a half." Mrs. Hughey was thrown against the side of her car, to the left and back. She was helped into the Mercedes-Benz agency, being then greatly shaken, sore and nervous. While there for an hour or less she was faint and dizzy and had some pain in her life side, in the lower left quadrant of the abdomen. The sequelae will be reviewed in the discussion of responsibility for the baby's death.

Defendant Candoli did not see the Jaguar until he was almost upon it. The attention of Mr. Hahn and his wife was drawn to the Cadillac by the screech of its brakes. That car left 43 feet of straight skid mark which began, as computation and defendant's own testimony show, at the easterly line of the crosswalk on the east side of Wilcox; the accident occurred 26 feet west of the crosswalk, which was 17 feet wide. Defendant testified that he put on his brake as soon as he saw plaintiff. Obviously he was going too fast. He further said that he had been following for two blocks or more the car that made the left turn to the south when arriving at Wilcox, but insisted that he was in lane 2 all that time and the other car in lane 1. If he had been in lane 2, Mrs. Hughey would have seen him when she looked to the east on Sunset.

The trial judge, when disposing of the motion for new trial, said in part: "I would say that a moving picture of what took place out there that evening would disclose him coming from behind that automobile that was parked there making a left turn and coming fast, and not too close behind that vehicle, because he had to get out there in that lane where those skid marks were long enough to have delineated a course of direction. I didn't think his testimony was persuasive. I felt that it was nonconvincing and shaky. The lady told a very forthright story. She was consummately careful." Also, "As I took notes and harkened to the testimony of the various witnesses on the question of liability, I gained the impression that Candoli was rattled, not only at the time of the accident, but he was confused, and confessed that he was in a state of confusion as he testified in the courtroom. * * * I was completely convinced when I heard this evidence that the plaintiff had made a case of liability against this defendant, and when that jury came in with a verdict unanimous for the defendant, I was almost shocked to the point where I could not speak. * * * Then, when I analyze that evidence in the light of the testimony and the clear picture that the Hahns gave, I thought it added up to an overwhelming case of liability."

Appellant's counsel argue that the Jaguar top was down, the body very low, some three feet from the ground to the top of the door, that the south turning car obscured plaintiff's vision of the westbound Cadillac, and vice versa; that she went into lane 2 without looking after she got into position to do so, and therefore was negligent as a matter of law. These were doubtless permissible factual inferences but they are in conflict with plaintiff's testimony that the turning car did not interfere with her vision of westbound lanes 2 and 3, that she did look down those lanes as she started the turn, and as she pulled into westbound lane 1; that those lanes were clear before and at the time she started her turn. Moreover, the driver of the south turning car waved her on. She was in low gear, signaling a left turn and proceeding very slowly. It is difficult to see what more she could have done to protect herself and her baby. She could hardly have anticipated that a car would dart out from behind the turning car and plow into any object that was crossing to the north. She had stopped for several westbound cars to pass her and was entitled to assume that any others going in the same direction would exercise ordinary care, could properly act upon that assumption until alerted to the contrary by some fact or circumstance.

"It is an elementary principle that negligence is gauged by the ability to anticipate danger. '[R]easonable foresight of harm is essential to the concept of negligence, and supplies the criterion for determining whether it exists in a particular case, and reasonable foreseeability of harm is the fundamental basis of the law of negligence. * * * On the other hand, one is not bound to foresee every possible injury which might occur, or every possible eventuality, but only those which were reasonably foreseeable; and one is not required to anticipate against dangers which it is not his duty to avoid.' 65 C.J.S. Negligence § 5c(2) (a), pp. 354–359." Tucker v. Lombardo, 47 Cal.2d 457, 464, 303 P.2d 1041, 1046. Moreover, "[d]efendant was entitled to assume that others would exercise reasonable care in the management of their own property and could properly continue to do so until apprised in some manner that such reliance was no longer reasonably safe." Rodela v. Southern Cal. Edison Co., 148 Cal.App.2d 708, 716, 307 P.2d 436, 441. See, also, Bogner v. Eubanks, 137 Cal.App.2d 181, 183–184, 289 P.2d 875, and cases therein cited and quoted.

Upon appellant's own theory of the evidence there was at least a substantial question whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence; certainly there would be no justification for declaring her so as a matter of law.

[3] The above evidence not only sustains the granting of the motion in the personal injury case, but it also supports the ruling in the wrongful death case unless it can be said as matter of law that the injuries received by the mother in the accident were not a proximate cause of the death of the child.

Mr. Hahn drove Mrs. Hughey home from the Mercedes-Benz agency, a short distance, arriving about 8:00 o'clock. She went to bed at once and took a sedative, seconal; her husband arrived in a half hour. She then had a "dreadful" pain in her abdomen; was crying, and he called the doctor. She was not then taken to the hospital and was not bleeding externally at that time. She slept until about 3:00 a. m., awakening with a "terrible" pain and was hemorrhaging freely. The husband heard her cry and went to her where she lay in a pool of blood. She was then rushed to the hospital where Dr. Aaberg, obstetrician, and Dr. Brooks, pediatrician, were awaiting her. An immediate Caesarean section was essential and was performed, delivering a five pound two ounce boy who was four to six weeks premature. The mother, a professional ballerina, was so built that she could make normal delivery of a large child and had no evidence of any disease or disorder which would cause premature birth or require a Caesarean delivery.

While in the womb a baby's lungs are collapsed and it is furnished oxygen by the mother through the placenta. Immediately upon delivery, with the first cry, the lungs normally begin to expand and perform their proper function. This is more difficult for a premature baby because of lack of strength. In this instance the little boy had undergone fetal distress and was cyanotic due to lack of oxygen, did not benefit much from administration of oxygen, and died within 24 hours with his lungs still collapsed to a large extent. This condition is known as atelectasis and is a continuation after birth of the normal collapse of the lungs while in utero. According to the attending obstetrician plaintiff, having been thrown to the side of the door, suffered internal bleeding (as evidenced by organized clots found by him at the time of the Caesarean operation), which increased until it appeared externally about 3:00 a. m. This bleeding evidenced a partial separation of the placenta from the womb, to the extent of not less than one-fourth and almost one-half of its area. This caused intra-uterine asphyxia of the baby, as indicated by his condition immediately after delivery. Though there are several possible causes of placental separation, none of them was present in this case except one,—trauma, a jar, wrench or twist received by the mother. Trauma to her is a recognized cause of such separations. In this case, according to the expert testimony of the obstetrician, the separation was due to the automobile accident. Dr. Aaberg testified: "That this placenta in Mrs. Yvonne Hughey separated due to the automobile accident, which— * * * Q. In other words, Doctor, you have said, I believe, that the placenta separation was caused by the accident, in your opinion? A. In my opinion, absolutely. * * * As I said, approximately one-fourth of the placenta was separated. In another hour or two maybe all of it could have been, with a dead baby, and deeper shock for her, profound shock; in some cases, in fact, irreversible shock. We cannot bring them out despite ten or fifteen transfusions." On cross-examination: "Q. Doctor, I gather from your testimony that you feel very positive that the accident was responsible for the placental separation in this case which led to the Caesarean and so on? A. That is right."

To an extent, defendant's experts corroborated Dr. Aaberg's testimony as to basic facts and the opinion predicated thereon. Dr. Harry L. Deutsch, who performed an autopsy upon the little boy, expressed the opinion that death was caused by "congenital pulmonary atelectasis and congenital heart disease." Those are the words that he used in the death certificate also. Of course, the atelectasis was congenital, for that word merely means existing at the time of birth, and there is no other time for atelectasis to occur. The word "congenital" adds nothing to the term "atelectasis."

The congenital heart disease which he said he found consisted of a large opening in the interventricular septum, "which is a partition which separates the right and left ventricles. * * * A defect of this size would permit a substantial amount of blood to be shunted from the right ventricle into the left ventricle so that this blood which has been shunted doesn't have an opportunity to circulate through the lungs. Therefore, there is a lesser amount of oxygen in the blood that is forced out of the left ventricle into the general systemic circulation, because of this defect." This asserted cause of death was developed in the defense evidence and plaintiffs did not recall their experts to refute it directly. But they had the autopsy report before them and anticipated the Deutsch testimony. All the experts expressly or tacitly agreed that the heart is completely formed and functioning after 19 weeks. Dr. Brooks testified that the heart tones were good at and after birth; that he found no congenital heart defect, and that the phrase "intraventricular septal defect" means the same thing as congenital heart defect. Dr. Aaberg testified that the baby had a good fetal heart rate, very normal during pregnancy; that the heart tones were good; that a congenital heart would show loud murmurs. Dr. William B. Thompson, obstetrician, testified for the defense after reading all the depositions and transcripts of testimony (a new ultimate in expressing an expert opinion upon the ultimate question for the jury). He said: "Q. And if I understand what you are saying, then, it is that you ascribed your findings to this condition in the interventricular septum that you have described? A. I felt that that was the primary cause of the baby's failure to behave normally."

If it were conceded that defendant had established as matter of law that congenital heart disease was a cause of death of this baby, that did not preclude a recovery by plaintiffs, for defendant's proof showed two concurring causes, atelectasis and heart disease. Assuming that the heart defect was prenatal and in no wise affected by the accident, it nevertheless appears that that was not true of the atelectasis. We have then concurring proximate causes, one of which flowed directly from the negligence of defendant. In this situation the concurrence of the non-tortious cause does not absolve defendant from liability for the tortious one. In Brown v. Guy, supra, 144 Cal.App.2d 659, 666, 301 P.2d 413, 418, we said: "It is the law of this state that each of several joint tort feasors or independent wrongdoers who inflict simultaneous, or practically simultaneous, injuries upon a plaintiff must carry the burden of establishing that his own wrong did not contribute to the damages, or the extent to which it did so. See Copley v. Putter, 93 Cal.App.2d 453, 457, 207 P.2d 876; Cummings v. Kendall, 41 Cal.App.2d 549, 558, 107 P.2d 282; Finnegan v. Royal Realty Co., 35 Cal.2d 409, 433, 218 P.2d 17; Prosser on Torts, 2d ed., § 45, p. 226. The Finnegan case says 35 Cal.2d at page 433, 218 P.2d at page 32: 'Where several persons act in concert and damages result from their joint tort, each person is held for the entire damages unless segregation as to causation can be established. Even though persons are not acting in concert, if the results produced by their acts are indivisible, each person is held liable for the whole. Death, burning of a building or the sinking of a boat are such indivisible results. The reason for imposing liability on each for the entire consequence is that there exists no basis for dividing damages and the law is loath to permit an innocent plaintiff to suffer as against a wrongdoing defendant. This liability is imposed where each cause is sufficient in itself as well as where each cause is required to produce the result. 15 So.Cal.L.Rev. 439.'" Prosser on Torts, 2nd Ed., § 45, p. 226, says: "Certain results, by their very nature, are obviously incapable of any practical division. Death is such a result, and so is a broken leg or any single wound, the destruction of a house by fire, or the sinking of a barge. No ingenuity can suggest anything more than a purely arbitrary apportionment of such harm. Where two or more causes combine to produce such a single result, incapable of any logical division, each may be a substantial factor in bringing about the loss, and if so, each may be charged with all of it. * * * Such entire liability is imposed both where some of the causes are innocent, as where a fire set by the defendant is carried by a wind, and where two or more of the causes are culpable." Footnote 63 on that page adds this: "Obviously only culpable causes will be held responsible. Thus where a negligent automobile driver collides with an innocent one and injures a third person, only the negligent driver is liable." No attempt at apportionment was made here and of course none could be effected.

Appellant's contention that the heart defect would ultimately have caused death independently of the atelectasis cannot be sustained. Assuming that that would have happened, defendant is nevertheless liable for any negligence which operated as a precipitating or accelerating cause of death. Kerby v. Elk Grove Union H. S. Dist., 1 Cal.App.2d 246, 251, 36 P.2d 431, 433, 94 A.L.R. 1502: "But even though a latent chronic aneurism of the cerebral artery may have ultimately caused his death without the intervention of violent exercise or traumatic injury, if the blow from the ball did in fact accelerate or aggravate the chronic defect of the artery so as to cause a rupture thereof resulting in death, that blow may be deemed to have been the proximate cause of death so as to create a liability therefor under proper circumstances. Knock v. Industrial Acc. Com., 200 Cal. 456, 253 P. 712; Quail v. Industrial Acc. Com. [138 Cal.App. 412], 32 P.2d 402." To the same effect are, Deevy v. Tassi, 21 Cal.2d 109, 123, 130 P.2d 389; Knock v. Industrial Acc. Com., 200 Cal. 456, 460, 461, 253 P. 712; Lumbermen's Mutual Casualty Co. v. Industrial Acc. Com., 29 Cal.2d 492, 496, 175 P.2d 823; Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. v. Industrial Acc. Com., 93 Cal.App.2d 23, 26, 208 P.2d 44; 8 Cal.Jur. § 21, p. 962; 35 Cal.Jur.2d § 57, p. 555, § 59, p. 557; 25 C.J.S. Death § 25, pp. 1093–1094.

The order granting a new trial in each case is well supported by the record and we find no error therein.

Order affirmed.

HERNDON, J., and KINCAID, J. pro tem., concur.

159 Cal.App.2d 318

Stanley N. KRAUSE, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Maurice J. BERTRAND, also known as Hobo Bertrand, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 22368.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

April 11, 1958.

Libel action based upon alleged false and defamatory publications and statements made within ranks of labor union in course of campaign for union election. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Bayard Rhone, J., rendered judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J.,

held that statements which were published and uttered in good faith, without malice, in belief that they were true, based upon reasonable grounds for believing them to be true and which related to supposed qualifications or lack of qualifications of a member to serve on committee of union, were privileged.

Affirmed.

1. Libel and Slander ⇐101(3)

In slander action, plaintiff had burden of proving that slanderous words were spoken as alleged.

2. Appeal and Error ⇐989, 994(3)

It is not function of reviewing court to judge credibility of witnesses or weight of their testimony.

3. Libel and Slander ⇐112(1)

In slander action based upon alleged statements by defendant that plaintiff was a Communist, evidence sustained finding that defendant did not utter the slanderous statements as alleged.

4. Libel and Slander ⇐112(2)

In libel action based upon alleged false and defamatory publication made within ranks of labor union in course of campaign for union election, evidence sustained finding that all statements were published and uttered in good faith, without malice, in belief that they were true based upon reasonable grounds for believing them to be true. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 47.

5. Libel and Slander ⇐45(1)

Statements which were published and uttered in good faith, without malice, in belief that they were true, based upon reasonable grounds for believing them to be true, within ranks of labor union in course of campaign for union election and which related to supposed qualifications or lack of qualifications of a member to serve on committee of union, were privileged. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 47.

Neil N. Werb, Beverly Hills, and I. Robert Mednik, San Jose, for appellant.

Maurice J. Bertrand, in pro. per.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

The complaint in this action contained one count accusing defendant Bertrand of libel and in the second count, slander, for which plaintiff sought damages.

It was alleged that on or about April 5, 1955, at South Gate, California, defendant distributed to Union members of Local 216 of United Auto Workers of the Congress of Industrial Organization a circular concerning the plaintiff reading: "All about his schooling and his experience attending Committeemens' School. I wonder what school he means. Joe Stalin's School at Watts, and the Great Commissar Goonfelte's teachings how to overthrow the U. S. Government? I wonder how much dues he has cheated Stalin out of for the last 7 years?" It was alleged that the publication was false and defamatory and that plaintiff was thereby damaged in his reputation in the sum of $10,000. It was alleged in the second cause of action that at the same time defendant spoke in the hearing of members of said Union "the false and scandalous words that plaintiff is a Communist" to plaintiff's damage.

Defendant answered, admitting the publication of the printed circulars and that the same were distributed to members of the Union. It was denied that the statements were false or defamatory or that plaintiff had suffered damage. The answer denied the allegations of the second cause of action of the complaint. It was alleged on information and belief and as separate defenses that the statements in the pamphlets and also any defamatory words spoken by defendant were true; at the times of said publications, plaintiff and defendant were engaged in a political campaign for election as committeemen for the Union; plaintiff was making inflammatory and derogatory remarks respecting the defendant; the statements in the pamphlet and those allegedly spoken were in retaliation of plaintiff's attack upon defendant; all statements made by defendant were made in good faith without malice and to members of the Union to whom they were of interest and importance. It was alleged that the words spoken of plaintiff by defendant were materially different from those alleged in the second cause of action and that they were uttered in response to a request for such information received from an interested person and in response to a request for such information made by an agent of plaintiff for the express purpose of laying the foundation for a claim of slander. In the trial the court received the testimony of the parties and of ten other witnesses. The reporter's transcript consists of 176 pages.

The court found that the pamphlet was published by defendant; the parties were members of the Union and candidates for committeemen; the pamphlet was published during the campaign; it was of common interest to the members of the Union; it concerned Union matters as they related to plaintiff and "the occasion was not abused"; defendant at all times had reasonable grounds to believe the matter set forth was true; he published and distributed the circular in good faith and without malice and that the publication was qualifiedly privileged. As to the second cause of action it was found that the allegation that defendant was accused of being a Communist was not true. The court concluded that the publication by means of the circular was qualifiedly privileged and that plaintiff was not entitled to judgment. Plaintiff appeals.

It is contended on the appeal: (1) The evidence does not sustain the finding that defendant did not utter the slanderous statements as alleged in the second cause of action; (2) The statements in the circular were not privileged; (3) Defendant had no reasonable belief that the statements made concerning plaintiff were true.

[1–3] Upon the first point plaintiff refers us to six widely separated pages of the reporter's transcript in support of his contention that there was evidence that defendant stated that plaintiff was "poison and a subversive." We are referred to no evidence that defendant accused plaintiff of being a Communist. Plaintiff has not seen fit to quote any of the evidence. We have considered the testimony to which plaintiff's references relate and find that it supports the statement of the trial court that "the witnesses produced by the plaintiff weren't really very satisfactory. Their testimony wasn't satisfactory. Several of them I discounted pretty much entirely." Plaintiff had the burden of convincing the trial court that the slanderous words were spoken as alleged. He did not establish the allegations of his complaint as a matter of law and, of course, it is not our function to judge of the credibility of the witnesses or the weight of their testimony. The finding as to the second cause of action was justified by the failure of plaintiff's proof.

[4] The evidence amply supports the findings that all statements of defendant were published and uttered in good faith, without malice, in the belief that they were true based upon reasonable grounds for believing them to be true. Admittedly, all statements were made within the ranks of the labor union in the course of a compaign for election. They related to matters of common interest to members, namely, the supposed qualifications or lack of qualifications of a member to serve on a committee of the union. They were privileged communications made "without malice, to a person interested therein, (1) by one who is also interested, or (2) by one who stands in such relation to the person interested as to afford a reasonable ground for supposing the motive for the communication innocent." Civ.Code, § 47.

[5] Statements made without malice, wholly within the ranks of a labor union, during a dispute between contending factions over union policies and administration, and pertinent thereto, should be regarded as privileged. De Mott v. Amalgamated Meat Cutters, 157 Cal.App.2d 13, 320 P.2d 50; Emde v. San Joaquin County Central Labor Council, 23 Cal.2d 146, 143 P.2d 20, 150 A.L.R. 916; Campbell v. Jewish Committee for Personal Service, 125 Cal.App.2d 771, 271 P.2d 185; see, also, Hall, Proof in Libel Actions in California, So.Cal.L.Rev. Volume 24, No. 4, pages 350, 373, 374. There could scarcely be more appropriate occasions for the exercise of the right of uninhibited free speech.

The judgment is affirmed.

PARKER WOOD and VALLÉE, JJ., concur.

159 Cal.App.2d 357

MARSALLI'S BLUE RIBBON COFFEE CO., Inc., Plaintiff, Cross-Defendant and Appellant,

v.

BLUE RIBBON PRODUCTS CO., Inc., Defendant, Cross-Complainant and Respondent, Charles Marsalli, Cross-Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. No. 17770.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

April 15, 1958.

Action by corporation for declaratory relief respecting right to use of term "Blue Ribbon" for prospective sales of coffee. Coffee seller answered and cross-complained for an injunction. The Superior Court, City & County of San Francisco, William T. Sweigert, J., enjoined corporation and it appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Brazil, J. pro tem., held that where corporation had used trade name "Blue Ribbon" in marketing its premium coffee to hotel and restaurant trade in area for over 40 years and had built up extensive advertising prestige based on such name, it was entitled to enjoin corporation from commencing to sell coffee in same general marketing area under the identical name.

Affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐842(7)

Where evidence had been produced by both sides even though it produced practically no factual controversy, there were still inferences to be drawn, interpretations to be made and witnesses to be believed or disbelieved, so rule providing that where there is no conflict in evidence only a question of law is presented to appellate court which is not required to give weight to decision of trial court, was not applicable.

2. Appeal and Error ⇐931(1), 989, 1010(1)

An appellate court will review the evidence in the light most favorable to the respondent, will not weigh the evidence, will indulge in all intendments and reasonable inferences which favor sustaining of trier of fact, and will not disturb finding of trier of fact if there is substantial evidence in the record in support thereof.

3. Trade-Marks and Trade-Names and Unfair Competition ⇐70(3)

Where corporation had used trade name "Blue Ribbon" in marketing its premium coffee to the hotel and restaurant trade in area for 40 years and had built up extensive advertising prestige based on use of such name, it was entitled to enjoin company from commencing to sell coffee in the same general marketing area under the identical name. West's Ann. Bus. & Prof.Code, § 14242(e).

4. Trade-Marks and Trade-Names and Unfair Competition ⇐3(1)

While words which are not fanciful expression unrelated to quality of product sold cannot be qualified as a trade-mark, they can, if facts warrant, be appropriated as a trade name if a secondary meaning has been acquired. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, § 14242(e).

5. Injunction ⇐1

An injunction is an extraordinary remedy to be issued with great caution and only on clear showing.

Robert E. Hatch, Leighton Hatch, San Francisco, for appellant.

Raymond J. O'Connor, Charles E. Townsend, Jr., San Francisco, Townsend & Townsend, Stephen S. Townsend, San Francisco, of counsel, for respondent.

BRAZIL, Justice pro tem.

The respondent is a corporation whose main business is coffee manufacturing and the selling and distribution of high grade coffee to restaurants, hotels and institutions. Its principal office is in San Francisco, and it has branches in Oakland, Santa Rosa, Sacramento, San Jose, Chico and Reno, Nevada. Its general marketing area includes Washington, Oregon, Nevada and California, with the major portion of its business being centered in Northern California. Up until ten years ago, the company also engaged in retail selling on a house to house delivery plan, but now it has practically no retail trade. Once in a while some one remembers the house to house sales and makes a purchase from a delivery truck. Its coffee products, which make up 90% of its sales, have always been sold under the trade name of Blue Ribbon Coffee.

The appellant Charles Marsalli has for many years operated a well known restaurant under his name, on Kearny Street in San Francisco. For more than five years before he incorporated Marsalli's Blue Ribbon Coffee Co., Inc. in March 1956, he was a regular customer of respondent, buying coffee from that company under the name Blue Ribbon Coffee. Mr. Marsalli testified he had not done business with any other company in the area using or featuring the name Blue Ribbon Coffee, and that he did not know of any one else who ever used that name in the sale of coffee.

The corporate appellant was organized by Mr. Marsalli for the express purpose of selling coffee to restaurants, hotels and institutions in and about Northern California. The business office of this corporation was the same as that of Marsalli's Restaurant. The officers are Mr. Marsalli, his attorney and the attorney's secretary. No stock has yet been issued or sold, and the corporation has not actually engaged in selling or distributing coffee under the name of Marsalli's Blue Ribbon or any other name. Before the formation of the corporation, Mr. Marsalli attempted to buy stock in respondent corporation, but was unable to make any such purchase or to acquire any interest in Blue Ribbon Products Company, Inc.

The respondent sells coffee in one and five pound packages, either directly or through distributors in the general marketing area. It deals in top-grade coffee for which it commands the highest prices. For a great many years, it has featured the trade name in an extensive advertising campaign. Its average yearly sales of coffee for the last six years has been between one and a half million to two million pounds. The name Blue Ribbon appears on all packages, on leased equipment such as urns and stoves, on its twenty-one delivery trucks, on calendars, on give away restaurant checks, and it is the name under which the company sponsors cocktail parties and the like for the trade.

Shortly after the incorporation of the appellant company, it filed this action for declaratory relief by which it requested a declaration of its right to the use of the term Blue Ribbon for its prospective sale of coffee. The respondent answered and cross-complained for an injunction to prevent Mr. Marsalli and Marsalli's Blue Ribbon Coffee Co., Inc. from using the expression Blue Ribbon in any manner dealing with the sale of coffee in its general marketing area. From a judgment in favor of defendant and cross-complainant, the plaintiff and cross-defendants have appealed. The appellants were enjoined from transacting business under the name of Marsalli's Blue Ribbon Coffee Co., Inc., from using Blue Ribbon or Blue Ribbon Coffee in any manner whatsoever in California, Oregon, Washington, Nevada or Arizona, and they are required to destroy all material such as labels, stencils, packages, etc., which incorporated the words Blue Ribbon or Blue Ribbon Coffee. The appellants do not complain of the wide scope of the injunction (e. g., the State of Arizona is not once mentioned in the evidence), but are insistent that they have a right to use the prohibited words in their prospective coffee sales, and that no injunction at all is justified by the facts and the law of this case.

[1] Appellants assert that, as there is no conflict in the evidence, only a question of law is presented; that in such a situation the appellate court proceeds anew without being required to give any weight to the decision of the trial court. In support thereof, they cite Moore v. Wood, 26 Cal. 2d 621, 160 P.2d 772, 776. The situation is not the same for here there was evidence produced by both sides even though it produced practically no factual controversy. In the Moore case, it is said: "The record includes no evidence offered or received for the purpose of showing the intention of the parties as to their agreement. The construction of the contract by the trial court, therefore, presents a question of law which this court must determine." In re Estate of Norris, 78 Cal.App.2d 152, 177 P.2d 299; In re Estate of Platt, 21 Cal.2d 343, 131 P.2d 825, and Moffatt v. Tight, 44 Cal.App.2d 643, 112 P.2d 910, also cited by appellants in support of their contention, hold only that an appellate court is not bound by a construction of a will, contract or document which is based solely on its terms without the aid of evidence. The appellants have evidently overlooked the fact that even with uncontradicted evidence there are inferences to be drawn, interpretations to be made and witnesses to be believed or disbelieved. An appeal of a case, where evidence is received in the trial court, would not become one solely of law just because the appellant refused to cross-examine a witness or call one of his own.

[2] The approach to the problems involved must therefore be according to the rule as stated in Berniker v. Berniker, 30 Cal.2d 439, 444, 182 P.2d 557, 561, that "an appellate court (1) will review the evidence in the light most favorable to the respondent; (2) will not weigh the evidence; (3) will indulge all intendments and reasonable inferences which favor sustaining the finding of the trier of fact; and (4) will not disturb the finding of the trier of fact if there is substantial evidence in the record in support thereof."

[3] Appellants claim there is no distinction between this case and Applebaum v. Senior, 154 Cal.App.2d 371, 316 P.2d 410 (decided by this court in October 1957) and that "Inasmuch as your opinion in Applebaum, supra, notes there was no evidentiary conflict, your decision in that case should be applied—without reservation or distinction—to the present one, regardless of the injunction having been denied by the trial court in one instance and granted in the other." The law of the two cases being the same, the results should be alike unless the facts be different. And they are. All of appellants' remaining contentions can be reviewed by a consideration of the differences in the two cases, as well they might by considering the similarities between this case and either H. Moffat Co. v. Koftinow, 104 Cal.App.2d 560, 232 P.2d 15 or Del Monte Special Food Co. v. California Packing Corp., 9 Cir., 34 F.2d 774.

In the Applebaum case, the plaintiff sought to enjoin the use of the words Junior Boot Shop, which defendant Senior used in connection with his own name in the conduct of a retail children's shoe store in Walnut Creek. The plaintiff operated two retail children's shoe stores in San Francisco and one in San Anselmo under the name of Junior Boot Shop. He and one Mullany had earlier operated a store of children's shoes in San Francisco under the name Junior Boot Shop with a branch store using the same name in San Mateo County. Mr. Applebaum had bought all the stock in the operating corporation from Mullany and his wife under an agreement by which the Mullanys received the San Mateo store with the right to use the name Junior Boot Shop in San Mateo County. Mr. Senior started his business in 1951 in Walnut Creek and called his store Senior's Junior Boot Shop at the suggestion of his former employer, Mr. Mullany, who thought the paradoxical title would be a catchy name for the store. The plaintiff knew all along that defendant was using this name, and he made no objection until several years later; in fact there were occasions when plaintiff and defendant exchanged shoes when one or the other did not have a particular shoe in stock. It is a reasonable inference from such conduct that even plaintiff did not believe that confusion of the public resulted, or that Mr. Senior was guilty of any unfair business practice.

Here the court found that there was a secondary meaning in the coffee trade to the words Blue Ribbon, while in the Applebaum case the court held that no such meaning in the words Junior Boot Shop had been acquired in Contra Costa County. The cases are first distinguishable because of the trial court's finding of fact. Mr. Marsalli and his corporation propose to sell their coffee in the same trading areas as that occupied by respondent. The area of appellants' trade would necessarily be embraced within the general marketing area in which respondent's products were well and favorably known under the trade name of Blue Ribbon Coffee. In the other case the court held that there was support in the record for the finding that the term Junior Boot Shop had not acquired a secondary meaning in Contra Costa County in which place respondent's activities were generally confined. The cited case deals with two similar retail businesses (and a third one exists close by in San Mateo County) in different counties, each with limited trading areas. It is quite apparent also that there is essentially a difference between a wholesale or semi-wholesale business and a retail business, for in the latter the personality of the operator of the store has far more significance than is found in the former which necessarily operates in a much larger territory.

While not a deciding factor, the two cases are further distinguished in that there is more than mere coincidence to justify the name Senior's Junior Boot Shop. There appears no good reason for using the words Blue Ribbon in a contemplated competing business operating in the very same area. The English language affords many other apt expressions for the use of appellants in their new enterprise. In the Applebaum case, the respondent was using his own name to make an interesting and appealing combination of words; he was not in direct competition with the appellant; and the court found that his conduct was not an unfair business practice and that it was not likely to cause confusion in the minds of the public dealing with these two business adversaries.

> "The question of unfair competition is one of fact for the trial court and depends in the last analysis on whether the public is likely to be deceived [citations] * * * Since the court could properly conclude that the name 'Junior Boot Shop' was not generally identified with plaintiffs' business among the public of Contra Costa County its findings above summarized are supported by the evidence and the inferences properly to be drawn therefrom." Applebaum v. Senior, supra, 154 Cal.App.2d at page 375, 316 P.2d at page 413.

The same rule applied to this case results in a different conclusion by the trial court, because the findings of fact are not the same. In each case there is substantial evidence to support the finding of fact.

Three witnesses, familiar with the situation, testified that the use of the words Blue Ribbon in the sale and distribution of coffee by the appellants would lead to confusion in the trading area long serviced by the Blue Ribbon Products Co. The appellants did not object to the questions as calling for the conclusion of a witness, move to strike the answers nor cross-examine the witnesses on the subject of their expressed opinions. It is reasonable to assume that these omissions on appellants' part were purposeful and not from oversight. The appellants, while claiming no confusion can arise from the use of a term like Blue Ribbon, which anybody knows relates to something top-grade or to a prize winner, are themselves apparently a bit confused. In their briefs they refer to the respondent as the Blue Ribbon Coffee Co., Inc., instead of Blue Ribbon Products Co., Inc. It is but another indication that Blue Ribbon is the respondent's trade name; that people dealing with coffee believe that Blue Ribbon Coffee is the respondent's product without being much concerned with any other word that may appear in the company's name.

[4] In H. Moffat Co. v. Koftinow, supra, the court affirmed a judgment enjoining the defendant, who had for several years before operated as the Manteca Veal Co., from using the word Manteca in the sale of meat products, because the word had gotten a secondary meaning as a trade name. Like Blue Ribbon, the word Manteca is not a fanciful expression unrelated to the quality of the product sold. While neither expression could qualify as a trade mark (Bus. & Prof.Code, § 14242e), they can, if the facts warrant, be appropriated as a trade name if a secondary meaning has been acquired. The Moffat case in at least two particulars is less favorable to the prevailing party than the instant case. There the party enjoined was actually in business and had been using the word Manteca in its name, and, secondly, Moffat & Co. was alleged to have been guilty of laches in that it waited such a long time after knowledge before it did anything about it.

The fact that appellant intends always to preface the term Blue Ribbon with his own name, Marsalli, does not require a finding that confusion and unfair competition is thereby eliminated. "It is obvious that the requirement that subject matter be added to the words in question to the effect that there was no connection between the two businesses would be ineffective. It would be fraught with the practical danger of abuse in the many and varied ways that the words are used in a business such as advertising, answering telephone calls and the like." Eastern Columbia, Inc., v. Waldman, 30 Cal.2d 268, 271, 181 P.2d 865, 867.

In this case we find the appellants, having bought coffee under the name of Blue Ribbon from respondent for many years, trying unsuccessfully to buy into the respondent company, having never heard of anybody other than respondent using the term in the coffee business and who must certainly have known of respondent's reputation for high quality coffee, suddenly deciding to go into direct competition with the respondent and using the very two words that respondent had for more than forty years used to favorably identify its product. The choice of these two words must surely be attributable to something more than sheer coincidence. Under the circumstances it is difficult to find any justification for permitting appellants to use those words at all in their proposed business whether alone or in conjunction with other words.

[5] While injunction may in many cases be an extraordinary remedy, to be issued with great caution and only on a clear showing (Wilkins v. Oken, 157 Cal.App.2d 603, 321 P.2d 876), the admonition is scarcely applicable here for the appellants have not as yet started business; the respondent asks for no damages—all it asks is for the court to prevent the use of just two words. This leaves appellants with a myriad choice of words, equally as effective as the two they want to use, except perhaps for the unjustified purpose of confusing the public, the coffee trade or the respondent's customers. It is unlikely that appellants would be so insistent if respondent had over the years somehow created an impression in the coffee trade that Blue Ribbon stood for poor rather than good quality.

> "This thought that a newcomer has an 'infinity' of other names to choose from without infringing upon a senior appropriation runs through the decisions." Stork Restaurant v. Sahati, 9 Cir., 166 F.2d 348, 361.

For an elaborate discussion of about every contention an appellant can make to upset an injunction preventing the use of a trade name, reference is made to the case last cited.

Judgment affirmed.

DOOLING, Acting P. J., and DRAPER, J., concur.

159 Cal.App.2d 322

Rossie M. DORAN, Individually and Rossie M. Doran, Administratrix of the Estate of Coral E. Doran, deceased, Plaintiffs and Respondents,

v.

MILLAND DEVELOPMENT COMPANY, a corporation, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 17604.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

April 14, 1958.

Rehearing Denied May 14, 1958.

Hearing Denied June 11, 1958.

Widow, individually and as administratrix of estate of her deceased husband, brought action against vendor to recover damages because foundation of home purchased by widow and her husband from vendor was infested with wood-destroying fungus, on ground that vendor's salesman allegedly made false representation that foundation was properly built, when in fact construction of foundation did not comply with building ordinance of city. The Superior Court, Marin County, Jordan L. Martinelli, J., entered judgment against the vendor, and the vendor appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Dooling, J., held that positive representation by vendor that foundation had been properly built, when vendor had not ascertained whether building laws had been complied with, fell within rule that fraud may consist in positive assertion, in manner not warranted by information of person making it, of that which is not true, though he believes it to be true.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Fraud ⇐16

Even though there may be no duty of disclosure, in absence of some express representation, one who does speak must speak the whole truth, and not by partial suppression or concealment make utterance untruthful or misleading.

2. Fraud ⇐17, 20

Where salesman of vendor expressly represented to purchasers of home that foundation was properly constructed, though actually it was not because air vents required by city ordinance had not been placed in the foundation, and foundation was vulnerable to attack of wood-destroying fungus, vendor, having undertaken to make a representation on the subject, was bound not to conceal any relevant circumstances, and purchasers were entitled to believe that all applicable building laws had been complied with in foundation, and therefore vendor was liable for damages in action sounding in fraud, when foundation became infested with wood-destroying fungus.

3. Fraud ⇐13(3)

Positive representation by vendor that foundation of home was properly built, when vendor had not ascertained whether building ordinance of city had been complied with with respect to foundation, fell within rule that fraud may consist in positive assertion, in a manner not warranted by information of person making it, of that which is not true, though he believes it to be true. West's Ann.Civ. Code, § 1572, subd. 2

4. Fraud ⇐11(1)

Representation by vendor of home that foundation was properly built was not a mere expression of "opinion" by vendor, in view of rule that where one making representation is in a position to have superior knowledge or special information concerning subject matter, representation is regarded as one of "fact".

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Fact" and "Opinion".

5. Fraud ⇐58(4)

In action by widow individually and as administratrix of her deceased husband against vendor to recover damages because foundation of home purchased by widow and husband from vendor was infested with wood-destroying fungus, on ground that vendor's salesman allegedly made false representation that foundation was properly built, testimony of widow that, if she had known that foundation was not properly vented as required by city ordinance, she would not have bought the house, was sufficient to establish reliance by widow on salesman's representation.

Morton R. Colvin, San Rafael, Reynold H. Colvin, San Francisco, for appellant.

Nelson, Boyd & Menary, D. K. MacDonald, Jr., San Rafael, for respondents.

DOOLING, Justice.

Appellant is a corporation engaged in the construction of new homes and the sale of such homes to members of the public. In 1947 appellant sold a new home so built by it in the City of Mill Valley to respondent Rossie M. Doran and her husband, who died in 1949. In April of 1953 by reason of the fact that a portion of the bedroom floor collapsed under the weight of a bed Mrs. Doran first discovered that the foundations of the house were infested with a wood-destroying fungus and was obliged to pay $2,309.51 for necessary repairs. Suing on her own behalf and as administratrix of her husband's estate she recovered judgment. The action sounded in fraud.

The evidence most favorable to the judgment showed that the fungus infestation was caused by insufficient ventilation of the sub-floor area, that the house as built had eight air-vents of the louvre type which were insufficient for the purpose, whereas the building ordinance of the City of Mill Valley required seventeen vents covered with galvanized wire. The evidence further showed that appellant's salesman represented to Mr. and Mrs. Doran that "the foundation was properly built"; that neither appellant's officers nor its contractor, who built the house for it, was familiar with the Mill Valley building ordinance or its requirements as to sub-floor ventilation although they knew that there was such an ordinance; that they relied on the building inspector of the city to call their attention to any deviations in the plans from the requirements of the ordinance; that the inadequacy of the vents to comply with the ordinance was not called to their attention and that they believed because of this that the house as constructed complied with the ordinance. The Dorans were not informed that appellant was not familiar with the requirements of the building ordinance. Mrs. Doran testified that she would not have purchased the property if she had known that it was not properly vented.

The trial court found that appellant's salesman made the representation "that the foundation was properly built"; that appellant failed to inspect the Mill Valley building ordinances, that appellant concealed this fact from the Dorans, but that appellant honestly believed at the time that it had complied with said ordinances. The court further found that the Dorans would not have bought the property if they had known of the defective construction.

Appellant argues the case as if the express representation that the foundation was properly built and the concealment of its failure to familiarize itself with the Mill Valley building ordinance could be "compartmentalized" and insulated from one another. In this fashion appellant first argues "that there is a total failure of proof regarding any impropriety in the construction of the foundations per se, and that in the absence of an express representation regarding compliance with the city ordinances regulating * * * ventilating vents, no false representation has been proven." Having thus, to its own satisfaction, disposed of the express representation it turns to the concealment of its failure to familiarize itself with the building ordinances and argues that because it had the good faith belief that it had not violated any ordinance such concealment could not be fraudulent, citing Watt v. Patterson, 125 Cal.App.2d 788, 271 P.2d 200.

[1, 2] Appellant cannot thus divorce the express representation from the concealment and treat each separately as if the other did not exist. Under the decisions even though there may be no duty of disclosure in the absence of some express representation, "one who does speak must speak the whole truth, and not by partial suppression or concealment make the utterance untruthful or misleading." 23 Cal.Jur.2d, Fraud and Deceit, § 46, p. 112. Here the representation was expressly made that the foundation was properly constructed. Actually it was not, in that the vents required by the ordinance had not been placed in the building. The foundation was vulnerable to the attack of wood-destroying fungus by reason of that fact. The Dorans were entitled to believe that all applicable building laws had been complied with in this respect and having undertaken to make a representation on that subject appellant was bound not to conceal any relevant circumstance.

[3] Appellant's argument is equally vulnerable from another point of view. Fraud may consist in "(t)he positive assertion, in a manner not warranted by the information of the person making it, of that which is not true, though he believes it to be true." Civ.Code, § 1572, subd. 2; Gagne v. Bertran, 43 Cal.2d 481, 487, 275 P.2d 15. The positive representation that the foundation was properly built, when it had not been ascertained whether the building laws had been complied with in this respect, falls well within this rule, although appellant believed it to be true. The intent to deceive is not necessary. It is sufficient in this respect if the representation is made with intent to induce the parties to act upon it. Gagne v. Bertran, supra, 43 Cal. 2d 481, 488, 275 P.2d 15.

[4] The claim that the representation that the foundation was properly built was a mere expression of opinion cannot stand in the face of the rule that where the one making the representation is in a position to have "superior knowledge or special information concerning the subject matter" such representation is regarded as one of fact. 23 Cal.Jur.2d, Fraud and Deceit, § 12 p. 30; Union Flower Market v. Southern California Flower Market, 10 Cal.2d 671, 676, 76 P.2d 503; Gagne v. Bertran, supra, 43 Cal.2d 481, 489, 275 P.2d 15.

[5] The reliance of Mrs. Doran upon the representation is established by her testimony that if she had known that the house was not properly vented she would not have bought it. While Mr. Doran's death precluded direct testimony of his reliance the circumstantial evidence sufficiently supports the finding as to him.

Judgment affirmed.

KAUFMAN, P. J., and DRAPER, J., concur.

159 Cal.App.2d 143

William G. WILLIAMS et al., Plaintiff, Cross-Defendants and Appellants,

v.

Max MIRANDA, Defendant, Cross-Complainant and Respondent.

William G. WILLIAMS et al., Plaintiff, Cross-Defendants and Respondents,

v.

Max MIRANDA, Defendant, Cross-Complainant and Appellant.

Civ. 22477.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

April 3, 1958.

Partition action, wherein defendant filed a cross-complaint. From judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, William P. Haughton, J., separate appeals were taken by the plaintiff and cross-defendants upon the one hand, and by the defendant and cross-complainant on the other. The District Court of Appeal, Patrosso, J. pro tem., held that where purchaser at execution sale of divorced wife's interest in house had knowledge of property settlement agreement between divorced spouses which created a trust in the property for support and maintenance of minor children of the parties, purchaser was in no position to assert that he was a bona fide purchaser, even if he did not know exact terms of the trust.

Judgment modified and affirmed.

1. Judgment ⇐747(2)

Judgment in prior partition action by person under whom present plaintiff was claiming that property settlement agreement between spouses who were living apart created valid trust in certain house in favor of minor children of the parties was conclusive on such issue in present partition action.

2. Trusts ⇐11(1)

A property settlement agreement giving wife the exclusive right to occupy family home so long as she should not remarry, but providing that upon her remarriage the property should be sold and funds realized therefrom used for support and maintenance of minor children, created a valid trust for benefit of the minor children.

3. Trusts ⇐1

The essentials of a valid trust are a competent trustor, a property, an indicated intention, a definite disposition of the estate, a trustee and a beneficiary.

4. Trusts ⇐357(2)

Where purchaser at execution sale of divorced wife's alleged interest in house had knowledge of property settlement agreement between spouses which had created a trust in the property for support and maintenance of the minor children of the parties, purchaser was in no position to assert that he was a bona fide purchaser without notice of existence of the trust, even if he did not know the exact terms of the trust.

5. Trusts ⇐227

In view of fact that prior partition action instituted by divorced wife, if successful, would have resulted in a judgment that house owned by divorced parties was not subject to a trust in favor of their minor children, divorced husband was properly awarded expenses incurred by him in the successful defense of the action by which existence of the trust was confirmed out of funds realized upon sale of the house.

6. Trusts ⇐226

Where property settlement agreement by divorced parties created trust in house owned by them for support and maintenance of minor children of the parties, and husband under terms of the agreement was obligated to pay taxes levied against property so long as it remained unsold, husband could not be reimbursed for taxes paid by him upon the property out of proceeds realized upon sale of the house, especially where husband remained inactive and did nothing looking to sale of the property after wife's remarriage.

7. Divorce ⇐308

Independently of terms of property settlement agreement by divorced parties whereby trust in house owned by them was created for support and maintenance of minor children of the parties, husband was obligated to make payments for support of children by virtue of provisions of interlocutory divorce decree and was not entitled to reimbursement for such payments out of proceeds realized from sale of the house.

8. Trusts ⇐183

Where property settlement agreement by divorced parties created trust in house owned by them for support and maintenance of minor children of the parties, and it appeared that rent for house collected by wife was used for support of minor children during period when husband made no payments for their support, husband was not entitled to reimbursement for one-half of the rent collected.

9. Trusts ⇐183

Where property settlement agreement by divorced parties created trust in house owned by them for support and maintenance of minor children, and it did not appear that husband was entitled to possession of property, husband could not hold either former wife or alleged purchaser of the house at execution sale upon judgment obtained against wife for rents, issues and profits received from the premises, since if there was any accountability therefor, it was to the trust estate and not to husband.

10. Trusts ⇐315(1)

Where property settlement agreement by divorced parties created trust in house owned by them for support and maintenance of minor children of the parties, husband was a trustee under the agreement and entitled to reasonable compensation for services rendered by him as such trustee.

11. Costs ⇐172

Counsel fees are not recoverable in actions either at law or in equity except where expressly allowed by statute.

12. Partition ⇐114(5)

Where services rendered by divorced wife's counsel in action for partition of certain realty instituted against divorced husband by alleged purchaser of wife's interest at execution sale on judgment against wife were in interest of wife alone and not for common benefit, award for attorney's fees of wife's counsel out of proceeds realized from sale of the realty was improper. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 796.

13. Trusts ⇐227

Attorney, in acting both as counsel for alleged purchaser of divorced wife's interest in certain realty at execution sale and for divorced wife's minor children in partition action wherein it was asserted by divorced husband that realty was being held in trust for support and maintenance of children, undertook to represent conflicting interests, and it would be highly inequitable to impose a charge for his services upon the trust estate which he, in interest of alleged purchaser at execution sale, sought to destroy to the detriment of minor beneficiaries whose interest he purported to represent.

14. Trusts ⇐225

Where it was determined that house owned by divorced parties was subject to trust for support and maintenance of minor children of divorced parties as result of property settlement entered into by them and that alleged purchaser of wife's interest in the house at execution sale was not a bona fide purchaser without knowledge of the trust, alleged purchaser, in making repairs on the house before it was determined that he was not a bona fide purchaser, did not do so as a mere volunteer and was entitled to recover reasonable value of the repairs out of proceeds realized from sale of the house.

R. Norman Wenzell, Los Angeles, for appellant.

C. A. Falconer and William D. Spector, Los Angeles, for respondent.

PATROSSO, Justice pro tem.

We are presented here with separate appeals by the plaintiff and cross-defendants upon the one hand, and by the defendant and cross-complainant on the other, from portions of a decree entered in an action wherein plaintiff sought partition of a parcel of real property.

On September 7, 1943, defendant Max Miranda and cross-defendant Mary Louise Miranda, now Mary Louise Brown, who will hereinafter be referred to as Mrs. Miranda, were husband and wife and the owners as joint tenants of the subject property. On that date a divorce action between them being pending, the parties entered into a property settlement agreement which provided among other things that the title to said property should remain in the names of the parties as joint tenants so long as Mrs. Miranda did not remarry and as long as the property was occupied by Mrs. Miranda as a home for herself and the two minor children of the parties, with the proviso that should Mrs. Miranda remarry the property should be sold, both parties agreeing to execute the necessary deeds, and the proceeds derived therefrom should be used for the support and maintenance of said minor children at the rate of $50 per month, and "during the period of time said money is being expended" Mr. Miranda should be relieved from making any further payments for the support of said minor children. Until that time, however, Mr. Miranda agreed to pay $25 per month for the support of the children and further agreed to make the monthly payments of $25 due upon the encumbrance upon said property and to pay when due, all taxes and assessments levied against the property. Thereafter an interlocutory decree was entered in the divorce action followed by an entry of a final decree on October 30, 1944.

On May 2, 1946, Mrs. Miranda instituted an action in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County for the partition of the real property which is the subject of this action. Mr. Miranda appeared in that action, filing an answer and cross-complaint wherein he set forth the terms of the property settlement agreement and prayed a decree that Mr. and Mrs. Miranda held said property in trust for the use and benefit of the minor children in accordance with the terms of the property settlement agreement. In addition, the minor children acting by and through Max Miranda as their guardian ad litem, filed a complaint in intervention wherein they alleged substantially the same facts as those set forth in the cross-complaint of Mr. Miranda and prayed a decree that the said property was held in trust by Mr. and Mrs. Miranda for their use and benefit in accordance with the terms of the property settlement agreement. By its finding the court in that action found the facts to be as alleged in the cross-complaint of Max Miranda and the complaint in intervention of the children; and by its judgment decreed that Mrs. Miranda take nothing by her complaint; and that the property was held in trust pursuant to the provisions of the property settlement agreement. An appeal was taken from this judgment by Mrs. Miranda to the District Court of Appeal where it was affirmed. Miranda v. Miranda, 1947, 81 Cal.App.2d 61, 183 P.2d 61.

Following the affirmance of the judgment last mentioned and on January 27, 1948, Mrs. Miranda married one Kelly Brown and on March 26, 1948, she commenced a new proceeding in the superior court for the partition of the property and the termination of the trust. Process in this action was served upon Mr. Miranda and his default for failure to appear was duly entered therein but no further proceeding was had in said action until it was dismissed on July 6, 1956, following the filing of the instant action.

On February 5, 1954, the interest of Mrs. Miranda in the property was sold to the plaintiff for sum of $1,272.39 at an execution sale upon a judgment obtained against Mrs. Miranda in the Municipal Court of the Los Angeles Judicial District, and on February 14, 1955, the marshal of said court duly issued to plaintiff his deed therefor, following which, on May 5, 1955, plaintiff instituted this action. The only party named as defendant therein is Max Miranda and the complaint is in the customary form of an action in partition alleging that the plaintiff and defendant are the owners as tenants in common of the property in question; that plaintiff has an estate of inheritance therein to the extent of the undivided one-half interest in fee thereof; that the defendant has a similar interest therein; that there are no liens or encumbrances thereon appearing of record and that no person other than the plaintiff and the defendant is interested in said premises as owner or otherwise. The complaint concludes with a prayer for a partition of the property and if partition cannot be had, for a sale thereof and that the proceeds be applied to the payment of the general costs of the action; the payment of reasonable attorney's fees incurred for the common benefit and that the residue be divided equally between the plaintiff and the defendant. Defendant appeared in the action by filing an answer and cross-complaint and in his answer he denies that the plaintiff and defendant are owners as tenants in common of the property; denies that plaintiff has any interest therein and alleges that the legal title thereto, is held by himself and Mrs. Miranda as trustees under the terms of the express trust created by the property settlement agreement, the terms of which are therein set forth. By way of special defense, defendant pleads the judgment rendered in the first partition action hereinbefore mentioned; that the plaintiff is the successor in interest of Mrs. Miranda as to her interest in the property; that plaintiff is the brother-in-law of the present husband of Mrs. Miranda and that plaintiff and Mrs. Miranda have entered into and are engaged in a conspiracy to defraud the beneficiaries and the defendants of their interest in said property and to circumvent the judgment rendered in the prior partition action; "that to carry out the aforesaid conspiracy the plaintiff herein accepted and received a conveyance of said property, without consideration or with knowledge of the aforesaid trust, and with intent on his part to assist defendant's said former wife in and for said fraudulent purposes, and to hold said property as a secret trust for the use and benefit of defendant's said former wife; that plaintiff has no right, title or interest in and to said property, but holds the same in trust for the use and benefit of the aforesaid express trust; that the within action was brought by plaintiff herein for the purpose of perpetrating the aforesaid fraudulent conspiracy, and in furtherance thereof and for the purpose of harassing defendant and to induce him to agree to sale of said property and a division of the proceeds of said sale between defendant and defendant's former wife and the plaintiff herein in violation of the terms and provisions of the aforesaid express trust."

By way of another special defense it is alleged "that defendant and plaintiff are the record owners as tenants in common of the property described" and that plaintiff is the owner of the undivided one-half interest therein; that plaintiff has collected rents, issues and profits from said property "since defendant acquired an interest therein" and has failed to account therefor to defendant and that the defendant has a lien thereon or on the proceeds from any sale thereof for one-half of any and all such rents, issues and profits so collected. Defendant further alleges that since he became an owner of such undivided one-half interest in the property he has "expended for the common benefit of all the owners of an interest in and to said property" by way of the payment of taxes for the years 1938 to 1954 both inclusive, in the sum of $907.73; the sum of $2,000 paid on account of the purchase price of the property; that from April 1, 1939, to February 1, 1948, defendant paid on account of the encumbrance on said property the sum of $2,232.50 and that in addition, defendant expended the sum of $513 for attorney's fees and the sum of $488.65 as court costs in the defense of the partition action instituted by Mrs. Miranda hereinbefore referred to, for all of which payments defendant alleges that he has a lien against the said property or the proceeds from any sale thereof. The answer concludes with a prayer that plaintiff take nothing; that the respective interest of the parties in and to the property be determined; that plaintiff be adjudged to hold the property in trust for the use and benefit of the defendant and the beneficiaries of said trust; that plaintiff be required to account for any and all rents, issues and profits received from said property; that the defendant have a lien upon the said property or upon the proceeds from any sale thereof for the expenditures made by him as alleged in his answer and for attorney's fees incurred in the action.

The cross-complaint wherein, in addition to the plaintiff, Mrs. Miranda and the minor children are named as defendants, alleges substantially the same facts as set forth in his answer and prays for the same relief. In addition, however, defendant therein alleges that since the remarriage of Mrs. Miranda she has refused to sell the property as provided in the settlement agreement although defendant has at all times been ready and willing to do so; that since the remarriage of Mrs. Miranda, defendant has paid the sum of $2,500 for the support and maintenance of the minor children and that he is entitled to reimbursement from the trust estate therefor; that by reason of the alleged conspiracy between Mrs. Miranda and plaintiff to defraud the trust estate, Mrs. Miranda should be removed as one of the trustees of the trust; that neither plaintiff nor Mrs. Miranda have any estate, title or interest in or to the said property and that the defendant is the owner in fee and entitled to the possession thereof.

To the cross-complaint a joint answer was filed by the plaintiff and Mrs. Miranda individually and as guardian ad litem for the minor children appearing by the same attorney who represents plaintiff. In this answer the cross-defendants, while admitting the execution of the property settlement agreement previously referred to, deny that a trust was thereby created in favor of the children and that Mr. Miranda was ever a trustee of such trust. Thus, we have the extraordinary situation of counsel purporting to represent minor cross-defendants asserting on behalf another party to the proceeding and adverse interest to such minors, a position which he consistently maintained upon the trial as he continues to do upon this appeal while still appearing and acting as counsel on their behalf. This matter will be adverted to further in a subsequent portion of this opinion.

During the course of the trial and pursuant to stipulation the real property was ordered sold for the sum of $11,187.37, which sum was deposited with the county clerk to abide the judgment in the action.

The trial court's findings comprise some 15 pages in the clerk's transcript. They are couched in the language of the pleadings and as is not unusual in such situation, they are confusing and in many respects contradictory. However, for the present it may be said generally that they find to be true substantially all the allegations contained in the defendant's answer and cross-complaint.

From the facts as found, the court made the following conclusions of law; that Mr. Miranda is entitled to judgment against the cross-defendants "decreeing that he recover and receive from the proceeds of said real property and be reimbursed as follows:

"1. $1,001.65 for attorneys fees and costs incurred and paid in defending the prior action to partition said real property.

"2. $340.58 for one-half of the real property taxes paid by cross complainant on said real property since the remarriage of the co-trustee, cross defendant Mary Louise Miranda.

"3. $2,080.00 as and for one-half of the child support payments paid by Cross Complainant since the said remarriage of the said co-trustee.

"4. $1,290.00 as and for one-half of the rent collected from said real property by Cross Defendants Mary Louise Miranda and William G. Williams since the remarriage of the said co-trustee.

"5. $490.00 for compensation as co-trustee of the express trust created by the co-trustees.

"6. $500.00 for attorneys fees incurred and paid in the defense of the within action and the enforcement of the said express trust.

"7. For removal of the cross defendant Mary Louise Miranda, also known as Mary Louise Brown, as a co-trustee, and the appointment of a new trustee or trustees for the express trust.

"8. For reimbursement for costs of suit incurred and paid herein by Defendant and Cross Complainant.

"9. For the balance of the proceeds of the sale of said real property to be paid over to and held in trust by the new trustee or trustees during the minority of the minor children of the co-trustees; the income and corpus to be used for the support and maintenance of said children during their minority at the rate heretofore fixed by the above entitled Court, subject to modification thereof, and Cross Complainant to be relieved therefrom unless and until the said funds are exhausted, and upon the younger child reaching majority, the then remaining balance to be divided equally between and paid over to Cross Complainant and Cross Defendant William G. Williams.

"Plaintiff and Cross Defendant William G. Williams is entitled to judgment for and reimbursement from the proceeds of said sale of said real property in the sum of $392.00 for repairs on the said real property and for $500.00 for attorneys fees herein."

Judgment was entered accordingly and in addition R. Norman Wenzell and C. A. Falconer were thereby appointed as trustees of the trust until the further or different order of the court.

Appeal of Plaintiff and Cross-Defendant Williams

[1-3] Plaintiff first contends that the trial court erred in determining that by the terms of the property settlement agreement a valid trust was created in favor of the minor children. This question, however, is no longer an open one. It was directly presented and adjudicated adversely to the plaintiff by the judgment in the first partition action instituted by Mrs. Miranda. Nor is plaintiff in a position to argue, as he does, that the trust was not one for the benefit of the children but for the sole benefit of Mr. and Mrs. Miranda. As said by the District Court of Appeal upon the appeal from the judgment in the prior partition action instituted by Mrs. Miranda:

"In contending that the property settlement did not effect a trust appellant argues that 'no statement nor words are contained in the agreement to indicate an intention to create a trust.' In making such contention appellant is forgetful of the essentials of a valid trust, to wit, a competent trustor, a property, an indicated intention, a definite disposition of the estate, a trustee and a beneficiary. 54 Am.Jur., p. 43 sec. 30; 65 C.J. p. 231 et seq.; Lefrooth v. Prentice, 202 Cal. 215, 226, 259 P. 947. In addition to the terms of the traditional valid trust the legislature in 1929 provided that a trust in relation to real or personal property or both may be made for any lawful purpose. Civ.Code, sec. 2220. The language of the agreement in the instant case provides (1) a legal purpose, to wit, maintaining the home for appellant and the minor children; (2) an estate, to wit, the home held by the parties as joint tenants; (3) beneficiaries, to wit, appellant and the minor children; (4) a legal term, to wit, the time during which the children would be entitled to support and maintenance from their parents. With all the elements of a legal trust present, the finding that a valid trust was created by the property settlement was supported by the contract of the parties." Miranda v. Miranda, 81 Cal.App.2d 61, 67–68, 183 P.2d 61, 65.

[4] Plaintiff next contends that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the trial court's finding that plaintiff and Mrs. Miranda entered into a conspiracy to defraud the beneficiaries of their interest in the trust and as a consequence erred in its conclusion that plaintiff was not a bona fide purchaser for value of Mrs. Miranda's interest in the property. We need not, however, pause to consider the validity of the contention with respect to the insufficiency of the evidence to support the finding in question, in view of the further finding that at the time plaintiff became the purchaser of Mrs. Miranda's interest in the property at execution sale, he had knowledge of the existence of the trust thereon in favor of the children and which finding is fully supported by the evidence. The evidence in this regard is to the effect that plaintiff had been on friendly terms with Mrs. Miranda for a number of years and frequently visited her at the home of herself and Mr. Brown. During these visits the trust upon the property was the subject of discussion between the parties upon various occasions as was also the subject of the judgment rendered in the prior partition action instituted by Mrs. Miranda. In view of this evidence, plaintiff is in no position to assert that he was a bona fide purchaser without notice of the existence of the trust. If he did not know the exact terms of the trust, he had knowledge of the facts sufficient to put a reasonably prudent person upon inquiry which if pursued would have disclosed the true state of Mrs. Miranda's interest in the property.

[5] Plaintiff also complains that the trial court erred in finding that Mr. Miranda was entitled to reimbursement in the sum of $1,001.65, being the amount expended by him for attorney's fees and court costs in defending the prior partition action instituted by Mrs. Miranda because, so it is said, Mr. Miranda was never a trustee of the trust. He argues that since Mr. Miranda "was a trustor and a beneficiary he could not possibly have been a trustee also." No authority is cited in support of this statement and we know of none. On the contrary one may be a beneficiary of a trust as well as the trustee so long, at least, as he is not the sole beneficiary. Cahlan v. Bank of Lassen County, 1909, 11 Cal.App. 533, 541, 105 P. 765. And in Wallace v. Riley, 1937, 23 Cal.App. 2d 654, 666, 74 P.2d 807, 814, it is said: "There is nothing in the law to disqualify a joint tenant from trusteeship of his interest in the joint property." In view of the fact that the action instituted by Mrs. Miranda, if successful, would have resulted in a judgment that the property was not subject to a trust in favor of the children, the trial court properly awarded Mr. Miranda the expense incurred by him in the successful defense of the action by which the existence of the trust was confirmed. Bixby v. Hotchkis, 1943, 58 Cal.App.2d 445, 455, 136 P.2d 597.

[6] Plaintiff also contends that the court erred in awarding Mr. Miranda the sum of $340.58 by way of reimbursement for taxes upon the property paid by him subsequent to Mrs. Miranda's remarriage. This contention is well founded. By the terms of the settlement agreement Mr. Miranda agreed to pay all taxes levied or assessed against the property. This portion of the judgment is sought to be sustained only upon the basis of the finding, which is assailed by the plaintiff as unsupported by the evidence, that Mr. Miranda was at all times subsequent to the remarriage ready and willing to sell the property, but that Mrs. Miranda consistently refused to agree thereto. Mrs. Miranda testified that she repeatedly endeavored to secure Mr. Miranda's consent to sell the property but that he consistently refused to do so. Upon this same subject Mr. Miranda testified as follows:

"Q. Mr. Miranda, did your former wife, Mrs. Brown, after the execution of the property settlement agreement in 1947, often contact you in regard to selling the property and dividing the proceeds between yourself and her? A. She always try, you know. She always hand me a subpoena trying to sell the property and take her share out.

"Q. Mr. Miranda, you refused to sell the property at any time, is that correct? A. You mean sell the property at any time?

"Q. You didn't want to sell it under her terms and conditions, did you? A. And I didn't want to sell it because on account of the kids, because I wanted the kids to have that property.

"Q. In other words, you wanted to carry out the terms of the trust, isn't that right? A. Yes."

The foregoing testimony would hardly seem to support the trial court's finding that Mr. Miranda was at all times willing to sell the property after his former wife's remarriage. On the contrary, Mr. Miranda's testimony indicates that it was his purpose and desire to preserve the property intact for the children. Indeed, at the conclusion of the trial in a discussion which ensued after the trial judge suggested to the parties the advisability of their agreeing to a private sale of the property as a means of avoiding the added expense incident to a judicial sale, Mr. Miranda stated to the court: "Oh, we might as well. I wanted to save that house for the kids you know." In his brief, defendant argues that, while Mrs. Miranda was at all times desirous of selling the property, she was insistent that she receive one-half of the proceeds derived from any such sale and it was because of this that he was not willing to consent to a sale. However, even if Mrs. Miranda may have been of the view or expected that if the property was sold she would be entitled to one-half of the proceeds, it was at all times within Mr. Miranda's power to compel a sale in accordance with the terms of the settlement agreement, and the fact that he did not undertake to do so, coupled with his testimony quoted above, warrants no other inference than that he did not desire to sell. In any event, under the terms of the agreement he was obligated to pay the taxes levied against the property so long as it remained unsold and if he remained inactive and did nothing looking to the sale of the property after Mrs. Miranda's remarriage, we see no basis for charging the proceeds constituting the trust estate held for the benefit of the children with the payment of an obligation which he in any event was obligated to discharge.

[7] Plaintiff also complains of the court's finding and judgment that the defendant is entitled to be reimbursed from the proceeds of the sale in the sum of $2,080.00 as and for one-half of the payments made by him for the support of his minor children subsequent to the remarriage of Mrs. Miranda. We are of the view that this contention is well taken for various reasons. In the first place, we have searched the record in vain for any evidence to the effect that defendant paid for child support during this period, the sum of $4,160 and counsel for the defendant in his brief has failed to direct our attention to any such evidence. Under the terms of the property settlement agreement defendant was obligated to pay $25 per month or a total during this period, as we compute it, of $2,600, and the testimony of Mrs. Miranda, which is undenied by the defendant, is to the effect that he made no support payments for a period of two years. We are not unmindful of the fact as disclosed by an examination of the file in the divorce action which is in evidence, that on February 24, 1947, the amount which defendant was required to pay for the support of the children was increased to $30 per month effective March 7, 1947, and on April 9, 1954, again increased to $65 per month effective May 8, 1954, but as noted the record does not disclose what payments have been made on account thereof by the defendant. The finding as to the amount of support paid by the defendant is therefore not sustained by the evidence.

Regardless of the amount of child support that the defendant may have paid, however, the judgment insofar as it awards defendant any sum on account thereof, is erroneous. A reading of the property settlement agreement makes clear that what the parties intended thereby was that defendant should pay for the support of his children $25 per month and in the event that the property was sold, $50 per month should be paid from the proceeds of the sale to Mrs. Miranda for this purpose, one-half thereof or $25 representing defendant's interest in the property, being in lieu of the $25 which the defendant was otherwise obligated to pay by the terms of the agreement. If the property had been sold upon Mrs. Miranda's remarriage the result would have been that although defendant was thereby excused from making the monthly payment of $25, he would in effect still be contributing $25 per month for this purpose by virtue of the fact that the trust fund would each month be depleted to the extent of $50, one-half of which would be chargeable to his share. Thus, to the extent that the proceeds of the sale have not been decreased by $50 per month since Mrs. Miranda's remarriage, as would have been the case if the property had then been sold, the amount which ultimately will come to the defendant when the trust terminates upon the attainment by the children of their majority [1] has been increased.

More important, however, is the fact that independently of the terms of the property settlement agreement, defendant was obligated to make the payments for the support of his children by virtue of the provisions of the interlocutory decree of divorce. We know of no rule of law and none has been called to our attention to the effect that defendant is entitled to reimbursement for such payments.

[8, 9] Plaintiff further complains of the trial court's finding and judgment that defendant is entitled to reimbursement in the sum of $1,290 "as and for one-half of the rent collected from said real property by Cross-Defendants Mary Louise Miranda and William G. Williams since the remarriage" of Mrs. Miranda. This contention also appears to be well taken. Our examination of the record discloses that the only testimony with respect to rental collected from the premises is to the effect that Mrs. Miranda collected rent therefrom in the sum of $85 per month for 11 months and that plaintiff collected rent at the rate of $35 per month for 12 months, or a total of $1,355. Mrs. Miranda testified that the rent so collected by her was used for the support of the minor children during the period when, as she testified and which testimony was not denied by the defendant, the latter made no payments for their support. In this situation plaintiff is not entitled to reimbursement therefor. Moreover the trial court expressly found that the defendant was not entitled to the possession of the property. In the light of this finding there is no basis for its conclusion that either plaintiff or Mrs. Miranda is accountable to defendant for the rents, issues and profits thereof. If there is any accountability therefor, it is to the trust estate and not to the defendant.

[10] Plaintiff also complains of the allowance to the defendant in the sum of $490 as compensation for services rendered by him as trustee. The argument advanced in support of this contention is that the defendant was never a trustee and that he performed no service as such for which he is entitled to be compensated. We have in effect already disposed of this contention by our prior holding that the defendant was such trustee and that he rendered services in the protection of the trust. He was accordingly entitled to reasonable compensation for his services and the amount awarded therefor does not appear to us to be unreasonable.

Appeal of Defendant and Cross-Complainant Max Miranda

In support of his appeal defendant first contends that the court erred in allowing him only one-half of the payments allegedly made by him for the support of the children subsequent to the remarriage of Mrs. Miranda. This contention has already been disposed of in connection with our consideration of the appeal of the plaintiff and wherein we have concluded that defendant was not entitled to be reimbursed for any part of such support payments.

[11, 12] Defendant next complains of the provision of the judgment whereby the plaintiff is awarded the sum of $500 as and for attorney's fees in this action, and we are in agreement with this contention. It is elementary that counsel fees are not recoverable in actions either at law or in equity except where expressly allowed by statute. Miller v. Kehoe, 107 Cal. 340, 343, 40 P. 485. If an allowance therefor was authorized, it is only by virtue of section 796 of the Code of Civil Procedure which in partition actions authorize the allowance of counsel fees incurred by the parties "for the common benefit." Although plaintiff's action purports to be one in partition, from its very inception it developed into a proceeding to establish plaintiff's ownership to an undivided one-half interest in the subject property free and clear of the claims of the minor children under the trust agreement. All of the efforts of plaintiff both in the trial court and upon this appeal were and have been directed to this end. It is therefore clear that such services as were rendered by counsel for the plaintiff were in the interest of plaintiff alone and not for the common benefit. As said in Capuccio v. Caire, 1929, 207 Cal. 200, 208, 277 P. 475, 478, 73 A.L.R. 8: "It is not to be understood that in so holding we are deciding that the cost of litigating purely controversial issues arising in such actions between parties thereto who have their own counsel and are incurring their own costs in the effort to sustain their adverse claims shall be chargeable or recoverable against the losing party or the parties to such controversy. It is evident that such was not the intent of the framers of section 796, Code of Civil Procedure, since it is expressly provided therein that it is only when the costs, including counsel fees entailed in said action, shall be found to have been expended for the common benefit that they shall be chargeable or recoverable by whichever of the parties, plaintiff or defendant, shall have so expended the same."

1. The children will attain their majority in July, 1958, and March, 1960, respectively.

[13] Furthermore, as previously noted, in acting both as counsel for the plaintiff and for the minor children in this proceeding, the attorney for the plaintiff undertook to represent conflicting interests and it would be highly inequitable to impose a charge for his services upon the very trust estate which he, in the interest of the plaintiff, sought to destroy to the detriment of the minor beneficiaries whose interests he purported to represent.

[14] Finally defendant contends that the court erred in awarding plaintiff reimbursement in the sum of $392 for repairs made by him to the real property. These repairs consisted of a new roof, installation of a new water heater and repainting. There is no contention that the amount expended for the purposes stated is unreasonable, nor that the repairs were not required. The argument is that plaintiff having no interest in the property, was a mere volunteer and hence not entitled to be reimbursed for this expenditure. Plaintiff, however, had an interest in the property and in maintaining it and the trial court was warranted in concluding that by reason of the repairs, the value of the property was increased and that as a consequence it brought a better price upon the sale thereof. The expenditures inuring to the benefit of the trust estate, we see no good reason why the court should not have authorized reimbursement therefor.

The judgment is modified by striking therefrom the provisions directing payment to defendant and cross-complainant from the proceeds of the sale in the possession of the county clerk of the following items: $340.58 for one-half of the general and special real property taxes paid by the cross-complainant; $2,080 as and for one-half of the child support payments paid by cross-complainant; $1,290 as and for one-half of the rents collected by cross-defendants William G. Williams and Mary Louise Miranda; and also striking therefrom the provision directing the payment to plaintiff from the proceeds of the sale the sum of $500 as and for attorney's fees; as so modified the judgment is affirmed; neither party to recover costs.

SHINN, P. J., and VALLÉE, J., concur.

159 Cal.App.2d 82

Eugene B. RAMEY, Jr. and Maude Ramey, Plaintiffs,

v.

Robert M. MYERS, F. J. Buckley, doing business under the firm name and style of F. J. Buckley & Company, F. J. Buckley & Company, Helen M. Catherman, Wilshire Escrow Company, a corporation, Ruth Tarnutzer, Doe One, Doe Two, Doe Three, Roe One, a partnership, and John Doe, a corporation, Defendants.

Robert M. MYERS, Defendant and Respondent,

v.

John C. HEFFERNAN, Judgment Creditor and Appellant.

Civ. 22769.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

April 1, 1958.

Rehearing Denied April 28, 1958.

Hearing Denied May 27, 1958.

Proceeding on motion to compel assignee of a money judgment, who allegedly acted as an agent or nominee of movant's codefendant in acquiring title to judgment, to satisfy the judgment. From an adverse order of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Arnold Praeger, J., the assignee appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Herndon, J., held that evidence sustained finding that assignee in taking assignment of judgment was acting for and on behalf of the codefendant.

Order affirmed.

1. Judgment ⇐894

Notice of motion to compel satisfaction of judgment which did not specifically state grounds on which it was made but which did state motion was based on an affidavit which contained averments concerning assignments of judgment to assignee, and which made reference to points and authorities stating background of action out of which judgment was entered, gave ample notice of grounds upon which motion was made. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. § 675.

2. Judgment ⇐894

In proceeding on motion to compel satisfaction of judgment, affidavit in support of motion specifically alleging that at time assignee took title to judgment he was acting on behalf of movant's codefendant and as his agent, nominee and employee contained sufficient allegations of ultimate facts and adequately apprised assignee of contentions and proofs which movant would offer. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 675.

3. Action ⇐27(1)

Action predicated upon breach of fiduciary duties and concealment of facts giving rise to right to recover secret profits is an action ex delicto and not ex contractu.

4. Principal and Agent ⇐71

Acts in violation of fiduciary duties of an agent are regarded as fraudulent.

5. Appeal and Error ⇐931(1)

All conflicts must be viewed by reviewing court in light most favorable to prevailing party and a challenged finding is entitled to benefit of every favorable inference that can be reasonably drawn from the evidence.

6. Judgment ⇐894

In proceeding on motion to compel assignee of a money judgment, who allegedly acted as agent or nominee of movant's codefendant in acquiring title to judgment, to satisfy the judgment, evidence sustained finding that assignee in taking assignment of judgment was acting for and on behalf of the codefendant. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. § 675.

7. Trial ⇐388(2)

Proceeding to compel satisfaction of judgment was not in nature of action and formal findings of fact and conclusions of law were not necessary. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 675.

8. Appeal and Error ⇐891

Request on appeal by assignee of judgment from order compelling satisfaction of judgment for permission to offer evidence of alleged agreement between defendants to contribute equally to payment of a judgment allegedly assigned to appellee as agent for one of defendants was tardily and inappropriately made and was disregarded. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 675.

Hy Schwartz, Beverly Hills, for appellant.

Irmas & Rutter, Beverly Hills, for respondent.

HERNDON, Justice.

Appellant Heffernan is the assignee of a money judgment. He appeals from an order compelling its satisfaction. The order thus brought under review was granted upon motion made by defendant Myers pursuant to section 675 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The judgment which appellant acquired by assignment was entered upon a jury verdict in favor of plaintiffs Ramey and against the codefendants Myers and Buckley. The theory of the motion to compel satisfaction was as follows: (a) The judgment was recovered upon a cause of action ex delicto sounding in fraud; (b) appellant in acquiring title to the judgment by assignment acted as the agent or nominee of codefendant Buckley; (c) acquisition of the judgment by one of two joint tortfeasors resulted in a satisfaction of the judgment, there being no right of contribution under applicable law.[1]

[1] Appelant does not question the validity of the legal proposition that acquisition of a tort judgment by the agent of one of the judgment debtors with money furnished by the principal would operate to satisfy the judgment under applicable law. Appellant, however, attacks the order under review on the following grounds: (1) That the notice of motion to compel satisfaction was defective in that it failed to state the grounds upon which the motion was made; (2) that the affidavits supporting the motion were insufficient, in that they stated conclusions rather than facts; (3) that the action in which the judgment was rendered was ex contractu and not ex delicto; (4) that there was no substantial evidence to support a finding that in acquiring the judgment appellant acted as Buckley's agent or that Buckley furnished any money for the purchase of the judgment; and (5) that a proceeding under section 675, Code of Civil Procedure, is in the nature of an "action" so that an order therein must be supported by findings of fact and conclusions of law.

It is our conclusion that none of the contentions advanced by appellant is tenable. We shall discuss them seriatim.

Appellant's first contention is that the trial court lacked jurisdiction because respondent's notice of motion did not sufficiently specify the grounds upon which the motion was to be made. While respondent's notice of motion did not specifically state the grounds on which it would be urged, it did state: "Said motion will be based on this notice, points and authorities and an affidavit filed in support of a motion to stay execution filed concurrently herewith, other affidavits to be filed, interrogatories and answers thereto to be taken in New York City, New York, from John C. Heffernan and other depositions and testimony to be introduced at the time of the hearing on this motion."

The affidavit to which reference was made was that of Myers, the moving party. This affidavit contains the following averments: "(1) That he [Myers] is one of the codefendants in the above entitled action and that a judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff Ramey and against himself and the codefendant F. J. Buckley on the 10th day of May, 1951, as joint tortfeasors for a civil fraud perpetrated on the plaintiff Ramey; (2) that this judgment was assigned by Ramey to the Continental Casualty Company, who subsequently assigned it to John C. Heffernan of New York City, New York; (3) that in paying to and accepting the purported 'assignment' of the judgment from Continental Casualty Company, John C. Heffernan acted on behalf of and as agent, nominee and employee of said codefendant F. J. Buckley and took no interest in said judgment except the purported bare legal title of said judgment."

1. Section 880 of the Code of Civil Procedure declares that sections 875 et seq., enacted in 1957 and making provision for contribution among joint tortfeasors, are effective as to causes of action accruing after January 1, 1958.

The points and authorities to which reference was made in the notice of motion contain the following statement, among others: "A review of the previous proceedings in the above-entitled action clearly indicates that the codefendants were held responsible as joint tortfeasors for a civil fraud perpetrated upon the plaintiff, and that the judgment made and entered herein was against them as joint tortfeasors. The affidavits attached hereto and filed herewith, establish that the judgment in this action has been purchased by an individual who is apparently acting as the agent and/or nominee of F. J. Buckley, one of the codefendants." The points and authorities also cited and digested California decisions in support of the rules of law relied upon by the moving party with reference to contribution among joint tortfeasors and the right of a judgment debtor to compel satisfaction where it appears that another judgment debtor has paid the judgment directly or indirectly.

From the foregoing it is apparent that appellant was given ample notice of the grounds upon which the motion would be made. Thus, as stated in Shields v. Shields, 55 Cal.App.2d 579, at page 584, 130 P.2d 982, at page 984, "the purpose of the code provision requiring that the grounds of the motion be set forth was sufficiently served and that is all that the law requires." To the same effect are Savage v. Smith, 170 Cal. 472, 474, 150 P. 353; Giandeini v. Ramirez, 11 Cal.App.2d 469, 475, 54 P.2d 91; Perez v. Perez, 111 Cal.App.2d 827, 830, 245 P.2d 344.

[2] Appellant next attacks the sufficiency of the affidavits by contending that statements therein to the effect that appellant "took no interest in the judgment" and that he was "the agent and nominee of Buckley" were mere conclusions and not statements of fact. It is our view that the affidavits in question sufficiently pleaded the ultimate facts and adequately apprised appellant of the contentions and proofs which the respondent would and did offer. In this connection it is to be noticed that the affidavit in question specifically alleged that at the time appellant took title to the judgment he was "acting on behalf of" Buckley, as his "agent, nominee and employee." We regard such allegations as sufficient to plead the ultimate facts. General Mill and Lumber Company v. Robertson, 126 Cal.App. 118, 120, 14 P.2d 327; Frasch v. London & Lancashire Fire Ins. Co., 213 Cal. 219, 224, 2 P.2d 147.

Moreover, the issue as to the sufficiency of the affidavits from an evidentiary standpoint should be regarded as moot for the reason that the motion to compel satisfaction of the judgment was heard and decided, not only upon the affidavits filed in support and in opposition, but also upon oral and documentary evidence produced at a hearing of some three days' duration. The notice of motion contemplated this form of proof. Since in this case both parties availed themselves of an unrestricted opportunity to present oral testimony and documentary evidence, the affidavits filed in support of the motion and in opposition to it actually served more the office of pleadings than of proof.

[3, 4] The contention that the cause of action upon which the judgment was rendered was ex contractu rather than ex delicto is without merit. It is immediately apparent from a reading of the decision affirming the judgment on appeal (Ramey v. Myers, 111 Cal.App.2d 679, 245 P.2d 360) that the liability of the defendants was predicated upon a breach of fiduciary duties and a concealment of facts giving rise to the right of plaintiffs to recover secret profits. The delictual character of the action seems manifest. In its affirming opinion, the appellate court concluded (111 Cal. App.2d at pages 685 and 686, 245 P.2d at page 364): "The evidence hereinbefore recited not only established the existence of agency, but it also tended to prove the concealment of facts vital to the plaintiffs with resultant profit to defendants. In the circumstances presented by the record, the trial court very properly instructed the jury on the issues of agency, fiduciary relationship and the right of plaintiffs to recover secret profits." As stated in Darrow v. Robert A. Klein & Co., Inc., 111 Cal.App. 310, at 316, 295 P. 566, at page 568, "A violation of duty on the part of a trustee is treated as a fraud upon the beneficiary (Civ.Code, § 2234), and a violation of duty on the part of an agent should be treated in the same manner." It is established law that acts in violation of the fiduciary duties of an agent are regarded as fraudulent. 2 Cal.Jur.2d 773, sec. 104; 2 C.J. Agency § 353, p. 692; 3 C.J.S. Agency § 138.

Sufficiency of the Evidence

[5] Since the order under review is based upon an implied finding that Heffernan, in paying off Continental and taking an assignment of the judgment, was acting for and on behalf of Buckley, the question for our decision is whether there is any substantial evidence, contradicted or uncontradicted, which supports this finding. All conflicts must be viewed in the light most favorable to the prevailing party. The challenged finding is entitled to the benefit of every favorable inference that reasonably can be drawn from the evidence. Crogan v. Metz, 47 Cal.2d 398, 403–404, 303 P. 2d 1029; Grainger v. Antoyan, 48 Cal.2d 805, 807, 313 P.2d 848.

[6] We have concluded that the finding of the trial court is amply supported by the record. Since the trial judge was entitled to view the case in the light of all matters appearing in the record before him, we deem it necessary briefly to review the history of the judgment and certain proceedings relating thereto as a background for our summary of the evidence.

The judgment was entered on May 10, 1951. After denial of the motion for a new trial, a notice of appeal in the name of both defendants was filed on July 5, 1951. On the same day defendant Buckley applied to Continental Casualty Company for a bond to stay execution. He posted with his application a cashier's check for $12,000, the proceeds of which were held by Continental as collateral security. Continental executed and filed a stay bond in the amount of $30,152.18. The judgment was affirmed by Division One of this court on June 16, 1952. Hearing by the Supreme Court was denied on July 14, 1952.

On September 3, 1952, Continental paid plaintiffs the sum of $22,255.88 in full payment of the judgment and took an assignment thereof. On September 8, 1952, Continental filed its assignment, along with a substitution of attorneys signed by the plaintiffs, substituting the law firm of Anderson, McPharlin and Conners in the place and stead of plaintiffs' attorneys. On September 19, 1952, Continental filed a document entitled "Nomination of Attorneys" in which Samuel Colby, then attorney for Buckley, was associated as its attorney of record, in addition to Anderson, McPharlin and Conners. There is evidence that Colby was associated at the request of Buckley for the purpose of running execution against respondent Myers and that Colby's fees were paid by Buckley.

On October 14, 1952, Continental withdrew from its trust account the $12,000 which had been deposited by Buckley, and reimbursed itself to that extent for the loss sustained in paying the judgment. No partial satisfaction of judgment was filed.

On November 7, 1952, writ of execution on the judgment was issued in the full amount, that is, in excess of $22,000. On January 7, 1953, defendant Myers and his family were examined by attorney Colby on proceedings supplemental to execution. No such proceedings were had with respect to the defendant Buckley. On January 20, 1954, Continental assigned the judgment to appellant John Heffernan, a stock broker and member of the New York Stock Exchange, New York City. This assignment to appellant Heffernan was not filed with the clerk until October 10, 1956, following the filing by respondent of a motion to compel satisfaction of judgment in which Continental was named and served as the apparent owner of the judgment.

Thereafter, on October 18, 1956, respondent filed a new notice of motion to compel entry of satisfaction of the judgment naming appellant as the judgment creditor. On June 4, 1956, after a three-day hearing of the issues presented by the motion, the court made the order here appealed from.

Certain undisputed facts immediately appear to be significant: (1) Appellant Heffernan actually claims no beneficial interest in the judgment. In his deposition he testified that one E. Haiss asked him to purchase the judgment, furnished all of the money for its purchase and "has the entire interest" in it. Thus Heffernan admittedly stood before the court as the holder of nothing more than the bare legal title to the judgment. (2) For some wholly unexplained reason, said E. Haiss, who, according to Heffernan, was the true beneficial owner of the judgment, failed to appear as a witness at the hearing or to give any testimony by affidavit, deposition, or otherwise. (3) Buckley and Heffernan are brothers-in-law and, according to Heffernan, said E. Haiss is their sister-in-law. (4) The only affidavit filed in opposition to the motion to compel satisfaction was that of Buckley, codefendant and codebtor under the judgment, who normally would desire to see the judgment satisfied. (5) The only witness called to testify at the hearing on behalf of Heffernan was Elizabeth Buckley, wife of the defendant Buckley. (6) Appellant's only testimony was given in the form of a deposition taken by respondent upon written interrogatories and offered in evidence by respondent.

As above indicated, the evidence shows a close family relationship by marriage between Buckley and Heffernan. It would appear from the combined testimony of Heffernan and Elizabeth Buckley that Heffernan's wife, Buckley's wife and E. Haiss are sisters; that Heffernan and Buckley are brothers-in-law and that E. Haiss is their sister-in-law. However, respondent Myers testified that he had known Mr. and Mrs. Buckley for some eighteen years and that during that period he had seen Mrs. Buckley sign many documents using the name E. Haiss. In the light of all the circumstances the trial court might have disbelieved the testimony of Mrs. Buckley and the deposition testimony of Heffernan that the E. Haiss who furnished the money for the purchase of the judgment was Evelyn Haiss, Buckley's sister-in-law. On the basis of respondent's testimony, the trial judge might reasonably have concluded that the E. Haiss for whom Heffernan purchased the judgment was Buckley's wife, Elizabeth.

However, regardless of its conclusion as to the identity of E. Haiss, the trial court could draw the reasonable inference that she acted for and on behalf of Buckley in purchasing the judgment and in furnishing the money for that purpose. Buckley was the only one of the several parties involved in the transaction who stood any possible chance of benefitting from the purchase of the judgment. It seems most unlikely that any reasonable person would pay full face value for a judgment which, even if collected in full, would allow the purchaser no profit—a judgment which, in view of its history, obviously was of doubtful value.

But there is evidence of other circumstances which tend to support the finding of the court below. According to Heffernan's testimony, he is a stock broker by profession and had never bought any other judgment. Acting for his doubtfully identified principal, he paid full face value for the judgment without making any inquiry concerning the credit or financial responsibility of either of the judgment debtors. Heffernan also stated that he employed attorney Colby, who was also Buckley's attorney, to negotiate the purchase of the judgment on his behalf. In response to the question as to what attempts had been made to collect the judgment, Heffernan testified that Mr. Colby and Mr. Schwartz handled it, and that he did not know what action was taken by them.

Attorney Newton E. Anderson, one of the attorneys for Continental, testified that following the affirmance of the judgment on appeal and the assignment of the judgment to Continental, Buckley was represented by attorneys L. H. Phillips and Samuel Colby. He further stated that Buckley came in and asked that Colby be associated as an attorney for Continental for the purpose of running an execution against Myers. He understood that Buckley paid Colby's fees. Mr. Anderson said that he had "many, many conferences" with Buckley and Colby with reference to disposition of the judgment. During these discussions, Heffernan's name was mentioned and Colby advised Anderson that Heffernan was going to purchase the judgment. Anderson recalled a conference with Buckley and Phillips in which they indicated a desire to handle the matter by assigning the judgment to Heffernan. Anderson's firm did not handle the proceedings supplemental to execution in which Myers and his family were examined. These proceedings were conducted by Mr. Colby.

It seems significant that prior to the issuance of the writ of execution and the proceedings supplemental thereto, Continental had reimbursed itself to the extent of $12,000 by utilizing the collateral deposited by Buckley, but that no partial satisfaction of judgment ever was filed. Continental assigned the judgment to Heffernan as though it remained wholly unsatisfied. Anderson testified that Heffernan paid slightly over $10,000 for the judgment, but Heffernan testified in his deposition that he had paid the full amount, which was in excess of $22,000.

It seems unnecessary further to extend this opinion by reciting more of the cumulative evidence (with which the record is replete) tending to show that in assigning the judgment to Heffernan, Continental was cooperating with Buckley in an effort to keep it alive so that it might be collected in whole or in part from Myers.

A somewhat comparable situation was presented in Adams v. White Bus Line, 184 Cal. 710, 195 P. 389. There the plaintiff recovered judgment against the defendants White Bus Line and Stiles jointly for injuries caused by the concurrent negligence of said defendants. The defendant bus company's insurance carrier paid plaintiff the full amount of the judgment. At the instance of the carrier, the judgment was not satisfied but instead was assigned to one Powell, who was manager of defendant White Bus Line. After the payment to plaintiff, defendant Stiles moved the lower court for an order directing the entry of satisfaction of judgment on the ground that payment by the insurance carrier satisfied the judgment as to both defendants. The defendant White Bus Line appealed from the order directing satisfaction of the judgment. In affirming the order, the Supreme Court made the following comments which are quite applicable in the case at bar (184 Cal. at page 712, 195 P. at page 389):

"It is apparent from the evidence that the money was paid on account of the White Bus Line, and the assignment was to its manager and for its benefit. * * * The obvious purpose of the assignment was an attempt to keep the judgment alive against the codefendant Stiles. If the case were such that contribution could be enforced between the defendants, the transaction might have proved effective as an assignment. * * * But the generally accepted doctrine is that there is no right of contribution between joint tortfeasors".[2] And at page 713 of 184 Cal., at page 390 of 195 P. the court stated the rule invoked by respondent here: "Where one of several joint wrongdoers pays a judgment obtained against them all, he acquires no right of contribution by taking an assignment of the judgment in the name of a man of straw."

[7] Finally, appellant complains because the order under review was not supported by formal findings of fact and conclusions of law, contending that a proceeding under section 675, Code of Civil Procedure, is in the nature of an "action". This contention is also without merit.

2. See Note 1, supra.

In Waller v. Weston, 125 Cal. 201, 204, 57 P. 892, 893, the court held that no findings or conclusions need accompany an order upon a motion to set aside a default, the court saying: "[I]t is contemplated by our law that findings of fact shall be made only upon issues joined by the pleadings, under section 590 of the Code of Civil Procedure, where the decision of the court following the findings is a judgment. Findings of fact and conclusions of law, therefore, had no proper place in this proceeding." In Waymire v. California Trona Co., 176 Cal. 395, 399–400, 168 P. 563, 565, the court said: "The universal practice in this state is not to require findings on an order made after motion." The foregoing statement is followed and quoted in Parker v. Parker, 107 Cal.App.2d 215, 217, 236 P.2d 828, and in Perez v. Perez, supra, 111 Cal.App.2d 827, 830, 245 P.2d 344. (See also: Wood v. Peterson Farms Co., 132 Cal.App. 233, 22 P.2d 565; Bradley Co. v. Ridgway, 14 Cal.App.2d 326, 58 P.2d 194.)

[8] At the conclusion of his closing brief appellant requests of this court that he be permitted now to offer evidence of an alleged written agreement between Myers and Buckley whereby they agreed to contribute equally to the payment of the Ramey judgment. With reference to the time when this "new evidence" was discovered, we are told only that appellant learned of the agreement "after the conclusion of the trial". Manifestly, this request, made both tardily and inappropriately, should be disregarded.

The order is affirmed.

FOX, P. J., concurs.

ASHBURN, J., deeming himself disqualified, does not participate herein.

159 Cal.App.2d 225

Thelma G. McCLELLAN, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Frank McCLELLAN, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 22686.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

April 8, 1958.

Rehearing Denied May 6, 1958.

Hearing Denied June 4, 1958.

Action by wife for divorce on ground of cruelty wherein husband also sought divorce on same ground. From a judgment of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, William E. Fox, J., granting both parties a divorce on ground of extreme cruelty, the wife appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Lillie, J., held that trial court did not abuse its discretion in granting both parties a divorce and in limiting award of alimony to wife to one year.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐989, 996

Where record discloses substantial evidence in support of findings and judgment, a reviewing court will not re-evaluate credibility of witnesses, re-appraise weight of evidence adduced before trial judge, or draw inferences contrary to those drawn by trial court.

2. Divorce ⇐154, 235

In divorce action, trial court did not abuse its discretion in granting both parties divorce and in limiting award of alimony to wife to one year. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 139.

3. Divorce ⇐235, 286

Trial court is given broad discretion in determining amount of alimony to be paid and period during which payment shall continue, which discretion ordinarily will not be interfered with on appeal save for manifest abuse thereof. West's Ann.Civ. Code, § 139.

4. Divorce ⇐296

In divorce action, trial court did not abuse its discretion in failing to award wife a sum for support of the parties' 18 year old son, who had graduated from high school and was working part-time earning $110 per month. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 139.

5. Deeds ⇐208(1)

In divorce action, evidence sustained finding that there was no valid and effectual delivery of a quitclaim deed executed by husband to wife and covering their residence which was held in joint tenancy.

6. Appeal and Error ⇐1010(1)
Deeds ⇐66

Delivery or nondelivery of deed is question of fact to be determined from surrounding circumstances of transaction, and where there is substantial evidence or where inference or presumption may be drawn from evidence to sustain court's finding, it will not be interfered with on appeal.

Norman Berris, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Culver Van Buren, Burbank, for respondent.

LILLIE, Justice.

Plaintiff appeals from a judgment wherein a divorce was granted to both parties on grounds of extreme cruelty; respondent was ordered to pay to appellant wife as alimony the sum of $175 per month for a period of one year only; and custody of the 18-year-old son of the parties was awarded to appellant. No provision was made for the support and maintenance of the minor son, the trial judge having found that he was self-supporting. The court also found that certain real estate, consisting of the family home, was community property and ordered it sold, the proceeds of the sale to be divided equally between the parties.

The appellant herein contends that the trial court abused its discretion (1) in awarding alimony for a period of one year only; (2) in making no provision for the support and maintenance of the 18-year-old son; and (3) in finding that the quitclaim deed executed and handed over by respondent to appellant was inoperative and that the property was in fact community property.

It becomes apparent from appellant's brief that although she complains of an "abuse of discretion" her contentions are actually based upon an alleged insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings and judgment.

[1] The rule is well settled that where the record discloses substantial evidence in support of the findings and judgment a reviewing court will not re-evaluate the credibility of the witnesses, re-appraise the weight of the evidence adduced before the trial judge, or draw inferences contrary to those drawn by the trial court. This principle seems particularly applicable in a "dual divorce" case involving comparative fault, in which the trial court has granted a divorce to each party. De Burgh v. De Burgh, 39 Cal.2d 858, 250 P.2d 598.

[2] The parties herein were accorded full opportunity to present evidence bearing upon the issues involved. During the trial, which lasted four days, the judge was able to observe the witnesses, their appearance, demeanor and manner of testifying, and to evaluate their credibility. Considerable evidence was received by the trial court with respect to the acts of cruelty committed by both parties; the health and financial circumstances of husband and wife and their minor son; and the circumstances surrounding respondent's delivery of a quitclaim deed to appellant.

The parties were married in 1934, and, after a separation and subsequent reconciliation, finally separated in January, 1956. Appellant is a 45-year-old woman who, although unskilled and without a trade, has worked as a presser. She testified that for the past year she has been under the care of a doctor for endometriosis, which sometimes is painful and requires her to go to bed.

Respondent testified that at the time of the separation appellant appeared to be in very good condition, that she seemed to be able to go out as much as she desired and to do the things she wanted to do, and that she did not appear to be in any way hampered.

The record throughout discloses that appellant frequently went out in the evening, usually did not retire at night until a late hour, and engaged in numerous and various social activities, during both day and night. Although endometriosis is a disease causing bleeding of the tissues, the record is silent as to the extent to which it affects appellant; what if any disability it causes and whether it prevents her from seeking and taking employment; what treatment, if any, she is receiving for this condition; and when and how often she visits her doctor. No medical evidence was offered on behalf of appellant.

[3] In connection with appellant's first contention concerning the award of alimony to her for a period of one year only, the rule is clear that the trial court is given a broad discretion in determining the amount of alimony to be paid and the period during which payment shall continue, which discretion ordinarily will not be interfered with on an appeal save for a manifest abuse thereof. That these matters are within the discretion of the trial court is made plain by Section 139 of the Civil Code which provides that such court may "make such suitable allowance to the wife for her support, during her life, or for a shorter period, as the Court may deem just, having regard to the circumstances of the parties respectively". (Italics added.)

Our California courts have consistently voiced approval of this principle. In Fillmore v. Fillmore, 74 Cal.App.2d 418, 421, 168 P.2d 725, 726, the reviewing court said: "The trial court has very broad powers in passing upon questions of fact, including the amount and duration of alimony. Lamborn v. Lamborn, 80 Cal.App. 494, 251 P. 943. The findings of the trial court will not be disturbed on appeal unless a clear abuse of discretion appears from the record. Duffey v. Duffey, 79 Cal.App. 734, 251 P. 218." Similar expression is found in Newbauer v. Newbauer, 95 Cal.App.2d 36, at page 40, 212 P.2d 240, at page 243: "That the members of this court might have been more liberal is not the test. The discretion was the trial judge's, not ours; and we can only interfere if we find that under all the evidence, viewed most favorable in support of the trial court's action, no judge could reasonably have made the order that he did. Fillmore v. Fillmore, 74 Cal.App.2d 418, 168 P.2d 725; Cozzi v. Cozzi, 81 Cal.App. 2d 229, 183 P.2d 739; Furniss v. Furniss, 75 Cal.App.2d 138, 170 P.2d 486."

The principle mentioned is not limited to any specific set of facts; in any and all cases the matter of alimony is peculiarly one within the broad discretion of the trial judge. Such is the situation here.

Without recounting the testimony of the respondent it is obvious that the trial court believed the evidence he gave relating to appellant's many acts of cruelty. This is manifest in the court's finding that he was entitled to a divorce. In addition to the evidence relating to her physical condition and her numerous and varied activities, the court no doubt had in mind the comparative fault of the parties in limiting the payments of alimony to one year only. Under the law of this state, we cannot hold on the facts in the instant case that the trial judge abused his discretion in limiting the award of alimony.

[4] The same may be said in answer to the appellant's second contention that there was an abuse of discretion in respect to the trial court's failure to award a sum for the support of the 18-year-old son of the parties. Support for a minor child is also controlled by Section 139 of the Civil Code. The same discretion afforded the court in connection with an award of alimony is found in matters of child support. Although the boy has a past history of illness there was no evidence that he now suffers any physical disability that would prevent him from taking fulltime employment. The record discloses that at the time of the trial he had graduated from high school, was working part-time earning $110 per month, and had worked continuously since the end of his vacation. By choice he has been residing with the appellant. The boy was not called as a witness and no medical evidence bearing on his condition was offered at the time of the trial. It must be assumed that the trial court fully considered the matter of parental support in the light of all the evidence introduced on the issue. No abuse of discretion is manifest in the record, nor is there any merit to the appellant's contention that there was insufficient evidence to support the trial court's decision.

[5] As to the appellant's third contention, no error is apparent in the trial court's finding that the unrecorded quitclaim deed executed by respondent husband to his wife was not intended to pass a present interest, and that the property covered by the deed was of a community nature rather than the separate property of appellant wife. That the determination of whether the delivery was valid or ineffectual turns upon the question of the grantor's intent and is a question of fact for the trial court, is borne out in the case of Williams v. Kidd, 170 Cal. 631, 151 P. 1. At page 638 of 170 Cal., at page 3 of 151 P., the Supreme Court stated: "It is essential to the validity of a transfer of real property that there be a delivery of the conveyance with intent to transfer the title, and the true test under which delivery is to be determined is in ascertaining whether in parting with the possession of the conveyance the grantor intended thereby to divest himself of title. If he did, there was an effective delivery of the deed. If not, there was no delivery."

[6] The rule is well established that delivery or non-delivery of a deed is a question of fact to be determined from the surrounding circumstances of the transaction and where there is substantial evidence or where an inference or presumption may be drawn from the evidence to sustain the court's finding, it will not be interfered with on appeal. Chaffee v. Sorensen, 107 Cal. App.2d 284, 236 P.2d 851; Ivancovich v. Sullivan, 149 Cal.App.2d 160, 307 P.2d 989.

There is clear and substantial evidence in the record to the effect that in 1954, prior to the first separation of the parties, respondent offered the deed to the residence, heretofore held in joint tenancy, to the appellant along with a list of his insurance policies with instructions to file claims with the insurance companies and record the deed in the event of his death, in order to avoid the trouble and expense of probate. Appellant at that time made a facetious comment to the respondent, and displaying no interest in the documents, respondent dropped them into a drawer and went outside to work in the yard. He testified that in offering the conveyance to her, he was under the impression that property held in joint tenancy was community property and required probate upon his death. Appellant in this connection testified that when respondent brought the documents to her he mentioned suicide and that she felt he wanted her to believe that he might take his own life. Appellant has never recorded the deed, which was kept in a drawer with the card listing respondent's insurance policies, and the parties resided together in the property as their family home until their separation.

The record is clear that the real property covered by the deed had a community source in that it had been purchased from funds obtained through the sale of real property previously purchased with earnings of respondent, and that, although held in joint tenancy for convenience, the property never lost its community aspect.

The trial court after hearing all of the evidence, rejected the testimony of appellant in connection with the deed and found the circumstances of delivery as related by respondent to be true. The appellant's claim that the court's determination in respect to the execution and delivery of the quitclaim deed and the nature of the property covered by it constitutes an abuse of discretion, cannot be sustained.

The judgment is affirmed.

WHITE, P. J., and FOURT, J., concur.

Hearing denied; TRAYNOR, J., dissenting.

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Babe Otto BARBERA, Defendant and Appellant.*

Cr. 6084, 6085.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

April 7, 1958.

Hearing Granted June 4, 1958.

Prosecution for sale of heroin and possession of marijuana. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Le Roy Dawson, J., entered judgment convicting defendant on count charging sale of heroin to minor, revoking probation for prior conviction of possession of marijuana and imposing original sentence for such charge, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fourt, J., held that evidence sustained conviction of sale of heroin to minor and finding that defendant was not guilty of possession of marijuana as charged in second count, and in absence or argument, judgment revoking probation for prior conviction of possession of marijuana would be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ⇐1159(2, 4)

The District Court of Appeal is in no position to pass upon credibility of witnesses and is not authorized to review the evidence.

2. Criminal Law ⇐1159(3)

Fact that there may have been some inconsistencies and some contradictions in the testimony is not sufficient to reverse judgment.

3. Poisons ⇐9

Evidence sustained conviction of sale of heroin to minor. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11714.

4. Criminal Law ⇐1178

Where no argument had been presented on appeal from judgment of conviction of narcotic violations with reference to companion case in which probation for prior conviction of possession of marijuana was revoked, judgment would be affirmed. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11500.

5. Criminal Law ⇐1202(4)

Where information charging defendant with narcotic violations contains count charging that defendant has been previously convicted of violation of narcotics law, failure of judge to find as to truth or falsity of prior conviction amounts to a finding that charge was not true. West's Ann. Health & Safety Code, § 11500; West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1158.

Harrison M. Dunham, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Norman H. Sokolow, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

FOURT, Justice.

There are two appeals before the court in this matter. The first case, Superior Court No. 191311, is an appeal from a judgment wherein the defendant was convicted of a violation of the provisions of section 11714, Health and Safety Code (sale of heroin to a sixteen year old child).

The second case is Superior Court No. 172604, and is an appeal from a judgment wherein the defendant was charged with a violation of the provisions of section 11500, Health and Safety Code (possession of marijuana).

The defendant, in case No. 191311, was charged in count I of the information with having sold heroin on April 5, 1957, to a minor of the age of sixteen years. In count II of the information the defendant was charged with having possession of certain narcotics (marijuana) on May 2, 1957. It was also charged in the same information that the defendant had formerly, namely on May 10, 1955, been convicted of the crime of violation of section 11500, Health and Safety Code.

The defendant pleaded not guilty as to both counts and denied the prior conviction. At the time of trial all parties and counsel waived a jury trial and stipulated that the cause be submitted on the testimony contained in the transcript of the proceedings had at the preliminary hearing, and each side reserved the right to introduce additional evidence. The trial was continued to a day certain, and on that date witnesses were called and testified in behalf of the plaintiff and defendant.

* Opinion vacated 328 P.2d 973.

The court found the defendant guilty of count I and not guilty as to count II of the information, and made no finding as to the charge of a prior conviction. The defendant made an application for probation, and the matter was heard on August 6, 1957. Probation was denied in the heroin selling case and the defendant was sentenced to the state prison and such sentence was ordered to run concurrently with the county jail sentence imposed in case No. 172604.

In case numbered 172604, filed May 3, 1955, the defendant was charged, in substance, with having marijuana in his possession in violation of the provisions of section 11500, Health and Safety Code. On May 10, 1955, the defendant caused his plea of guilty to be entered and made an application for probation. On May 31, 1955, the defendant was sentenced to one year in the county jail; execution of the sentence was suspended and defendant was granted probation for three years on condition that he serve the first ninety days in jail and that he not associate with users of narcotics, obey all laws and follow all rules of the probation department.

The facts of the case having to do with the possession of marijuana in 1955 are substantially as follows: The defendant was of the age of about nineteen years, living at the home of his parents. He had in his possession a quantity of marijuana some of which was in the top bureau drawer in his own room. He pleaded guilty to the possession of marijuana and applied for probation, which was granted on May 31, 1955. The probation officer's report set forth that the defendant had admitted to being a user of marijuana for about three years; it was further set forth that the defendant had been a "chronic discipline problem," had defied authority, and further that the defendant could see "nothing wrong" with using narcotics.

In November, 1955, appellant was arrested and charged with being an addict. The officers at the time suspected that narcotics were being furnished to a certain minor and in the course of the investigation thereof they arrested Barbera who, at the time, was with three persons in an automobile and the officers found nine capsules of heroin in the vehicle. All of the persons in the car, including the defendant, had numerous hypodermic marks on their arms, and each of the persons appeared to be under the influence of a narcotic. The associates of the defendant at or about that time were all engaged in criminal activities for which they were either on bail or had been released on probation.

In the case arising in November, 1955 (addiction), the defendant, after originally pleading not guilty, changed his plea to that of guilty after he heard a tape recording which was introduced into evidence. He was sentenced on that charge on January 17, 1956, to "three years summary probation with the first ninety days to be served in the County Jail."

The probation officer thereafter recommended a modification of the probation which had been granted the defendant on May 31, 1955, in case numbered 172604, and the judge, on January 25, 1956, ordered that the defendant serve eighty-three days in jail, such sentence to run concurrently with any other sentence then being served (the addiction sentence), and further that the probation be reinstated and all other conditions remain the same.

After the defendant was released from jail he was again arrested in November, 1956, for certain deliberate violations of the law for which he was convicted and sentenced to ninety days in jail. In one of the instances he escaped from the police as he was being booked, but was later apprehended. His probation as of May 31, 1955 (marijuana possession), was again modified in November, 1956, and the judge ordered that he spend one month in jail, the sentence to run concurrently with the sentence then being served for the other offenses.

The defendant was then arrested on the offense with which we are here concerned, namely, selling heroin to a sixteen year old high school student on April 5, 1956. Probation was revoked in case numbered 172604 on August 6, 1957, and the original sentence of one year in the county jail (imposed May 31, 1955) was put in force and effect; however, it was ordered that such sentence run concurrently with the prison sentence. The defendant filed his notice of appeal from such judgment.

The facts of the case having to do with the sale of heroin to the minor child are as follows: A high school girl by the name of Miss Schwartz, of the age of sixteen years, first saw the defendant in March or April of 1957 at the house of a mutual friend, Miss Barbara Burns, in Los Angeles county. Babe Otto Barbera was at the house of Miss Burns when Miss Schwartz arrived at about 8:00 or 9:00 o'clock P.M. Others were there also. Miss Schwartz testified that she did not pay too much attention to who was there at the time because people were always there and she did not recall their names. She did recall, however, that she probably asked Miss Burns if she thought Barbera could "get her anything" and that Miss Burns had answered yes. Miss Schwartz talked with Barbera and she inquired of him as to the possibility of getting her some heroin or a "cap." Barbera indicated that he could secure heroin for her and they drove off together in an automobile with Barbera driving. They went a relatively short distance to a house, where Miss Schwartz gave Barbera $5, and Barbera got out of the automobile and went into the house. After about ten minutes Barbera came back to the automobile and they drove back to Miss Burns' house. Barbera gave to Miss Schwartz a "cap" which consisted of a one-half inch capsule with a white powder inside. Before this occasion Miss Schwartz had seen heroin in capsules ten or more times and she had used the substance which she believed to be heroin and was familiar with the effects it produced. She knew the manner of shooting it into a vein with a hypodermic needle and eye dropper. After Miss Schwartz received the "cap" from Barbera she went to the bathroom at Miss Burns' house and "took a fix." She described the sensations she experienced and stated that it was similar to the previous instances when she had taken heroin.

A police officer testified as an expert in the use and effect of narcotics and stated that in his opinion the substance injected into Miss Schwartz was heroin.

Miss Schwartz later signed a police report wherein she listed Barbera as having furnished her with narcotics. The information was relayed to other officers and at about 8:30 o'clock, May 1, 1957, two officers went to Barbera's door. Barbera opened the door and he was placed under arrest. The defendant said he wanted to wash his teeth and get his jacket before leaving with the officers. The officers investigated a room which Barbera said was his and in Barbera's jacket pocket they located a spoon, a piece of cotton, an eye dropper and a hypodermic needle. The room was searched and in a top bureau drawer they found material which later was examined and found to be marijuana.

The defendant testified in his own behalf and stated that he had not sold any heroin to Miss Schwartz; that some of the marijuana he had possessed in 1955 was kept in the top bureau drawer where the officers had found the material which was identified as marijuana in the instant case.

The court asked the question: "Well, at that time, in 1955, the marijuana they found, was any of it in this dresser drawer that we are talking about here? A. I kept some there, yes." (Emphasis added.)

The defendant, on direct examination, was asked by his own attorney: "Now, is it true, or not, that on the 10th day of May of 1955, in the Superior Court of the State of California, County of Los Angeles, that you were convicted of the crime of violation of section 11500 of the Health & Safety Code of the State, a misdemeanor? Is that true?" The following ensued between the defendant and his counsel:

"A. Would you repeat that, please? Repeat it please; I didn't hear it, I didn't hear the beginning.

"Q. I want to know whether or not, on the 10th day of May of 1955, in the Superior Court of the State of California, here in Los Angeles, whether or not you were convicted of a violation of section 11500 of the Health & Safety Code? A. Yes, I was.

"Q. What did that involve? What kind of narcotics were involved there? A. Cannabis sativa, marijuana.

"Q. Marijuana? A. Yes.

"Q. That is the correct date, May 10, 1955? A. I believe so."

At the oral argument counsel for Barbera stated in effect that it was the defendant's contention at the trial that the marijuana which was found in the bureau drawer in May, 1957, was in fact a part of the marijuana which had been found in May, 1955, and that he had pleaded guilty to possessing that marijuana and had been sentenced therefor, and that he should not be convicted again of having what he contended was a part of the same marijuana. The argument apparently impressed the judge for he found the defendant not guilty of possessing marijuana as charged in the information in count II.

The appellant contends in the present case that the evidence was legally insufficient to sustain the conviction. He asserts that the testimony of Miss Schwartz was impeached by several witnesses and cites People v. Draper, 69 Cal.App.2d 781, 160 P.2d 80, and People v. Graziano, 83 Cal. App.2d 701, 189 P.2d 518, to support his contention. There was no direct evidence in either of the cited cases pointing to the accused as being the perpetrator of the offense charged. The situation was entirely different in the case under consideration.

[1] This court is in no position to pass upon the credit which should be given to the witnesses and we are not authorized to review the evidence under the circumstances existing in the present case. People v. Silva, 119 Cal.App.2d 421, 426, 259 P.2d 74.

[2, 3] The fact that there may have been some inconsistencies and some contradictions in the testimony is not sufficient to reverse the judgment. The testimony of Miss Schwartz was not at all improbable. People v. Thomas, 103 Cal.App. 2d 669, 672, 229 P.2d 836. The circumstances fully support the judgment. People v. Sykes, 44 Cal.2d 166, 280 P.2d 769.

[4] No argument has been presented to us with reference to the case wherein probation was revoked in case number 172604, and in conformity with People v. Yarter, 138 Cal.App.2d 803, 805–806, 292 P.2d 649, the judgment therein should be affirmed.

This case unfortunately is typical of many cases arising in Los Angeles county wherein the trial judge, in the face of uncontradicted evidence to the contrary, either finds that a charged prior conviction is not true, or arbitrarily strikes such prior conviction supposedly "in the interests of justice;" or, as in the instant case, fails entirely to make any finding as to the truth or falsity of the prior conviction: in this case the defendant, under oath, brought out in his own testimony on direct examination that he had been previously convicted of a "violation of section 11500 of the Health & Safety Code."

In most narcotic cases coming before this court within the past few years the record discloses appellant to have had one or more prior convictions of a narcotic offense or of a felony. In the matter of illicit narcotics, the legislature has clearly spelled out the penalty to be imposed in such cases. If the trial judges ignore or strike prior convictions, the very purpose of the legislature in enacting the statutes in question, that is, to eliminate the narcotic peddlers and users as hazards to themselves and to society, is blocked. If judges repeatedly, by one device or another, see fit to fail in their duties and responsibilities, it is little wonder that law enforcement, in particular with reference to narcotic cases, is falling into disrepute.

[5] Under section 1158, Penal Code, a jury must find whether the defendant has suffered a previous conviction when such prior conviction is charged in an information. It would seem that a judge should not fail to do that which a jury must do. The separate issue of the prior conviction was presented and the judge in this case failed to act. The failure of the judge to find as to the truth or falsity of the prior conviction amounts to a finding that the charge was not true. In re Daniels, 119 Cal.App. 350, 6 P.2d 549; In re Hall, 88 Cal.App. 212, 263 P. 295; People v. Ysabel, 28 Cal.App.2d 259, 82 P.2d 476. Such a finding, in turn, has the effect of reducing the sentence of the defendant by about one-half. Health & Safety Code, § 11714.

Furthermore, on the face of the judgment in the heroin case, the incongruity of the whole matter is evident—the court in effect found that the prior conviction was not true, and then immediately ordered that the sentence in the prior case, which a judge had theretofore imposed (May 31, 1955), be "placed in full force and effect," however, to run concurrently with the sentence imposed in the heroin selling case. Such practice is not conducive to sustaining the reputation of the courts for integrity.

"* * * the illicit drug traffic has trebled in the United States since World War II * * ." " * * drug addiction is responsible for approximately 50 per cent of all crimes committed in the larger metropolitan areas * * ." " * drug addiction is contagious. Addicts spread the habit with cancerous rapidity * * ." " * * Heroin * * * peddlers are selling murder, robbery * * and should be dealt with accordingly. * * * In truth and in fact, it is 'murder on the installment plan,' leading not only to the final loss of one life, but to others who acquire this contagious infection through association with the original victim." Report of the Committee on the Judiciary, U. S. Senate Report No. 1440 (Pursuant to Senate Resolution 67).

It is not readily apparent why a judge would vitiate the effectiveness of the existing law by failing to observe the clear mandate of the legislature in the treatment of recidivists. (California, however, has repeatedly been referred to as "very weak in legislation." Anslinger, U. S. Commissioner of Narcotics.) "Without exception the illicit traffic continues to flourish in those problem areas where leniency is an established pattern in the courts. * * The most effective weapon against the spread of addiction and the elimination of existing addiction is severe punishment in the form of mandatory sentences which effectively deter traffickers." Report of Subcommittee on Narcotics to the House Committee on Ways & Means 1956.

It appears that if anything would give the peddler of narcotics confidence and an incentive to continue in the illicit traffic, it would be the strong possibility that if he were caught, in any event, he would only receive the lightest sentence possible, and if a recidivist, he might even be fortunate enough to be sentenced as a first offender, as in the instant case. Experience in other states and in the federal government has demonstrated conclusively that the narcotic peddler is gradually going out of business where the penalty is certain and severe. "He cannot stand that five years without probation and without parole." Anslinger, U. S. Commissioner of Narcotics.

Had the appellant in this case been apprehended by federal officers and prosecuted and convicted in the federal court, he would have been subjected to a very different penalty, namely, in accordance with the federal law where it is set forth: "Whoever * * * sells, * * * furnishes, or * * * facilitates the sale, giving, furnishing * * * any heroin * * * to any person who has not attained the age of 18 years, may be fined not more than $20,000, and shall be imprisoned for life, or for not less than ten years, except that the offender shall suffer death if the jury in its discretion shall so direct." 21 U.S.C.A. § 176b. No suspension of the imposition or execution of sentence or the granting of probation is permitted under the federal law.

No useful purpose was served in the instant matter in permitting the defendant to file an application for probation, because under section 11715.6, Health and Safety Code, the defendant was ineligible in any event.

Under the circumstances of this case the appellant, for no apparent reason, received at the hands of the judge a sentence of about one-half of what the statute specifically provides for in such cases.

The judgment in case number 172604 is affirmed.

The judgment in case number 191311 is affirmed.

LILLIE, J., concurs.

WHITE, P. J., concurs in the judgment.

159 Cal.App.2d 287

Janet V. McLAUGHLIN, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Morris R. McLAUGHLIN, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 22551.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

April 9, 1958.

Hearing Denied June 4, 1958.

Action by former wife against former husband for breach of alleged property settlement agreement, and for damages for allegedly procuring a divorce by fraud. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Aubrey N. Irwin, J., entered judgment for former husband on pleadings, and wife appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, P. J., held that complaint by former wife for damages for breach of alleged property settlement agreement stated a cause of action, notwithstanding the fact that such agreement was not approved or incorporated in divorce decree obtained by husband, and notwithstanding the fact that complaint did not allege such agreement was in writing, athough wife, in order to recover thereunder would be required to prove the agreement was in writing and signed by both parties.

Judgment reversed in part, and in part affirmed.

1. Divorce ⇐254

Where an interlocutory divorce decree was not signed by either of the parties, wife could not assert any rights based on agreement embodied in the document on theory that such decree itself was a written property settlement agreement. West's Ann.Civ. Code, § 159.

2. Husband and Wife ⇐278(1)

A valid contract settling property rights between married persons does not require the approval of a divorce court to render it effective, but is binding on the parties and enforceable by either of them against the other even though the court fails or refuses to adopt or approve the agreement by its decree in a divorce proceeding.

3. Husband and Wife ⇐281

Complaint by former wife for damages for breach of alleged property settlement agreement stated a cause of action, notwithstanding the fact that such agreement was not approved or incorporated in divorce decree obtained by husband, and notwithstanding the fact that complaint did not allege such agreement was in writing, although wife, in order to recover thereunder, would be required to prove the agreement was in writing and signed by both parties.

4. Judgment ⇐518

An action at law for damages against an adversary party for allegedly procuring a judgment by fraud or perjury constitutes a collateral attack on the judgment, and cannot be maintained while such judgment remains in force.

5. Divorce ⇐200

Where a divorce was granted to husband for wife's default, court was without jurisdiction to award wife alimony.

6. Divorce ⇐168

Where portion of a divorce decree granting husband a divorce was still in force, and former wife herself was not granted a divorce by such decree, former wife could not maintain the action for damages based upon husband's alleged fraud in the procurement of the divorce decree.

W. H. Wadsworth, E. L. Fraser, Charles E. McClung, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Warner & Sutton, Barbara Warner, Caryl Warner, Morris R. McLaughlin, Los Angeles, for respondent.

FOX, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff has appealed from a judgment on the pleadings in favor of defendant.

Plaintiff and defendant were married in 1921. They separated in 1935 and have lived separate and apart since that time. In 1948 the husband filed suit for divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty. The wife answered and filed a cross-complaint seeking divorce. In 1949 an interlocutory decree was entered granting the husband a divorce. The decree also provided for division of the community property and awarded the wife custody of the minor child, who was then 19 years old. The decree ordered the husband to pay the wife $200 per month for the "support, care and maintenance" of herself and the minor child until further order of the court. A final decree was entered in June, 1950. The minor child attained his majority in October, 1950. The decree has never been modified or set aside. In 1953 the husband ceased making any payments to the wife. In April, 1954, she procured an order to show cause re contempt by reason of his failure to make payments. This court issued a writ of prohibition. In that proceeding we held that the interlocutory decree failed to disclose any fact indicating that the provision for the wife's support was based on a contract settling the property rights of the parties, that on its face the provision for the wife's support was simply an alimony order, and that since on the record the divorce was granted to the husband for the wife's fault, the trial court was without jurisdiction to award her alimony and that such order was void. McLaughlin v. Superior Court, 128 Cal. App.2d 62, 274 P.2d 745.

Thereafter, the wife made a motion in the trial court for an order nunc pro tunc amending the interlocutory decree to show that the support order was based upon a property settlement agreement relating to the disposition of the community property and the support and maintenance of the wife and minor child. The motion sought to have the terms of the property settlement agreement incorporated in the decree. This motion was denied. She then made a motion for a writ of execution on the ground that the decree ordered payments by the husband to her of $200 per month until further order of the court. This motion was also denied. Both of these rulings were affirmed on appeal. McLaughlin v. McLaughlin, 141 Cal.App.2d 494, 296 P. 2d 878.

In 1955 the wife instituted the present action against her former husband. The complaint contains four counts. Her first count is based on the theory that the interlocutory decree "constituted a written contractual agreement" for the division of the community property and the support of herself and the minor child and that defendant herein has breached such agreement. In her second count plaintiff alleges a property settlement agreement in substantially the same terms as alleged in her first count, but she makes no reference to the divorce decree. It is then alleged that defendant has breached the agreement. In the third count plaintiff alleges that defendant made promises to her that he would pay for her support in her later years if he should be granted a divorce; that defendant knew these promises were untrue and had no intention of keeping them; that defendant made such promises with the intention of deceiving plaintiff; that plaintiff believed defendant's promises and that, in reliance thereon, plaintiff relinquished her interest in most of the community property and refrained from introducing evidence in support of the allegations in her cross-complaint, thereby preventing her from obtaining a divorce and hence alimony. The fourth count need not be considered since plaintiff now concedes that it fails to state a cause of action.

[1] In her first count plaintiff does not purport to base her cause of action on the interlocutory decree per se. Rather, her position is that the decree is itself a written property settlement agreement. This count does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. "Civil Code section 159 controls property settlement agreements after separation and such agreements must be in writing and signed by both parties. * * *" McLaughlin v. McLaughlin, supra, 141 Cal.App.2d at page 497, 296 P.2d at page 880; see, also, Fitch v. Tyler, 105 Cal.App. 306, 311, 288 P. 74. On its face the document upon which plaintiff relies (viz., the interlocutory decree, a copy of which is attached to the complaint) does not meet the requirements of section 159 since it is not signed by either of the parties. It therefore follows that plaintiff may not assert any rights based on an agreement embodied in that document.

Plaintiff relies upon Gould v. Superior Court, 47 Cal.App. 197, 200, 191 P. 56, for the proposition that an interlocutory decree constitutes a contract between the parties. That proposition is not here applicable because the contract which plaintiff asserts must comply with the provisions of Civil Code, section 159, which requires the signatures of both parties. An interlocutory decree is not such a contract.

[2] Plaintiff's second cause of action is based upon an alleged property settlement agreement separate and apart from the divorce decree. We need only consider that portion of the alleged agreement which pertains to plaintiff's future support because the other terms of the agreement are identical with the provisions of the divorce decree which was an adjudication of those matters. It is clear that this alleged property settlement agreement was neither adopted nor approved in the divorce decree. McLaughlin v. McLaughlin, supra, 141 Cal.App.2d at page 497, 296 P.2d at page 880. "A valid contract settling property rights between married persons does not require the approval of a divorce court to render it effective. It is binding on the parties and enforceable by either of them against the other even though the court fails or refuses to adopt or approve the agreement by its decree in a divorce proceeding." Green v. Green, 66 Cal.App.2d 50, 56, 151 P.2d 679, 682. Such agreement may be "sued upon in an independent action to enforce its terms." Sanborn v. Sanborn, 3 Cal.App.2d 437, 442, 39 P.2d 830, 832; Anthony v. Anthony, 94 Cal.App.2d 507, 512, 211 P.2d 331. Under these principles plaintiff is entitled to maintain an action against defendant for the breach of a valid property settlement agreement.

[3] It is clear that the issues with respect to the support provisions of the property settlement agreement alleged in the second cause of action have not been litigated. No property settlement agreement was before the court at the divorce trial nor at the hearing on plaintiff's motion for a nunc pro tunc order amending the divorce decree. McLaughlin v. McLaughlin, supra, 1412 Cal.App.2d at page 497, 296 P.2d at page 880. All that was decided at the latter hearing was that the court did not intend at the trial of the divorce suit to approve any property settlement agreement. McLaughlin v. McLaughlin, supra, 141 Cal. App.2d at page 497, 296 P.2d at page 880. Moreover, there was no valid award for plaintiff's support. McLaughlin v. Superior Court. Therefore, the prior proceedings are not a bar to her enforcement of any rights to future support that she may have under the contract alleged in the second count of her complaint.

Defendant asserts that the contract alleged in count two is oral. This may be true; the complaint does not allege whether the agreement is in writing (or signed by the parties) as required by section 159 of the Civil Code. Defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings is the equivalent of a general demurrer, and the only question is whether the count in question states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. We have concluded that this issue is analogous to that involved in cases dealing with contracts which come within the statute of frauds. In those cases it is held that the complaint states a cause of action even though it does not allege the contract is in writing. "The law will presume the contract to be valid and not invalid, and thus, where required by the statute of frauds, will presume it to be evidenced by writing." Alaska Salmon Co. v. Standard Box Co., 158 Cal. 567, 569, 112 P. 454, 455; see, also, Bradford Inv. Co. v. Joost, 117 Cal. 204, 48 P. 1083; Nunez v. Morgan, 77 Cal. 427, 19 P. 753; Reagan v. Justice's Court, 75 Cal. 253, 17 P. 195. Therefore, plaintiff's second count states a cause of action; but in order to recover thereon she will be required to prove that the property settlement agreement is in writing and signed by both parties.

[4, 5] Plaintiff's third cause of action is based upon defendant's alleged fraud in the procurement of the judgment in the divorce action. She alleges that he made promises which he had no intention of keeping, thereby inducing her to refrain from introducing evidence on her cross-complaint in the divorce action which would have entitled her to a decree of divorce and hence alimony. She also alleges that his promises induced her to transfer her rights in most of the community property to defendant. Since the divorce action adjudicated the rights of the parties respecting division of the community property it is clear that plaintiff may not maintain this action while the final decree in the divorce action is still in effect. Plaintiff's present action "constitutes a collateral attack on the [decree], which the law does not permit. [Citation.] For this reason, an action at law for damages against an adversary party for allegedly procuring a judgment by fraud or perjury cannot be maintained while such judgment remains in force." Gerini v. Pacific Employers Ins. Co., 27 Cal.App.2d 52, 55, 80 P.2d 499, 501. The divorce was granted to the husband for the wife's fault, and the court was without jurisdiction to award her alimony. McLaughlin v. Superior Court, supra, 128 Cal.App.2d at page 65, 274 P.2d at page 747. We have already noted that the divorce decree, which also provided for division of the community property, has never been vacated or modified. It is therefore clear that plaintiff's third count does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

[6] Plaintiff apparently accepts the rule announced in the Gerini case, but she contends that it is not applicable in the case at bar. She asserts that "the judgment in the previous litigation relating to [her support] * * * has been held to be void and, accordingly, is not in force and effect * * *." Plaintiff is mistaken. Only that portion of the divorce decree which purports to award her alimony has been declared to be null and void. McLaughlin v. Superior Court, supra. The remainder of the decree is still in force. See Harwell v. Harwell, 26 Cal.App.2d 143, 144–145, 78 P. 2d 1167. Since the portion of the decree granting defendant herein a divorce and dividing the community property is still in force, and since plaintiff herself was not granted a divorce by that decree, plaintiff's third cause of action must fall as a collateral attack upon a judgment which is on its face valid.

The judgment is reversed as to count two of the complaint; as to counts one and three, the judgment is affirmed.

ASHBURN, J., and KINCAID, J. pro tem., concur.

Hearing denied; TRAYNOR, J., dissenting.

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Robert WILLIAMS, Defendant and Appellant.*

Cr. 6111.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

April 7, 1958.

Hearing Granted June 4, 1958.

Prosecution for two separate sales of heroin. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Herbert V. Walker, J., entered judgments of conviction and order denying motion for new trial and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that where state witness and informer were working together and informer allegedly introduced witness to defendant for purpose of witness' purchase of narcotics and subsequently witness, while alone, allegedly met defendant again and purchased narcotics a second time, and defense was witness' misidentification of defendant, failure to compel disclosure of name of informer constituted reversible error.

Reversed.

1. Witnesses ⇐216

When an informer becomes a participant in the offense charged against the defendant, he and the people lose the right to keep his identity anonymous.

2. Witnesses ⇐216

Even where an offense is committed in immediate presence of officer of law, if an informant has in any way participated in the criminal activity, or if the informant was a material witness to alleged crime, then name of informer must be made known upon demand of the person charged.

3. Witnesses ⇐216

Where state witness and an informer were working together to apprehend sellers of narcotics and informer allegedly introduced witness to defendant, who sold heroin to witness, and a few days later witness, while alone, allegedly met defendant again and purchased additional heroin, upon demand, defendant, who relied on misidentification as his sole defense, was entitled to compel disclosure of informer's name.

* Opinion vacated 333 P.2d 19.

Ellery E. Cuff, Public Defender of Los Angeles County, and Paul G. Breckenridge, Jr., Deputy Public Defender, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., and Albert Bianchi, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

VALLÉE, Justice.

By indictment defendant was accused in two counts of selling heroin on February 4 and 7, 1957. He was found guilty on both counts and sentenced to state prison. He appeals from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The following is the testimony of police officer Renty, the only witness who testified for the prosecution:

On February 4, 1957 Renty and "another person" were on East Fifth Street in Los Angeles. Renty was seeking to buy narcotics and the other person knew it. They were working together. The other person called over to defendant, calling him "Red." Defendant went over to where Renty and the other person were standing. The other person told defendant Renty had the money. This meant that Renty wanted to buy narcotics. Defendant "said he could do us some good." Renty and defendant then went to a lounge in the back of a hotel. The other person waited outside. Renty handed defendant a $10 bill. Defendant went into a telephone booth. Renty did not see what defendant did in the booth. Defendant returned and handed Renty $1 and a bindle of narcotics. Renty then went outside and joined the other person. Renty would not have had the transaction with defendant on February 4 but for the fact that the other person "told Red to come over, and that [he, Renty,] had nine dollars."

On February 7, 1957 Renty was standing on the corner of Fifth and Stanford in Los Angeles. Defendant came out of a market. Renty walked up to defendant and asked him what was happening. He would not have approached defendant except for the fact that he had had the transaction with him on February 4. Defendant said, "What do you want?" Renty said he had $9. Defendant told him to go into a bar and wait there. Renty entered the bar and waited. Defendant went through the bar, out a rear exit, returned in about five minutes, and handed Renty a bindle of narcotics. Renty handed defendant $9 and said, "The stuff you sold me last time was pretty good." Defendant said, "Yes. This is, too." Renty had not known the man known as "Red" prior to the time the other person "called to some one and labeled him as 'Red' " on February 4. When he called to "Red" on February 7, Renty relied on the transaction he had on February 4. He would not have been able to identify the man known as "Red" and would not have gone up to him on the 7th except for the fact that he had the transaction on the 4th.

On cross-examination the court refused to compel Renty to disclose the name of the other person: the informer. It was stipulated that a chemist would testify the bindles handed to Renty contained heroin.

Defendant testified he did not sell Renty narcotics on either February 4 or 7, 1957; he had never seen him prior to his arrest; and that the first time he saw him was in Lincoln Heights jail.

Defendant contends the court erred prejudicially in not requiring Renty to divulge the identity of the informer.

Powell v. Superior Court, 48 Cal.2d 704, 312 P.2d 698, declares it to be "the policy of this state that the goal of criminal prosecutions is not to secure a conviction in every case by any expedient means, however odious, but rather, only through establishing the truth upon a public trial fair to defendant and the state alike" (48 Cal.2d at page 707, 312 P.2d at page 699).

[1, 2] When an informer becomes a participant in the offense charged against the defendant, he and the People lose the right to keep his identity anonymous. People v. Lawrence, 149 Cal.App.2d 435, 452, 308 P.2d 821; People v. Castiel, 153 Cal.App.2d 653, 315 P.2d 79; People v. Alvarez, 154 Cal.App.2d 694, 316 P.2d 1006. People v. Cox, 156 Cal.App.2d 472, 319 P.2d 681, 684, says the rule is "that even where an offense is committed in the immediate presence of an officer of the law, if an informant has in any way participated in the criminal activity, or if the informer was a material witness to the alleged crime, then, in such an event, the name of the informer must be made known upon demand of the person charged." (Emphasis added.)

In People v. Castiel, 153 Cal.App.2d 653, at page 657, 315 P.2d 79, at page 81, Mr. Justice Dooling in masterly fashion stated: "It would be intolerable if the government could convict its citizens of crime and thereby deprive them of their liberty and civil rights while denying them the opportunity to produce a witness or witnesses to the alleged crime, whose identity is known to the witnesses who testify against him. The defendant is entitled as a matter of due process of law to be allowed to interview and produce any witness who might give evidence favorable to his defense, and when a witness who testifies to the commission of a crime testifies that another person or other persons were also present, and particularly where such other person or persons according to the testimony were active participants, the right of the defendant to the disclosure of the identity of such person or persons on cross-examination seems too clear for successful contradiction. If this was a case without precedents logic and the basic constitutional guaranty of due process would compel this conclusion, but it is not a case without precedents. The cases generally hold that where in the trial of a criminal case the basic right of a defendant to produce evidence which might exonerate him comes into conflict with a privilege of the government to withhold such evidence from disclosure the government's privilege must in general give way to the basic right of the defendant," citing numerous cases. On substantially the same basic facts as appear at bar this court in People v. Alvarez, 154 Cal.App.2d 694, 316 P.2d 1006, held the trial court erred prejudicially in not requiring the officer to disclose the name of the informer.

[3] The informer and Renty were working together as an undercover team. Their purpose was to obtain evidence on which criminal prosecutions could be based. The informer brought Renty and "Red" together so that Renty could purchase narcotics. The informer told "Red" in the narcotics jargon that he and Renty wanted to buy narcotics and that Renty had the money. "Red" apparently knew the informer and replied on his implied assertion that Renty was a person who could be trusted. On February 4 there was no conversation between Renty and "Red" after they left the informer's presence. Immediately after leaving "Red," Renty joined the informer. It is obvious the informer participated in the transaction charged in Count I.

The People contend that if there was error in the court's refusal to compel Renty to disclose the name of the informer, such error goes only to Count I but not to Count II. We think it cannot be said the informer did not participate in Count II. The two counts were tied together. Renty was the only witness as to both counts. At every essential step necessary to fix guilt, Renty's testimony shows that the undisclosed informer was a principal actor, and if called to the stand would be a material and important witness. The indictment was not returned until May 7, 1957. Three months elapsed between the second alleged transaction and defendant's arrest. There was no evidence Renty saw "Red" on any occasion other than February 4 and 7 prior to his arrest. Renty's identification, made at the time of the trial, must have been based solely on those two meetings, each of which lasted 10 minutes. The defense as to Count II was the same as to Count I: misidentification. The People's case as to both counts rested solely on Renty's identification of defendant. Renty relied on the first transaction to consummate the second. If he was in error in his first identification, he was also in error in his second identification. The informer was the only witness defendant could produce to contradict Renty's testimony. The availability of the informer for investigation and subpoena was essential to the defense. He was defendant's one marterial witness; the only witness other than defendant who could contradict Renty's identification. Defendant was denied access to the witness who might establish his innocence. The informer did more than set the wheels in motion which caused defendant to be suspected. He did more than point the finger of suspicion at "Red": he played a vital part in the criminal acts with which defendant was later charged. He was the procuring cause of the sale of the narcotics on both days; his activities were indispensable to both sales. If Renty had been required to disclose the name of the informer as to Count I and the informer had been called by defendant and had contradicted Renty on material points, it is obvious that if such testimony were believed it would have affected the identification of Renty as to Count II. Disclosure of the identity of the informer was as necessary to the defense of Count II as it was to the defense of Count I. When the court erred in refusing to compel Renty to disclose the name of the informer as to Count I, it cannot be said the error was not prejudicial as to Count II. Cf. People v. Lawrence, 149 Cal.App.2d 435, 452, 308 P.2d 821.

As stated in People v. Castiel, supra, 153 Cal.App.2d 653, at page 659, 315 P.2d 79, at page 82:

> "No one knows what the undisclosed informer, if produced, might testify. He might contradict or persuasively explain away the prosecution's evidence. It is the deprival of the defendants of the opportunity of producing evidence which might result in their exoneration which constitutes the error in this case, and we cannot assume because the prosecution evidence may seem strong that the undisclosed evidence might not prove sufficient to overcome it in the minds of the jurors. To do so is to reason that in no case can a defendant suffer prejudice from the suppression of evidence which may be favorable to him if the prosecution has produced what seems to be a strong eyewitness case of the defendant's guilt."

The judgment and the order denying a new trial are reversed.

SHINN, P. J., and PARKER WOOD, J., concur.

159 Cal.App.2d 99

In the Matter of the ESTATE of Emanuel M. BROWNE, Deceased.

Hugo BRUNI, Contestant and Appellant,

v.

Mary RISDON and Spanish American Institute, Proponents and Respondents.

Civ. 22921.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

April 2, 1958.

Rehearing Denied April 28, 1958.

Hearing Denied May 27, 1958.

Proceeding for probate of will. Contestant appealed from order of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Henry M. Willis, J., vacating and setting aside order denying probate of will and for new trial. The District Court of Appeal, Kincaid, J. pro tem., held that where attesting witnesses testified as to testator's due execution of will, a prima facie case in favor of validity of will was established, and jury questions were presented as to alleged unsoundness of mind of testator at time of execution, correctness of manner in which will was executed and undue influence.

Order affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇐933(4)

Where motion for new trial was upon grounds of insufficiency of evidence and that judgment was against law and order granting new trial was silent as to any specification of ground of insufficiency of evidence, on appeal from such order it would be presumed that new trial was granted on ground that decision or judgment was against law. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc. § 657.

2. Wills ⇐312

Court may deny probate of will without receiving any evidence on behalf of contestant or submitting any issue of fact for determination by jury only where proponent of will fails to make a prima facie showing that will was executed in all particulars as required by Probate Code.

3. Wills ⇐289

Where document offered for probate appeared on its face to be regularly executed in all respects and was declared to be the last will and testament of decedent and carried his signature as well as an attestation clause with signatures of witnesses thereto, document was sufficient to raise presumption that will had been duly executed.

4. Wills ⇐289, 303(5)

Where regularity of manner in which will was executed was put in issue, and document offered for probate appeared to be regular in all respects, presumption that will had been duly executed was to be weighed with testimony of subscribing witnesses as to what took place and as to what they did or did not remember, and forgetfulness of one of the attesting witnesses did not destroy other proof.

5. Wills ⇐324(4)

In proceeding to probate will, where subscribing witnesses testified that decedent in their presence declared document to be his will, signed it and asked them to sign it as witnesses, and that each signed in presence of decedent and of each other, and that in their opinion decedent was of sound and disposing mind, there was prima facie case in favor of validity of will requiring submission of issues to jury for determination.

J. M Sinclair and Robert W. Herrick, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Anthony V. Randles, Los Angeles, and Roger Pryor, Compton, for respondents.

KINCAID, Justice pro tem.

[1] Contestant Hugo C. Bruni, brother of the decedent, Emanuel M. Browne, appeals from the order of the trial court granting the motion of proponent Mary M. Risdon to vacate and set aside the order denying probate of will and for a new trial. The motion for new trial was upon the grounds of: (1) insufficiency of evidence to justify the decision and judgment; (2) that said judgment is against law. The order granting the new trial is silent as to any specification of the ground of insufficiency of evidence to justify the decision so it must be presumed it was granted on the ground that the decision or judgment is against law. Code Civ.Proc., § 657.

The order denying probate of will was made by the court during the course of a jury trial involving the issues of both petition for probate of a will and contest of the will before probate. The order recites: "* * * after examining the petition and hearing the evidence of the two witnesses to said proposed will, and petitioner having rested, and finding that decedent, at the time of signing said will, did not declare same to be his will but did affirmatively declare same not to be his will * * * the document * * * be denied probate as the last will of said deceased."

[2] The contest of the will before probate was based upon the three grounds of (1) unsoundness of mind at the time of execution; (2) the will was not executed in the manner and form required by law; (3) undue influence. A jury having been duly empaneled evidence was received in behalf of the proponent. This evidence consisted of the testimony of the two witnesses to the execution of the will and several exhibits. Without receiving any evidence in behalf of the contestant or submitting any issue of fact for determination by the jury the court made its order denying the document to probate.

Such an order may properly be made by the court only where the proponent of the will fails to make a prima facie showing that the will was executed in all particulars as required by the Probate Code. As said in Swift v. Superior Court, 39 Cal. 2d 358, 365, 247 P.2d 6, 10: "If the proponents fails to make such prima facie showing, the court can properly deny the petition for probate and dismiss the contest, but the court must bear in mind the holding of In re Estate of Black, supra, 199 Cal. 257 at page 262, 248 P. 1015, 1017, wherein it is stated: 'We are satisfied that upon proceedings for the probate of a will involving both a contest of the will and a petition for probate the court is not at liberty, upon the preliminary and formal showing of due execution, to finally determine upon its merits any of the issues raised by the contest, but is limited to a determination of whether or not a prima facie case has been established in favor of the validity of the will, sufficient to warrant the submission of the case to a jury.'"

Here, as in the Swift case, direct issues are raised by the contest and answer thereto, as to the due execution of the will, the soundness of decedent's mind and the presence or absence of undue influence. In its opinion in that case the court continues: "Since all of these issues are either mentioned specifically in section 371 of the Probate Code, or are 'questions substantially affecting the validity' of this alleged * * * will as provided therein, petitioners are entitled to have all of them submitted to the jury unless upon the preliminary proof of the will there is 'such a dearth of evidence that the granting of a motion for a nonsuit would be proper.'"

[3] The document here offered for probate appears on its face to be regularly executed in all respects. It is declared to be the last will and testament of the decedent, carries his signature and contains an attestation clause with the signature of each of the witnesses thereto who testified herein. This is sufficient to raise a presumption that the will had been duly executed. In re Estate of Morey, 75 Cal.App.2d 628, 634, 171 P.2d 131; In re Estate of Pitcairn, 6 Cal.2d 730, 732, 59 P.2d 90.

[4] This presumption was to be weighed with the testimony of the subscribing witnesses as to what took place and as to what they did or did not remember. The forgetfulness of one of the attesting witnesses does not destroy the other proof. In re Estate of Darilek, 151 Cal.App.2d 322, 325, 311 P.2d 615; In re Estate of Harvey, 143 Cal.App.2d 368, 372, 299 P.2d 712.

[5] The attesting witnesses were James D. Randles, decedent's attorney, who had drawn the proposed will in accordance with decedent's instructions and his son, Anthony V. Randles, who is also an attorney.

Both witnesses testified that the decedent in their presence declared the document to be his will, signed it and asked them to sign it as witnesses; that each signed in the presence of the decedent and of each other, that in their opinion the decedent was of sound and disposing mind at and before the time of such signing.

Anthony V. Randles testified that after fully reading the document to the decedent James D. Randles asked "Now is that what you want?" The decedent said, "Well, yes, that is just the way I told you. * * * I have been thinking, though, about a couple of others that I would like to have included in it.

"My dad said, 'Well, do you want us to change this?'

"And he said, 'No, This is the way I want it. This is the way I told you to fix it up,' and he said, 'We can take care of the others later.'

"So Dad said, 'Well, all right. Now, you sign here,' and I remember we went to get one of these—there was some to-do about whether or not he was going to use the table that swung out over the bed, and he signed his name, and, as I recall, I said, 'Well, now, we have your name down here as Emanuel instead of just the initials.'

"So he said, 'All right.' So he signed it again using his full name of Emanuel.

"My father said, 'Now, do you declare this to be your will and do you want Tony and me to sign as witnesses?' and he said 'Yes, I do.'

"So my father and I both signed as witnesses. Then my dad said, 'Now, what do you want me to do with this will?'

"He said, 'Well, can you keep it for me?'

"Dad said, 'Yes. If you don't have any place to keep it now, we will keep it down in our office safe.'

"And he said, 'That will be fine.'

"Then my dad said, 'Now what about these others that you wanted to be remembered in here?'

"He said, 'Well, it is more just to remember them; nothing very much.' He said, 'I want'—I believe the man's name was Hogan or Logan—Hogan—he said, 'He works with me down in the office.' He said, 'I would like to leave the sum of $250 cash' and he mentioned some kind of art work, as I recall—I forget what it was—and described it.

"My dad said, 'Well, we better write this down.'

"He said—well, if I recall, it was a painting and he gave the painter's name and the year which it was dated, and he said, 'Now, there is my secretary down there that I want to remember.' I believe her name was Arroya—Isabel Arroya, I believe. He said, 'I want her to have the sum of $250, and there is some silver and there is some linens. I don't care about the ones that I have used,' he said, 'but I have some that have never been used there, and', he said, 'I would like to see her get those.'

"I remember my dad made some notes on this, took it down on a sheet of paper and said, 'Well, I will fix this up and bring it back to you.'

"And he said, 'Fine.'

"Dad said, 'Whenever it is convenient to get around to it, we will add those to it and make a new one.'

"As I recall, that is the substance of our conversation."

The testimony of James was substantially the same as that of his son Anthony excepting that he could not be certain as to whether the decedent declared his wish to include the bequests to his two friends before or after he had signed the will and it had been signed by the attesting witnesses. He was equally certain with Anthony that the decedent expressed himself as desiring to fully execute the first instrument in question as his will, and having it stand as such until a subsequent will or codicil should be executed by him including such bequests.

It further appears that about a week later the two Randles returned to the hospital to see the decedent bringing with them another proposed will substantially similar to the one already executed excepting that the requested bequests to the two friends were included. They found decedent too ill to then be disturbed and at his request agreed to return later. Decedent died before this instrument was ever executed.

From the foregoing it is apparent that by way of preliminary proof of the will there is not "such a dearth of evidence that the granting of a motion for a nonsuit would be proper." In re Estate of Black, supra, 199 Cal. 257, 262, 248 P. 1015, 1017. The action of the trial court in taking the case from the jury by then denying the petition for probate had the effect of a final determination of the issues on the merits, whereas, a prima facie case in favor of the validity of the will having been established, the court, as a matter of law, was required to submit the issues to the jury for determination.

Under such circumstances the court properly granted the motion to vacate and set aside the order denying probate of will and for a new trial. Carney v. Simmonds, 49 Cal.2d 84, 315 P.2d 305.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

ASHBURN, Acting P. J., and HERNDON, J., concur.

159 Cal.App.2d 275

Clyde R. BURR, as Executor of the Estate of Yvonne Crellin Barbee, Anne Crellin Seggerman, and Edward Crellin, Plaintiffs and Respondents,

v.

Curtis V. CRELLIN, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 22756.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

April 9, 1958.

Action by a former wife and two children against husband for moneys claimed to be due under a supplemental property agreement. The former wife died and her executor was substituted. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Wilbur C. Curtis, J., entered judgment against husband and husband appealed. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that under a supplemental property agreement providing that, after deducting all taxes required to be paid on unearned income, if unearned income should exceed twice the amount husband was required to pay for child support then husband would be required to pay 25 per cent of such excess as long and as often as such excess continued, where husband did not introduce evidence of amount of tax required to be, trial court computing amount owed to children could not deduct from amount of unearned income any taxes.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Evidence ⇐78

Under a supplemental property agreement providing that, after deducting all taxes required to be paid on account of unearned income, if unearned income should exceed twice amount which husband was required to pay for child support, then husband would pay 25 per cent of excess as long and as often as such excess continued, where husband had in his possession or under his control income tax returns and other papers which would have shown amount of taxes, if any, required to be paid by him on amount of his unearned income and those records were not produced by husband, there was presumption that if such evidence had been produced, it would not have assisted husband's case or would have operated to his prejudice. West's Ann.Civ.Code Proc. § 1963, subd. 5.

2. Husband and Wife ⇐279(1)

Under supplemental property agreement between husband and wife providing for certain payments on unearned income and providing that, after deducting all taxes required to be paid on unearned income, husband should pay 25 per cent of excess of unearned income, where husband did not introduce evidence of amount of tax required to be paid, taxes could not be deducted from amount of unearned income and husband was responsible for 25 per cent of excess without deducting taxes.

3. Husband and Wife ⇐279(1)

Under a supplemental property agreement providing that, after deducting all taxes required to be paid on account of unearned income, if unearned income should exceed twice amount required at such time to be paid by husband for child support under agreement and property settlement, then husband would pay 25 per cent of such excess as long and as often as such excess continued as long as children remained living, since husband was not required to pay child support after children reached their 21st birthdays, reasonable construction of documents was that after children reached their respective 21st birthdays, they were entitled to payments only from unearned income and were entitled to 25 per cent of entire unearned income subject to agreement.

Roland Maxwell, Paul H. Marston, Richard W. Olson, Pasadena, for appellant.

Newell & Chester, Theodore A. Chester, Los Angeles, for respondents.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

Defendant husband appeals from a judgment against him for breach of an agreement between himself and his former wife, now deceased, for the support of said wife and their children, for the settlement of their property rights and for the mutual release of all their claims against each other. Their agreement originally consisted of two documents dated and signed by them on June 1, 1934, and entitled "Property Settlement, Agreement for Support and Mutual Release" and "Supplemental Agreement" respectively.

On March 18, 1953, and while they were husband and wife, another "Property Settlement, Agreement for Support and Mutual Release" was made by them. It cancelled and superseded the "Property Settlement, Agreement for Support and Mutual Release" of June 1, 1934, and provided that the Supplemental Agreement of June 1, 1934 "shall remain in full force and effect in conjunction with this agreement".

The "Property Settlement, Agreement for Support and Mutual Release" included provisions for the support of plaintiffs who were the then wife and minor children of defendant. The amount of support payable monthly was conditioned upon the marital status of the wife, the minority of the respective children, and the continued life of each. Payments having been made as required to be made to the wife until she remarried and then died, and to the two children until each became 21 years of age, there are no further payments to be made under that agreement.

This action was commenced by defendant's former wife and his two children. His former wife, Yvonne Barbee died and Clyde R. Burr, as executor of her estate was substituted as a plaintiff. The action is for moneys claimed to be due under the Supplemental Agreement, from which the following paragraph is quoted:

"1. Subject to the maximum amounts hereinafter fixed, if at any time, or from time to time, the monthly income of First Party from any and all gifts, trusts, devises, bequests or inheritances, given, created, or left to him, or from any other sources other than his own earnings, after deducting all taxes required to be paid on account of same, shall exceed twice the amount required at such time to be paid by First Party under the agreement and property settlement first above mentioned, then the First Party will pay twenty-five per cent (25%) of such excess as long and as often as such excess continues in three (3) equal parts to Second Party and each of the two children of the parties, Anne Crellin and Edward Crellin, as long as all three remain living, except as hereinafter provided. Such sums shall be in addition to the amount of money which First Party is obligated to pay under the terms of the property settlement, agreement for support and mutual release. For the purpose of determining the amount of First Party's said income the amount of income from any property acquired from such sources but disposed of by him in any manner shall be included in the computation."

The court found on competent evidence, and it is no longer disputed, that defendant received unearned income as follows:

Year	Amount	Twice the Payments required by Agreement for Child Support	25% of Excess
1949	$8,838.12	$7,200.00	$ 409.53
1950	10,720.96	7,200.00	880.24
1951	9,739.31	7,200.00	634.82
1952	12,106.38	5,940.00	1,516.57
1953	14,602.47	2,100.00	3,125.61
1954	17,212.43	. . .	4,303.10
1955	12,125.68	. . .	3,031.42
1956 1/1-8/16	8,282.50 [1]	. . .	2,070.62

The children had their respective twenty-first birthdays on May 13, 1952 and May 28, 1953.

By the judgment, the court apportioned the "25% of the excess" as shown above between the two children, specified the dates from which the various amounts were to bear interest, what portions were to be paid directly to the children and what payments were to be made in trust as provided by other sections of the agreement.

Appellant contends that it was error to give judgment against defendant without "deducting all taxes required to be paid on account of" such unearned income. The court found that no evidence was offered of taxes required to be paid by defendant on account of such unearned income. From a careful examination of the record, only the following excerpts concern income taxes.

"Mr. Maxwell (Attorney for Appellant): Because of the matter of deduction of income tax, your Honor, there is a question which arises, or the wording of the clause with which we are concerned, there is a question which arises on the basis for tax deduction. Now, we have before the Court so far as the evidence has indicated, the income which has been received by the defendant, and I would assume, therefore, that the matter of determination of the amount of that deduction would be an arithmetical problem based upon the laws which would apply in court having the necessity of determining whether the measure for the deduction would be the status which Mr. Crellin had at the time the agreement was signed, or whether it would be that status as it has changed from time to time; and if any further evidence should be introduced on that point, why, we are not in a position of holding it out, or holding it back, but I make this statement for whatever guidance the Court may be able to give with respect to that problem.

"The Court: Is money received under a testamentary trust subject to income tax?

"Mr. Maxwell: Income would be.

"The Court: Income from that—

"Mr. Maxwell: Income would be, yes, it would be subject to income tax."

Then after some discussion of inheritance taxes and the offer and withdrawal of exhibits relating to them, the following transpired:

"Mr. Maxwell: I think that it relates only to the income, and I think we are concerned with income taxes, after a lot more mature consideration of it."

Plaintiffs then introduced as their exhibits the inheritance and estate tax returns so withdrawn by defendant.

"Mr. Maxwell: One more question, if I may.

"The Court: Very well.

"Redirect Examination

"Mr. Maxwell: Q. Mr. Crellin, you paid income tax on deposits of income received by you from any trust with respect to which there has been evidence? A. Yes."

After a recross-examination by which no facts or figures were elicited, in reply to a question regarding a figure given in the answer which had been verified by defendant's attorney, defendant testified: "This is the first time I have ever seen this document, so it doesn't make sense to me. All I could say was I have turned in all of my duplicate income tax returns to Mr. Maxwell; and if that figure corresponds to the income tax that I filed that year, it is the correct amount."

[1, 2] There is no evidence in the record as to the amounts of income taxes, if any, paid by defendant on the unearned income, or on any income, during any of the years 1949 to 1956, or at all. In the absence of any evidence, we must assume that the "amounts required to be paid" were the amounts, if any, paid by defendant. In the instant action, the record is clear that appellant had in his possession or under his control the income tax returns and other papers which would have shown the amount of taxes, if any, required to be paid by him on the amount of his unearned income. These records were not produced by appellant. The presumption, therefore, is that, had such evidence been produced, it would not have helped appellant's case (Code Civ.Proc. Section 1963, subd. 5; Hagy v. Allied Chemical & Dye Corp., 122 Cal.App.2d 361, 372, 265 P.2d 86), or it would have operated to appellant's prejudice. Hamilton v. Madison Auto Sales Co., 94 Cal.App.2d 619, 623, 211 P. 2d 335. Without any evidence as to the amount of tax "required to be paid", the trial court could not deduct any amount from the unearned income subject to the supplemental agreement.

[3] Appellant's other specification of error is that the court erred in adopting an unreasonable and unfair construction of the provision of said paragraph 1, that "if * * * the monthly income * * * (unearned) * * * shall exceed twice the amount required at such times to be paid * * * under the agreement and property settlement * * * then the First Party (appellant) will pay twenty-five per cent (25%) of such excess as long and as often as such excess continues * * *". The court determined 25% of such excess by deducting twice the amount of child support actually required to be paid and paid during the various years before the children reached their respective twenty-first birthdays. During 1954 and later no child support was required to be paid by said agreement, and the court necessarily deducted only twice zero, or nothing, leaving 25% of the entire unearned income subject to said paragraph 1. This was not error.

Appellant insists that, if the parties intended the agreement to be so enforced, they could have said so. We are persuaded that the parties did so intend and that they did say so. Appellant urges that the meaning given the agreement consisting of the two documents is unreasonable. We think not. Reading them together and in their entirety, it appears that the children during their minority were to receive certain support payments regardless of their source, and, in the event appellant should have received unearned income exceeding twice the amount of support so paid, they would receive 25% of such excess. But, after their respective twenty-first birthdays, they would be entitled to payments only from unearned income. This seems to be the fair and reasonable meaning of the words used by the parties.

The judgment is affirmed.

FOURT and LILLIE, JJ., concur.

159 Cal.App.2d 184

RICHFIELD OIL CORPORATION, a corporation, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

SECURITY-FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF LOS ANGELES, as Executor of the Estate of William L. Haskell, Deceased, and Elsam Co., a corporation, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 22483.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

April 7, 1958.

Hearing Denied June 4, 1958.

Tenant's action for declaratory relief and for specific performance of lease provision giving tenant first refusal option to purchase premises. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Julian Beck, J., entered judgment for defendants and tenant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that where lease gave tenant first refusal option to purchase premises if exercised within twenty days and irrespective of whether premises were sold to a third party notice of any subsequent bona fide offer acceptable to landlord was to be given to tenant, and after landlord had died executor of his estate gave notice of bid which tenant agreed to meet but a higher bid was subsequently received in proceedings before probate court which confirmed sale to third party making such high bid, tenant giving notice of exercise of option to purchase on the same terms as highest bidder within twenty days after confirmation of sale was entitled to specific performance.

Reversed with directions.

1. Executors and Administrators ⇐135

Landlord's death did not change terms of lease provision giving tenant first refusal option to purchase premises if exercised in a certain manner and within a certain time, but after landlord's death executor lacked power to bind estate by his acceptance of a bid of any party without confirmation by probate court.

2. Landlord and Tenant ⇐92(4)

Where lease gave tenant first refusal option to purchase premises if exercised within 20 days after receipt of notice of third party's offer to purchase, but irrespective of whether premises were sold to the third party notice of any subsequent bona fide offer was to be given to tenant, and after landlord had died executor gave notice of bid which tenant agreed to meet, exercise of option by tenant did not extinguish its option to buy when a higher bid was received in proceedings before probate court.

3. Specific Performance ⇐57, 92(1)

Where lease gave tenant first refusal option to purchase premises if exercised within 20 days after receipt of notice of third-party offer to purchase, and irrespective of whether premises were sold to third party notice of any subsequent bona fide offer was to be given to tenant, and after landlord died executor gave notice of bid which tenant agreed to meet but a higher bid was subsequently received in proceedings before probate court which confirmed the sale to highest bidder, tenant giving notice of exercise of option to purchase on the same terms as highest bidder within 20 days after confirmation of sale was entitled to specific performance of option to purchase.

4. Estoppel ⇐52

"Waiver" is the intentional relinquishment of a known right, and only an existing right may be waived.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Waiver".

5. Estoppel ⇐119

Waiver is ordinarily a question of fact and the defense of waiver raises an issue of fact to be decided after a consideration of all the circumstances of the particular case.

6. Appeal and Error ⇐999(1), 1008(1)
Estoppel ⇐119

Unless but one inference can be drawn from the evidence waiver and estoppel are questions for the jury or trial court.

7. Landlord and Tenant ⇐92(4)

Where lease gave tenant first refusal option to purchase premises if exercised within 20 days after receipt of notice of third-party offer to purchase and after landlord died executor gave notice of bid of third party, but in proceedings before probate court for confirmation of sale higher bids were received in the presence of an agent of tenant who insisted on right to exercise option according to its express terms and specifically refused to waive any right, there was no waiver by tenant of right to exercise option to purchase on the same terms as the highest bidder within 20 days after confirmation of sale.

William J. DeMartini, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Behymer & Hoffman, Ralph W. Hoffman, Los Angeles, for respondent Elsam Co.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff Richfield Oil Corporation, hereinafter called "Richfield", appeals from an adverse judgment in its action for declaratory relief and for specific performance. Defendant Security-First National Bank of Los Angeles is the executor of the estate of William L. Haskell, deceased, and will be hereinafter referred to as the "Executor". Defendant Elsam Co., a corporation, hereafter referred to as "Elsam", was the highest bidder for the decedent's real property at a probate sale thereof.

Richfield was the lessee and occupant of the real property so sold to Elsam. A lease dated December 16, 1954, superseded a prior five-year lease between the same parties dated January 30, 1951, and provided for a term of six years commencing March 1, 1955, one month after the death of the lessor, William L. Haskell.

Article 17 of the lease to Richfield provides that:

"In the event Lessor shall receive from a third party at any time during the term of this lease or during any extension thereof a bona fide offer to purchase the leased premises, or any part thereof, or any holdings of Lessor of which the leased premises are a part, and shall decide to sell the same for the amount named in said offer, Lessor shall promptly give to Lessee writtten notice of the terms of such offer including the name and address of the offerer and of Lessor's willingness to sell for the price offered, and Lessee shall have the option and privilege of purchasing the premises which are the subject of such offer at said price and shall notify Lessor in writing within twenty (20) days after the date it receives notice from Lessor whether Lessee will purchase said premises for the amount specified in said offer. In the event Lessee shall not give Lessor notice within said twenty day period of Lessee's election to purchase for the amount specified in said offer, Lessor may thereafter sell said premises to the party making the offer, subject, however, to the leasehold estate and rights herein granted to Lessee. Irrespective of whether or not said premises are sold to such party, notice of any subsequent bona fide offers acceptable to Lessor shall be given to Lessee upon the same terms and conditions for acceptance or refusal as hereinabove provided, and failure to exercise any option hereunder shall not affect or terminate Lessee's rights under any other option contained in this lease. * * * Conveyance of said premises by Lessor to Lessee as in this article provided shall act to cancel this lease in all particulars and if Lessor shall have been paid rentals covering a period subsequent to the date of such conveyance such prepaid rentals shall be applied on and constitute a part of the purchase price of said premises."

Said lease further provides that "each and all of the covenants, obligations, and conditions" thereof shall be binding upon the heirs, personal representatives, successors and assigns of the lessor.

Richfield was notified by the executor that it had received a bid of $21,500 from a third party for the purchase of the premises of which Richfield was lessee. Richfield, pursuant to said Article 17, gave notice in writing of its election to buy on the terms offered and made a like bid. The executor then reported Richfield's bid to the court and prayed for confirmation of the sale. Upon the hearing in probate court the bidding was brisk. Elsam's bid of $29,600 was the highest bid received. The probate court then (December 9, 1955) announced that the premises were duly and regularly sold to Elsam "subject to" Richfield's lease. Elsam's bid was a fair and reasonable price for the property (subject to the lease), and Richfield's lease provided for a fair rental of the property for service station use. Under date of December 9, 1955, the executor notified Richfield that the leased premises had been so sold to Elsam for $29,600 and that Richfield would be told when to begin payment of rent to the new owner.

Within 20 days thereafter and on December 21st, Richfield served upon the executor and upon Elsam its notice in writing dated December 21, 1955, that it elected to purchase said property for the amount of $29,600 "plus such other sums as may be payable to you under and pursuant to the proposed sale to Elsam Co. as confirmed by order of the Superior Court".

Under date of January 3, 1956, the probate court made its formal "Order Confirming Sale of Real Property" and included therein findings as follows: "that the said real property hereinafter described is subject to a lease of record in which the Richfield Oil Corporation is the lessee and that an employee and agent of said Richfield Oil Corporation, to-wit Don G. White, was present in court and testified that he was authorized by the said corporation to represent it; * * * that participating in said bidding was the said agent of the Richfield Oil Corporation, by making a bid on behalf of said corporation; * * *" and that Elsam's bid of $29,600 was the highest made. Said order is "that the sale so made * * * subject to the lease of record * * be and the same hereby is confirmed and upon receipt of the purchase price * * * the executor is directed to execute to said purchaser a deed * * *".

The instant action was commenced January 5, 1956, and by it Richfield sought: (1) a declaration of "the rights and obligations of the parties hereto under the lease dated December 16, 1954, and under Article 17 thereof, as said rights and obligations have been affected by the sale to defendant Elsam Co. on December 9, 1955" in the probate proceedings and "by the exercise of the option to purchase the property described in said lease by plaintiff herein under and pursuant to its notice of exercise thereof"; (2) that the contract contained in said Article 17, as made "effective and operative by the exercise of the option by plaintiff by its notice dated December 21, 1955, may be decreed to be specifically performed * * *"; (3) "that any sums paid by plaintiff * * * as rental * * * subsequent to the date of exercise of said option * * * be applied to the purchase price * * *"; (4) for costs of suit; and (5) for other relief.

Richfield's lease had been recorded and the option provided in Article 17 thereof was discussed in court during the bidding. No claim is made that respondent Elsam was a purchaser without notice of Richfield's option.

[1] Elsam urges that "appellant's first refusal option was extinguished when it exercised its rights by meeting the original $21,500 offer which executor had received"; that once said right was extinguished "appellant was in the same position as any one who purchases real property from an estate" and "must protect the sale to him, in the event of any bidding by third parties, by making any necessary additional bids". Respondents cite, in support of their contention that Richfield's option has been extinguished, Civil Code, sections 1473 and 1682, and the decision in Manasse v. Ford, 58 Cal.App. 312, 208 P. 354. They urge that all of Richfield's rights under the option were extinguished when "the executor, standing in the shoes of the lessor, by notifying the appellant when it received the original $21,500 offer and giving appellant the opportunity to meet said offer, performed its obligation under the lease". The acts of executor so relied upon by respondents fall far short of the "full performance" contemplated by said sections of the Civil Code as the means of extinguishing an obligation. Lessor's death did not change the terms of his option agreement. Southern Pacific Co. v. Swanson, 73 Cal.App. 229, 234, 238 P. 736; Joost v. Castel, 33 Cal.App. 2d 138, 140–141, 91 P.2d 172. However, after lessor's death, his executor lacked the power to bind the estate by his acceptance of the bid of any party without confirmation by the probate court.

In Manasse v. Ford, supra, the lessee failed to exercise his option to purchase at the price and on the terms offered by another in accordance with the notice of the lessor that it would accept said offer unless lessee elected to buy. The property was so sold by lessor "subject to this lease", the term of which had another year to run. [58 Cal.App. 312, 208 P. 356.] Later the lessee attempted to force the purchaser to sell to him, claiming that the sale having been made "subject to this lease" was also subject to his option to purchase. The option in the Manasse lease included the following language: "* * * and provided further that if the lessee shall not within said period of thirty days elect to purchase the said property, the lessor may then sell the same to such other purchaser subject to this lease and this lease, the conditions, restrictions and covenants thereof shall then be in full force and effect and binding upon the lessee and the purchaser of the said property". After considering the contract in its entirety, it was held in the Manasse case, supra, 58 Cal.App. at page 317, 208 P. at page 355, that "The intent was to reserve to the lessor the unqualified right after November 6, 1919, to make an absolute sale of the property. This he did, and the resultant conveyance conveyed to the appellants an indefeasible title to the property".

Each option, or other contract, must be so interpreted as to give effect to its own language and to each and every part of it. Because of the provision in Article 17 of the lease and option being considered on the instant appeal, that "Irrespective of whether or not said premises are sold to such party, notice of any subsequent bona fide offers acceptable to Lessor shall be given to Lessee upon the same terms and conditions for acceptance or refusal as hereinabove provided, and failure to exercise any option hereunder shall not affect or terminate Lessee's rights under any other option contained in this lease * * *" even if Richfield had failed to exercise its option to buy for $21,500, the decision in the Manasse case, supra, is inapplicable to the facts of the instant action.

[2] We are satisfied that, by their lease and option agreement, decedent and Richfield did not intend that compliance with the terms of the agreement by lessor's notice that it had received and intended to accept a bid, followed by Richfield's notice of its exercise of its option to purchase, should extinguish Richfield's option to buy.

In Moreno v. Blinn, 81 Cal.App.2d 852, 185 P.2d 332, 333, a lease gave to the lessor permission to sell the leased property, but "giving tenant first right to purchase". When the tenant inquired the price acceptable to lessor, he was told $7,500. Some months later, without notice to the tenant, lessor sold the property to another for $4,500. The buyer, as in the instant action, had actual as well as constructive notice of the lessee's "first right to purchase". When lessee learned of the sale, he served written notice and tender upon both the lessor and the purchaser that he desired to exercise his option and purchase the property. Then he brought an action against both for specific performance. At page 854 of 81 Cal. App.2d, at page 333 of 185 P.2d, in the Moreno case, supra, the court said: "* * * The option to buy was intended to mean something, * * *. The language used would indicate that he was given an unlimited right to purchase the property if the lessor decided to sell * * *"; and at page 856 of 81 Cal.App.2d, at page 334 of 185 P.2d: "The respondent was given the first right to purchase for the price at which the lessor was willing to sell. That was a matter capable of ascertainment, and it became fixed and determined long before this action was brought." The judgment which was affirmed required that plaintiff-optionee deposit $4,500 in court; that the defendant-purchaser should convey the property to the plaintiff and receive the $4,500; and retain jurisdiction to enter "such further judgment as might be necessary in order to obtain a full conveyance of the property to the plaintiff".

The fact that, in the instant action, the executor could not sell at any price without confirmation of the sale by the probate court did not change the terms of decedent's contract, but merely delayed the beginning of the time within which Richfield might exercise its option until the sale price was fixed by the probate court.

Richfield, in its closing brief, says: "It is apparent that everyone at the hearing with the exception of the Judge of the Probate Court misconstrued the powers of the Court at that hearing and the Judge appropriately confirmed the sale subject to any rights which appellant might have under the lease. The exercise of those rights was not before the Court."

[3] Richfield seeks specific performance of its option to purchase land of the decedent in the instant action. The price was not agreed upon and no manner of setting such price was provided other than the deceased owner's willingness to accept it from any party. After Haskell's death the price at which the property could be sold and the option exercised was controlled by the probate court, which was required to determine the necessity for the sale, or the advantage, benefit, and interest of the estate in having it made, and the fairness of the price bid. Probate Code, § 785.

A similar action to enforce a decedent's option contract was upheld by the Supreme Court in Bewick v. Mecham, 26 Cal.2d 92, 95, 156 P.2d 757, 157 A.L.R. 1277. There the plaintiff had an absolute option—not merely a first refusal—to purchase at a price to be fixed by arbitration as specified. Upon the executor's refusal to perform decedent's obligation to appoint an arbitrator, the court (not sitting in probate) determined the price and ordered the executor to convey the property to the optionee. Under the Bewick decision, supra, specific performance of decedent's option agreement, about which decedent's executor and his optionee disagreed, was properly sought in a court of equity rather than in the probate court.

Respondent next urges that appellant waived any rights it had to enforce the option clause by its acts and words at the probate sale, partial transcript of which is hereinafter set forth.

"Mr. Niemo (attorney for the Executor): "Due to the fact that the present lease provides for refusal, may I ask whether or not a representative of the Richfield Oil Company is in court?

"Court: Is there a representative of the Richfield Oil Company here?

"Mr. White: Yes. My name is Don G. White."

Thereupon Mr. White was called as a witness, duly sworn, and, in answer to questions asked by Mr. Niemo, testified that he, as the manager of the real estate for Richfield, was then acting as Richfield's agent; that he was familiar with the fact that there will be possible overbidding in this court and that he was there to protect Richfield's bid if he so desired.

The bids ranged from $23,000 to $29,600 and were made by Mr. Provisor, bidding for himself, Mr. Joyce for respondent Elsam, Mr. Singer for one Jerome Brownstone, and Mr. White for Richfield. The following is quoted from the transcript of proceedings:

"The Court: $24,600. Any further bidding?

"Mr. White: This is the auction right now and the one that bids the highest bid gets it?

"The Court: You have to raise it if you want it.

"Mr. White: The lease provides that I have a right to purchase it at any price that is agreeable.

"The Court: We are auctioning it off in open court and you have to raise it at least one dollar. The one that bids the highest gets it."

Thereafter, between the bids of the others, Mr. White bid $24,650 and $24,750, after which the bidding of the others proceeded to $29,600, and the following colloquy took place.

"Mr. Provisor: If your Honor please, if you confirm the bid I think under the terms that Richfield has the right to only meet the offer.

"The Court: Not in this court. They have to bid it. This is being sold subject to the lease.

"Mr. Provisor: The lease provides that they can meet it.

"Mr. Niemo: You don't care to meet this?

"Mr. White: The lease provides that we have a right to meet it. I am not in a position to—I am not waiving anything.

"Mr. Provisor: I might mention also that there is some question—I think that the position of the Richfield is that they have 20 days from now to meet this bid.

"The Court: I have a petition for confirmation of sale of real property subject to a lease.

"Mr. Provisor: And the lease provides for 20 days.

"The Court: That is not before me. I am selling the property subject to the lease.

* * *

* * * * * *

"The Court: I am not interpreting that lease. I assure you. I am selling it subject to the lease."

In the instant action the conclusions of law and judgment are based upon the following so-called findings of fact:

"V. That it is true that the plaintiff by its actions, having been duly notified of the hearing on the Return of Sale and Petition for Confirmation of Sale on its bid, and having refused to make a bid equal to or in excess of the bid of Elsam Co., defendant herein, waived its rights under Article 17 of the said Lease, insofar as it concerns the sale of said premises by the Executor to Elsam Co., and that it is true that plaintiff had no right, either under said Article 17 of the Lease or otherwise, insofar as the defendants herein are concerned, to make another and further bid in connection with the said sale to Elsam Co. after the Order of the Court was made confirming the said sale to the defendant Elsam Co., a corporation.

* * * * * *

"VII. That it is true that the defendants, and either of them, have and had the right to refuse to accept the attempted bid of the plaintiff made after the Order of the Court confirming the sale to Elsam Co., for the reason that the Order of the Court authorizing the said sale was duly, regularly and legally made and that plaintiff has and had waived its rights claimed under Article 17 of the said Lease in connection with said sale to Elsam Co.

"VIII. That it is true that neither of the defendants are obliged or compelled to convey or transfer the aforesaid property to the plaintiff either by reason of its attempted exercise of its alleged right under Article 17 of said Lease, made after the Order of the Probate Court authorizing the sale to Elsam Co., defendant herein, or otherwise or at all.

"IX. That it is true that the plaintiff is foreclosed by the aforesaid Order of the Probate Court confirming the sale to Elsam Co., from exercising its attempt as relates to its bid subsequent to the said Order, and is estopped by its conduct from so doing.

"X. That it is true that the defendant Security-First National Bank of Los Angeles, as Executor of the Estate of William L. Haskell, deceased, has complied fully with the provisions of the Lease and in accordance with the law has complied with all steps necessary and made a Return of Sale on the bid of plaintiff and has duly received the Court's Order authorizing it to convey the said premises to the defendant Elsam Co., subject to the provisions of the Lease, and by said Order is authorized and ordered to convey the said premises to the defendant Elsam Co., upon receipt of the said purchase price of $29,600.00 in cash."

In support of the waiver so found by the court, respondent in his brief quotes from Wilson v. Brown, 5 Cal.2d 425, 428, 55 P.2d 485, the following: "Lessors contended upon the trial of the case that the lessees had been offered the opportunity to purchase the premises described in the lease, but had in effect rejected the offer by stating that they did not desire to purchase all of the leased premises. Lessors claimed that the lessees stated that they did not desire to buy the dwelling house, but only the premises on which the service station was located. Had this claim been satisfactorily substantiated upon the trial of the case it would have been a complete defense to the suit by lessees for specific performance of their option."

In the instant action, there is no evidence, either disputed or undenied, that any agent of Richfield rejected any offer or stated that it did not desire to purchase all of the leased premises in accordance with the terms of the first refusal option. The only offer received by the Executor which could be accepted by him was that of Elsam—the last bid at the auction in the probate court. Almost concurrently therewith, the probate court indicated that, regardless of whether Richfield met Elsam's offer, the sale would be confirmed to Elsam "subject to the lease". Richfield's agent, Mr. White, then said, "The lease provides that we have a right to meet it (Elsam's bid). I am not in a position to—I am not waiving anything". Richfield's written notice of its election to buy on the same terms offered by Elsam is within the time required by its option agreement.

[4] A waiver is the intentional relinquishment of a known right. Only an existing right may be waived. Craig v. White, 187 Cal. 489, 498, 202 P. 648; Schultz v. Superior Court, 143 Cal.App.2d 781, 782, 300 P.2d 275.

[5, 6] Waiver is ordinarily a question of fact. Lyons v. Brunswick-Balke, etc., Co., 20 Cal.2d 579, 583, 127 P.2d 924, 141 A.L.R. 1173. The defense of waiver raises an issue of fact to be decided after a consideration of all the circumstances of the particular case, and is a question primarily for the trial court. Hefferan v. Freebairn, 34 Cal.2d 715, 722, 214 P.2d 386; Kerr v. Reed, 187 Cal. 409, 414, 202 P. 142. Unless but one inference can be drawn from the evidence, waiver and estoppel are questions for the jury or the trial court. Huttlinger v. Far West Enterprises, 131 Cal.App.2d 808, 811, 281 P.2d 554; Krobitzsch v. Middleton, 72 Cal.App.2d 804, 815, 165 P.2d 729.

Where there is evidence that a right has been waived and there is none to the contrary, judgments depending upon the existence of the right so waived have been reversed on appeal. Bassi v. Bassi, 89 Cal.App.2d 886, 889, 202 P.2d 96; Jones v. Sunset Oil Co., 118 Cal.App.2d 668, 673, 258 P.2d 510. In Chin Ott Wong v. Title Ins. & Trust Co., 89 Cal.App.2d 183, 200 P.2d 541, judgment for plaintiff was reversed by this court for the reason that the implied finding of the trial court that plaintiff had not waived the provision of the contract making time of the essence was contrary to the undenied allegations of the complaint and that there was no evidence to support that finding. Petitions for rehearing by this court and for hearing by the Supreme Court were denied.

[7] There is nothing in the record on the instant appeal to indicate any failure on the part of Richfield to exercise its option according to its express terms. Nor is there any act on the part of Richfield's agent or any statement by him which could have misled the respondents. Title to the leased premises did not pass upon confirmation of the sale by the probate court. In re Estate of Dargie, 33 Cal.App.2d 148, 155, 91 P.2d 126 and cases there cited. As stated by the probate court at the hearing of return of sale and petition for confirmation, Richfield's rights under its first refusal option were not then before it and could not be determined by it.

Richfield, under Article 17 of its lease, had the right to purchase at the price which could be accepted by the executor, and, not having waived that right, may specifically enforce it. Moreno v. Blinn, supra.

The judgment is reversed, and the trial court is directed to amend its findings of fact, conclusions of law and judgment in accordance with the views herein expressed, and to render judgment accordingly.

FOURT, J., and DRAPEAU, J. pro tem., concur.

159 Cal.App.2d 304

Raymond P. BRENNER, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Harry Curtis BEARDSLEY, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 22423.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

April 10, 1958.

Hearing Denied June 4, 1958.

Action for injuries sustained by plaintiff when automobile in which he was riding on foggy morning collided with automobile which defendant had just backed onto road from private driveway. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Fred Miller, J., rendered judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fourt, J., held that it had been prejudicial error, under circumstances disclosed, to instruct on unavoidable accident.

Reversed and remanded for new trial.

Appeal and Error ⇐1064(1)
Automobiles ⇐246(57)

In action for injuries sustained by plaintiff when automobile in which he was riding on foggy morning collided with automobile which defendant had just backed onto road from private driveway, it was prejudicial error, under circumstances disclosed, to instruct on unavoidable accident.

J. Paul Madsen, Whittier, for appellant.

Ball, Hunt & Hart, Long Beach, by Clark Heggeness, Long Beach, for respondent.

FOURT, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment for defendant in an action for damages for personal injuries sustained by Raymond P. Brenner while riding to work on the foggy morning of February 10, 1955, as a passenger in an automobile owned and operated by Robert Dealy, which automobile collided on Bloomfield Road, near Artesia in the County of Los Angeles, at approximately 6:50 a. m., on said date, with an automobile owned and operated by Harry Curtis Beardsley.

Beardsley had driven from his home on Bloomfield Road into a private driveway or feed alley on his dairy property, which was immediately adjacent to his home. Richard Acree, one of his employees, joined him in the automobile, and Beardsley backed his automobile "until the rear end of the car was approximately to the edge of the property line parelleling Bloomfield."

Beardsley testified that after stopping, "We looked both north or—both north and south for approaching vehicles," and when asked how far he could see, he said "I would say approximately seventy-five feet." Having backed out across the shoulder of Bloomfield Road until at least the left rear wheel was on the asphalt-improved portion, Beardsley stated "I just practically started forward in very—going in very—I don't suppose over two to five miles per hour and I was hit in the rear."

Beardsley's automobile was first struck by the Dealy automobile in which Brenner was riding, and then almost simultaneously, the Beardsley car was struck by an automobile driven by Richard Phelps, which also was traveling in a southerly direction on Bloomfield Road behind the Dealy automobile. There were skid marks to the point of impact, and the testimony presented was in conflict as to whether the skid marks were laid down by the Dealy automobile or the Phelps automobile.

Contributory negligence was not in issue, and this appeal is based primarily upon alleged errors in the giving of certain instructions and in the refusal to give certain other instructions.

Specific exception was taken at the trial, and is taken on appeal to the instruction given at defendant's request on the issue of unavoidable accident, which instruction is as follows:

> "In law we recognize what is termed an unavoidable or inevitable accident. These terms do not mean literally that it was not possible for such an accident to be avoided. They simply denote an accident that occurred without having been proximately caused by negligence. Even if such an accident could have been avoided by the exercise of exceptional foresight, skill or caution, still, no one may be held liable for injuries resulting from it.
>
> "Bear in mind, however, that if the defendant failed to exercise ordinary care, and if that failure was a proximate cause of the accident in question, then, whether or not such conduct was the sole cause, the accident was not unavoidable, and the defense of unavoidability may not be maintained by the defendant."

It is further contended that plaintiff's requested instruction, which was refused as otherwise covered, should have been given, said requested instruction being as follows:

> "You are instructed that an unavoidable accident is one that human skill and foresight could not in the exercise of ordinary prudence have provided against, and if you find from the evidence in this case that the collision and consequent injury to the plaintiff could have been avoided by the exercise of ordinary care on the part of defendant Beardsley, then I instruct you that this was not an unavoidable accident."

In the recent case of Butigan v. Yellow Cab Co., 49 Cal.2d 652, 320 P.2d 500, the Supreme Court considered the propriety of giving California Jury Instructions, Civil (4th Rev.Ed., 1956) No. 134, the same instruction given by the trial court in the instant case. The court stated (49 Cal.2d at page 660, 320 P.2d at page 505), "The instruction is not only unnecessary, but it is also confusing. When the jurors are told that 'in law we recognize what is termed an unavoidable or inevitable accident' they may get the impression that unavoidability is an issue to be decided and that, if proved, it constitutes a separate ground of nonliability of the defendant. Thus they may be misled as to the proper manner of determining liability, that is, solely on the basis of negligence and proximate causation. The rules concerning negligence and proximate causation which must be explained to the jury are in themselves complicated and difficult to understand. The further complication resulting from the unnecessary concept of unavoidability or inevitability and its problematic relation to negligence and proximate cause can lead only to misunderstanding."

To the above, the following comment is added (49 Cal.2d on page 661, 320 P.2d on page 506), "In addition, the giving of the instruction obviously overemphasized defendants' case, and, as we have said, the instruction suggested to the jury that they should consider unavoidability as an issue or ground of defense separate and apart from the questions of negligence and proximate causation."

Under the circumstances of this case the instruction on unavoidable accident was clearly prejudicial. Contributory negligence is not in issue; and there is nothing in the evidence tending to indicate that the collision could have resulted from any cause other than the negligence of the driver of the Beardsley car or the driver of the Dealy car in which Brenner was riding.

It is unnecessary under the circumstances of this case to determine the other contentions of appellant.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

WHITE, P. J., and LILLIE, J., concur.

159 Cal.App.2d 196

William P. LAWSON and Mary Alice Lawson, Plaintiffs, Cross-Defendants and Respondents,

v.

TOWN & COUNTRY SHOPS, Inc., et al., Defendant, Cross-Complainant and Appellant.

Civ. 22607.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

April 7, 1958.

Rehearing Denied April 30, 1958.

Action to recover damages for fraud wherein a cross-complaint was filed to recover rent. From a judgment of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Walter H. Odemar, J., the corporate defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fourt, J., held, inter alia, that in action for fraudulent representations made to induce plaintiffs to lease premises in shopping center, whether plaintiff waived fraud by act of remaining on the premises for about 15 months after discovery of fraud and by requesting and receiving certain modifications of plaintiffs' obligations was for jury.

Affirmed.

1. Fraud ⇐3

The general elements of a cause of action for fraudulent misrepresentation are misrepresentation, consisting of false representations, concealment, or nondisclosure, knowledge of falsity or "scienter", intent to induce reliance, justifiable reliance, and resulting damage.

2. Appeal and Error ⇐1001(3)

Where question raised on appeal was sufficiency of the evidence to support verdict, appellant was required to demonstrate that there was no competent evidence to support the verdict, and the mere recital of evidence favorable to appellant was not sufficient.

3. Fraud ⇐64(4, 5)

In action for fraudulent representations to induce plaintiffs to lease certain premises in shopping center from defendant, relating to number of other stores and business establishments, dates of occupancy of other store buildings, and names of purported tenants who had already supposedly leased space, evidence was not insufficient as matter of law to establish materiality of representations made and reliance upon them.

4. Evidence ⇐589
Witnesses ⇐92

The testimony of an interested party is competent and admissible, and, if believed by trial court, is sufficient to determine issue.

5. Estoppel ⇐53

There can be no waiver in absence of intentional relinquishment of a known right, and requests for modifications of contractual provisions and even the acceptance thereof merely are factors to be considered in determining whether requisite intent was express, or whether it can be implied or inferred from surrounding circumstances.

6. Fraud ⇐64(1)

In action for fraudulent representations made to induce plaintiffs to lease certain premises in shopping center, whether plaintiff waived fraud by remaining on the premises for about 15 months after discovery of fraud and by requesting and receiving certain modifications of plaintiffs' obligations was for jury.

7. Pleading ⇐246(3)

Where at close of trial a motion was heard in chambers outside presence of jury as result of which complaint in action for fraud was amended to increase the item of damages for operating losses to include damages for loss of personal services and unpaid balance of rent under leases, permitting such amendment was not error.

8. Trial ⇐133(6)

Where in each instance where objection was made to improper conduct of counsel jury was admonished to disregard any comments which had been made, and there were many indications that case was bitterly contested, and that counsel on each side failed on occasion to observe the highest standards of professional conduct, record failed to disclose misconduct of counsel of such magnitude as to constitute prejudicial error.

9. Fraud ⇐59(3)

The statute providing that defrauded person is entitled to recover difference between actual value of that with which defrauded person parted, and actual value of that which he received, was enacted to provide a uniform rule for all fraud cases, and provides the exclusive measure of damages. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 3343.

10. Fraud ⇐59(1), 61

The statutory provisions that defrauded person may also recover any "additional damages" arising from particular transaction and that nothing in statute shall be deemed to deny to such person "any legal or equitable remedies" to which he may be entitled, do not indicate that any other measure of damages may be applied, since right to recover "additional damages" does not refer to the measure of damages, but, rather, to such matters as expenses or other consequential injury resulting from the fraud, but such statute does not preclude the allowance of exemplary damages. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 3343.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Additional Damages".

11. Fraud ⇐61

In action for fraudulent representations made to induce plaintiffs to lease certain premises in shopping center from defendant, relating principally as to number of other stores and business establishments, dates of occupancy of other store buildings and names of purported tenants who had already supposedly leased space, punitive damages were allowable. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 1709, 3343.

12. Appeal and Error ⇐1004(1)

The reviewing court's power to declare an award of damages excessive exists only when from facts the amount appears at first blush to suggest passion or prejudice on part of jury, and there is no distinction when review is of an award of exemplary rather than actual damages. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 1709, 3343.

13. Appeal and Error ⇐1004(3)

After award of damages has been approved by trial court the reviewing court will hesitate to declare amount excessive unless upon consideration of entire record including the evidence it must be said that award was the result of passion or prejudice. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 1709, 3343.

14. Corporations ⇐423

False representations made by corporate lessor's rental agent to prospective lessees of certain premises in shopping center, relating principally to number of other stores and business establishments, dates of occupancy of other store buildings, and names of purported tenants who had already supposedly leased space, was sufficient to subject corporate lessor to liability for damages including punitive damages. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 1709, 3343.

15. Fraud ⇐59(1)

In action for fraudulent representations made by corporate lessor's rental agent to induce plaintiff to lease certain premises in shopping center, in view of award of damages on lessor's cross-complaint for rent due and to become due, such expenditures were properly included in determination of amount of consequential damages suffered by reason of fraud. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 1709, 3343.

16. Fraud ⇐60

Loss of time and effort and loss of salary are items of damage proximately caused by making fraudulent misrepresentations as inducement to execute a lease, and are recoverable. West's Ann.Civ. Code, §§ 1709, 3343.

Gordon M. Emanuel, Beverly Hills, Bernard S. Selber, Abe Mutchnik, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Patricia Lane, Carmel, Patrick J. O'Reilly, for respondents.

FOURT, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment in an action for damages for fraud and deceit by Town & Country Shops, Inc., in favor of William P. Lawson and Mary Alice Lawson against all three of the original defendants: Jere Strizek, president of appellant corporation, Lew Levy, rental agent for appellant, and appellant.

There was a cross-complaint for rent due on a lease and for money due on promissory notes.

Damages assessed on the cross-complaint in the amount of $6,141.24 were deducted from the sum of $20,316.24 assessed as general damages on the complaint; and judgment was ordered in the net amount of $14,175 as general damages, plus $5,000 as punitive damages.

Subsequently a new trial was granted as to Jere Stizek; and the appeal as to Lew Levy was dismissed pursuant to Rule 17(a) of Rules on Appeal.

The fraud and deceit action is based upon certain representations made by Lew Levy to induce Mr. and Mrs. Lawson to lease certain premises in the "Town & Country Shopping Center" in Los Angeles from appellant, said representations relating principally to the number of other stores and business establishments, the dates of occupancy of the other store buildings, and the names of purported tenants who had already supposedly leased space. Two separate leases were executed on June 9, 1953, each of which was for a five-year term commencing August 1, 1953 and ending July 31, 1958.

The prayer of the original complaint included the following items of damage: $7,500 for permanent improvements, $11,000 for operating losses, $7,300 for loss of profits, $10,000 for exemplary damages, and $169.28 for electricity wrongfully appropriated.

Outside the presence of the prospective jurors, the item of damages consisting of profits on investment was waived; and a supplemental cross-complaint was permitted to be filed, adding as an item of damage the amount of $3,000 as the reasonable value of fixtures, to rental due in the amount of $5,900.92 and $1,000 due on certain promissory notes.

At the close of the trial a motion was heard in chambers outside the presence of the jury, as the result of which the complaint was amended to increase the item of $11,000 damages for operating losses to $23,500 to include damages for loss of personal services and the unpaid balance of rent under the leases. The motion to amend was then granted in the presence and hearing of the jury prior to the closing arguments, the trial judge stating as follows:

"Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, as the Court has advised you a number of times in this case, all matters of law are for the Court to determine, and that is really what we have been discussing. Matters of fact are for you.

"The Plaintiff has made a motion to amend, which the Court will permit, and will permit the Plaintiff to amend the complaint in certain respects. In permitting the amendment to the complaint, the Court only rules upon the law and does not, by ruling upon the law, express or intend to express, any opinion as to what facts have or have not been established, or the evidence; or does not make, nor intend to make, any expression of an opinion as to what the Court feels is—has been proven or has not been proven. It is still a question of law and not a question of fact. The question of fact is up to the jury, and I express no opinion now, and have endeavored not to during the trial, and will not before the trial is over, express any opinion which I may have regarding the establishment or the failure to establish any fact whatsoever in the trial of the case.

"Now with that in mind, the Court has permitted, as a matter of law, the Plaintiffs to amend the complaint, Paragraph 12 specifically thereof, as follows:

"'The Plaintiffs allege and all of the Defendants deny and also affirmatively allege that the effect that any of it may or may not have had, has been waived by the waiver of the Plaintiffs—is alleged and denied and so forth—that by reason of the fraudulent representations of the Defendants and each of them as is set out—'

"and I am not going to read the whole complaint to you—

"'that as a direct and proximate result of the fraud and deception practiced on the Plaintiffs by the Defendants and each of them, that the Plaintiffs expended time and effort in developing said property and the operation of the business therein for a period of approximately seventeen months, during which period Plaintiffs suffered an operating loss,' and they have alleged $11,500.00, and the complaint is now amended to read '$23,500.00, including the reasonable value of Plaintiffs' services for seventeen months and the Plaintiffs ask for judgment in the amount of $23,500.00.'

"Now again, please, by granting that amendment, I express no opinion on what has or has not been established, or in connection with it, whatsoever.

"Now, Mr. Binkley, you may open the argument."

Appellants contend that as a matter of law, respondents have failed to prove all of the requisite elements of a cause of action in fraud and deceit; that as a matter of law there was a waiver of, and estoppel to rely upon, said fraud by the act of remaining on the premises for about fifteen months after discovery of the fraud and by requesting and receiving certain modifications of their obligations; that prejudicial error resulted in permitting amendment to the complaint, in the giving of certain instructions, and from certain comments of counsel; and that the measure of damages was incorrectly applied.

[1, 2] In the recent case of Zinn v. Ex-Cell-O Corp., 148 Cal.App.2d 56, at page 68, 306 P.2d 1017, at page 1025, it is stated, "The general elements of a cause of action for fraudulent misrepresentation are (1) misrepresentation (false representation, concealment, or nondisclosure); (2) knowledge of falsity (scienter); (3) intent to induce reliance; (4) justifiable reliance; and (5) resulting damage." Appellant appears not to question that certain false representations were made, and directs his argument to the sufficiency of the evidence to establish the materiality of the representations made and reliance upon them. "Since the question raised is the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict the appellants must practically demonstrate that there is no competent evidence to support the verdict. Their mere recital of evidence favorable to them is not sufficient. Nichols v. Mitchell, 32 Cal.2d 598, 600, 197 P.2d 550." (Emphasis added.) Zainudin v. Meizel, 119 Cal.App.2d 265, 270–271, 259 P.2d 460, 464.

[3, 4] We cannot say as a matter of law that the evidence was insufficient. The testimony of an interested party is competent and admissible, and, if believed by the trial court, is sufficient to determine the issue. See Zinn v. Ex-Cell-O Corp., supra, 148 Cal.App.2d 56, 69, 306 P.2d 1017.

Considerable confusion formerly existed in the California law as to whether a defrauded party was required to make an election of remedies; when and how the election had to be made, if an election were required; and what acts or conduct constituted a waiver of existing rights.

[5, 6] Certainly if the rule enunciated in Schmidt v. Mesmer, 116 Cal. 267, 48 P. 54, which was followed in Schied v. Bodinson Mfg. Co., 79 Cal.App.2d 134, 179 P.2d 380, were determined to constitute a correct statement of the current California law as appellant contends, the trial court as a matter of law could have decided that there had been a waiver of the fraud. A careful review of some of the more recent cases, however, indicates that there can be no waiver in the absence of an intentional relinquishment of a known right, and that requests for modifications of contractual provisions and even the acceptance thereof merely are factors to be considered in determining whether the requisite intent was express, or whether it can be implied or inferred from the surrounding circumstances.

In French v. Freeman, 191 Cal. 579, at page 590, 217 P. 515, at page 519, it was stated, "The question of waiver or nonwaiver was one of fact for the trial court to pass upon, and the acts or conduct which defendant claims constituted said waiver were the evidence to be considered in determining the ultimate fact of waiver or nonwaiver * * *. We cannot say, as a matter of law, that plaintiff intended to and did waive the fraud herein complained of."

The problem was considered in Bagdasarian v. Gragnon, 31 Cal.2d 744, at page 751, 192 P.2d 935, at page 939, and the comment was made, "There appears to be no decision in California or elsewhere which squarely holds on its facts that the mere making of an unfulfilled request alone constitutes a waiver as a matter of law." The Supreme Court, speaking through Mr. Chief Justice Gibson, expressly disapproved of the language in Schmidt v. Mesmer, supra, to the extent that it indicated that the mere making of a request in itself would constitute a waiver; and then added, "There is serious doubt whether even a granted request of a favor, such as an extension of time, could be held to constitute a waiver in the absence of estoppel or the making of a new agreement supported by consideration, * * *."

In Friedberg v. Weissbuch, 135 Cal.App. 2d 750, on pages 755 and 756, 287 P.2d 785, on page 789, the specific problem referred to in Bagdasarian v. Gragnon, supra, was considered, and the court stated, "Appellants argue that the defendants, by entering into subsequent agreements with the plaintiffs, waived fraud. We are not in accord with this contention. The subsequent agreement referred to was merely a reduction in the monthly payments required by the contract and its other provisions were not thereby affected. * * * The question of whether the delay of defendants in the instant case was such as to render it inequitable to grant relief from fraud was a question for the trial court and is left to its sound discretion."

There had been a delay of fifteen months before a notice of recission was served in Williams v. Marshall, 37 Cal.2d 445, 235 P.2d 372. The Supreme Court reviewed the evidence, including the attempts through negotiations to avoid litigation and the fact that there were no replies to several letters, and then stated (37 Cal.2d at page 456, 235 P.2d at page 379), "'Where a party protests promptly on discovering that he has been defrauded in making a contract, and enters into negotiations for a peaceful settlement which fail, a complaint filed within a reasonable time after such failure is not barred by laches.' Reiniger v. Hassell, 216 Cal. 209, 210–11, 13 P.2d 737, 738."

[7] The circumstances under which the motion to amend was allowed have been set forth hereinabove in detail. The ruling made in Sanguinetti v. Moore Dry Dock Co., 36 Cal.2d 812, 228 P.2d 557, upon which appellant relies, has been carefully considered, and we are of the opinion that it is not controlling in the instant case where comparative negligence was not in issue, and where the motion to amend was made in chambers and not in the presence of the jury.

[8] Appellant admits that in each instance where objection was made to improper conduct of counsel, the jury was admonished to disregard any comments which had been made. This claim of error was reviewed by the trial court in ruling on the motion for a new trial, which was denied. In reading the voluminous transcript in this case there are many indications that it was bitterly contested, and counsel on each side failed on occasion to observe the highest standards of professional conduct. Under the circumstances, we find no misconduct of counsel of such magnitude as to constitute prejudicial error. However, it may be noted that counsel presently appearing on this appeal are not the same counsel who represented the parties in the trial court.

Appellant claims that the damages awarded were excessive for a number of reasons, and the instructions to which exception is taken relate to the measure of damages to be applied. Appellant cites a number of cases as illustrative of the so-called "Minnesota rule" to the effect that the lease contract should be regarded as severable in respect to time, and that damages should be awarded only up to the time of the discovery of the fraud. Appellant urges that the same result would be achieved by a proper application of the mitigation of damage rule.

In the alternative, appellant argues that by an application of the theory of legal relations expounded by the late Professor Wesley N. Hohfeld, respondents must be deemed to have affirmed the leases, in which event the jury should have been instructed that all rent paid and owing and the value of the improvements removed in derogation of the leases should be deducted as items of damage for operating losses.

As another alternative, appellant contends that the "difference in value" rule set forth in Civil Code, section 3343 as the measure of damages in an action for fraud and deceit inducing the purchase, sale or exchange of property has now been extended in Collins v. Kobold, 146 Cal.App. 2d 868, 304 P.2d 182, to actions for fraudulent inducement to execute a lease.

Appellant then asserts that in the application of the measure of damages deemed to be proper, it becomes apparent that the damages actually awarded were so excessive as to indicate clear passion and prejudice; and that, as a matter of law, appellant cannot be liable for punitive damages.

Civil Code section 3343 upon which appellant relies, provides as follows:

> "One defrauded in the purchase, sale or exchange of property is entitled to recover the difference between the actual value of that with which the defrauded person parted and the actual value of that which he received, together with any additional damage arising from the particular transaction.
>
> "Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to deny to any person having a cause of action for fraud or deceit any legal or equitable remedies to which such person may be entitled." (Emphasis added.)

Civil Code, section 1709 provides: "One who willfully deceives another with intent to induce him to alter his position to his injury or risk, is liable for any damage which he thereby suffers." (Emphasis added.)

[9, 10] Extensive references have been made to the case of Bagdasarian v. Gragnon, supra, and the problem of measure of damages in a fraud case is discussed therein (31 Cal.2d at pages 762–763, 192 P.2d at page 946) as follows:

"In view of the broad, general language of section 3343 of the Civil Code and the uncertainty in the law that existed both here and elsewhere prior to the adoption of that section, it is reasonable to conclude that the statute was enacted to provide a uniform rule for all fraud cases, and we can see no reason for refusing to follow the decisions which have applied it as the exclusive measure of damages. Moreover, to hold that an additional or alternative measure may be applied in some cases would create further confusion with respect to when the alternative measure would be appropriate in place of the statutory measure and whether the matter would be one for the judge, as a matter of law, or for the jury.

"The provisions of section 3343 to the effect that the defrauded person may also recover any 'additional damage' arising from the particular transaction and that nothing in the statute shall be deemed to deny to such a person 'any legal or equitable remedies' to which he may be entitled, do not indicate that any other measure of damages may be applied. The right to recover additional damages does not refer to the measure of damages, but, rather, to such matters as expenses or other consequential injury resulting from the fraud. (Citing authorities.) * * * The construction which has been placed on section 3343 does not preclude the allowance of exemplary damages. (Citing authorities.)"

[11–13] It is apparent that punitive damages could properly be allowed in this type of case; and "The reviewing court's power to declare an award of damages excessive exists only when from the facts the amount appears at first blush to suggest passion or prejudice on the part of the jury. There is no distinction when the review is of an award of exemplary rather than actual damages. (Citing authorities.) These and other cases indicate that it is the province of the jury, and the trial court on the motion for a new trial, to say whether punitive damages should be awarded. The presumptions are in favor of the correctness of the verdict and judgment. After an award has been approved by the trial court the reviewing court will hesitate to declare the amount excessive unless upon consideration of the entire record including the evidence it must be said that the award was the result of passion or prejudice. (Citing cases.)" Finney v. Lockhart, 35 Cal.2d 161, 164, 217 P.2d 19, 21.

[14] The false representations of Lew Levy, rental agent for appellant, were sufficient to subject appellant to liability (Kruse v. Miller, 143 Cal.App.2d 656, 660, 300 P.2d 855; Rest., Agency, § 401, p. 914); and the loss which resulted could be held to include punitive damages. We do not regard such a holding to be inconsistent with the action of the trial court in granting a new trial as to Jere Strizek in his individual capacity. Apparently the trial court in exercising its discretion did not regard the showing as to participation in or ratification by or adoption of the acts of Lew Levy by Jere Strizek in his individual capacity to have been sufficiently clear to approve the award of punitive damage as to him, and did regard the showing to have been sufficient to approve the award of punitive damages as to appellant.

[15] No case has been cited by counsel allowing rent due or to become due as an item of damage. In view of the award of damages on the cross-complaint for this item, however, we are of the opinion that it would be unreasonable not to allow these expenditures to be included in the determination of the amount of consequential damage suffered by reason of the fraud.

[16] Loss of time and effort or loss of salary have been held to be items of damage proximately caused by making fraudulent misrepresentations as inducement to execute a lease, and have been held to be recoverable. Sutter v. General Petroleum Corp., 28 Cal.2d 525, 534, 170 P.2d 898, 167 A.L.R. 271; Rowland v. Columbia Mining, etc., Co., 2 Cal.App.2d 410, 421, 38 P.2d 418.

We do not regard the award to be the result of passion or prejudice.

The judgment is affirmed.

WHITE, P. J., and DRAPEAU, J. pro tem., concur.

159 Cal.App.2d 353

PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

John Edward LINDSEY, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 1341.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

April 14, 1958.

Defendant was convicted of child stealing. The Superior Court of San Diego County, James C. Toothaker, J., rendered judgment, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Barnard, P. J., held that defendant's keeping 13 year old girl with him under claim of marriage over a period of many weeks was sufficient evidence of his intent with respect to detaining child from her mother to support conviction for child stealing.

Affirmed.

Kidnapping ⇐5

Defendant's keeping 13 year old girl with him under claim of marriage over a period of many weeks was sufficient evidence of his intent with respect to detaining child from her mother to support conviction for child stealing. West's Ann. Pen.Code, § 278.

John C. Thompson, San Diego, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., John A. Vanderlans, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

The defendant was charged with the crime of child stealing in violation of Section 278 of the Penal Code. A jury found him guilty as charged. He was sentenced to state prison and he has appealed from the judgment.

The appellant lived next door to a Mrs. Weslasky at Santee from January, 1956, until he left his wife and children and went away in the latter part of April, 1956. When Mrs. Weslasky went to work on the morning of May 9, 1956, her daughter Rosemary, aged thirteen years, was in bed. When she returned, about 4:00 p. m., she found a note in Rosemary's writing reading in part "I have went for good. Don't look for me. I am in good care." The records of Western Union in San Diego disclosed that a telegram was filed by the appellant in Barstow at 7:16 a. m. on May 9 ordering payment of $10 to Rosemary, and that it was paid at 9:30 that morning. Rosemary had not been found up to the time the case went to trial on June 26, 1957. It appears, however, that at the time the appellant's request for probation was heard she had been located through his cooperation.

A witness who lived four miles west of Barstow testified that the appellant and Rosemary drove up to a trailer which was near her home on May 14; that the trailer had been there before; that this was a "fairly isolated place" about four miles from town; that she saw the appellant and Rosemary working in the yard around the trailer during the next two days; that Rosemary came over to her home on the morning of May 16 and then had on an engagement ring and a wedding ring; that her daughter stayed with Rosemary in the trailer on the night of May 16 and that she did not see Rosemary after May 17. The daughter of this witness testified that she saw Rosemary and the appellant working in the yard of the trailer on May 16; that when she stayed with her on the night of the 16th, Rosemary had on a wedding ring and an engagement ring and she showed her the box they had come in; that this was the appellant's trailer; and that it had been there two or three weeks before that.

Another witness testified that she saw the appellant and Rosemary at the trailer on a couple of days; that Rosemary stayed there about three days; and that a car came in one night and she wasn't there after that. Another witness testified that he saw Rosemary in front of the trailer three different times; that on two occasions she and the appellant were together, doing a little yard work; that about 10:00 o'clock on the night of May 17 he saw an automobile drive up to the trailer, where it remained about twenty minutes and then departed; that this car looked like the car he had seen the appellant drive; that when the car drove off there were no lights on in the trailer; and that Rosemary was not at the trailer after that.

An automobile dealer in San Bernardino testified that he sold the appellant a new car on June 8 or June 9; that Rosemary was with the appellant at that time; that he asked the appellant who Rosemary was and the appellant answered that she was his wife and that he had divorced his other wife. An automobile mechanic at the same agency testified that he saw Rosemary with the appellant two or three or four weeks later when the appellant brought the new car in to have the clock fixed; that he then noticed that Rosemary had a wedding ring on; and that Rosemary left with the appellant.

A special agent for the F.B.I. testified that on July 12 the appellant told him that the last time he had seen Rosemary was on May 7 in Santee; that he had 'phoned Rosemary from Barstow telling her that he was sending her $10 by Western Union; that he sent the money on the same day; that he left San Diego on May 9 and drove to Las Vegas, where he remained four days and then returned to Escondido; that Rosemary called him from Boulder City on May 20; and that he tried to call her but was unable to locate her.

A deputy sheriff testified that in a conversation with the appellant on July 31 the appellant told him that he had not seen Rosemary since May 8; that Rosemary had called him in Escondido on May 20 and he had tried to locate her; and that he had not given Rosemary any money. He also testified that in another conversation about a week later the appellant told him that he had not talked with Rosemary on May 20; that he had had a telephone conversation with her on May 9 and had sent her $10, and that he had previously denied sending her any money because he did not want to become involved in the case. A criminal investigator for the Marine Corps testified that he talked with appellant on May 21, 1956, and that the appellant told him that he knew nothing as to Rosemary's whereabouts.

Appellant's sole contention is that the evidence was not sufficient to sustain the verdict because there was no evidence to show that he had any intention of detaining the child. It is argued that it is not enough, under the statute, to show an intent to take or entice the child away, but that such intent must be accompanied by an intent to detain such child from its parent; that while this presents a question of fact to be proven like any other fact from the acts and conduct of the parties, there was no evidence here to show any intent on his part to hinder, delay or detain Rosemary in any way; that if Rosemary willingly stayed with the appellant, she was not detained; and that there was an entire absence of any evidence to show that she was delayed, hindered or detained by him.

It is contended that this case is similar to the case of People v. Black, 147 Cal. 426, 81 P. 1099, and that the reasoning of that case is applicable here. We see little similarity between the facts in this case and those in the Black case. In that case the defendant persuaded two girls, who were determined to leave home and go to San Francisco, to go to a summer resort about eleven miles from their home. This resort was conducted by a respectable family, and it was understood that the girls should leave there whenever they wished to do so. That same night he told an officer, who asked him what he had done with the girls, where he had taken them. There was no evidence that he made any effort to detain the girls, and no evidence of any improper relations between him and either of them. The evidence indicated that he was not prompted by any motive other than a wish to keep the girls from going to San Francisco at that time. The girls could have left the summer resort at any time on a bus which passed there daily, and the defendant was preparing to take the girls home at their request when he was arrested.

In the instant case the appellant had a telephone conversation with Rosemary and wired her a $10 money order on the day of her departure. Shortly thereafter he and Rosemary were seen together over a period of several days on the premises occupied by his house trailer near Barstow. This was an isolated place about two hundred miles from Rosemary's home. During that period Rosemary was wearing a wedding ring. About three weeks later Rosemary and appellant were together in San Bernardino, at which time the appellant said that Rosemary was his wife. Several weeks later Rosemary was again with the appellant in San Bernardino and was still wearing a wedding ring. The appellant told conflicting stories to the officers about what he had done in this connection and in May and twice in July, when questioned by the officers, he denied that he had seen Rosemary after May 9 or that he knew where she was. The appellant did not take the stand at the trial, and the undisputed evidence is not questioned except as to its legal effect.

The evidence with the inferences which could reasonably be drawn therefrom sufficiently supports the verdict and judgment. People v. Simmons, 12 Cal.App.2d 329, 55 P.2d 297; People v. Smith, 17 Cal.App.2d 468, 62 P.2d 436; People v. Moore, 67 Cal. App.2d 789, 155 P.2d 403. There was ample evidence of concealment and, aside from other considerations, keeping this girl with him under a claim of marriage over a period of many weeks is sufficient evidence of his intent with respect to detaining her from her mother.

Judgment affirmed.

GRIFFIN and MUSSELL, JJ., concur.

The PEOPLE of the State of California, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Nellard Robert BERVE, Defendant and Appellant.*

Cr. 5987.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

April 3, 1958.

Rehearing Denied April 22, 1958.

Hearing Granted May 27, 1958.

Defendant was convicted in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Joseph M. Maltby, J., of second degree murder, and he appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that confession of murder by abortion, obtained by beating and threats administered by victim's husband, was involuntary and inadmissible though police officers did not directly participate in brutality or threats.

Reversed.

1. Criminal Law ⇐742(2)

Where controlling facts were not in dispute, whether witness was an accomplice was a question of law for trial court and on appeal.

2. Criminal Law ⇐507(1)

Sister of abortion victim who knew of victim's intention to submit to abortion but

* Opinion vacated 332 P.2d 97.

was reluctant to encourage it, and accompanied victim but did not assist in, advise or encourage the abortion, was not an "accomplice" in murder by abortion so as to require corroboration of her testimony. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1111.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Accomplice".

3. Criminal Law ⇐522(3)

Confession of murder by abortion, obtained by beating and threats administered by victim's husband, was involuntary and inadmissible though police officers did not directly participate in brutality or threats.

4. Criminal Law ⇐517(1)

The rule barring use of involuntary confessions is not designed merely as regulation of conduct of police officers; absence of volition condemns enforced confessions, the source of coercion being of no moment.

5. Constitutional Law ⇐266

The use of confessions induced by force, fear, promise of immunity or reward of any nature offends due process clauses, regardless of source of coercion. U.S.C.A. Const. Amend. 5; West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 13.

6. Criminal Law ⇐1169(12)

Where it clearly appears that in obtaining a conviction, use was made of confession wrested from accused by force, fear, promise of immunity or hope of reward, it is of no consequence that facts confessed may be proved by other evidence or that guilt of accused may be satisfactorily established by the entire evidence.

7. Criminal Law ⇐1165(1)

The violation of constitutional rights of accused is of itself a "miscarriage of justice" and conviction cannot be allowed to stand though guilt may be established by entire evidence.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Miscarriage of Justice".

8. Witnesses ⇐271(2)

Refusal to require police officer to produce a statement made to him by another witness, to be used in cross-examination of officer, was not error since statement would be available in cross-examination of other witness if request had been made therefor.

Robert H. Aarons, Pasadena, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Albert Bianchi, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

Nellard Robert Berve was charged by information with the murder of Mary Margaret Pettit. In a court trial defendant was found guilty of murder of the second degree and he was sentenced to state prison. Berve appeals from the judgment.

The deceased, a married woman, lived with her husband and their three minor children in Lakewood. Her older sister, Mrs. Wanda Roper, also lived in Lakewood. Wanda was the chief witness for the People. The following is the substance of her testimony. Prior to October 4, 1956, the deceased was in good health. On October 4th, Mrs. Pettit asked Wanda to take her to a certain motel and barroom in Lakewood. She told her sister that her purpose in going was to have an abortion and that defendant "was going to do it." Early in the evening Wanda drove Mrs. Pettit to the Bellflower Motel on Lakewood Boulevard. They arrived at about 7 or 7:30 p. m.; Wanda registered for a motel room in her own name; Mrs. Pettit paid the room rent, which was $5. Wanda then accompanied her sister to the Boulevard Stop, a cocktail lounge located on Lakewood Boulevard not far from the motel. The sisters sat down next to defendant and conversed with him for a few minutes. Mrs. Pettit went to the ladies' room. While her sister was absent, Wanda told defendant that "she sure hated to see Mary go through that." Berve replied that "he did too, but under the circumstances it was for the best." When Mrs. Pettit returned the three parties left the Boulevard Stop and went back to the motel in defendant's automobile.

Upon alighting from the car, defendant took a paper sack from the middle of the seat. Wanda did not see what was inside the bag. She accompanied defendant and her sister to the motel room, talked to Mrs. Pettit for a few minutes, and then proceeded to the Idle Hour, a cocktail lounge located across the street from the motel. On cross-examination, she was asked whether she had had "an understanding to stand by to help in any form that night." The witness denied having had such an understanding. Upon being asked whether she was going to stand by to help, she answered: "I would have, yes." Wanda remained in the Idle Hour for about an hour or an hour and a half. Then defendant entered the establishment, joined her at the bar and ordered a drink. Wanda asked him how her sister was and defendant said that she was o.k. She inquired whether "everything went o.k." and defendant said: "No, she was bleeding, and * * * it usually did not happen that way." They left the Idle Hour and walked to defendant's automobile. Mrs. Pettit was seated in the car. Defendant drove the sisters back to Wanda's car which was parked in front of the Boulevard Stop. Mrs. Pettit asked Berve to take it easy over the bumps and complained of bleeding and of pains in her stomach. Defendant told her that "the first time might not work, he might have to do it two or three more times, [and] for her to let him know." Wanda then took her sister home.

The People also called Jackson Hunter, who was a bartender employed at the Idle Hour. Hunter testified that he was on duty on the evening of October 4th. He saw Wanda Roper enter the establishment around 8 or 8:30 p. m. She sat at the bar and remained there for an hour or more. Defendant came in, ordered a drink, had a short conversation with Mrs. Roper, whereupon the two of them left. About a week after suffering the miscarriage, Mrs. Pettit was removed to the Los Angeles County Hospital. She was suffering from tetanus poisoning and despite the efforts of physicians to save her life she died from the effects of it. There was undisputed medical testimony that the infection was due to injury received in the performance of an abortion. The medical testimony was in conflict as to whether the injury could have been self-induced.

There was no evidence which connected defendant with the offense other than the testimony of Wanda and evidence of a full confession, which we shall discuss later. This evidence was received over the objection of defendant that his confession was not given voluntarily.

The first question is whether Wanda was an accomplice of defendant. It is necessary to decide this question. The testimony of Wanda was not corroborated except by evidence of defendant's confession. As we shall presently see, evidence of the confession was improperly admitted. If Wanda was an accomplice the evidence was insufficient to support the finding of guilt. If, however, she was not an accomplice, her testimony, considered with the uncontradicted evidence that Mrs. Pettit died of tetanus poisoning induced by an abortion, was sufficient to establish defendant's guilt. The trial judge declined to rule whether she was an accomplice and in his concluding remarks said: "And assuming, and she may be, I am not deciding it, because I don't think it is necessary for the decision, that Wanda Roper was and is an accomplice. Her testimony was corroborated by the defendant's own statement or his confession, by whichever term you want to designate them."

[1] Since the controlling facts were not in dispute, the question for the trial court whether Wanda was an accomplice was one of law and it is necessarily the same on appeal. People v. McDermott, 75 Cal.App. 718, 719–720, 243 P. 485; People v. Frahm, 107 Cal.App. 253, 264, 290 P. 678; People v. King, 30 Cal.App.2d 185, 197, 85 P.2d 928; People v. Lamb, 134 Cal.App.2d 582, 586, 285 P.2d 941.

[2] It has never been held in our jurisdiction that one who accompanies a woman to a residence or office knowing that she is to submit to an abortion thereby becomes an accomplice of the person who performs the abortion. The decisions, as we shall see, hold that such innocent assistance, without more, does not amount to criminal activity.

In People v. Balkwell, 143 Cal. 259, 76 P. 1017, 1019, a Miss Byrne accompanied deceased to the home of the defendant where an abortion was performed; she endeavored to persuade the deceased not to have it done; she did nothing to help the defendant in the perpetration of the act. The court said: "It is further urged that the conviction was had upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, Miss Byrne, but there is no word of evidence to show that Miss Byrne was such an accomplice." And the court quoted from Underhill on Criminal Evidence (§ 346): "'Nor is a woman an accomplice, who, being an intimate friend and confidant of the deceased, knew of her pregnancy and her desire for relief, and accompanied her to the defendant's house, when she did not aid or advise the defendant, and was not present when the crime was committed.'"

In People v. Brewer, 19 Cal.App. 742, 127 P. 808, the husband of the deceased accompanied her to the residence of the defendant "with knowledge of her purpose, but without aiding or abetting or encouraging her therein, and who did not assist the defendant therein * * *." He was not present when the operation was performed and rendered no assistance. The court said: "Except that he was the husband of the pregnant woman, his conduct was quite similar to that of the witness in People v. Balkwell, 143 Cal. 259, 76 P. 1017, who was held not to have been an accomplice." The holding in the case was that the court could not say as a matter of law that the husband was an accomplice.

The facts in People v. Seiffert, 81 Cal. App. 195, 253 P. 189, were substantially the same as in Brewer. The sister of the deceased accompanied her to the defendant's office knowing that an abortion was to be performed. She testified that she advised against it but that she was willing to help her sister in any way she could. All that was held in this case was that the sister was not, as a matter of law, an accomplice of defendant. The court cited People v. Balkwell, supra.

There was a similar holding in People v. Davis, 43 Cal.2d 661, 673, 276 P.2d 801, 807, where the court said: "* * * and the mere accompaniment of a victim of abortion to defendant's residence, although realizing at that time the victim's purpose in going there is to obtain an abortion, does not necessarily make the companion an accomplice." Citing People v. Balkwell, supra, 143 Cal. 259, 261, 76 P. 1017; People v. Brewer, supra, 19 Cal.App. 742, 746, 127 P. 808; People v. Seiffert, supra, 81 Cal.App. 195, 198, 253 P. 189. These three cases were cited by the court in People v. Wilson, 25 Cal.2d 341, at page 346, 153 P.2d 720, at page 723, in support of the statement: "The mere fact that he (husband) accompanied his wife to defendant's office does not make him an accomplice." In the foregoing cases and in People v. Malone, 82 Cal.App.2d 54, at page 68, 185 P.2d 870, the question whether witnesses for the People were accomplices was submitted to the jury upon exceedingly thin evidence that they had any connection whatever with the commission of the offenses. However, the contention made in each case on appeal was that the court should have instructed that each of the several witnesses was an accomplice as a matter of law. These contentions were rejected and properly so since under the holding in People Balkwell, supra, the facts would not have justified a conclusion that they were accomplices. However, the holdings in those cases that the witnesses were not, as a matter of law, accomplices, was the equivalent of holding that they were not accomplices, since, in each case, upon the facts, the question was one of law.

We hold that Wanda Roper was not an accomplice. Section 1111 of the Penal Code says in part: "An accomplice is hereby defined as one who is liable to prosecution for the identical offense charged against the defendant on trial in the cause in which the testimony of the accomplice is given." Wanda's testimony shows that she was reluctant to see her sister submit to an abortion, and there was no evidence whatever that she rendered any assistance in it, or did or said anything to advise or encourage it. There was nothing even suggestive of criminality upon her part in anything she did upon the importunity of her sister. It seems no less than absurd to assert that she was subject to prosecution. It follows that from the proof of death by criminal means and defendant's connection therewith, as established by the testimony of Wanda, there was sufficient evidence to justify the finding of guilt.

As previously mentioned, the trial court was of the opinion that even if Wanda was an accomplice her testimony was adequately corroborated by the confession of the defendant.

[3] It is contended that the evidence of the confession was inadmissible for the reason that the evidence conclusively established that the confession was obtained by the use of force and fear. This point is well taken.

There was no dispute as to the facts with respect to the circumstances and the manner in which defendant's confession was obtained. The trial court was not in doubt as to the facts. This clearly appears from the statements of the court of its reasons for overruling defendant's objection to evidence of the confession. The court's ruling, as we shall see, was based upon an erroneous concept of the law as applicable to the established facts.

Wanda testified that on the afternoon of the day defendant gave his confession she went to the sheriff's station where she discussed the affair with Lieutenant Peterson. She returned to her home where she met Peterson and a reporter to whom she dictated a statement. Then, with Peterson, another officer, and the reporter, she went to defendant's place of business where they remained outside. From there they went to Wanda's home. Peterson and two other officers were there when Wanda arrived. In the meantime Harry Pettit had brought defendant to Wanda's home and he, with his brother Sonny and a man named Jim Johnson, were present with defendant. Defendant was seated on a couch, bleeding from the forehead. A window glass had been broken and a leg had been broken from a coffee table. A rug was mussed up. The officers ordered defendant to get up and they left with him. Harry Pettit was holding a rifle. Defendant testified that in the early evening of the same day Harry Pettit, the husband of the deceased, encountered defendant at the latter's place of business at closing time; at the point of a rifle he compelled defendant to enter a car and drive to Wanda's home while he, Pettit, sat in the rear seat holding a rifle on defendant and occasionally touching his head with it. Defendant testified that at Wanda's home he was brutally beaten for the purpose of forcing him to make a confession to the authorities. He was beaten with fists and knocked through a plate glass window, suffering a cut, which bled freely. A leg was broken from a coffee table and thrown at him; he was called unrepeatable names. Harry Pettit sat in front of him with the rifle trained on him and occasionally struck him with the butt of the rifle. He was threatened with death if he failed to make a confession. He was invited to run away so Pettit could shoot him; he was put in great fear for his life and was willing to admit anything to escape from his torture. This ordeal lasted about two hours until the officers came which was shortly before Wanda's arrival.

Defendant testified to all this mistreatment, and also testified that a car had been parked in front of his parents' home and that the occupant had been watching his parents. In the Roper home threats were issued against defendant's parents if they tried to assist him; he was "chilled with fright." Officer Peterson testified that when he arrived at the Roper home he observed defendant's condition and that he was bleeding, bruised, in a disheveled state and perspiring. He saw Harry Pettit seated on a chair in front of defendant with a gun in his hands. He knew that defendant had been brought to the house at the point of a gun. He had seen defendant about two hours earlier and knew that his injuries had been inflicted in the meantime. The People did not call either of the Pettits or Johnson as a witness. Not only was defendant's testimony concerning his mistreatment without contradiction, but it was substantially corroborated by the testimony of Officer Peterson. The officer who had come to the Roper home prepared to obtain a confession from the defendant soon learned that he had been subdued to the point where his resistance to demands for a confession had been broken. This law enforcement officer, ignoring the obvious fact that defendant had been severely beaten, and assaulted with a deadly weapon, was concerned only with the fact that he was apparently in a condition of mind to confess his guilt. Defendant was arrested; his hands were handcuffed behind his back and he was taken to the sheriff's station where he was immediately questioned and his statement admitting guilt was reported and transcribed.

Officer Peterson testified that no threats were uttered and no inducements offered at the station and, as far as he could observe, defendant's confession was free and voluntary. That defendant was brutally beaten and put in fear of his life was the only reasonable conclusion consistent with the evidence. The court was convinced of those facts but altogether disregarded the evidence that the confession had been extorted from defendant by means of force and fear. With respect to the use of the rifle the court said: "I don't know what difference it makes. Suppose somebody brought him down there at the point of a gun. Unless that can be traced to these officers, how would that make a confession involuntary?" The court also said: "It is also clear to the Court that the confession of the defendant was voluntary. We can even go farther than that, and I say it is the opinion of the Court that he was extremely happy to see these officers upon their arrival, and the defendant thought for some reason that his life was in danger and that these sheriffs saved his life. In any event, there is no evidence before this Court that any force was used, or threats or promises made to the defendant. He was not promised any immunity, or threats made to him by any law-enforcement officers." The court said further: "Is there anything further before I rule on this issue of whether this confession is admissible. It is now submitted to me. * * * The objection is overruled. Do not argue on this question, there is no use."

We have yet to hear from those whose duty it is to administer the law and protect the rights of the citizens the first word of criticism of the brutal methods that were employed to extort a confession from the defendant. The officers had full knowledge of it and offered the puerile excuse that they were not the ones who beat the defendant into submission. The court gave tacit approval to the use of force and threats by Pettit and his accessories as a means of obtaining a confession. The Attorney General agrees with the court's reasoning and justifies its ruling upon the ground that the officers did not participate in defendant's mistreatment. He says "Here it is undisputed that 'those in authority' did nothing which could have caused the confession to be involuntary." It is not difficult to foresee the evil consequences that would flow from toleration of this attempted evasion of fundamental principles of law.

[4] The quoted statements of the court disclose an erroneous concept of the principles under which confessions illegally obtained are excluded from the evidence. To the trial court the fact that the mind of a prisoner was so saturated with fear or hope that he felt forced to make a confession is immaterial unless it was brought about by the acts of law enforcement officers. By the court's own statement it appeared that defendant was put in fear of his life if he refused to confess. Although it appears that the court was convinced that defendant had agreed to confess because he was in fear of his life, the court considered nothing except the absurd statement of Officer

Peterson that as far as he could see defendant's confession was given freely and voluntarily. The officer knew full well that between the time he saw defendant earlier in the evening and when they met in Wanda's home defendant had been "worked over" for the very purpose of extorting a confession. We are convinced that the trial court was not so naive as to believe that the confession was given voluntarily. The court was merely mistaken in its view that the rule of law which bars the use of involuntary confessions is designed merely as a regulation of the conduct of peace officers, and that a confession may be obtained by any one else by any means whatever and used as evidence without violating any right of a defendant. The error in this concept of the law is self-evident. It is the absence of volition which condemns enforced confessions. The source of the coercion is of no moment.

[5] The principles which forbid the use of confessions induced by force, fear, promise of immunity or reward of any nature are of a part with the right of an accused to a fair trial, in accordance with the laws of the land. The use of such evidence offends the due process clauses of the Federal and State Constitutions, U.S. Const. Amend. 14; Const. art. 1, § 13. Ashcraft v. State of Tennessee, 322 U.S. 143, 64 S.Ct. 921, 88 L.Ed. 1192, 1193; see People v. Speaks, 156 Cal.App.2d 25, 319 P.2d 709, 716, and cases collected note 4. "Use of involuntary verbal confessions in State criminal trials is constitutionally obnoxious not only because of their unreliability. They are inadmissible under the Due Process Clause even though statements contained in them may be independently established as true. Coerced confessions offend the community's sense of fair play and decency. * * * Nothing would be more calculated to discredit law and thereby to brutalize the temper of a society." Rochin v. People of California, 342 U.S. 165, 173–174, 72 S.Ct. 205, 210, 96 L.Ed. 183, 190–191.

There was not the slightest reason for believing that defendant's mind was free from the fear of death which induced him to promise to confess. Although the officers did not make threats they took advantage of the threats which they knew had been made by the others, and the results were the same as they would have been if the officers, themselves, had used similar methods. We may well quote from People v. Jones, 24 Cal.2d 601, 609, 150 P.2d 801, 805, a statement that fits the present case. The court was speaking of the repetition of a confession made under threats and it was said: "If a defendant is subjected to threats or violence and within a few days thereafter he makes a confession, it may not be introduced in evidence unless it clearly appears that such improper treatment did not cause him to confess. In a situation such as here presented, there is a presumption that the influence of the prior improper treatment continues to operate on the mind of the defendant and that the subsequent confession is the result of the same influence which rendered the prior confession inadmissible, and the burden is upon the prosecution to clearly establish the contrary. (Citations.)"

[6, 7] When it clearly appears that in obtaining a conviction use was made of a confession wrested from the accused by force, fear, the promise of immunity or the hope of reward, the inquiry need go no farther. It is of no consequence that the facts confessed may be proved by other evidence or that the guilt of the accused may be satisfactorily established by the entire evidence. The Constitution affords protection to the guilty as well as the innocent. The use of such a confession is a violation of due process. The conviction cannot be allowed to stand. The violation of the rights of the accused is, of itself, a miscarriage of justice.

[8] Appellant complains of the court's refusal to require Officer Peterson to produce a statement made to him by Wanda prior to defendant's arrest. It was sought to use the statement in the cross-examination of the officer. There was no error. The statement would properly have been made available to appellant in the cross-examination of Wanda, but no such request was made.

All the purported appeals from nonappealable orders listed in the notice of appeal are dismissed. The judgment is reversed.

VALLÉE, J., and PATROSSO, J., pro tem., concur.

159 Cal.App.2d 126

John CALISE, as Secretary-Business Agent and principal officer of and for and on behalf of the Seine and Line Fishermen's Union of San Pedro, AFL–CIO; Thomas Ivey; as President of and for and on behalf of Cannery Workers Union of the Pacific; and Steve Edney, Petitioners,

v.

The SUPERIOR COURT of the State of California, IN AND FOR COUNTY of LOS ANGELES, Respondent,

and

Franco-Italian Packing Company, a corporation, Real Party in Interest.

Civ. 22934.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

April 3, 1958.

Proceeding on petition by labor union seeking a writ of prohibition to restrain Superior Court from hearing an order to show cause why a preliminary injunction should not issue enjoining union from certain activities, and to restrain court from enforcing a temporary restraining order issued by it. The District Court of Appeal, Kincaid, J. pro tem., held that activities and practices of labor unions in inducing or encouraging employees to engage in a strike or concerted refusal in course of their employment to handle certain produce with object of forcing or requiring employer to cease doing business with owner of a certain vessel and with owners of nonunion vessels, constituted unfair labor practices prohibited by National Labor Relations Act, and exclusive jurisdiction of action arising out of such activities was vested in National Labor Relations Board in absence of showing that activities were other than peaceful and orderly.

Writ of prohibition ordered issued.

1. Labor Relations ⇐395, 510

Activities and practices of labor unions in inducing or encouraging employees to engage in strike or concerted refusal in course of their employment to handle certain produce with object of forcing or requiring employer to cease doing business with owner of certain vessel and with owners of nonunion vessels, constituted unfair labor practices prohibited by National Labor Relations Act, and exclusive jurisdiction of action arising out of such activities was vested in National Labor Relations Board, in absence of showing that activities were other than peaceful and orderly. West's Ann.Labor Code, §§ 1131–1134, 1115–1120; National Labor Relations Act, §§ 1 et seq., 8(b) (4) (A) as amended by Labor Management Relations Act of 1947, 29 U.S.C.A. §§ 141 et seq., 158(b) (4) (A).

2. Labor Relations ⇐510

Where labor activities or practices affecting interstate commerce are either forbidden or protected by Labor Management Relations Act, federal law affords exclusive jurisdiction, depriving state court of jurisdiction to grant equitable relief by way of injunction, unless activities complained of are other than peaceful and orderly. National Labor Relations Act, § 1 et seq., as amended by Labor Management Relations Act of 1947, 29 U.S.C.A. § 141 et seq.

3. Labor Relations ⇐922

Even though unfair labor practices may be prohibited by National Labor Relations Act, state court has jurisdiction to enjoin violent, nonpeaceful conduct. National Labor Relations Act, § 1 et seq., as amended by Labor Relations Act of 1947, 29 U.S.C.A. § 141 et seq.

4. Prohibition ⇐10(2)

Prohibition will lie to restrain a lower court from acting further in excess of its jurisdiction where that court has determined it has jurisdiction and has proceeded to exercise it by issuing a temporary restraining order and an order to show cause.

Gilbert, Nissen & Irvin, Los Angeles, for petitioners.

Leonard Di Miceli, San Pedro, for real party in interest.

KINCAID, Justice pro tem.

[1] The petitioners are two labor unions and through their officers are seeking a writ of prohibition to restrain the respondent court from hearing an order to show cause why a preliminary injunction should not issue enjoining petitioners from causing or inducing the cannery-worker employees of the real party in interest to refuse to unload and process certain deliveries of fish, from boycotting or picketing the plant and business of the real party in interest, and from doing various other acts as detailed in said order to show cause. The petition likewise seeks to restrain the respondent court from enforcing a temporary restraining order issued by it, and from taking any further proceedings in the action instituted by the real party in interest against petitioners and other parties.

An answer to the petition has been filed by the real party in interest, Franco-Italian Packing Company, a corporation, hereinafter referred to as "Packing Company."

The Packing Company in October 1957 filed a complaint against petitioners herein as defendants in the superior court seeking a temporary restraining order, preliminary and permanent injunctions and damages. A copy of this complaint is attached to and made a part of the petition as Exhibit A thereof.

It was stipulated that at all times in question the Packing Company was and is operating a business engaged in interstate commerce.

Since the filing of the above-described complaint the respondent court has issued a temporary restraining order enjoining and restraining the defendants in the action and petitioners herein from engaging in picketing, boycotting and other concerted activities. The respondent court further made and issued an order to show cause directed toward defendants and petitioners to show cause why a preliminary injunction should not be issued restraining and enjoining said parties from doing any of the acts complained of in the complaint.

The facts in this proceeding as reflected by the complaint are substantially as follows:

1. Packing Company is engaged in the business of packing, canning and processing fish and fish products at its plant on Terminal Island in the Los Angeles Harbor area, and of selling said fish and fish products throughout the United States.

2. All of the cannery workers employed by Packing Company are members of the defendant "Cannery Workers Union of the Pacific, AFL-CIO" (hereinafter for convenience called "Cannery Workers Union"); that said union represents itself to be the collective bargaining representative of Packing Company's cannery-worker employees, and has been recognized and accepted as such by Packing Company.

3. Defendant "Seine & Line Fishermen's Union of San Pedro, AFL-CIO" (hereinafter for convenience called "AFL-CIO Fishermen's Union") and defendant "Fishermen's Union Local 33 ILWU" (hereinafter for convenience called "ILWU Fishermen's Union") are unions which represent themselves to be collective bargaining representatives of certain groups of employees (fishermen-crewmen) on commercial fishing boats.

4. That on or about September 24, 1957, the owner of a commercial fishing boat known as the "Sandy Boy" entered into an agreement with the ILWU Fishermen's Union as the supposed collective bargaining representative of the employees of said vessel to pay certain agreed sums per ton to said employees for their catches of fish.

That also on or about said September 24, 1957, Packing Company, believing in good faith that the vessel "Sandy Boy" was in good standing and manned by crew members under the jurisdiction of the ILWU Fishermen's Union, entered into an agreement with the owner of the "Sandy Boy" to buy said vessel's catches of fish at certain agreed prices; and that, in conjunction therewith, Packing Company executed a master bargaining agreement with said ILWU Fishermen's Union whereby Packing Company in substance met all the demands, terms and conditions then being demanded by commercial fish boat owners and by the crew members of said boats through their respective bargaining agents.

5. That a jurisdictional dispute, in alleged violation of section 1115 et seq., of the Labor Code of the State of California, has arisen and exists between said AFL-CIO Fishermen's Union and said ILWU Fishermen's Union, over which of said unions is the collective bargaining representative of the fishermen-crewmen employees of the "Sandy Boy" and other commercial fishing vessels.

6. That after Packing Company had entered into the aforementioned agreements with the owner of the "Sandy Boy" and with the ILWU Fishermen's Union, the AFL–CIO Fishermen's Union notified Packing Company that said vessel and its owner had been classified as unfair; that Packing Company would be prevented from accepting deliveries of fish from said vessel; that said vessel would be picketed upon arrival at Packing Company's docks by the members of said AFL–CIO Fishermen's Union; and that the latter had notified the Cannery Workers Union that said vessel was unfair, and that the members of said last-named union who were employees of Packing Company should not unload or process and pack fish sought to be delivered from said vessel to Packing Company.

That almost concurrently therewith, the Cannery Workers Union also notified Packing Company that the employees of Packing Company who were members of said Cannery Workers Union, would not unload or process and pack fish sought to be delivered by the "Sandy Boy" to Packing Company.

That, on the other hand, Packing Company was notified and threatened by the ILWU Fishermen's Union that, unless Packing Company took deliveries from the "Sandy Boy," said ILWU Fishermen's Union would picket and boycott Packing Company's business and would picket any and all other commercial fishing vessels, union or nonunion, seeking to deliver fish to Packing Company.

7. That, in addition to the foregoing, it is in substance alleged in the complaint that the defendants have engaged in, or threatened to engage in, conduct, as follows:

(a) As to the Cannery Workers Union:

That the Cannery Workers Union has threatened and continues to threaten that it will cause all cannery workers of Packing Company to walk out of Packing Company's plant, to call a work stoppage and to boycott Packing Company in its dealings with nonunion vessels, if Packing Company abides by its agreements with the owner of the "Sandy Boy" and with the ILWU Fishermen's Union. That, on one specific occasion when the "Sandy Boy" sought to deliver its catch of fish, Packing Company's cannery-worker employees because of fear, coercion and intimidation brought against them by said Cannery Workers Union refused to unload fish from the "Sandy Boy" and threatened that, if Packing Company should unload said fish, they would walk out of the plant; and that, as a consequence, Packing Company was unable to take delivery to its irreparable injury and damage. That also upon each occasion when the ILWU Fishermen's Union as hereinafter noted has established a picket line at Packing Company's plant to prevent Packing Company from taking delivery of fish from nonunion small scoop fishing vessels, Cannery Workers Union has refused and threatens to continue to refuse to unload or work any fish delivered from said non-union fishing boats; and that, as a consequence, Packing Company has been unable to take deliveries from said nonunion vessels to its irreparable injury and damage.

(b) As to the AFL–CIO Fishermen's Union:

That the AFL–CIO Fishermen's Union has threatened and continues to threaten Packing Company that its members will continue to maintain picket lines at Packing Company's plant in positions to interrupt effectively the delivery of fish to Packing Company and the processing and shipment thereof. There are no direct, specific allegations as to the conduct of said union in maintaining picket lines or otherwise; but the allegations of the complaint may be fairly construed as alleging that the AFL–CIO Fishermen's Union has maintained a picket line at Packing Company's plant, and that it has endeavored to cause or induce Packing Company's cannery workers not to unload or process fish from the "Sandy Boy."

(c) As to the ILWU Fishermen's Union:

That said ILWU Fishermen's Union has from time to time established, and threatens to continue to establish, a picket line along and in front of Packing Company's wharf in order to prevent Packing Company from taking deliveries of fish from nonunion small scoop fishing boats; that, by such action, said nonunion fishing boats have been coerced and intimidated into proceeding to wharfs of other canners; and that said union threatens to continue such picketing and to boycott Packing Company in its dealings with vessels whose crews are not members of the ILWU Fishermen's Union, until and unless Packing Company accepts deliveries of fish from the "Sandy Boy."

In addition, the complaint negatively alleges that there is no labor dispute, disagreement or controversy between Packing Company and said Cannery Workers Union (or the members thereof, who are Packing Company's employees) concerning the negotiation, fixing, maintaining, changing or the seeking of arranging terms or conditions of employment, or concerning wages or hours of employment; and that likewise there is no labor dispute, disagreement or controversy concerning such matters as between Packing Company and the AFL–CIO Fishermen's Union, nor as between Packing Company and the ILWU Fishermen's Union. Further the complaint alleges that Packing Company is not a party to any of the labor disputes which do exist, namely: (a) the aforementioned jurisdictional dispute between the AFL–CIO Fishermen's Union and the ILWU Fishermen's Union; (b) a labor dispute between the officers of the AFL–CIO Fishermen's Union and certain dissident members thereof; and (c) a labor dispute between the AFL–CIO Fishermen's Union and the owners of commercial fishing vessels. The complaint also contains allegations to the effect that all of the defendants have unlawfully conspired to interrupt and cripple the business activities of Packing Company; and allegations to the effect that the defendants are engaged in activities violative of the provisions of sections 1131–1134 of the Labor Code prohibiting secondary boycotts and refusal to handle so-called hot cargo.

The prayer for injunctive relief is likewise detailed but the substance thereof is that the defendants be enjoined and restrained from engaging in any individual or concerted activity, and from in any way threatening, intimidating, coercing, harming or harassing the cannery-worker employees of Packing Company, to cause or induce said employees to refuse to unload or process fish from the "Sandy Boy" or from nonunion scoop fishing boats, or to call or to engage in a walkout, work stoppage or secondary boycott against Packing Company; and from boycotting Packing Company's business or picketing its plant and wharf.

The principal question presented is whether the activities and practices on the part of the said labor unions as to which Packing Company complains are not those forbidden or protected by the National Labor Relations Act, as amended by the Labor Management Relations Act, with exclusive jurisdiction to act in the matter therefore being vested in the National Labor Relations Board. Our conclusion is that this question must be answered in the affirmative.

[2] It is now established that in labor controversies affecting enterprises engaged in interstate commerce, where labor activities or practices are either forbidden or protected by the Labor Management Relations Act (29 U.S.C.A. § 141 et seq.), there is a conflict between the injunctive relief that may be available under the act and that available under the equity powers of a state court. Excepting where the activities complained of are other than peaceful and orderly, the federal law affords the exclusive remedy, thus depriving the state court of jurisdiction to grant equitable relief by way of injunction. G. C. Breidert Co. v. Sheet Metal, etc., Ass'n, 139 Cal.App.2d 633, 294 P.2d 93; Weber v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc., 348 U.S. 468, 75 S.Ct. 480, 99 L.Ed. 546; Capital Service v. N.L.R.B., 347 U.S. 501, 74 S.Ct. 699, 98 L.Ed. 887; Garner v. Teamsters, Chauffeurs & Helpers Local Union, 346 U.S. 485, 74 S.Ct. 161, 98 L.Ed. 228; Garmon v. San Diego Bldg. Trades Council, 49 Cal.2d 595, 320 P.2d 473, 476; Seven Up Bottling Co. v. Grocery Drivers Union, 49 Cal.2d 625, 320 P.2d 492, 493.

Thus in the Breidert case, supra, it was held that a state court has no jurisdiction, notwithstanding the provisions of the California Jurisdictional Strike Act (Lab.Code, §§ 1115–1120), to grant injunctive relief against picketing, boycotting and other practices of certain labor unions designed to force an employer to recognize said unions as the collective bargaining representatives of the employer's employees instead of another labor organization, where the employer was engaged in interstate commerce, where the activities complained of where peaceful, and where the National Labor Relations Board was clothed with jurisdiction to consider and determine in the first instance any charges of unfair labor practices on the part of said labor unions.

In the Weber case, supra, it was held that the provisions of the National Labor Relations Act, as amended, preclude a state court from enjoining, as a violation of a state's restraint of trade statute, a labor union's picketing of an employer's plant for the purpose of compelling the employer to insert into a contemplated collective labor contract a clause obligating the employer to employ, for repair or replacement of machinery, only contractors having collective labor agreements with said union.

In the Garner case, supra, it was in substance held that a state court could not enjoin, as a violation of a state labor relations act, a labor union from picketing for the purpose of inducing the employees of a company to join said union; and that the employer could have and should have presented his grievance against said labor union to the National Labor Relations Board, even though it appeared that no controversy, labor dispute or strike was in progress and that the employer had not at any time objected to it employees joining said union.

The alleged activities and practices on the part of the defendant labor unions as to which Packing Company complains are clearly denounced and proscribed as unfair labor practices by the provisions of the National Labor Relations Act as amended.

Section 158 of Title 29 U.S.C.A. (§ 8 of the Labor Management Relations Act) provides in part, as follows: "(b) It shall be an unfair labor practice for a labor organization or its agent * * * (4) to engage in, or to induce or encourage the employees of any employer to engage in, a strike or a concerted refusal in the course of their employment to use, manufacture, process, transport, or otherwise handle or work on any goods, articles, materials, or commodities or to perform any services, where an object thereof is: (A) forcing or requiring * * * any employer or other person to cease using, selling, handling, transporting, or otherwise dealing in the products of any other producer, processor, or manufacturer, or to cease doing business with any other person. * * *"

Other portions of the said Labor Management Relations Act have been cited by petitioners as supporting their contention that the acts complained of in the complaint constitute (if true) unfair labor practices under the act, as amended. However, it seems unnecessary to discuss them since the essence of the complaint is that the petitioners are, to paraphrase the above-quoted provisions of said act, inducing or encouraging the employees of Packing Company to engage in a strike or concerted refusal in the course of their employment to handle or work fish, with the object of forcing or requiring the Packing Company to cease dealing and doing business with the owner of the "Sandy Boy" and with the owners of nonunion vessels.

Since the defendant labor organizations, under the terms of the complaint, are engaged in unfair labor practices prohibited by the National Labor Relations Act as amended, it is of no consequence as to whether any labor dispute exists between Packing Company and the defendants or its cannery-worker employees. Garner v. Teamsters, Chauffeurs & Helpers Local Union, supra, 346 U.S. 485, 74 S.Ct. 161, 98 L.Ed. 228.

[3] While it is settled that state courts still have jurisdiction to enjoin violent, nonpeaceful conduct (G. C. Breidert Co. v. Sheet Metal, etc., Ass'n, supra, 139 Cal. App.2d 633, 294 P.2d 93; United Automobile, Aircraft and Agricultural Implement Workers v. Wisconsin Employment Relations Board, 351 U.S. 266, 76 S.Ct. 794, 100 L.Ed. 1162), the allegations of the complaint herein fail to show that the actions of petitioners have been other than peaceful and orderly. There are no averments of activities which threaten (in the words of the Breidert case, 139 Cal.App.2d at page 638, 294 P.2d at page 96) "a probable breach of the State's peace" or call for "extraordinary police measures," such as mass picketing, threats of bodily injury and property damage to employees, obstruction of streets and public roads, blocking of entrance to and egress from a factory, picketing of employees' homes, or recurrent unannounced work stoppages.

Insofar as the conduct of petitioners is involved, the most that can be said for the complaint is that it contains allegations from which it can probably be concluded that the petitioning AFL–CIO Fishermen's Union has engaged in some peaceful picketing of Packing Company's plant and that the cannery workers have refused to unload fish from the "Sandy Boy," "because of fear, coercion and intimidation brought against them by the Cannery Workers Union." There is an absence of any allegations as to how, in what manner, or by what actions said cannery workers were supposedly so coerced and intimidated. Accordingly and since the complaint fails to show that the actions of petitioners have not been peaceful and orderly, assumption of jurisdiction and granting of injunctive relief cannot be justified upon the basis that a state court has jurisdiction to enjoin violent, nonpeaceful conduct.

[4] Finally prohibition will lie to restrain a lower court from acting further in excess of its jurisdiction where that court has determined it has jurisdiction and has proceeded to exercise it by issuing a temporary restraining order and an order to show cause. Holt v. Superior Court, 100 Cal.App.2d 403, 404, 223 P.2d 881; Rescue Army v. Municipal Court, 28 Cal.2d 460, 464, 465, 171 P.2d 8. The respondent court has assumed jurisdiction, has issued a temporary restraining order enjoining the defendants in the action and the petitioners herein from engaging in the labor activities stated, and an order to show cause as to why a preliminary injunction should not issue as to them.

In the light of these acts and for the reasons heretofore stated a peremptory writ of prohibition is ordered issued herein.

ASHBURN, Acting P. J., and HERNDON, J., concur.

159 Cal.App.2d 180

Ellena SHACHUNAZARIAN, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Bertha I. WIDMER, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 17578.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

April 7, 1958.

Rehearing Denied May 7, 1958.

Action for injuries to pedestrian struck by automobile. The Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, Thomas M. Foley, J., rendered judgment on verdict for defendant, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Draper, J., held that evidence was insufficient to show whether accident occurred in business district, and hence court erred in reading to jury section of San Francisco Traffic Code governing pedestrian's duties in metropolitan traffic district or business district.

Reversed and remanded.

1. Municipal Corporations ⇐703(1)

Ordinance prohibiting pedestrian in metropolitan traffic district or business district from crossing, except in crosswalk, is properly within field of municipal regulations. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 459.1.

2. Automobiles ⇐246(58)

In action for injuries to pedestrian struck by automobile, evidence was insufficient to show whether accident occurred in business district, and hence court erred in reading to jury section of San Francisco Traffic Code governing pedestrian's duties in metropolitan traffic district or business district. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, §§ 83, 89, 90.1, 459.1.

3. Evidence ⇐32

Court cannot take judicial notice of city ordinances.

4. Municipal Corporations ⇐646

In general usage, a city street is a "roadway" from curb to curb. West's Ann. Vehicle Code, §§ 83, 89, 90.1, 459.1.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Roadway".

5. Highways ⇐18

"Roadway" is the strip of land over which a road is constructed; hence, a road; specifically, that part of road over which the traffic travels. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, §§ 83, 89, 90.1, 459.1.

6. Automobiles ⇐217(1)

One traversing all or a portion of paved area between curbs of a city street is "crossing the roadway" within requirement that he use crosswalk, though he is walking from curb to safety zone. West's Ann. Vehicle Code, §§ 83, 560, 562.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Crossing the Roadway".

7. Municipal Corporations ⇐646

A parking strip, comprising the portion of a paved city street adjacent to the curb, is part of the "roadway". West's Ann. Vehicle Code, §§ 83, 89, 90.1, 459.1.

Hoberg & Finger, Albert Polonsky, San Francisco, for appellant.

Pelton, Gunther, Durney & Gudmundson, San Francisco, for respondent.

DRAPER, Justice.

Plaintiff stood on the south curb of Geary Street in San Francisco, awaiting an eastbound streetcar. She was opposite the western end of the safety zone marked for streetcar passengers, and an appreciable distance west of the Parker Avenue crosswalk. Defendant had parked her car parallel to the curb on the same side of Geary Street and sat in the car awaiting a friend. Upon the friend's arrival, defendant started the car and backed up, striking plaintiff, who had left the curb to walk to the safety zone. Plaintiff brought this action for damages for personal injuries thus sustained, and appeals from judgment upon jury verdict for defendant.

[1–3] Appellant urges that the court erred in reading to the jury Section 77 of the San Francisco Traffic Code:

> "Unless otherwise directed by a police officer, no pedestrian in the metropolitan traffic district or in any business district shall cross a roadway other than in a crosswalk."

and in instructing the jury that violation of this ordinance raises a rebuttable presumption of negligence. The ordinance is properly within the field of municipal regulation. Veh.Code, § 459.1. Upon the record here, however, the instruction was error. The ordinance, by its terms, applies only in the metropolitan traffic district or a business district. The portions of the ordinance defining such districts were not before the court. We cannot take judicial notice of city ordinances. Simpson v. City of Los Angeles, 40 Cal.2d 271, 253 P.2d 464. Thus we cannot determine whether the location here in question was within such a district. Respondent suggests that the definitions of the Vehicle Code (§§ 89, 90.1) apply. If they are incorporated in the ordinance, the evidence is insufficient to show whether the area in question constitutes a business district as there defined.

This error requires reversal. However, to aid the trial court upon retrial, we discuss a further question raised by this appeal.

Appellant contends that the ordinance can have no application because appellant, in walking from the curb to the streetcar safety zone, was not "crossing a roadway." Her view apparently is that the ordinance does not prohibit the crossing of part of a roadway, at least where the part so crossed lies between the curb and a safety zone.

[4, 5] In general usage, a city street is a "roadway" from curb to curb. Roadway is defined as "the strip of land over which a road is constructed; hence, a road; specif., that part of a road over which the traffic travels." Webster's New International Dictionary, 2d Ed. The Vehicle Code defines "roadway" as "that portion of a highway improved, designed or ordinarily used for vehicular travel." Veh.Code, § 83. As to city streets, either definition would include the paved area from curb to curb.

Appellant, however, cites authorities which she claims hold that crossing part of a street, particularly that portion between curb and safety zone, is not the crossing of a roadway. But these decisions do not support the rule urged by appellant. In Croxall v. Broadway Dept. Store, Inc., 127 Cal.App. 153, 15 P.2d 546, 547, a city ordinance contained language requiring pedestrians to cross at a crosswalk or "by the shortest route to the opposite curb." Relying in part upon the quoted language, the court held that the "strict letter" of the ordinance prohibited only curb to curb crossing by pedestrians. Comparable language does not appear in the ordinance before us.

Brockway v. Western Union Tel. Co., 29 Cal.App.2d 244, 84 P.2d 524, 526, holds only that a pedestrian not in a crosswalk is not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. Vehicle Code section 562 requires a pedestrian crossing a roadway other than at a crosswalk to yield the right of way to vehicles, but specifically provides that it shall not relieve a driver from the duty to exercise due care. Defendant sought reversal on the ground that the deceased pedestrian was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. But on the facts recited in the opinion, it is clear that there was some evidence to support an implied finding that decedent was not negligent or that his contributory negligence, if any, was not a proximate cause of the collision. Clearly these questions were for jury determination. The court's statement that decedent "was merely crossing that part of the roadway between a safety zone and a curb" was not necessary to the decision, and the case does not purport to hold that the space between the curb and the safety zone is not a "roadway" within the meaning of the code section.

Newton v. Thomas, 137 Cal.App.2d 748, 291 P.2d 503 and Kuist v. Curran, 116 Cal. App.2d 404, 253 P.2d 681, are not in point.

Both turn upon the fact question whether the pedestrian was standing still or was in fact crossing the roadway. In one case plaintiffs' decedent was conversing with the occupant of a parked car, and in the other plaintiff was a newspaper vendor selling in the middle of the street. In neither case was a safety zone involved, and in each the question was whether the pedestrian was standing still, in which case he would not be "crossing" a roadway, or was in fact in motion.

[6] We find no merit in appellant's argument for limited definition of the phrase "cross a roadway." The definition she seeks would require proof of the intent of the pedestrian despite the total absence of any indication in the statute of such a requirement. It must be remembered that the term is used not only in the ordinance here in question, but in Vehicle Code sections 560 and 562. One of these sections is designed to protect the pedestrian and one the driver. We doubt that appellant would argue that a pedestrian in a crosswalk is, to secure the benefit of section 560, required to show that he intended to cross the entire width of the street. The proposed construction could lead to infinite complications in cases where a plaintiff pedestrian is entitled to the presumption of due care.

We find nothing in the ordinance, the Vehicle Code sections, or the cases to require such a result. We therefore hold that one traversing all or a portion of the paved area between the curbs of a city street is "crossing the roadway" within the meaning of the ordinance and the code sections, even though he is walking from curb to safety zone.

[7] Appellant also argues that a "parking strip" is not a part of the roadway. But certainly the portion of a paved city street adjacent to the curb is no less "improved, designed or ordinarily used" for vehicular traffic (Veh.Code, § 83) than is the center portion. Its use for parking is dependent upon movement of vehicular traffic in and out of the parking zones. When not occupied by parked cars, it is available and is commonly used for through traffic.

It is unnecessary to discuss the other points raised by appellant.

Judgment reversed and case remanded for new trial.

KAUFMAN, P. J., and DOOLING, J., concur.

159 Cal.App.2d 117

Louis GROOBMAN, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

James W. KIRK and Edward A. Kirk, as Co-Administrators of the Estate of Nellie L. Kirk, Deceased (substituted as parties defendant in place and stead of Nellie L. Kirk, Deceased), Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 22911.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

April 3, 1958.

Purchaser brought action against vendor for specific performance of contract for sale of realty. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Frank C. Charvat, J., entered judgment adverse to the purchaser, and the purchaser appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Herndon, J., held that where contract for sale of realty provided for closing date in 90 days and required vendor to furnish policy of title insurance showing title free of encumbrances, except taxes, easements, and rights of way, and to deposit deed in escrow within closing date, and required purchaser to pay balance of purchase price in escrow within closing date, and, when purchaser discovered that realty was subject to lease, he made demands on vendor prior to closing date to clear title, but vendor was unable to do so, covenants of parties were mutual and concurrent, and deposit of balance of purchase price by purchaser was not a condition precedent to deposit of satisfactory title policy and deed by vendor, and purchaser had right to condition his deposit of balance of purchase price on delivery of deed by vendor free from encumbrance of lease.

Judgment reversed.

1. Vendor and Purchaser ⇐76, 168

Where contract for sale of realty provided for closing date in 90 days and required vendor to furnish policy of title insurance showing title free of encumbrances, except taxes, easements, and rights of way, and to deposit deed in escrow within closing date, and required purchaser to pay balance of purchase price in escrow within closing date, and, when purchaser discovered that realty was subject to lease, he made demands on vendor prior to closing date to clear title, but vendor was unable to do so, covenants of parties were mutual and concurrent, and purchaser had right to condition deposit of balance of purchase price on delivery of deed by vendor free from encumbrance of lease. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 1437, 1496, 1498.

2. Specific Performance ⇐10(1)

Where vendor of realty could not comply with requirement of contract for sale of realty by conveyance of title free from encumbrance of lease, purchaser had right to seek specific performance of the contract, to demand conveyance by vendor of such title as vendor possessed, and to seek damages for defect in title because of lease. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 3392, 3394.

Bewley, Knoop & Lassleben, Whittier, and Burnett Kee Maxwell, Jr., Paramount, for appellant.

Shafer & Seymour and Samuel V. Cornell, Compton, for respondents.

HERNDON, Justice.

Plaintiff and appellant, hereafter referred to as "buyer," appeals from an adverse judgment in an action for specific performance of a contract of sale of real property. The defendants and respondents are the administrators of the estate of Nellie L. Kirk who died after the case was submitted, but before judgment. Mrs. Kirk was the seller of the property and will hereafter be referred to as the "seller."

In the court below the cause was submitted for decision at the conclusion of plaintiff's case, defendant seller offering no evidence. Hence there is no dispute as to the essential facts. The parties seem to agree that the determinative question of law is substantially as follows: whether buyer's obligation to pay into escrow the agreed balance of the purchase price within the specified 90-day period was an absolute obligation and a condition precedent to his right to specific performance, or whether, under the circumstances of this case, the buyer's obligation in this respect was conditional and dependent upon seller's concurrent performance of her obligation to deposit a deed and a title policy insuring an unencumbered title.

The judgment of the trial court is based upon a holding that the buyer's obligation was absolute and that proof of its literal performance was a condition precedent to buyer's right to specific enforcement of the contract. Our holding is to the contrary. We have concluded that under the undisputed facts here presented the promises of the buyer and seller were mutual and concurrently conditional.

The contract of which specific performance was sought consists of written escrow instructions executed by both parties on January 6, 1954, with a closing date of April 6, 1954. Seller therein agreed to convey certain land to buyer for $29,500 cash; to furnish a policy of title insurance showing her title to be free of all encumbrances except (a) certain real and personal property taxes and (b) covenants, conditions, restrictions, easements, rights and rights of way of record; and to deposit in escrow a deed to the property "to be used when you hold for my/our account the total sales price." Buyer paid outside of escrow $1,000 which was applied on the purchase price, deposited $4,000 concurrently with the execution of the instructions and agreed to pay the balance of $24,500 within the 90-day period of the escrow.

Under the term "General Instructions" signed by the buyer and specifically approved by the seller is the following: "Time is of the essence of these instructions. If for any reason other than my (the buyer's) failure to comply with the foregoing instructions this escrow cannot be closed by April 6, 1954, I may, by written notice to you, demand the return of money and/or instruments that I have placed therein; otherwise complete this escrow as soon as possible. If both parties fail to comply within the said time limit, then neither party shall be entitled to the return of money and/or instruments until, after demand, a five day notice shall have been given to the other party by ordinary mail at the address given you. Party electing to cancel this escrow agrees to pay cancellation charges."

Buyer made the $4,000 deposit and the trial court found that he had not withdrawn from the escrow any of the money deposited by him.

A few days after the opening of the escrow the escrow holder obtained a preliminary title report which showed that the real property was subject to a lease executed by the seller and her deceased husband to their son, Edward, as lessee, for a term of ten years expiring on February 28, 1957. This lease was recorded July 21, 1947, in the office of the County Recorder. Buyer had no knowledge of the lease at the time the escrow instructions were signed but he learned about it ten days later when the information contained in the preliminary title report was conveyed to him. Thereupon he consulted his attorney who, on February 3, 1954, addressed a letter to the seller informing her of the facts disclosed in the preliminary title report and reminding her that she had promised to convey clear title to the property, free from any lien or encumbrance, and to furnish buyer with a title policy insuring the same. She was also advised in this letter that "my client intends to hold you to strict compliance with the said escrow agreement. Mr. Groobman is prepared to fully perform his portion of the escrow agreement, including deposit of the balance of the purchase price, which is tendered hereby. Demand is made upon you that you promptly comply with the escrow agreement by tendering to my client clear title to said premises, free from any lien or encumbrance, together with a policy of title insurance insuring the same." (Emphasis added.)

It should be noted that there is uncontradicted evidence that at all times during the period of the escrow, buyer was in a financial position to make the final deposit of $24,500. The foregoing letter produced no response from the seller. She did not accept the offer nor object to the mode or form of either the demand or the offer therein contained.

On March 19, 1954, still within the period of the escrow, buyer's attorney addressed a second letter to the escrow holder, with a copy to the seller, reading in part as follows: "You are advised that Mr. Groobman is ready, willing, and able to complete his performance of the escrow instructions by deposit in escrow of the balance of the purchase price, the sum of $24,500, which said sum is tendered hereby, forthwith upon execution and deposit in escrow of a quitclaim deed executed by Edward A. Kirk and terminating and releasing the lease upon the subject property. Please notify me immediately upon deposit of such executed quitclaim deed. Immediately upon receipt of such notice, Mr. Groobman will deposit the said sum of $24,500.-00 into escrow." This letter, also, failed to evoke any response from the seller.

On April 9, 1954, three days after the designated closure date of the escrow, buyer commenced this action. In his original complaint buyer prayed for specific performance of the contract according to its terms, or: "If the said agreement cannot be specifically performed, that the defendant convey to the plaintiff the said real property, subject to the said lease" and the taxes, covenants, conditions, etc. set out in the escrow instructions, and for certain damages. Service of summons on the original complaint was delayed, apparently for the reason that in the meantime seller had commenced an action in unlawful detainer against her son, the tenant under the lease. To assist her, buyer "loaned" her the services of his own attorney, and she apparently gladly accepted the same. The complaint in unlawful detainer was filed April 20, 1954, and judgment in favor of the tenant was entered May 24, 1954.

On June 9, 1954, seller addressed a letter to the escrow holder, with copy to buyer's attorney, instructing the escrow holder to cancel the escrow "within one week from the date of this letter unless in the meantime the buyer complies with the terms of said escrow and deposits the sums required by the terms of said escrow." On June 14, 1954, buyer's attorney addressed a letter to seller in which, after stating his assumption that she did not wish him to represent her further in connection with any proceedings to cancel or forfeit the lease, he stated: "You are aware that Mr. Groobman attempted to cooperate closely with you so that you would not suffer because of his specific performance action against you. Of course, such cooperation is now out of the question. I have instructed the marshal's office to attempt service upon you of Mr. Groobman's complaint for specific performance and damages. As you know the action was held in abeyance during our attempt to cooperate with you and work out a peaceful and mutually beneficial solution to the problem."

Seller at no time prior to the expiration of the term of the lease, February 28, 1957, cleared her title to the real property of the encumbrance of the lease, and no further correspondence or negotiations took place. Buyer elected not to deposit in escrow the balance of the purchase price so long as these conditions prevailed. Such deposit was the only covenant or condition of the contract of sale which buyer had not performed—there remained nothing else for him to do.

On August 29, 1956, while the lease was still in effect, buyer filed his amended complaint in which he alleged his previous demands and tenders of the $24,500 and that he "is now ready, able and willing to pay the balance of the total sales price. * *" He further alleged: "The plaintiff has elected to accept and take title to said real property subject to the encumbrances hereinabove specifically described and to said lease and to demand damages for the withholding of said real property." By way of damages it is alleged that the fair rental value of the property is and has been $125 per month, and buyer asks that amount from February 1, 1954, until he obtains possession of the real property.

Seller relies upon, and the trial court apparently was governed by, the decision of this court in Pitt v. Mallalieu, 1948, 85 Cal. App.2d 77, 192 P.2d 24, 26. That was an appeal from a judgment of dismissal following the sustaining of a general demurrer to a second amended complaint without leave to amend. In Pitt, as in the case at bar, the escrow instructions specified that a part of the purchase price should be deposited in the escrow at the time of signing the instructions and the entire balance should be so deposited within 90 days thereafter and time was declared to be of the essence of the agreement. There, as here, after the 90-day period had expired and the additional deposit had not been made by the vendee, the vendor gave written notice that she considered the contract at an end.

But the cases differ in this respect: In Pitt the vendor gave notice of cancellation before vendee commenced his action. After the cancellation, vendee deposited $1,750 "as evidence of his good faith" and several months later filed the action. Furthermore, the cancellation, the deposit and the filing of the action took place about two years after the opening of the escrow.

In the instant case, buyer filed his action three days after the escrow was due to close, and thereafter, before serving summons, assisted the seller in her attempt to remove the encumbrance of the lease. It was not until after this proved futile that seller cancelled.

It is true that in Pitt the vendee sought to excuse his nonperformance on the ground that he had discovered a cloud on vendor's title which was not removed and that to have made the deposit as required by the contract would have been an idle act. In holding such was no excuse this court said, at page 81 of 85 Cal.App.2d, at page 27 of 192 P.2d: "But while the agreement implies that defendant's title might not prove merchantable and she might not perfect it within a reasonable time, the remedy for plaintiff in such an event is provided by the agreement's provision 'that the purchaser shall have the option of demanding back said deposit and shall be released from all obligation hereunder.' The requirement that plaintiff deposit the total purchase price in escrow was not conditional but was absolute. His failure to make the deposit within the 90 days after the agreement was a breach of it and terminated his rights. (Citation.) Unless the complaint alleges full performance or an offer to perform plaintiff's part of the contract he is not entitled to maintain his action to enforce performance. (Citation.) The fact that there was an encumbrance against defendant's title which she was not able to remove within the time fixed for performance did not relieve the vendee from making a tender of the purchase price and demand of performance as a condition for his action. (Citations.)" (Emphasis added.)

[1] The above quoted language indicates additional and substantial distinction between the Pitt case and the case at bar. Here the allegations of the complaint and the proof show both tender and demand on the part of the buyer, as previously set forth herein. Here buyer contends that the covenant to pay the balance of the purchase price and the covenant to deliver a good and sufficient deed were mutual and concurrent. We hold that this contention is well taken. Section 1437, Civil Code, defines concurrent conditions as follows: "Conditions concurrent are those which are mutually dependent, and are to be performed at the same time."

We sustain buyer's further contention that since his covenant to deposit the balance of the purchase price and seller's covenant to deposit a good and sufficient deed (together with a title policy as provided for) were concurrent, buyer had the right to condition his offer to deposit such balance upon the performance by seller of her covenant to convey the premises free from the encumbrance of the lease. Buyer correctly invokes section 1498 of the Civil Code: "When a debtor is entitled to the performance of a condition precedent to, or concurrent with, performance on his part, he may make his offer to depend upon the due performance of such condition." Furthermore, section 1496, Civil Code, provides: "The thing to be delivered, if any, need not in any case be actually produced upon an offer of performance, unless the offer is accepted."

In Gervaise v. Brookins, 156 Cal. 103, 103 P. 329, the vendor agreed to sell and convey certain lots to the vendee for $15,000, payable as follows: $3,000 cash, and the balance in ten annual payments of $1,200 each, evidenced by ten promissory notes, each of which was payable on or before a specified date. The vendor agreed to deliver a good and sufficient deed upon the payment of the last note. After making the cash down payment and after paying the first three notes, the vendee learned that the vendor had conveyed the land to an oil company. Taking advantage of a provision in the notes permitting him to pay the same before the specified due dates, the vendee offered to pay the remaining notes on condition that the vendor convey said lots to him. Concerning this offer, the Supreme Court said at page 106 of 156 Cal., at page 330 of 103 P.: "He [the vendee] was entitled to the performance of this concurrent condition, and he had a right to make his own offer dependent thereon. Civ.Code, § 1498. He was then, and ever since has been, ready, able, and willing, to pay the whole price upon the condition stated. His offer was therefore a good offer of performance under the law and the contract, * * *." Such is the situation in the case at bar.

Nor, in the instant case, is the seller's contention that the offer should have been accompanied by the actual cash of any avail. As was said in Peckham v. Stewart, 97 Cal. 147, 152, 31 P. 928, 929: "They [the vendees] had a right, at the time of making the offer, to demand that defendant perform his part of the contract by delivering the conveyance required by the contract; and until defendant signified his acceptance of their offer to pay, by a tender of such conveyance, plaintiffs were under no obligation to actually produce before him the money mentioned in their written offer."

In Marshall v. Hilton, 209 Cal. 531, at page 534, 289 P. 165, at page 167, under similar facts and dealing with the same contention as in Peckham v. Stewart, supra, the court said: "Here no claim is made that the tender proven extinguishes the obligation of the respondents to pay to the appellant the amount due her under the agreement of sale, but was a preliminary step to be taken before an action could be instituted by the respondents against the appellant to specifically perform the contract. In such a case, 'the law does not require the purchaser to keep the tender good or deposit the money in the vendor's name and thus place himself at the vendor's mercy, since the decree, if granted, will require the plaintiff to pay the purchase money before receiving the deed.' 23 Cal.Jur. 459."

In Katemis v. Westerlind, 1953, 120 Cal. App.2d 537, 261 P.2d 553, 556, this court reversed a judgment of nonsuit in an action by the purchaser for specific performance and damages. The receipt for the buyers' deposit contained certain of the terms of the contract of sale including: "Time is of the essence of this contract; but the time for any act required to be done may be extended not more than 30 days by the undersigned agent." The buyers' escrow instructions provided for deposit of the balance of the purchase price prior to March 1, 1952, which seller could use provided on or before March 1 he had filed for record instruments entitling him to procure a policy of title insurance showing title vested in the buyers free, with some exceptions, of encumbrances. Seller agreed also to furnish a termite report, and if it showed infestation, to eliminate it and repair the damage at her own expense. The instructions also contained a provision that if the conditions of escrow were not complied with prior to March 1, 1952, "you are nevertheless to complete the escrow as soon as the conditions, except as to time, have been complied with, unless written demand shall have been made upon you not to complete it." Seller agreed to be bound by the foregoing instructions prior to March 1, and further said: "I will hand you all instruments and money necessary for me to comply therewith, including a deed of the property described. * * *"

March 1 and 2, respectively, fell on a Saturday and Sunday. Prior to March 1 the seller deposited all instruments called for except the termite report. Buyers, having gone to Chicago to get the money, mailed the balance of the purchase price on February 29, but it was not received and deposited in the escrow account until March 3. Also the termite report, showing some infestation, and offering to perform the necessary work for $925, was deposited in escrow on the same day. On March 5 the seller wrote the escrow holder to cancel the escrow because buyers had not complied with their agreement to deposit the money prior to March 1.

In reversing the judgment of nonsuit this court held that "Nowhere in the escrow instructions is there any clear-cut language manifesting an intent to make time of the essence." 120 Cal.App.2d at pages 543–544, 261 P.2d at page 558. But the decision proceeds to point out that even if it were to be considered that time was of the essence, the nonsuit was still erroneous. It was held that the deposit of the money by buyers and the deposit of the instruments by seller were concurrent conditions, mutually dependent, each promise given in consideration for the other, and each being due at the same time, citing Civil Code, section 1437. This court says, commencing at page 545 of 120 Cal.App.2d, at page 559 of 261 P.2d: "This principle is more elaborately set out in section 267 of The Restatement of Contracts as follows: 'Promises for an agreed exchange are concurrently conditional, unless a contrary intention is clearly manifested, if the promises be simultaneously performed * * * where by the terms of the promises (a) at the same time is fixed for the performance of each promise; or * * * (d) the same period of time is fixed within which each promise shall be performed.' * * * Applying these rules to the case at bar, it is clear that in a contract for the sale of real estate calling for concurrent performance, neither party can place the other in default unless he is fully able to perform or make a tender of the promised performance." It seems clear that the foregoing principles apply to the instant case and that deposit by the buyer of the full purchase price was not a condition precedent to the deposit of a satisfactory title policy and deed by the seller.

[2] Here the appellant buyer had the right to seek specific performance, to demand conveyance of such title as the seller possessed, and to seek damages for the defect in the title. It was held in Miller v. Dyer, 20 Cal.2d 526, syl. 2, 127 P.2d 901, 141 A.L.R. 1428, "While a vendor may not force a defective title on an unwilling purchaser or compel performance while conditions precedent to his recovery remain for him to perform (Civ.Code, §§ 3392, 3394), he cannot defend an action for specific performance on the ground that his title is not so complete as the one he agreed to convey. If the vendor has any interest in the property he has contracted to convey, the vendee, at his option, may enforce the contract with respect to whatever interest the vendor possesses, and may also receive compensation for the deficiency in performance."

The judgment is reversed.

FOX, P. J., and ASHBURN, J., concur.

159 Cal.App.2d 163

Marjorie L. COFFILL, Plaintiff,

v.

Lewis H. BACH, Mazie Woolstenhulme, Defendants.

Mazie WOOLSTENHULME, Cross-Complainant,

v.

Marjorie L. COFFILL, Lewis H. Bach, Cross-Defendants.

Mazie WOOLSTENHULME, Appellant and Cross-Respondent,

v.

Marjorie L. COFFILL, Respondent and Cross-Appellant.

Civ. 9301.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

April 3, 1958.

Action by successor in interest of grantee against successors in interest of grantor to quiet title to land and for declaration that she was entitled to money held in escrow resulting from sale of timber cut from land and was owner of timber on land. The Superior Court, Tuolumne County, J. T. B. Warne, J., held that plaintiff was entitled to sum held in escrow and that defendant was entitled to take timber for repair of buildings on land and that defendant was owner of certain buildings erected on land, and both parties appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Schottky, J., held that where agreement between grantor and transferee of grantee stated that one of considerations for execution of deed by grantor to grantee was that until grantee constructed dam, grantor reserved ownership of surface of land for farming with right to use timber for fencing, domestic use and repair of buildings, and subsequently grantor, in another action, claimed only those rights, grantor and his successors were limited by terms of such reservation and grantor did not retain ownership of timber, and that buildings constructed for use in exercising grantor's right to farm were not intended to become part of real estate but remained personal property.

Affirmed.

1. Deeds ⇐144(1)

The law is favorable to vesting of estates and consequently a stipulation in a conveyance will be construed, if possible, not to create a condition.

2. Logs and Logging ⇐2

Where agreement between grantor and transferee of grantee stated that one of considerations for execution of deed by grantor to grantee was that until grantee constructed dam, grantor reserved ownership of surface of lands for farming with right to use timber for fencing and domestic use and repair of buildings, and subsequently grantor, in another action, claimed only those rights, his rights and rights of his successors were limited by terms of reservation, and grantor did not retain ownership of timber. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1110.

3. Logs and Logging ⇐2

Where grantor conveyed fee and reserved ownership of surface for farming with right to use any timber necessary for fencing lands, for domestic use and repair of buildings on the land until such time that dam was constructed, grantor was entitled to construct any buildings reasonably necessary to farming of land from timber on land and the word "repair" in reservation applied to any structures on land and was not limited to those in existence at time of agreement. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1110.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Repair".

4. Fixtures ⇐21

Where grantor reserved right to farm land until dam was constructed and land was covered with water, buildings constructed for use in exercising right reserved by grantor for farming were not intended to become part of real estate, and remained personal property of grantor's successors in interest.

William C. Coffill, Sonora, for plaintiff-appellant Coffill.

C. Ray Robinson, Merced, by James A. Cobey and William J. Adams, Merced, for cross-complainant-appellant Woolstenhulme.

SCHOTTKY, Justice.

In the year 1907 one T. H. Carlon entered into a contract of sale with one E. A. Wiltsee whereby Carlon agreed to sell Wiltsee 320 acres of land known as Stone Meadows and 480 acres of land known as Ackerson Meadows. In 1908 Carlon conveyed the land to Wiltsee. The deed provided that it was made and executed subject to the terms and conditions of an agreement executed by T. H. Carlon, dated December 9, 1907. The agreement between Carlon and Wiltsee was never recorded and is now a lost instrument. In 1908 Wiltsee conveyed Stone Meadows and Ackerson Meadows to the Tuolumne Power and Light Company. This deed contained the following provision:

"* * * This deed is made and executed subject to the terms, conditions and covenants contained in a written agreement executed by Timothy H. Carlon * * * to E. A. Wiltsee for the sale of said land * * * dated the 9th day of December, 1907 and is the only agreement made in writing between said Timothy H. Carlon and said E. A. Wiltsee in said matter and this deed is accepted by the party of the second part [Tuolumne Power and Light Company] hereto subject to the terms and conditions of said agreement."

In 1909 Carlon and Tuolumne Power and Light Company entered into an agreement which referred to the agreement of sale between Carlon and Wiltsee of December 9, 1907, and the deed of conveyance from Carlon to Wiltsee and the deed of conveyance from Wiltsee to Tuolumne Power and Light Company. The agreement then provided:

"* * * [A]nd whereas the said E. A. Wiltsee has executed a deed of the said property to the party of the second part [Tuolumne Power and Light Company] herein and whereas one of the considerations for the execution of said deed by the party of the first part [Carlon] to E. A. Wiltsee was that until the said E. A. Wiltsee should construct a dam upon said lands for storing waters, the party of the first part reserved the ownership of the surface of said lands for pasturage and farming with the right to any timber necessary for fencing said lands and for domestic use and for repair of buildings on said lands and when said dam shall have been completed the party of the first part will still have the right to pasture and farm any of said lands not covered with water and to the free use of any of the stored waters in said dam for use of his live stock and for domestic purposes. In the work of constructing said dam or dams the said E. A. Wiltsee should have the superior right to use said lands or any part thereof necessary to be used in the construction of said dams and to all timber on said lands, and the party of the first part to have the use of all buildings on said lands until said lands are covered with water from said dam.

"It is therefore, now hereby expressly agreed and stated that the party of the second part herein, to-wit:

"Tuolumne Power and Light Company has accepted said deed from E. A. Wiltsee with notice of the terms and conditions of said agreement as above stated, and hereby acknowledges and declares that all of said terms and conditions are binding upon it to the same force and extent as the same were binding upon E. A. Wiltsee."

This agreement was signed by Carlon.

By mesne conveyances Stone Meadows became the property of an Eric J. Segerstrom. Marjorie Coffill is the successor to Segerstrom. Mazie Woolstenhulme is now the owner of Ackerman Meadows and is the successor in interest of any rights of T. H. Carlon in Stone Meadows. In 1951, while the estate of Segerstrom was in probate, a lumber company was permitted to cut and remove timber from a certain proposed road on Stone Meadows and the proceeds of the sale of the timber were placed in escrow.

Marjorie L. Coffill commenced the instant action against Bach, the escrow holder, and Mazie Woolstenhulme, setting up three causes of action in her complaint. The first cause of action was to quiet title to 320 acres of land commonly known and hereinafter referred to as Stone Meadows; the second was to have it declared that she was entitled to the moneys held in escrow resulting from the aforementioned sale of timber; and the third was for a declaration that she was the owner of the timber on said land and entitled to remove it.

Mazie Woolstenhulme filed an answer denying the material allegations of the complaint and also filed a cross-complaint in which she alleged that plaintiff's claims in the property adverse to her were without right, and seeking a declaration of the rights of the parties in the property in controversy.

Following a trial the court found that plaintiff and cross-defendant is the owner of Stone Meadows, together with all the timber now growing upon said lands or which may grow upon said lands in the future; that plaintiff and cross-defendant has the right to remove said timber subject to the laws, rules and regulations of the state of California governing the removal of timber from private lands; and also that plaintiff and cross-defendant has a right to construct a dam or dams upon said lands for the storing of water. The court found further that said lands are subject to, and the cross-complainant is the owner of, an easement to pasture and farm said lands and to take any timber necessary for fencing said lands, and for domestic use, and for the repair of buildings on said lands. The court found further that in the event that a dam is built upon said lands, the defendant and cross-complainant, Mazie Woolstenhulme, shall then have the free use of any of the stored water from said dam for watering of livestock and for domestic purposes, provided, however, that in the event that said dam is built upon said property, then the plaintiff and cross-defendant shall have a superior right to use any part or all of said lands necessary to be used in the construction of said dam, and to all timber on said lands. The court found further that plaintiff is entitled to the sum of $3,629.42 held in escrow, resulting from the sale of timber, less the commission and expenses of the escrow holder.

Defendant and cross-complainant, Mazie Woolstenhulme, has appealed from the judgment entered in accordance with the aforesaid findings, and plaintiff and cross-defendant, Marjorie L. Coffill, has appealed from that portion of the judgment permitting Mazie Woolstenhulme to take timber for repair of buildings on said land and for domestic use and that portion decreeing that Mazie Woolstenhulme is the owner of certain buildings erected on the land.

Appeal of Defendant and Cross-Complainant.

Appellant Woolstenhulme first contends that the original deed from Carlon to Wiltsee conveyed only a conditional fee on a condition precedent. She contends that Stone Meadows was conveyed by Carlon for the purpose of building a power plant dam upon the property, and inasmuch as the dam has not been built the fee to Stone Meadows was not transferred by Carlon and remains in her as his successor in interest. Appellant cites section 1110 of the Civil Code which reads: "An instrument purporting to be a grant of real property, to take effect upon condition precedent, passes the estate upon the performance of the condition." Appellant's argument appears to be based on the fact that the agreement spells out the rights of Carlon until the dam was constructed and the rights of Wiltsee during construction. It is further argued that since Carlon reserved ownership of the surface of the land he retained the surface rights including the timber until the dam was constructed.

[1] The argument of appellant is ingenious but unconvincing. We agree with the interpretation of the trial judge that Carlon conveyed a fee to Wiltsee subject to the right of Carlon to use the property for certain purposes. The law is favorable to the vesting of estates and consequently a stipulation in a conveyance will be construed, if possible, not to create a condition. Buttram v. Finley, 37 Cal.App.2d 459, 99 P.2d 1093. There are no words of condition in the agreement. A reading of the agreement between Carlon and Tuolumne Power and Light Company which spells out the rights reserved to Carlon in the contract with Wiltsee indicates that Carlon was reserving the right to pasture cattle on the land until the dam should be constructed, and to pasture cattle on the land not flooded after the dam was constructed, and the right to use timber for the repair of buildings and for fences. This interpretation is fortified by a subsequent admission of Carlon. One of the later grantees of Stone Meadows filed an action against Carlon in which it was alleged that Carlon had entered into an agreement with the complainant whereby Carlon had granted and assigned all of his rights in certain land to the complainant. It was further alleged that through an error the description of the land was omitted from the agreement and that the land intended to be described was Stone Meadows. The complainant asked that the instrument be reformed and that it be declared that Carlon had no interest in the property. In his verified answer to the complaint Carlon "admits that plaintiff is the owner of the property described in plaintiff's complaint subject to the right of this defendant to use, possess, occupy and enjoy the possession and use of said property until such time that said lands are actually flooded with water for reservoir purposes." Carlon further alleged he was the owner of the following rights: "The ownership of the surface for pasturage and farming with the right to any timber necessary for fencing the lands and for domestic use and for repair of buildings on the land until such time that a dam be constructed. * * *"

[2] We do not agree with appellant's contention that since Carlon reserved ownership of the surface of the land he retained the surface rights, including ownership of the timber, until the dam was constructed. We think it is clear from the documents in the record and from the other evidence that Carlon conveyed the fee to Stone Meadows with the specific reservation of the use of the surface for pasturage and farming, with the right to use the timber for fencing, domestic use and for repair of buildings on the land. His rights and the rights of his successors were limited by the terms of this reservation. It is to be noted that the reservations specifically include the right to use timber for fencing and repairs, and it is reasonable to conclude that if Carlon had intended to reserve ownership in the fee or in the timber he would not have taken pains to specify the rights reserved.

Cross-Appeal of Plaintiff and Cross-Defendant.

In her cross-appeal plaintiff appeals from the portion of the judgment permitting defendant Woolstenhulme to take timber for the repair of buildings which were constructed on said lands after December 9, 1907, said buildings having been constructed about the year 1942, and also from the portion of the judgment that the present buildings, consisting of a dwelling house, barn and corral, belong to defendant.

Plaintiff contends that by the terms of the reservation in the contract of 1907, the parties did not contemplate that new structures could be erected on the land, and that the right to repair was limited to structures in existence in 1907. Plaintiff argues that the general connotation of the word "repair" is to mend an old thing, not to make a new thing; to restore something; to restore to a sound state something which has become partially dilapidated, not to create something new. Realty & Rebuilding Co. v. Rea, 184 Cal. 565, 576, 194 P. 1024; Whalen v. Ruiz, 40 Cal.2d 294, 300, 253 P.2d 457.

[3] However, it must be borne in mind that Carlon reserved the right to farm the land until a dam was constructed and the land was covered with water, and we believe that the right to farm the land would entitle Carlon to construct any buildings reasonably necessary. We think that the trial court was correct in concluding that the word "repair" applied to any structures on the land and was not limited to those in existence at the time of the agreement.

[4] There is no merit in plaintiff's further contention that the court erred in determining that the present buildings on the land belong to defendant. As has been hereinbefore pointed out, these buildings were constructed for use in exercising the right reserved by Carlon for pasturage and farming. We agree with cross-respondent's contention that the house, barn and corral were not intended to become part of the real estate, but instead were intended to remain the personal property of cross-respondent.

> "Of the criteria which determine the classification of objects as fixtures the intention of the parties to the annexation is an important factor. In Gosliner v. Briones, 187 Cal. 557, 560, 204 P. 19, 20, this court said '* * * the character of the annexation to the land or other realty and the use made of the property are important considerations, but in most cases are subsidiarily employed for the purpose of testing the intention of the parties.'" Rinaldi v. Goller, 48 Cal.2d 276, 280, 309 P.2d 451, 454.

Such intention (that the house, barn and corral should not become part of the real estate) could be inferred from the testimony of cross-respondent that when the tenant who built the house, barn and corral gave up possession of the land, he left the buildings on it and cross-respondent then got the buildings back. Such intention could further be inferred from the fact that when the buildings were built, the documents delineating the respective interests of the parties in this land indicated that cross-appellant's predecessor had a right to flood the land, thus it would reasonably be inferred that the party constructing the buildings should intend to have the right to move the buildings to another location on the land, or remove them from the land in the event of flooding.

The trial court's conclusion and judgment in this matter is that the present buildings, consisting of a dwelling house, barn and corral, located on Stone Meadows, belong to cross-respondent. Such conclusion and judgment are fully supported by the finding that said buildings are a reasonable and necessary incident to cross-respondent's rights in Stone Meadows. Implicit in such conclusion and judgment is a finding that the house, barn and corral were not intended to and did not become part of the real estate.

No other points raised require discussion.

The judgment is affirmed.

VAN DYKE, P. J., and PEEK, J., concur.

A. J. FAIRRINGTON et al., Plaintiffs and Appellants,

v.

DYKE WATER COMPANY, a corporation, et al., Defendants and Respondents.

L. A. 24501.

Supreme Court of California, In Bank.

April 18, 1958.

Action to quiet title and for injunctive relief. The Superior Court, Orange County, Raymond Thompson, J., withheld relief, and plaintiffs appealed. The Supreme Court, Shenk, J., held that where license granted by plaintiffs' predecessors in interest for installation of sign on property adjoining that purchased by defendants had terminated (by death of such predecessors) prior to defendants' erection of sign, sign constituted continuing trespass which might, in time, ripen into easement, and plaintiffs would be entitled to mandatory injunction requiring removal of such sign; and held that mere fact that sign was a "substantial benefit" to defendants and that its existence did not interfere with plaintiffs' use of their property would not justify denial of relief, since deprivation of substantial benefit is not equivalent to imposition of substantial hardship, for purposes of doctrine of balancing of conveniences, under which injunctive relief may be denied where plaintiff, seeking to vindicate a technical and unsubstantial right, would impose an unusual hardship upon public or defendant.

Reversed.

Opinion, 318 P.2d 710, vacated.

1. Injunction ⇐23, 24

When a court of equity balances conveniences to determine that an injunction, otherwise warranted, should be withheld, its action approaches an exercise of right of eminent domain in favor of private person and, thus, proof of irreparable injury is a necessary element of defense based upon a balancing of conveniences upon public or defendant.

2. Injunction ⇐23, 24

Deprivation of substantial benefit is not equivalent to imposition of substantial hardship, for purposes of doctrine of balancing of conveniences, under which injunctive relief may be denied where plaintiff, seeking to vindicate a technical and unsubstantial right, would impose an unusual hardship upon public or defendant.

3. Injunction ⇐48

Equity will enjoin a wrongful act which, if continuous, would give rise to easement or servitude.

4. Injunction ⇐51

Where license granted by plaintiffs' predecessors in interest for installation of sign on property adjoining that purchased by defendants had terminated (by death of such predecessors) prior to defendants' erection of sign, sign constituted continuing trespass which might, in time, ripen into easement, and plaintiffs would be entitled to mandatory injunction requiring removal of such sign.

Mize, Larsh, Mize & Hubbard and Royal E. Hubbard, Santa Ana, for appellants.

James E. Walker, Santa Ana, for respondents.

SHENK, Justice.

This is an appeal by the plaintiffs from a judgment for the defendant in a suit for a mandatory injunction and to quiet title to real property. The appeal is on the judgment roll.

In December 1952 the defendant purchased a parcel of real property from Henry and Irma Fairrington. The escrow agreement provided in part: "The Sellers also give to the Buyers permission to erect a sign on Garden Grove Boulevard between the driveway and the sidewalk next to the Post Office Building." The property described in the escrow agreement was owned and retained by the grantors until their deaths in September 1953. Thereafter, the defendant posted a sign on the property above described bearing the words "Dyke Water Company." The sign was mounted on a 6½ inch pipe embedded in a concrete foundation. The plaintiffs, heirs of Henry and Irma Fairrington, succeeded to the property upon which the sign was posted. Upon defendant's refusal to remove the sign, the plaintiffs brought this suit for a mandatory injunction to require the defendant to remove it and to quiet title to the property.

The trial court found and concluded that the defendant purchased the property from the plaintiffs' predecessors in interest in reliance upon the permission to erect a sign on the adjoining property; that the defendant expended money in its installation also in reliance upon the permission contained in the escrow agreement, but with full knowledge that the permission was a revocable license; that the sign "is a substantial benefit to the defendant in the carrying on of its business"; that the sign "constitutes no substantial detriment to Plaintiffs at the present time and does not interfere with any present or contemplated use of their property by them"; that the so called license contained in the escrow agreement was revoked by the deaths of the grantors, and that "relief to plaintiffs should be withheld at this time by the Court sitting in equity." The court retained jurisdiction to entertain future application by plaintiffs for injunctive relief. Judgment was entered accordingly.

The findings of fact upon which the conclusions of law and the judgment withholding relief apparently rest are those stating that the maintenance of the sign is a substantial benefit to the defendant's business and that its continued presence neither constitutes a substantial detriment to the plaintiffs at present nor interferes with any present or contemplated use of the property by them.

[1, 2] It will be noted that the court did not conclude that the removal of the sign would result in hardship to the defendant. It concluded only that the sign is a "substantial benefit to the defendant in the carrying on of its business." The doctrine of balancing of conveniences is often invoked as a defense in a suit for an injunction where the plaintiff, seeking to vindicate a technical and unsubstantial right would impose an unusual hardship upon the public or the defendant. Deprivation of a substantial benefit, however, falls short of the imposition of substantial hardship. This is more than a verbal distinction. When a court of equity balances conveniences to determine that an injunction, otherwise warranted, should be withheld, its action approaches an exercise of the right of eminent domain in favor of a private person. Christensen v. Tucker, 114 Cal.App.2d 554, 560, 250 P.2d 660; McClintock, Discretion to Deny Injunction Against Trespass and Nuisance, 12 Minn. L.Rev. 565, 572. Thus, proof of irreparable injury is a necessary element of a defense based upon a balancing of conveniences. Wright v. Best, 19 Cal.2d 368, 386–387, 121 P.2d 702. The findings are, therefore, insufficient to support a balancing of the conveniences as a ground for the withholding of injunctive relief.

The determination that the court should not have endeavored to balance the conveniences, however, is ancillary to the issue whether an injunction should be granted at all. The conclusion that the conveniences cannot be balanced in favor of the defendant does not determine the plaintiffs' right to a mandatory injunction.

[3, 4] It is the plaintiffs' contention that because the license was revoked prior to the erection of the sign, the presence of the sign on plaintiffs' land constitutes a continuing trespass which might ripen into an easement to maintain the sign in perpetuity. It is settled that equity will enjoin a wrongful act which, if continuous, will give rise to an easement or servitude. Vestal v. Young, 147 Cal. 715, 721, 82 P. 381; Walker v. Emerson, 89 Cal. 456, 26 P. 968; Learned v. Castle, 78 Cal. 454, 18 P. 872, 21 P. 11; City of Dunsmuir v. Silva, 154 Cal.App.2d 825, 317 P.2d 653; Los Angeles Brick & Clay Products Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 60 Cal.App.2d 478, 141 P.2d 46; Felsenthal v. Warring, 40

Cal.App. 119, 180 P. 67; 24 Cal.Jur. 700; 27 Cal.Jur.2d 157. If the deaths of the grantors terminated the license, as found by the trial court, then plaintiffs' assertion that the presence of defendant's sign is a continuing trespass is unassailable. That it was so terminated is conclusively established by the record.

The defendant has shown no equitable or other defense to the suit for a mandatory injunction, nor has it advanced any reason why plaintiffs' title should not be quieted.

The judgment is reversed.

GIBSON, C. J., and CARTER, TRAYNOR, SCHAUER, SPENCE and McCOMB, JJ., concur.

50 Cal.2d 202

Alvin E. HONOROFF, Petitioner,

v.

STATE BAR OF CALIFORNIA, Respondent.

L. A. 24883.

Supreme Court of California, In Bank.

April 18, 1958.

Rehearing Denied May 14, 1958.

Proceeding to review a recommendation of the board of governors of the state bar that an attorney be suspended from the practice of law for nine months. The Supreme Court held that the evidence sustained finding that attorney had been guilty of engaging another to solicit professional employment for him and that penalty of nine months' suspension from practice was not excessive.

Judgment of suspension from practice for nine months.

1. Attorney and Client ⇐57

Findings of Board of Governors in disciplinary proceedings are not binding on reviewing court, which will pass upon sufficiency and weight of evidence.

2. Attorney and Client ⇐57

Attorney seeking review of decision of Board of Governors in disciplinary proceeding has burden of showing wherein board's decision was erroneous or unlawful.

3. Attorney and Client ⇐53(2)

Evidence sustained finding that attorney had been guilty of engaging another to solicit professional employment for him. Rules of Professional Conduct, rules 2, 3, West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code following section 6076.

4. Attorney and Client ⇐53(2)

The keeping of proper books of account, vouchers, receipts and checks has significant bearing on issue of an attorney's honesty and professional conduct when his actions are called into question.

5. Attorney and Client ⇐58

Nine months' suspension from practice was proper penalty for misconduct of attorney in solicitation of professional employment.

Morris E. Cohn, Beverly Hills, for petitioner.

Garrett H. Elmore, San Francisco, and David K. Robinson, Pasadena, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

This is a proceeding to review a recommendation of the Board of Governors of The State Bar that petitioner Alvin E. Honoroff be suspended from the practice of law for a period of nine months.

Petitioner was charged with the violation of his oath and duties as an attorney at law in that he engaged one Zachary Goodman to solicit professional employment for him, contrary to rules 2 and 3 of the Rules of Professional Conduct, 33 Cal.2d 27. The local administrative committee found petitioner guilty on this charge and recommended his suspension from practice for nine months. The board, upon further hearing and review, approved and adopted, with slight modification, the findings of the local committee. It further added that petitioner knew that the legal representation in question, "if obtained, would be the result of, and caused by unauthorized and improper solicitation of professional legal employment * * * by Goodman," and that he "agreed to and * * * did compensate Goodman * * * for steering said professional employment" to him. The board recommended the same suspension period of nine months, with two members dissenting on the ground that the degree of discipline recommended was "too severe."

[1, 2] Petitioner, who is 38 years of age, was admitted to practice in this state in 1950. He has not been the subject of any previous disciplinary proceeding. He contends (1) that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the board's findings and (2) that in any event, its disciplinary recommendation is too severe. While such findings are not binding on this court, which will itself pass upon the sufficiency and weight of the evidence (Higgins v. State Bar, 46 Cal.2d 241, 242, 293 P.2d 455; Clark v. State Bar, 39 Cal.2d 161, 165, 246 P.2d 1), petitioner has the burden of showing wherein the decision of the board is erroneous or unlawful. Tonini v. State Bar, 46 Cal.2d 491, 492–493, 297 P.2d 1; Alkow v. State Bar, 38 Cal.2d 257, 258, 239 P.2d 871. He has not met that burden.

[3] Mrs. Lola Meredith, the wife of Mills Meredith, and their two children were injured in the wreck of a Santa Fe train near Lomax, Illinois, on August 22, 1954. Petitioner, who was practicing in Los Angeles, read a newspaper account of the accident, including the names of persons injured. Among those listed were the names Meredith, Shugan, and D'Agostino. Shugan was an attorney in Los Angeles and a friend of petitioner. He and his wife were both injured in the wreck. D'Agostino's wife and children were also injured, but he was not in the accident. D'Agostino lived in Los Angeles. He had never known petitioner, professionally or otherwise. Petitioner made a note of these names, and he contacted D'Agostino relative to the injuries to his family.

About August 26, 1954, petitioner left by plane for Chicago. Petitioner testified that he had been contemplating a trip east for some time, to take a deposition and to attend a convention in Massachusetts, and was planning to stop in Chicago where he formerly practiced law. He further stated that when he read of the Santa Fe wreck and the injury to the Shugans, who were reported as hospitalized near the scene of the accident, he decided to make the trip at once as far as Chicago to see if he could be of any help. The deposition was never taken and petitioner never did attend the convention.

Petitioner spent a couple of days in Chicago with his former law associate, and then the two drove to the scene of the accident. Upon inquiry at the hospital where the Shugans had been patients, petitioner learned that they had already left. Then petitioner and his former Chicago law associate proceeded to investigate the accident, interviewed people who had been injured and others, and made notes. Petitioner stated that he might have ordered photographs and a copy of the coroner's transcript. He also made an attempt to see D'Agostino's family in the hospital. Up to this time petitioner had not been retained by anyone in connection with the accident, and his fromer law associate was never so employed. Petitioner returned to Chicago for a few more days and then flew back to Los Angeles shortly after the first of September. About a week later, petitioner talked to Shugan and gave him his "evaluation of the case" but Shugan settled his own claim directly with the railroad, and petitioner had no connection with it.

On September 15, 1954, petitioner received a phone call from Zachary Goodman, whom petitioner had not previously met but who introduced himself as the husband of a distant cousin of petitioner. Goodman had worked for some twenty years as a "capper," primarily in the Chicago area, contacting persons who were involved in personal injury cases and signing them on contracts with attorneys, for which he received a percentage of the attorney fees. He had heard that petitioner had been in Illinois investigating the Santa Fe wreck, and he told petitioner that he had "a substantial matter" to discuss with him. Following the phone call, Goodman immediately went to petitioner's office.

The major conflict in the evidence concerns the exact nature of the conversation between petitioner and Goodman at this first meeting. According to Goodman, he told petitioner that he could bring in some cases whereby petitioner could make a lot of money; that he had had considerable experience in handling railroad cases, working on a percentage basis of the fee; and that he asked petitioner if he was financially in a position to handle such cases, which would mean the advance of living expenses to the litigants until the conclusion of their cases. Goodman stated that petitioner had on his desk a piece of paper on which he had listed the names of several persons who had been injured in the Santa Fe wreck. The words "Lola Meredith" with hospital notation "same place as Mrs. Shugan" were on this paper. Goodman further testified that he had not known of the Merediths before this time; that petitioner agreed to handle such cases from the Santa Fe accident as Goodman might get; that petitioner then gave him the above-mentioned list of names, whereupon Goodman said that he would try to contact the Merediths; petitioner said that was "all right with him," and Goodman, with petitioner's permission, telephoned from petitioner's office to Mr. Meredith in Iowa City, where Mrs. Meredith was then hospitalized.

According to petitioner, Goodman came to him seeking employment as an investigator, and he agreed to give Goodman some work. Goodman then stated that he had friends who had been injured in the Santa Fe wreck, asked petitioner if he would be interested in representing them, and petitioner replied that he would. Petitioner admits that in the course of their discussion, he gave Goodman the mentioned list of injured persons as he had noted them, that Goodman telephoned Meredith from his office, in an adjoining room, and then told petitioner of his arrangement to meet Meredith in Iowa City the next day. Apparently, neither Goodman nor petitioner knew the Merediths, and this telephone call from Goodman was their first contact with the Merediths. Testimony of Meredith concerning this conversation is by way of stipulation. In this, Meredith stated that several weeks after the accident when he was in Iowa City, Iowa, where his wife was hospitalized, he received a telephone call from Los Angeles from a man who said that he was an attorney, giving petitioner's name, that he had an aunt who was injured in the same wreck as Mrs. Meredith, that he would be glad to represent him and would send some one to see him; that Goodman arrived the next morning, said that he had been sent by the attorney and gave him an advance on living expenses, which he said the attorney had told him to do; that prior to that time he had never known or heard of petitioner or Goodman.

Goodman, with petitioner's authorization, flew to Iowa City the evening of September 15, 1954. He met Meredith there the next morning. They discussed the accident and petitioner's ability to handle such cases. Meredith and Goodman flew back to Los Angeles that day, September 16. During the plane trip Goodman had Meredith sign a general one-third contingency fee contract for petitioner's employment in his case against the Santa Fe. Petitioner met Goodman and Meredith at the airport, and they arranged for a conference the next morning at petitioner's office.

At the scheduled meeting on September 17, petitioner discussed with Meredith the terms of employment and Meredith signed two more contingent fee contracts retaining petitioner, one covering the damage claim of the Meredith children and the other covering the claims of Mr. and Mrs. Meredith. Petitioner then arranged to advance weekly living expenses to Meredith until the conclusion of the case. Petitioner also gave Goodman a check for $854.62, partially itemized as reimbursement to Goodman for expenses on the Iowa City trip—which included Goodman's own round trip ticket, Meredith's single plane fare, money advanced to Meredith, and certain miscellaneous items—and with the sum of $350 left under the general note of "photography and investigation." Petitioner maintains that was the full amount he paid Goodman on that day, but Goodman claims that he received approximately $2,500. Goodman's bank records and cash receipts for expenditures that day support his claim. The evidence indicates that immediately prior to this date Goodman was "broke."

About a week later petitioner gave Goodman a piece of paper listing a number of persons who were involved in the Santa Fe wreck and who had been noted in the newspaper article as in "serious condition." After the names there were various identifying notations, all in petitioner's handwriting, such as "released home"; "brother's case out"; "talked to sister-in-law, 'she' is out, see brother personally." Petitioner stated that he had made these notes in connection with his investigation of the accident during his trip to Chicago in the latter part of August. He told Goodman to contact these people when he next went east.

It is not disputed that Goodman performed services in the Meredith case from its initial stages, September 15, 1954, until January 24, 1955, when petitioner, after having filed an action for the Merediths, was substituted out of the case. During this period Goodman devoted his entire time to the Meredith case, making some five or six trips to Iowa City with Meredith and keeping Meredith "happy" with his employment of petitioner. Petitioner admitted that he at no time checked Goodman's qualifications as an investigator or whether he was licensed to act as such, and Goodman never furnished any investigative reports, such as witness statements, photographs, or information concerning the happening of the accident. Petitioner continued to pay Goodman substantial sums but he was not sure of the exact amounts, the dates of payment, or whether or not he received vouchers, time records or expense statements from Goodman. He thought that he had received some accounting from Goodman after one or two of the trips to Iowa City but he was not able to produce any expense sheets from Goodman. The record indicates Goodman was paid over $6,300 for his work, of which some $1,250 appears to have been reimbursement for expenses. Receipts in various amounts were signed by Goodman without particular itemization or with the general note of "investigation." On December 2, 1954, petitioner had Goodman sign a note for $5,000, which petitioner claims was the approximate amount of moneys he had paid Goodman for expenses and services rendered to date. The note contains no mention of the Meredith case. It appears simply as a straight loan transaction, yet petitioner stated that Goodman did not owe him this money and there was no intention that Goodman would pay it to petitioner. The Meredith case was ultimately settled, and the attorney who took over the case paid petitioner a percentage of the fee and petitioner's expenses listed as some $13,000.

The main question to be determined is whether petitioner employed Goodman to solicit the Meredith case. Petitioner maintains that he only employed Goodman to act as an investigator and that Goodman offered to refer the Meredith case to him, which offer petitioner accepted. He attacks the credibility and character of the admitted "runner" or "capper," Goodman, points to various contradictions and discrepancies in Goodman's testimony, and submits that without total reliance on Goodman's version of his employment, petitioner cannot be found guilty on the solicitation charge. While it might be said that Goodman's testimony was "less than satisfactory," that in certain details he may have been "not only careless with the truth" but may have also had "a tendency to embellish it," and that he apparently was "hostile and adverse" to petitioner, yet consideration of the record as a whole sustains the essential core of Goodman's story that petitioner knowingly embarked on the illicit venture of solicitation of the Meredith case through employment of Goodman for that purpose on their first meeting, September 15, 1954. Accordingly, reference will be made to certain passages of petitioner's own testimony and to various circumstantial factors showing petitioner's culpability.

First, there was petitioner's trip to Chicago and the scene of the accident about August 26, a few days after the Santa Fe wreck, where he entered upon extensive investigating and interviewing activities, incurred expenses in getting photographic and transcript reports, and made notes of contacts with several persons on the "serious condition" list, all at a time when he had not been retained to represent any one in connection with the accident. When asked to explain various notations on his own handwritten lists of certain of the injured persons, petitioner was unable to "recollect" their meaning, and his testimony was clearly evasive. Petitioner claims that he made the trip to the scene of the accident as an act of service and from a desire to help his friend Shugan. However, petitioner did all his investigative work after he found that the Shugans had left the hospital where they had been patients, petitioner was never retained by Shugan to do any work on the case for him, and petitioner never submitted any investigative reports to the Shugans.

Petitioner admits that at their first meeting, September 15, 1954, he gave to Goodman his list of injured persons as he had selected them from the newspaper article he had read. On that list appeared the name "Lola Meredith." Goodman maintained that he never suggested the name "Meredith" as a possible referral to petitioner, and that he never knew the name until petitioner mentioned it, and then Goodman, with petitioner's authorization, telephoned Meredith at Iowa City and arranged his trip there. Goodman's account is supported by Meredith's stipulated testimony that he had never known either petitioner or Goodman until he received the telephone call at Iowa City, and then the next morning in Iowa City, he met Goodman when Goodman identified himself as the man sent by petitioner.

[4] Furthermore, petitioner's records of Goodman's services and expenses are confusing and ambiguous. According to petitioner, only one or two of Goodman's several trips to Iowa City were covered by an accounting. While petitioner claimed that any advances he made to Goodman were "Oked" by Meredith on yellow sheets, these are "missing." Most of the payments to Goodman were in "round figures," bearing notations simply as "loan" or "investigation." There is no evidence that Goodman did any investigative work for petitioner, in the sense of furnishing reports, signed statements from witnesses, photographs, or other information bearing on the happening of the accident. According to the record, petitioner apparently paid Goodman about $6,300 for his services, including the substantial sum of $2-500 on September 17, 1954, the day the contracts were signed with Meredith in petitioner's office. In the course of his dealings with Goodman, petitioner had Goodman sign the fictitious note of $5,-000 on December 2, 1954, as a straight loan transaction and without reference to the Meredith case. While petitioner claimed once that such sum approximated advances to Goodman as of that date, later petitioner stated that there was no intention that Goodman should repay such amount, that he did not owe it. The keeping of proper books of account, vouchers, receipts, and checks has significant bearing on the issue of an attorney's honesty and professional conduct when his actions are called into question. Cf. Clark v. State Bar, supra, 39 Cal.2d 161, 174, 246 P.2d 1.

In short, it appears that on September 15, 1954, when petitioner and Goodman first met in petitioner's office, petitioner was well acquainted with the facts of the Santa Fe wreck by virtue of his own trip to the scene of the accident in Illinois, his contacts with some of the injured persons, and other investigative work, all undertaken at his own expense but still without a client to represent. Consistent with this outlay of time and money, petitioner apparently was anxious to obtain employment in connection with this accident and engaged Goodman, an admitted "capper" or "runner" in railroad cases for some twenty years, to solicit the Meredith case. It further appears that petitioner reimbursed Goodman for all his expenses on his trip to bring Meredith, a stranger to both petitioner and Goodman, from Iowa City to Los Angeles. Thereafter, during the four months petitioner was handling the case, Goodman's entire time was devoted to "shepherding" Meredith and keeping him "happy." Petitioner paid Goodman $6,300 to cover such services and expenses of some $1,250. Such record clearly and convincingly indicates that petitioner knowingly accepted the Meredith case as solicited professional employment and compensated Goodman, pursuant to prior agreement, for his activities in steering such professional employment to him.

[5] While the record thus shows petitioner's misconduct through the solicitation of professional employment, there remains the question of the extent to which petitioner should be disciplined. Petitioner makes no showing of mitigatng circumstances but simply argues that a nine months' suspension from practice is too severe in view of other cases where a milder discipline was imposed: Mitton v. State Bar, 49 Cal.2d 686, 321 P.2d 13; Higgins v. State Bar, supra, 46 Cal.2d 241, 293 P.2d 455. However, the aggravated circumstances of petitioner's misconduct indicate that the recommended discipline is appropriate. Petitioner appears to have been guilty of a callous and brazen indifference to his obligations as an attorney, with "the object of personal gain." Tonini v. State Bar, supra, 46 Cal.2d 491, 497, 297 P.2d 1, 5. His vacillating conduct, his evasive testimony, and his lack of candor before the local committee were not compatible with the high degree of fidelity to his professional duties owed by an attorney at law. Burns v. State Bar, 45 Cal.2d 296, 303, 288 P.2d 514. His actions, in short, exhibit an intentional, flagrant violation of the rules designed to prohibit unprofessional conduct in obtaining contracts of employment. In these circumstances, it is proper that he should be suspended from the practice of law for a substantial period of time.

It is ordered that Alvin E. Honoroff be suspended from the practice of law for a period of nine months, commencing 30 days after the filing of this opinion.

159 Cal.App.2d 301

Edith GRAHAM and Kenneth L. Graham, Plaintiffs and Appellants,

v.

Marjorie MEAD and Dapite, Inc., Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 17601.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

April 10, 1958.

Driver and occupant of first automobile brought action against driver of second automobile, which was on the right of first automobile as they approached intersection, and another for personal injuries and property damage sustained in collision in intersection when second automobile struck first automobile broadside. The Superior Court, County of Contra Costa, Homer W.

Patterson, J., entered judgment adverse to the driver and occupant of the first automobile, and they appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Dooling, J., held that where there was no testimony in record from which jury could reasonably find that second automobile entered intersection at same time as first automobile, giving of instruction containing provision of Vehicle Code that when two vehicles enter an intersection from different highways at the same time, the driver of the vehicle on the left shall yield the right of way to the driver of the vehicle on the right, and that error in giving such instruction was prejudicial error, where jury requested that instructions regarding right of way, particularly instruction regarding situation where vehicle on the right has the right of way, be sent to the jury room, and jury's verdict was reached by a nine to three vote.

Judgment reversed.

1. Automobiles ⇐244(43), 246(58)

In action by driver and occupant of first automobile against driver of second automobile, which was to right of first automobile as they approached intersection, and another for personal injuries and property damage sustained in collision at intersection when first automobile was struck broadside by second automobile, evidence was insufficient to justify a finding by jury that automobiles entered intersection at "same time" within meaning of provision of Vehicle Code that when two vehicles enter intersection from different highways at "same time" driver of vehicle on left shall yield right of way to driver on right, and therefore giving of instruction, which included such provision of the Vehicle Code, was error. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 550.

2. Trial ⇐252(1)

If instruction, which is couched in proper language, finds no support in the evidence, it is improper.

3. Appeal and Error ⇐1066

Giving of instruction which finds no support in the evidence is prejudicial error, if instruction is calculated to mislead jury.

4. Appeal and Error ⇐1066

In action for personal injuries and property damage sustained in collision at intersection, error in giving instruction with reference to provision of Vehicle Code that, when two vehicles enter intersection from different highways at same time, driver of vehicle on left shall yield right of way to driver of vehicle on right, when there was no testimony in record from which jury could reasonably find that automobiles entered intersection at same time, was prejudicial error, where jury requested that instructions regarding right of way, and particularly instruction regarding situation where vehicle on right has right of way, be sent to jury room, and jury's verdict in favor of driver of automobile on right was reached by a nine to three vote. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 550.

Hart & Bortin, Joseph L. Bortin, San Francisco, for appellants.

James C. Calkins, Alameda, for respondents.

DOOLING, Justice.

Plaintiffs, husband and wife, appeal from a judgment for defendants entered upon a jury's verdict.

The action was for personal injuries and property damage to plaintiffs' automobile. The automobile driven by plaintiff husband was struck broadside by an automobile driven by defendant in the intersection of Jefferson Avenue and Alston Way in Berkeley.

The court instructed the jury at defendant's request:

"Vehicle Code section 550 reads as follows:

" 'Vehicle Approaching or Entering Intersection.

" '(a) The driver of a vehicle approaching an intersection shall yield the right of way to a vehicle which has entered the intersection from a different highway.

" '(b) When two vehicles enter an intersection from different highways at the same time the driver of the vehicle on the left shall yield the right of way to the driver of the vehicle on the right.' "

Appellants argue prejudicial error in the inclusion of subdivision (b) of this section in the instruction on the ground that the evidence shows without contradiction that their automobile entered the intersection first.

The only evidence pertinent to this question was given by the two plaintiffs, the defendant under cross-examination (Code Civ.Proc. § 2055) and a police officer who examined the scene of the collision after it had occurred.

Appellants were driving easterly on Alston Way and respondent was driving northerly on Jefferson Avenue. Appellant husband testified that he was driving at a speed of 15 to 20 miles per hour and as he approached the intersection he saw respondent's car 6 or 7 car lengths from the intersection. "I saw that the car was a safe distance back so I continued on across the intersection." The next he knew his wife said: "Look out. She is going to hit us" and the collision occurred.

Appellant wife testified that as they reached the intersection she saw a car to the right "so far back my husband and I both didn't say anything about it." The officer testified that the point of collision showed that appellants' car was 28 feet into the intersection and respondent's car 15 feet into the intersection. The officer measured 26 feet of skid marks made by respondent's tires.

Respondent testified: "As I approached the intersection I looked to my left. I did not see any car and I looked at my left and I didn't see a car, and as I turned my head back the car was directly in front of me."

[1] It is clear that there is no testimony in the record from which the jury could reasonably find that respondent's automobile entered the intersection at the same time as appellants'. Giving respondent's testimony its full weight "as [she] approached the intersection" there was no car to her left and when she looked ahead it was already in front of her. She had not entered the intersection when she looked to her left. Counsel for respondent argues that the determination of the facts is for the jury, but he does not suggest any rational theory on which they could find from any evidence of any witness that respondent's automobile entered the intersection at the same time as appellants'.

[2, 3] "Even though an instruction is couched in proper language it is improper, if it finds no support in the evidence, and the giving of it constitutes prejudicial error if it is calculated to mislead the jury." Davenport v. Stratton, 24 Cal.2d 232, 254, 149 P.2d 4, 15; Elm v. McKee, 139 Cal. App.2d 353, 359, 293 P.2d 827; Staggs v. Atchison, Topeka & S. F. Ry. Co., 135 Cal. App.2d 492, 503, 287 P.2d 817.

[4] The prejudice in this case is demonstrated by the proceedings on motion for new trial. It developed, as shown by an affidavit of appellants' counsel, that while the jury was deliberating the jury requested the bailiff that the instructions regarding the right of way, "particularly the instruction regarding the situation where the vehicle on the right has the right of way," be sent to the jury room; and the bailiff told the jury that the only way to get the instructions was to go back into the courtroom and have the instructions reread, that they could not be sent into the jury room. While this was hearsay as to the counsel making the affidavit the record shows that "in open Court counsel stipulate that the facts stated in the affidavit of Joseph Bortin [appellants' counsel] on file herein are true stated facts." The jury's verdict was reached by a 9 to 3 vote.

The record makes it clear that the jury was confused into believing that the right of way of the one entering the intersection from the right was in issue under the evidence, and, particularly in view of the divided vote of the jury, we are satisfied that the record shows prejudice from the giving of the instruction on that subject.

This conclusion makes it unnecessary to consider the further argument that the bailiff was guilty of misconduct in communicating his understanding of the law to the jury instead of conveying their request to the court. Nelson v. Southern Pacific Co., 8 Cal.2d 648, 649, 655, 67 P.2d 682.

Judgment reversed.

KAUFMAN, P. J., and DRAPER, J., concur.

159 Cal.App.2d 600

In the Matter of the ESTATE of Gregorio DEL VAL, etc., Deceased.

Juana Del Val Vda de DAYRIT, Sixto Tanjuanguio, Honorio Del Val, Isabel Val Zapanta, Petitioners, Contestants and Appellants,

v.

R. V. DISON and Victoria Dison, Legatees and Respondents,

W. A. Winstanley, Respondent.

Civ. 22695.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

April 22, 1958.

Will contest. From a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Harold W. Schweitzer, J., declining to revoke probate of will, the contestants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Lillie, J., held that construed in light of circumstances surrounding execution and delivery of document and decedent's subsequent conduct, will evinced no intent on part of testator to make it conditional, notwithstanding use therein of language "if there is anything happen to me tonight."

Affirmed.

1. Wills ⇐439

In interpretation of will, ascertainment of intention of testator is cardinal rule of construction, to which all other rules must yield. West's Ann.Prob.Code, §§ 24, 101, 102, 142.

2. Wills ⇐80

Will is not to be regarded as conditional when it reasonably can be held that testator, in using language in question, was merely expressing his motive or inducement to make will. West's Ann.Prob.Code, §§ 24, 101, 102, 142.

3. Wills ⇐440

In determining testator's intent, court must look first to language itself and how it is used in conjunction with rest of document.

4. Wills ⇐80

Circumstances which court may take into consideration, in determining whether deceased regarded contingency as relating to motive inducing making of will rather than as condition to its becoming operative, differ in each case, but generally include those surrounding execution of document and its delivery, testator's state of health, his plans for the future, preservation of document, particularly after contingency has failed, instructions upon delivery, subsequent declarations of testator, lack of another subsequent will, lack of alternative disposition of property and amount of estate disposed of by instrument.

5. Wills ⇐80

Construed in light of circumstances surrounding execution and delivery of document and decedent's subsequent conduct, will evinced no intent on part of testator to make it conditional, notwithstanding use therein of language "if there is anything happen to me tonight". West's Ann. Prob.Code, §§ 24, 101, 102, 142.

Mitchel & Strange, James R. Biram, Los Angeles, for appellants.

C. M. Castruccio, San Marino, for respondents.

Harold W. Kennedy, County Counsel, James W. Goodman, Deputy County Counsel, Los Angeles, for respondent W. A. Winstanley.

LILLIE, Justice.

On February 28, 1956 Gregorio Del Val died leaving a holographic will dated April 14, 1955, which was admitted to probate on April 11, 1956. E. A. Winstanley, public administrator, was appointed administrator with will annexed of the estate. Besilio and Victoria Dison, husband and wife, respondents herein, are the sole legatees under the instrument.

Juana Del Val Vda de Dayrit, sister, Sixto Tanjuanguio and Honorio Del Val, nephews, and Isabel Val Zapanta, niece of deceased, all residents and citizens of the Republic of the Philippines, filed a petition for revocation of probate of will. The contestants alleged therein that the document admitted to probate on April 11, 1956, is not a valid testamentary instrument in that it was a conditional will, the condition of which was never fulfilled, making the instrument inoperative and invalid as a will.

The matter was heard by the court sitting without a jury and after hearing all of the evidence the trial judge made, among others, the following finding of fact: "It was not the intention of said deceased that the language in his said will 'if there is anything happen to me tonight * * *' be a condition in his will."

On March 28, 1957 the court entered its judgment denying contestants' petition to revoke probate of will. It is from this judgment contestants appeal.

The following facts were submitted to the trial court by way of stipulation. The sole legatees and the respondents herein, Victoria and Basilio V. Dison, had known the deceased for a period of 41 years. They had many friends in common and he made frequent social visits to their home. For ten years prior to his death decedent had had a heart condition. On April 14, 1955, the day before he went to the hospital, the deceased wrote in his own hand the following document:

"Thursday April 14, 55
"1666 W. 28th St.,
"Los Angeles, Cal

"That I Gregorio Del Val of a sound mind, if there is anything happen to me to night I leave all my belongings to Mr. B. V. Dison and to his wife Mrs. Victoria Dison including my money in The Banks of America #21

"Gregorio Del Val"

and delivered it to Victoria, saying: "This is my will. Take care of it." Around noon the following day he went to the White Memorial Hospital where he stayed four weeks. Upon his release he went to the home of the Disons and remained there approximately 3½ months. During this period and at no time after April 14, 1955 was there any conversation among them about the will. He died of a heart condition on February 28, 1956.

Appellants contend that the instrument admitted to probate is expressly conditional on its face and that the evidence was insufficient to support the finding that it was not the intention of the decedent that the language "If there is anything happen to me tonight * * *" be a condition in the will. In brief, they claim that the effectiveness of the instrument was conditioned on his dying "tonight" and he, not having died at that time, the condition was not fulfilled and the disposition did not take effect.

Section 24 of the Probate Code accords conditional wills statutory recognition in this state. Whether an instrument constitutes a conditional will is of course a matter of construction. To aid a proper construction of a will as conditional, section 142 of the Probate Code expressly defines a condition precedent. Whether such a condition has been created depends not only on the language employed by the decedent but on his intention in using it.

[1, 2] In the interpretation of a will, ascertainment of the intention of the testator is the cardinal rule of construction to which all other rules must yield (Probate Code, section 101; In re Estate of Salmonski, 38 Cal.2d 199, 238 P.2d 966; In re Estate of Lawrence, 17 Cal.2d 1, 108 P.2d 893; In re Estate of Foley, 126 Cal. App.2d 810, 273 P.2d 26). In line with the well-established rule set out in Re Estate of Sewall, 14 Cal.App.2d 554, 58 P.2d 744, and Probate Code, section 102, that the construction of an instrument preventing intestacy is to be favored over one which results in intestacy, our courts will not regard a will as conditional when it reasonably can be held that the testator in using the language in question was merely expressing his motive or inducement to make the will.

The leading case in California on the subject of conditional wills is In re Estate of Taylor, 119 Cal.App.2d 574, 259 P.2d 1014, 1015. The court in that case set up the test to be used in determining whether certain language constitutes a narrative reciting the inducement or motive of the decedent or is in fact a condition required to be fulfilled before an instrument attains a testamentary character. Taylor, about to go overseas during the war, executed a document in the form of a letter wherein he used the following language: "in case Davie Jones gets me out in the South Pacific ocean in other words lost at Sea * * *." He died 10 years later. The appellant therein contended that since Taylor returned from the sea voyage the condition was not fulfilled and the disposition did not take effect. The court held that it was an absolute will. In discussing the test to be used in determining whether a will is conditional, the court said, 119 Cal. App.2d at page 580, 259 P.2d at page 1017, "Did the testator intend, by the language used, to make the happening of the possibility referred to a condition precedent to the operation of the will, in which case the instrument is not entitled to probate if the condition is not fulfilled; or did he state the possibility of the happening merely as the motive or reason which lead to the making of the instrument and which was carelessly stated in language suggestive of a condition, in which case the will becomes operative on the testator's death even if the event, the possibility of which appears to have induced the will, has not taken place? One may, by way of narrative, state a contingency he has in mind as the inducement for making his will, or he may, on the contrary, state it as the condition on which the will is to become operative.

"In order to require a denial of admission to probate on the ground that death did not occur in circumstances contemplated by the decedent, the writing must contain language which clearly indicates a purpose to limit its operation." The court there made an exhaustive study of many cases involving instruments containing various kinds of phraseology. It serves little purpose here to review them in view of the clear language of the court in the Taylor case except to comment that they all expound the general theory that if the decedent intended in the use of the language in question to recite the inducement or motive for executing the instrument, then it becomes operative as a testamentary document.

Perhaps language closest to that used by Del Val is found in the will construed in the case of French v. French, 14 W.Va. 458. This phraseology was used: "* * * if I get drowned this morning, March 7, 1872." The court held that this language was an expression of the decedent's motive for writing the instrument and that the will was unconditional in nature. The testator wrote the will before starting a journey over an unbridged river. He returned safely and did not die until one year later. Another case involving an instrument using similar language in which the court held the will to be absolute is In re Dowling's Estate, 16 Pa.Dist. & Co. 381. The testator wrote "* * * I, Michael P. Dowling is to go on opperation for a groth in the head if anything serious shoud happen to me I leave all I own to * * *." In the case of In re Tinsley's Will, 187 Iowa 23, 174 N.W. 4, 11 A.L.R. 826, the court construed the phrase "In case of any serious accident * * *" as sufficient to indicate a testamentary intent. A similar holding is found in Re Swords, Dom.L.R. 564, 566, in which the instrument used these words, "If anything happens that the operation is not successful * * *."

[3, 4] In determining the testator's intent, of course, the court must look first to the language itself and how it is used in conjunction with the rest of the document. Recognizing that many lay people who write wills in their own hand are unfamiliar with legal terms, often are not too well educated and many times inaccurate in their use of language, the courts have been lenient in their interpretation of the documents in order to put into effect the testator's intention. In re Estate of Soulie, 72 Cal.App.2d 332, 164 P.2d 565; In re Estate of Eggleston, 129 Cal.App.2d 601, 277 P.2d 469. In line with this general policy, our courts have also held that the language in question should be interpreted to be mere inducement if that construction is fairly permissible (Buttram v. Finley, 37 Cal.App.2d 459, 99 P.2d 1093; In re Estate of Taylor, supra). Those circumstances which the court may take into consideration in determining whether the deceased regarded the contingency as relating to the motive inducing the making of the will rather than as a condition to its becoming operative, of course differ in each case, but generally they include those surrounding the execution of the document and its delivery; the testator's state of health; his plans for the future, the preservation of the document, particularly after the contingency has failed; instructions upon delivery; subsequent declarations of the testator; lack of another subsequent will; lack of alternative disposition of the property and the amount of the estate disposed of by the instrument.

In the instant case Del Val had suffered from a heart condition for a period of ten years before his death. At the time he executed the instrument in question he no doubt contemplated death because the next day he was admitted to the White Memorial Hospital for a condition that was serious enough to require hospitalization for four weeks. Before going to the hospital he wrote the words in question which are obviously expressive of a special apprehension. The court in the case of In re Tinsley's Will, supra [187 Iowa 23, 174 N.W. 7], cited as authority by the court in Re Estate of Taylor, supra, interpreted the words of such general character in a will as "* * * if anything happens to me" to mean "if I should die." Del Val, contemplating that he might die "tonight" felt a necessity to draw the instrument so that the Disons would take his estate. His intent that by this document they should do so then and later, as the case might be, is borne out by the fact that when he handed the document to Mrs. Dison he said, "This is my will. Take care of it." He did not limit its preservation by Mrs. Dison to any particular time; in fact all of his conduct points to the inference that he meant for her to keep it until he died, whenever that might be. Upon his release from the hospital he lived with the Disons for 3½ months. He at no time subsequent to April 14, 1955 discussed the will with them again. He did not ask for the document's return even though he was closely associated with them, nor did he execute any other will or revoke the one dated April 14, 1955, all of which is favorable to the absolute character of the document. The instrument shows on its face that he intended to dispose of his entire estate and at no place in the document, or otherwise, did he make any alternative disposition of his property, which is indicative that he did not intend the language used to constitute a condition. There is an abundance of evidence pointing to the absolute character of this instrument and nothing in the record to show why decedent would have intended his will to be conditional. There is little question that Del Val died in the belief that his estate would go to the Disons under the document he entrusted to Mrs. Dison.

Appellant contends that decedent made a declaration to a friend, Stephan Kun,

